MY DEAR MR. HARMAN:—I have always looked upon your free love ideas with the largest charity. I always knew that your motives were absolutely good and therefore my effort to agree with you, so far as my judgment would approve. I think your thorough endorsement of Hilda's Home left a bad impression upon the community. I read it attentively and was hardly satisfied with the promiscuity it advocated. One of its heroes, represented as thoroughly loving a female mate, was permitted by the writer to sexually affiliate with another charming woman without censure from anybody, not even the two ladies, whose desires, according to fashionable usage under the most sacred of mating proprieties, almost everybody would think should be antagonistic. If this is not promiscuity in its largest sense, I do not know what is. According to the story the male was granted unlimited license and inferentially the female also. Do not mating brutes and birds exercise a certain amount of xclusiveness and fidelity? I think they do! If yes, why not man and woman also do the same thing? We do not differ in regard to the propriety of an easy separation and also a new mating, if desired.

I have several times asked the following question, without getting a reply from anybody. If a man make a female enceinte, what shall be his conduct sexually during her period of gestation? Shall he remain continent? Intrude himself upon her without regard to her preference, or shall he sexually affiliate with anybody who covets his embraces? A candid reply to this question would interest numerous inquirers.

You certainly must be aware that there are two kinds of love quite opposite in their modes of enjoyment. One is decidedly carnal, or physical; confined to the body only, while the other is purely spiritual and seeks its highest enjoyment in admiration for the intellectual, sympathetic and conscientious aspirations of its beau ideal. The carnal is of the earth earthy, transient and short lived, while the spiritual is enduring, lives after death and is presumably eternal.

It seems to me you pay too much attention to the carnal side of the subject and not sufficient attention to the spiritual phases of the same subject. If you think the death of the body annihilates us, I simply cannot agree with you and refer you to the writings of Emanuel Swedenborg as a refutation. The accepted teachings of Modern Spiritualism also disprove your philosophy. Please make early reply and believe me

Fraternally yours, W. D.

REPLY.

The questions of Friend W. D. open up a wide field of discussion, not to say of speculation and conjecture. Without attempting in the space of one article to answer all the points raised in the quoted paragraphs, I would say that to my thinking we can learn much from the associative life of "brutes and birds" in a state of nature; that is, when not demoralized by domestication, or enslavement by man. Proudhon, in "What Is Property," page 228, says:

"The elephant knows how to help his companion out of the ditch into which the latter has fallen. Cows form a circle, with their horns outward and their calves in the center, in order to repel the attacks of wolves. Horses and pigs, on hearing a cry of distress from one of their number, rush to the spot whence it comes. What descriptions I might give of their marriages, the tenderness of the males towards the females, and the fidelity of their loves! Let us add, however,—to be entirely just—that these touching demonstrations of society, fraternity, and love of neighbor, do not prevent the animals from quarreling, fighting, and outrageously abusing one another while gaining their livelihood and showing their gallantry; the resemblance between them and ourselves is perfect."

While this "resemblance" may be "perfect" in many respects it is certainly not perfect in all. As Dean Swift has pointed out, men are the only animals that "fight their females"—that beat, kill or enslave their females, and that require or compel sexual service from them while gestating offspring.

It may be added also that man is the only animal whose social and economic arrangements are such that a part of the females are compelled to be "promiscuous" in their sex life.

The word promiscuous means "undistinguished," "common," "indiscriminate"—in other words, without selection.

If these definitions be correct then there is very little masculine promiscuity in human sex-relations. Men are supposed to do the choosing in marriage, and men who patronize houses of ill-fame exercise the power of choice, or selection; but for the wretched female inmates of those houses—except, perhaps, a very few—there is left no power of choice. Stern necessity compels them to be promiscuous; and in unnumbered cases it is much the same in legal wedlock—economic necessity, or the arbitrary will of parents or guardians compels the female to accept a mate towards whom she feels no attraction—perhaps feels aversion, disgust or hatred.

HILDA'S HOME.

My endorsement of the book Hilda's Home, so far as I now recall such endorsement, was intended mainly to give voice to my hearty approval of the prominence given by Rosa Graul to Freedom in Love. That the practicalization of this principle should lead, in some instances, to a select variety in mating, as in the case mentioned by W. D., is to be expected when we remember that man is the evoluted product, the epitome or summary, so to speak, of all the so-called lower orders of organized life. Among our kindred, the "brutes and birds," we find all possible forms of mating for reproduction, except perhaps monogamic union for life. But if some beasts and birds are monogamous to the extent of exclusive union of two, and no remating in case of death or unavoidable separation, it should not for a moment be forgotten that such exclusive devotion is always voluntary, never enforerd, unless we are to credit the stories told of the punishments inflicted by ravens and storks, upon members of their community that had violated the strict monogamic code.

* * *

But whatever may be the mating ethics of birds such as the stork, the raven, the robin, etc., which have attained such perfection of type that there would seem to be little need of re-selection of mates, or of selected plurality—which is not "promiscuity," as Friend W. D. seems to think—this monopoly of one male or female by one of the other sex, would seem to have serious disadvantages in communities or races that have not reached perfection of type. In all such races monopoly of the best male, the most nearly perfect male, by one female would seem to be a very un-social or anti-social act. Such exclusiveness would seriously impede if not wholly defeat the evolution, the progress, of the race towards perfection of type.

Until perfection of type is reached the ethics of such races or species as the grouse—sometimes called "pheasant"—or of the common wild turkey, might be studied to advantage.

These birds, though gregarious, do not flock together during the mating season. Who that has lived in western woods has not heard the "drumming" of the male grouse and the "gobble" of the male turkey in Spring? These sounds are simply the amatory calls of the males, to let the females know where they are to be found.

(Continued on page twenty-one.)

Lucifer, the Lightbearer

M. HARMAN, EDITOR AND PUBLISHER.

PUBLISHED EVERY WEEK AT 500 FULTON STREET, CHICAGO, ILL.

Terms: One year, $1; six months, 50 cents; three months, 25 cents.

Entered at the Chicago Postoffice as Second-Class Mail Matter.

Eastern Representative, E. C. Walker, 244 W. 143d street, New York.

902.

If these figures correspond with the number printed on the wrapper of your Lucifer, your subscription expires with this number.

If a copy of Lucifer fails to reach you, please order by number or date.

Lucifer will not be sent "by return mail" unless stamps for postage are enclosed with order.

To NEW SUBSCRIBERS: Your subscription is paid to No. If you have not ordered Lucifer, a friend has subscribed for you. If you do not wish to receive it, please notify us by card or through your postmaster. If you wish to become a regular subscriber you will confer a favor by renewing before the expiration of your trial subscription.

Bureaucratic Censorship of Mails.

One of the most patent, most unmistakable, of all the signs that herald the approaching complete surrender to monarchism or imperialism, is the apathy exhibited by the public press in regard to the more or less successful attempts of Edwin C. Madden, Third Assistant Postmaster General, to suppress Socialistic and Anarchistic papers.

That the leading city dailies, backed by influential political partisans and by practically unlimited wealth, should be silent in regard to these meddlesome invasions, is only to be expected. The comparatively small and poorly supported weekly papers that are now the victims of Madden's discriminations, are without exception opposed to the two great political parties, the parties that now divide the spoils of office between themselves, and whose only real point of difference is as to the best methods of hoodwinking and robbing the masses of people.

This fact is quite sufficient to explain the silence of the great dailies on the subject of postal censorship. The more weekly papers suppressed the better for the circulation and support of the great dailies.

* * *

Among the country weeklies that have given voice to their condemnations of Madden's usurpations is the "Fergus (Minn.) Globle." In a recent issue its editor says:

"A fellow named Edwin C. Madden whom Fortune, good or ill, has made Third Assistant Postmaster General, has set up a press censorship, and is suppressing newspapers at will and in defiance of the constitution. Many newspapers are jumping on to Madden for that. But that is unfair. Madden is simply obeying orders. President Roosevelt is the fellow you should blame. Important things like suppressing newspapers are never done without the President's sanction. If Roosevelt will not remove Madden then the newspapers will have to remove Roosevelt. It is up to the newspapers. Under press censorship no paper is safe. Boys, what shall it be?"

* * *

Of the city weeklies none have been more vigilant in guarding freedom of speech and press than has "The Public" (Chicago) whose editor, Louis F. Post, closes an exhaustive presentation of the matter in these words:

It is reasonably clear, nevertheless, from the language of the third assistant postmaster general himself, used in connection with the "Appeal to Reason" case, that second-class mailing rights rest in dangerous degree upon the arbitrary discretion of the bureau of which he is chief. When a paper can be excluded because persons who believe in the doctrines on public matters which it advocates, pay to have it sent to other persons, who accept it—and this appears to be a moderate interpretation of the ruling—it is time to make the danger signal. And the nub of the whole thing lies in one innocent sentence in the third assistant's letter of December 14, already quoted from. We refer to a sentence in which he says:

"The subsidy of the second-class (pound) rate is not given you—except in your sample copy privilege—to send copies to those who are not 'legitimate' subscribers."

There is the point, all in one word "subsidy." Second-class rights are regarded by the postal bureau as a subsidy, evidently because a cent a pound rate is not remunerative. Accordingly, the bureau builds up a system of rules of its own—making them progressively more drastic, yet conveniently elastic as to individual cases—under which it is coming closer and closer to the point at which it determines the distribution of this subsidy arbitrarily. That the bureau is right in denominating the second-class right as a subsidy, we think is true, provided second-class matter does cost more for postal service than a cent a pound. In that case the difference is unquestionably a subsidy. But why should the American press be subsidized by congress? Why should "Harpers' Monthly," for instance—a veritable storehouse, by the way, of advertisements of Harpers' books—why should that publication be subsidized? Why should the country weeklies be subsidized with a few dollars, and the great papers and magazines with thousands upon thousands of dollars? Why should any periodical be subsidized at all? And why, above all else, should the distribution of the subsidy be so arranged as to enable a bureaucratic chief to discriminate so as virtually to establish a bureau censorship over periodical publications? Let the subsidy be abolished! Papers that people want don't need it; those they don't want ought not to have it. The whole principle of subsidies is vicious. It is especially vicious with reference to the press. It is peculiarly vicious, when under pretence of judicially distributing the press subsidy a railroad subsidy is secretly maintained. Away with it! Let there be neither subsidy nor discrimination. Let congress ascertain the cost per pound of handling second-class matter, and fix the postage rate accordingly. Let the postoffice department be required by law to give to all periodical publications, whether they promote doctrines or advertise goods, equal postal facilities at remunerative but indiscriminating postal rates.

From the standpoint of law—of state-socialistic law—but little is needed to be added to this clear and concise statement. The view taken by Neighbor Post is eminently sensible, equitable, just, but, judging from all past experience, he who expects the thing called government to be run on principles of equity, justice, or of common sense, is foredoomed to sad disappointment.

But let the agitation proceed. Some good may come of it.

M. HARMAN.

What Is State Socialism?

MR. EDITOR:—Please reply once more to my question in No. 899. That you did not quote State Socialists for your definitions is, as you say, as evident as the man's nasal prominence which you cite as a type of distinctness, and this is the very reason why I asked you to do so; and which you will do unless you assert that State Socialists are the only people who are not allowed to define their own doctrine. You class franchises, privileges, etc., as State Socialistic, although State Socialists are opposed to these.

I think my view of the term "scientific" is allowable. When the magnet is found to attract the armature, this may be called knowledge; when repeated experiment shows that under various forms and conditions this principle is constant and can be applied practically, it may be termed scientific. Therefore any Socialism termed scientific must be that which has been found practical.

To say that Democratic Socialism is despotic is absurd; and to show that majority rule of a band of Anarchists is superior to that exercised by members of a corporation now known as a city, is the task I would set you, or any Anarchist.

You might also prove that the "robberies" now committed by the administrators of public commonwealth are greater than the "dividends" taken legally, and apparently without challenging comment from you, by the managers of similar public enterprises now under private ownership; such as $1 for gas costing 18 cents; dividends on eighty millions of street car stock, when there is only ten millions actual property; dividends on steel stock equal in one year to the whole value of the capital, and many other instances. When you get through with this task, you may be willing to admit that no reform is to be judged by what now exists.

C. F. H.

* * *

The question asked by C. F. H., in No. 899, was, "What writer known to be a state socialist can you cite who favors the granting of privileges to individuals—which the laws you mention do?"

To this I would briefly reply that I am not sufficiently posted in regard to the various socialistic schools to say what writers would acknowledge the name State Socialist, and which of them would not. It is not for me to fasten labels on any one. I much prefer to have each writer label himself, if a label or tag is desired.

In speaking of state socialistic laws I was using my own definitions. No one is required or expected to accept my definitions. If mine do not suit, let him put forth his own, and show wherein my definitions do not apply to him, or to his party, class or sect.

Once more in few words, let me say that to my thinking we are all socialists, whether we adopt the name or not. Even those who call themselves Anarchists are also socialists, inasmuch as they want to live in societies, or social groups, co-operating or exchanging voluntarily with each other. Hence Anarchists may justly claim the name voluntary socialists.

* * *

Yes, I "class franchises, privileges, etc., as state socialistic," just as I class the postoffice system, our land system, our money and patent systems, as state socialistic. Meantime I do not forget that many socialists oppose franchises and special privileges granted to corporations by state, national and city governments, by which privileges the unprivileged masses are robbed of their honest earnings to enrich the parasitic or vampyre classes of human society. At the same time many if not all of those who call themselves Socialists endorse the postoffice system, notwithstanding the notorious fact that privileges are granted to certain classes that are denied to others, and notwithstanding the oft-exposed favoritism by which, under government authority, the railway companies are allowed to put many millions of unearned money into their treasuries every year. Whether these robberies would be less monstrous, less inexcusable, less criminal, under the reign of a new political party calling itself "Social Democratic," or "Socialist Labor," "Single Tax" or "Referendum," is yet to be tried.

"To say that democratic socialism is despotic, is absurd," says our critic. Names count for little. Democratic socialism may be quite as despotic as republican socialism, theocratic socialism, aristocratic, plutocratic or monarchical socialism. "A rose by any other name," or a skunk-cabbage by any other name, would not change the odor given out by each. So long as the essential crime remains—THE AUTHORITARIAN STATE, or government of man by his fellow man, we shall have privileges for the few and exploitation, robbery, slavery, for the many. "Tell me not of the abuses of artificial government [governments of force and authority] the thing, the thing itself is the abuse."

* * *

Not calling myself an Anarchist, but simply an inquirer after truth, I shall not undertake to show that "majority rule of a band of Anarchists is superior to that exercised by members of a corporation now known as a city." I was induced to believe, however, that Anarchists do not advocate "majority rule," or any other RULE, as such, but rather a system of co-operative self-help and self-defense, wherein there is no government by rulers, but simply self-government, self-control, by equal citizens who attend to their own business and expect all others to do the same.

As to which class of robbers is the worst, the administrators of our falsely called "commonwealth," or the government-favored monopolists whose "loot" goes by the name of "dividends," I do not pretend to say. As these two classes of respectable thieves and robbers stand together and mutually help each other to exploit the real producers of wealth, they are probably equally guilty, and it makes little difference to their victims which class of robbers gets the lion's share of the spoils, and which class is content with the jackal's share.

* * *

SCIENTIFIC SOCIALISM.

Yes, comparisons drawn from physical science—electricity and magnetism, for instance, may be useful when applied to the study of human ethics, but the trouble is, we try to get out of these comparisons more than there is in them. If human beings were allowed to co-operate as freely and as naturally as the "magnet with its armature" we might correctly apply the term "scientific" to socialistic experiments, but where and when have people been allowed such freedom in any country wherein the priest and the political strumpet have been permitted to get in their work?

* * *

Here, then, is the true explanation of the failure of Socialistic and Anarchistic experiments, to which frequent allusions have been made, in these discussions; also of the universally disastrous failure to secure even-handed justice under all governments of force and authority.

M. HARMAN.

Limitations to Freedom in Love.

(Concluded from page nineteen.)

The males of these birds do none of the selecting. They do not hunt for or pursue the females. They simply make themselves as attractive as possible, with their "curvetings, trumpetings, and general shows of bravery which mark the male sexual vanities," as Stinson Jarvis says in his book, "The Ascent of Life." The females do the selecting; the mating is natural, spontaneous, compelled by the most powerful amatory attraction, with the result that there are few if any failures in propagation.

There are practically no deformed or malformed birds when left to natural selection; no idiots, imbeciles or epileptics, as is so often the case where nature is thwarted, debased or defeated by man's interference—by man's selection, handicapped as that selection is by superstitious notions of "duty to God," or of allegiance to human law—priest-made law, a code of marital ethics admirably adapted to create and perpetuate inequalities of body and mind, perverts and "degenerates," thereby making necessary such artificial government over the many weak and ill-formed, by the few strong and well-endowed, as we see today.

* * *

Of course no one will infer from this that the examples of natural selection just mentioned are to be followed by human beings implicitly, or without adaptation to evoluted human needs. The young of the human animal needs the fostering care of both sexes, instead of that of one only. The psychic needs of the human animal require more constant companionship than do those of brutes and birds. Hence the analogies named should not be pushed beyond reason, nor used for more than they are worth.

* * *

Speaking of psychic needs leads naturally to consider the CARNAL AND THE SPIRITUAL phases of the attraction called Love, referred to by W. D. As I see it, the carnal does not, or should not, antagonize the spiritual, nor the spiritual the carnal. These two phases are not "opposite" in the sense of being mutually destructive. "Their modes of enjoyment" may be and should be mutually helpful. Psychic or spiritual love has its origin in the passional or carnal attraction whose chief purpose seems to be the propagation of the species or race—incidentally the enjoyment and development of the individual, herself and himself. It is because the physical, the carnal, or the reproductive phase of human love has been so persistently depreciated, decried, maligned and treated as essentially vile and debasing—unless sanctified by authority of church or state, that some of us have paid more attention to this phase of human attraction than to the less maligned, less misrepresented and more ethereal kind, called spiritual love. Both are good, pure, holy and uplifting when guided by reason, by good judgment or wisdom. Both may be so misused as to bring disappointment, pain, sorrow, death, to the individual and to the race.

* * *

The greatest value of Hilda's Home, as an ethical work, consists in its excellent showing how the love-life of each individual—woman and man—can be lived, practicalized and made lasting, without invasion by either, and without sacrifice of the personal development or unfoldment of either partner. Also, how the needs of children can be safe-guarded without sacrifice or slavish absorption of the life forces of either parent.

All this is shown to be now within the reach of those who are wise enough, that is, who are intelligently selfish enough, to unite in making and enjoying a truly Co operative Home, a home that is the evoluted product of all past experiments, of all past mistakes, in human co-operation.

PROSPECTIVE MOTHERHOOD.

Old time readers of this journal do not need an answer to W. D's. question regarding the rights and duties of prospective motherhood and fatherhood. As I see the matter, Liberty with Responsibility solves, or should solve, our friend's problem. Woman is the owner and guardian of the human CREATORY, the laboratory in which are fashioned and formed new humanbeings. Ownership and guardianship of this creatory impose duties, responsibilities, that cannot be assumed by man, not even by proxy. Ethical rights and duties—responsibilities—are commensurate, run parallel. That is, the greater the duty, the heavier the responsibility, the greater should be the right. These indisputable facts and deductions involve and include the further statement that woman's duty to the helpless unborn should most sacredly guard the right of that embryonic human being from all invasion, or from unwelcome intrusions of all kinds.

The necessary corollary of this reasoning is that fatherhood must also be free. Masculine man must be free to do, non-invasively, whatever in his best judgment he may consider right and proper to be done for his own development, unfoldment or protection; free also to consider what is altruistically and racially due from him towards other prospective mothers who may select him as partner in their work of race reproduction.

LIFE AFTER DEATH.

The limits of our Light Bearer prohibit enlargement upon the speculative question of man's continued conscious existence after the death of his body. As I view the matter there are other problems that call much more imperatively for consideration and adjustment, than does this old yet ever new—and to me always interesting—question as to whether death does or does not "end all." While generally avoiding discussion I have my own opinions upon this subject, opinions that probably do not differ greatly from those of our friendly critic.

"One world at a time" is not a bad motto. To live the largest and best life possible—egoistically and altruistically—in the "here and now," will, in my opinion, be the very best preparation for any possible, any hoped-for life in the great "hereafter." M. HARMAN.

Hanna's motto is, "Let well enough alone," and Hanna thinks he is "well enough."—Atlanta Constitution.

The American Press-Writers' Association.

The Press-Writers have been much in evidence the past week in Boston "Traveler," Philadelphia "Bulletin," Chicago "Record-Herald," and many local papers. On January 19 the Boston members held an adjourned meeting to hear and take action on the report of the committee previously appointed to investigate the recent hold-up of "Discontent," at the Tacoma, Wash., post office. After a thorough sifting of all the evidence obtainable the committee submitted the following resolutions which were unanimously adopted, and the secretary instructed to have them published as extensively as possible:

WHEREAS: The evidence submitted to your committee shows that the officials in charge of the mails at Tacoma, Washington, have acted with undue exercise of power in delaying the mails of the Home Colonists at Home, Washington, and that the action taken seems to indicate a desire to suppress the freedom of the press,

Resolved: That we condemn such action, with all others of the kind, as a blow to our most cherished institutions, liberty of speech and liberty of the press.

And Resolved: That we, the members of the Boston branch of the American Press-Writers' Association, protest most earnestly against any action tending to the suppression of literature advocating liberty of thought, provided such literature is morally unobjectionable.

W. F. FRAZIER, AURIN F. HILL, W. J. HUTCHESON, Committee.

NEW MEMBERS.

155 b. Thompson, J. C., Washington, Orange County, Vt.
208 b. Gunning, Mrs. M. 124 Pembroke St., Boston, Mass.
209 b. Williams, David, 29 Seymour Ave., Utica, N. Y.
210 a. Clark, W. E., 3425 Woodland Ave., Kansas City, Missouri.
211 d. Hollis, Ella M., Groveland, Mass.
212 c. Loomis, Mrs. Hulda P., Chicopee, Mass.

CORRECTION.

2 a. Allen, Henry E., Benton Harbor, Mich.
A. C. ARMSTRONG, 17 Leroy St., Dorchester, Mass.

VARIOUS VOICES.

Mrs. A. H., Nemo, S. Dakota:—I enclose 25 cents for "The Prodigal Daughter." A copy of your little Lucifer has fallen into my hands and its a dandy, I tell you.

J. S. Billings, Director, New York Public Library:—I am instructed by the Trustees to acknowledge with thanks the receipt of Lucifer, for the year 1901, which you have been so kind to present to this Library.

R. E. La Fetra, Cal.:—Enclosed you will find a dollar for another year's subscription to Lucifer,—the ablest paper published in our country. I would like to increase the circulation of Lucifer and other papers like it.

Myra Pepper, 1324 E. 16 St., Kansas City, Mo.:—Let me say a word or two in praise of Lucifer. You're one of the few radical papers that has the courage to say anything about the outrage at Home, Washington. I expect to remain here this winter and if there are any friends of Lucifer in or near Kansas City, I'd like to meet them, or hear from them.

Leon Partridge, Milford, Mass.:—In a late number of Lucifer, Comrade Kerr takes strong exception to the idea of voluntary protective associations. He instances the Montagus and Capulets, the Scotch clans, and other like cases, as proof of the evil of such associations. Now, what have they to do with Anarchy—or any other of the higher forms of human association? If we have not progressed beyond the need of war among ourselves, what are we working for? We have no use for internal wars—we can arbitrate. The idea of the clan is, now, to form a union against archistic and chaotic invasion.

A. A., Newbury, Mass.:—Enclosed please find fifty cents for which send "Leaves of Grass" to me; also please tell me of how many volumes is "The Psychology of Sex" by Havelock Ellis, and how much is the cost complete. I remember that book was spoken of once in Lucifer—I think as unrivalled except by "Psychopathia Sexualis." Well some years ago my physician spoke of that work and was to lend it when he recovered it; having lost track of his copy when he returned from a three months course in New York City, I said I would buy it and he gave me the address—I sent and was refused—"only sold to the profession." I might have got Dr. W., perhaps, to send for it, but I was angry and let it drop. Dr. W. is Homœpathic. I "turned" to that school years ago. It always seems to me analogous in medicine to the Unitarian sect in religion. And I regard the Unitarian people as of the salt of the religious earth; socially, of the best and finest of humanity.

AT HALF-PRICE

100 COPIES
OF
DR. FOOTE'S HOME CYCLOPEDIA.

While they last, a copy will be sent for only $1 to any subscriber to Lucifer whose subscription is paid one year in advance.

A FAMILY GUIDE-BOOK OF THE TWENTIETH CENTURY.

1248 PAGES. 500,000 WORDS. 400 PICTURES. 250 RECIPES.
80 CHROMOS ON 18 COLOR PLATES.

A few among the many subjects treated:

PART I.—Disease: Cause, Prevention, Cure.—Common Sense Remedies.

PART II.—Chronic Diseases of the Breathing Organs.—Diseases of the Heart and Blood Vessels.—Diseases of Liver, Stomach, Bowels.—Chronic Affections of the Urinary Organs.—Private Words for Men and Women.—"Hints to the Children."—Constitutional Diseases.—Affections of the Eyes and Ears.—The Treatment of Disease. Containing 200 Prescriptions for Common Ailments and Complete Table of Antidotes for Poisons.

PART III.—Plain Home Talks About the Sexual Organs.—The Natural Relation of the Sexes.—Civilization and Marriage.—History of Marriage.—Defects in Marriage Systems.—Social Immorality. (Part III. takes a view of marriage and the sexual relations from a physiological standpoint. It is searching, interesting, original and startling.

PART IV.—Improving Monogamic Marriage.—Adaptation in Marriage.—Restricted Marriage and Parentage.—Three Phases of Monogamic Marriages.—Intermarriage of Relatives.—Essays for Married People.—What Determines Sex.—Philosophy of Child-Marking.—Essays for the Future.

Is your subscription paid to No. 952? If so, the Home Cyclopedia will be sent to you for $1 net. Postage 18 cts.

VICE: ITS FRIENDS AND ITS FOES

BY EDWIN C. WALKER.

CONTENTS—Brotherhood of Man; The Recognition of Facts; Folly of "For Men Only." Definition of Vice; Horrors of Prostitution; Abnormal Sexuality; Errors of Fathers, Mothers and Teachers; Persecution Does Not Reform; Prostitution and the Crusaders; The "Spoiling of the Heathen;" What are the Effects of Raids and Crusades? The Economic Side of the Problem; Party Politics in Vice Crusading; In What Does Prostitution Consist? Some Causes of Prostitution; Two Kinds of Prostitution Compared; The Opponents of Divorce; "Purifying" the Tenements; Action for Advanced Women.

WITH APPENDIX:—The Wanderings of a Spirit; Our Fair Civilization; The Folly and Cruelty of it All. Price 10c.

Address M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

ADDITIONS TO OUR BOOK LIST.

ANARCHISM: Its Philosophy and Ideal. Peter Kropotkin. 5c.
ANARCHIST MORALITY. Peter Kropotkin. 5c.
BALZAC'S SERAPHITA: The Mystery of Sex. Mary Hanford Ford. Cloth, $1.
CHICAGO CONFERENCE OF TRUSTS. Speeches, debates, etc.; 21 portraits of delegates, including Benj. R. Tucker, Laurence Gronlund, William Jennings Bryan, Samuel Gompers, Louis F. Post, and George Schilling. 436 pages, 50c.
FIELDS, FACTORIES, AND WORKSHOPS; or, Industry Combined with Agriculture and Brain Work with Manual Work. Peter Kropotkin. 260 pages, cloth. Postage, 5c.
GIORDANO BRUNO. His Life, Teachings, and Martyrdom. Burned for heresy in Rome, Feb. 17, 1600. 5c.
INFIDEL DEATH-BEDS. "Idle Tales of Dying Horrors." G. W. Foote. Brief biographical sketches of 37 Freethinkers, including Bruno, Buckle, Byron, Comte, Darwin, George Eliot, Gibbon, Goethe, Hugo, Harriet Martineau, Mill, Paine, Madame Roland, George Sand, Shelley, Voltney, and Voltaire. 25c.
KORANNIS. A story for young and old. Extra levant cloth. $1.
LUCIFER. Third Series, Vol. III. (1899). Cloth, $1.25. Postage, 15c.
MARRIAGE IN FREE SOCIETY. Edward Carpenter. A dainty little gift book. 25c.
MONOPOLY, or How Labor Is Robbed. William Morris. Illustrated. 5c.
NORA, A DOLL'S HOUSE, and GHOSTS. Ibsen. Cloth. 25c.
PERSONAL EXPERIENCES of Two American Anti-Vivisectionists in Various Countries. Philip G. Peabody. With an Appendix by Col. R. G. Ingersoll. Reduced from 25c to 15c.
STUDIES IN SOCIOLOGY. In four parts: I., The Law of Happiness; II., The Law of Individual Control; III., The Law of Exchange; IV., The Law of Environment. Albert Chavannes. 25c.
THE BLUE LAWS OF CONNECTICUT. Taken from the Code of 1650 and the public records of the Colony of Connecticut previous to 1665. With an account of the persecution of Witches and Quakers in New England, and some extracts from the Blue Laws of Virginia. Copiously illustrated. 25c.
THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM. Principles and platform of organized Freethought. 10c.
THE FUTURE OF SECULARISM. When will the Cause of Justice triumph? 5c.
THE PYRAMID OF TYRANNY. The School; The Church; The Press; The Police; The Law; The Army. F. Domela Nieuwenhuis. 5c.
THE SECRET INSTRUCTIONS OF THE JESUITS. A reprint from an edition published in 1723, quoted by the highest authorities as authentic. The work is redolent of Jesuit craft and is a plain index to the underhand working of that order against the welfare of individuals and society. 15c.
THE STATE: ITS HISTORIC ROLE. Prince Peter Kropotkin. 10c.
THE TROUBADOURS AND COURTS OF LOVE. J. F. Rowbotham. Cloth. 250 pages. $1.50. Postage, 10c.
USEFUL WORK VERSUS USELESS TOIL. William Morris. 5c.
VACCINATION A GIGANTIC CRIME. Samuel Darling. 15c.
WOMAN: Four Centuries of Progress. Susan H. Wixon. 5c.

Address M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

Wanted.

"Common Sense Theology," by D. Howland Hamilton.
"The Truth About Love."
State condition and price. Cash paid or other books given in exchange, by M. Harman, 500 Fulton St., Chicago.

Wanted: A woman partner. Pleasant business. Give age and occupation. Address Dr. Georjean Miller, Latham, Ark.

RADICAL LITERATURE.

For Sale by M. Harman, 500 Fulton St., Chicago.

A CHAMBERMAID'S DIARY. By Octave Mirbeau. Translated from the French by Benj. R. Tucker. 466 pages. Handsomely bound in cloth. $1.50.
ADVANCEMENT OF SCIENCE. Prof. John Tyndall's famous Inaugural Address before the British Association for the Advancement of Science, with the articles on Prayer which so stirred the religious world. Cloth, 50c; paper, 25c.
AGE OF REASON (The). Presentation edition. Part I reprinted from the first English edition. Part II corrected by M. D. Conway's edition. With Paine's own account of his arrest in Paris. Photogravure portrait from the Romney painting exhibited in London. Containing also portrait from the Jarvis painting; from the Peale painting, known as the Bonneville portrait, representing Paine as a member of the French Assembly, and a half-tone of the Peale painting. Large half-tones of the house presented to Paine, in which he lived in New Rochelle, and of the monument and surroundings. Yorktown, Pa., scenes; also eight half-tone views of buildings, etc., associated with Paine's life in Paris, and other illustrations. With Preface, Chronological Table, Notes, Index, etc. Printed on antique wove paper, large octavo, wide margins, gilt edge. Special cover design in colors. The finest and most accurate of all editions. Boxed. Postpaid, $1.
AGE OF REASON. Thomas Paine. Cloth, with steel plate portrait, 90c; paper 15c.
A PHYSICIAN IN THE HOUSE. A New Family Medical Work, by Dr. J. H. Greer. This book is up-to-date in every particular. It will save you hundreds of dollars in doctors' bills. It tells you how to cure yourself by simple and harmless home remedies. It recommends no poisonous or dangerous drugs. It teaches how to save health and life by safe methods. It teaches prevention—that it is better to know how to live and avoid disease than to take any medicine as a cure. It is not an advertisement and has no medicine to sell. It has hundreds of excellent recipes for the cure of the various diseases. It has 16 colored plates showing different parts of the human body. The chapter on Painless Midwifery is worth its weight in gold to women. The "Care of Children" is something every mother ought to read. It teaches the value of Air, Sunshine, and Water as medicines. It contains valuable information for the married. This book cannot fail to please you. If you are looking for health by the safest and easiest means, do not delay getting it. It has eight hundred pages, is neatly bound in cloth, with gold letters, and will be sent by mail or express, prepaid to any address, for $2.75.
A PLEA FOR THE NEW WOMAN. May L. Collins. With large new half-tone portrait. 10c.
A TALE OF THE STRASSBURG GEESE. R. B. Kerr. Together with The Strike of the Strassburg Geese (C. W. Coolridge), A Traveler's Tale (H. B. Kerr), The Cat's Story (Emile Zola) 5c.
AUTONOMY, SELF-LAW. A fragmentary dissertation on the right to non-invasive self-hood. 5c.
A WEEK ON THE CONCORD AND MERRIMAC RIVERS. Henry D. Thoreau. 25c.
BIBLE TEMPERANCE. E. C. Walker. Proving that Liquor Drinking is Commended, Defended and Enjoined by the Bible, and giving close reference to the chapters and verses. 10c.
BORNING BETTER BABIES.—Through regulating reproduction by controlling conception. H. B. Foote, Jr., M. D. 25c.
CAUSES OF HARD TIMES, and the Money Question. Albert Chavannes. 5c.
CHILDREN OF THE ITALIAN POOR. Paola Lombroso. 5c.
CITYLESS AND COUNTRYLESS WORLD. Henry Olerich. The author of this epoch-making book tells in a very charming way the story of the evolution of human society on the planet Mars, and in so doing outlines a practicable way out of the slaveries now endured by earth's inhabitants. Handsomely bound in red silk, with gold lettering on back and sides; 447 pages. Price, $1.

DARWIN, THE. (A novel.) Elmina D. Slenker. 50c.

DAWN OF CIVILIZATION, The; or, England in the Nineteenth Century. J. C. Spence. 176 pages. 25c.

DAWN-THOUGHT ON THE RECONCILIATION. By J. Wm. Lloyd. An inspired treatise that, with insight and solution, touches all the questions of life, love, soul and society. A prose-poem, simple enough for a child to enjoy, deep enough to make a philosopher think. The largest creed, the most generous theory, the gladdest gospel. A book of life. A religion of growth and the overlook—freedom and optimism. Read it. Printed in old style antique type, rubricated with portrait of the author. In three editions, de luxe, plain and paper bound. Prices, $1.25, $1.00 and 50c.

DIANA. A psycho-physiological essay on the sexual relations; for married men and women. 25c.

DIGGING FOR BED-ROCK. Camp-meeting talks and sketches by Moses Harman. 5c.

DIVORCE. A lecture by H. B. Foote, Jr., M. D., and extracts from noted authors. 25c.

DR. FOOTE'S SOCIAL SCIENCE SERIES OF DIME PAMPHLETS—Wedlock; Scientific Marriage; Heredity; A B C of Temperaments; Powell and his Critics; Physiological Marriage; Physical Improvement of Humanity; Causes of Disease, Insanity, and Premature Death; A Step Backward. Any of the above books sent by mail on receipt of price.

DYNAMIC THEORY OF LIFE AND MIND. An attempt to show that all organic beings are both constructed and operated by the dynamic agencies of their respective environments. By James H. Alexander. Over 400 illustrations, 87 chapters, 1,067 pages and a 3-column index of 11 pages. Cloth, $3.75.

EAST TENNESSEE SKETCHES. A and Cecile Chavannes. 50c.

ECONOMICS OF ANARCHY. A Study of the Industrial Type. Dyer D. Lum. 15c.

EIGHT-HOUR MOVEMENT. John P. Altgeld, ex-Governor of Illinois. 5c.

EVOLUTION AND REVOLUTION. Elisee Reclus. 5c.

FALSE CLAIMS OF THE CHURCH. John E. Remsburg. Analyzing and confuting the claims made by churchmen that the Christian religion has promoted morality, learning, temperance, science, freedom, and shown how she has opposed progress. Paper, 10c.

FREE LOVE; or, A Philosophical Demonstration of the Non-Exclusive Nature of Connubial Love. Austin Kent. Reduced to 15c.

FREE PRESS. Arguments in support of demurrer to the indictment of M. Harman, E. C. Walker and Geo. Harman, under the Comstock law. G. C. Remens and David Overmyer. 20c.

GOD AND THE STATE. Bakounine. 25c.

GOVERNMENT ANALYZED. A remarkable work by a remarkable man, Col. John R. Kelso, the history of whose life reads more like romance than reality. This book is the last of a series—Deity Analyzed, Bible Analyzed, Universe Analyzed. By the author's death this work was left unfinished, but was completed by his wife, Etta Dunbar Kelso. 519 pages; cloth. Price reduced from $1.50 to $1.

HELEN HARLOW'S VOW. Lois Waisbrooker. 25c.

HILDA'S HOME. Rosa Graul. "An o'er true tale" of woman's wrongs and of one woman's struggles and final triumphs in her attempt to secure justice for herself and for her sisters. 438 pages. Cloth, $1; paper, 50c.

HUMAN RIGHTS. J. Madison Hook. 5c.

IMPORTANCE OF HONEST MONEY. A simple, scientific, invariable standard of price. James Adleman. 320 pages. Paper, 50c.

IN BRIGHTER CLIMES; or, Life in Socioland. Albert Chavannes. 25c.

IN HELL AND THE WAY OUT. A plan of Social Democracy outlined. Henry E. Allen. 10c.

INSTITUTIONAL MARRIAGE. From the viewpoint of an exiled Marsian. M. Harman. 5c.

JOHN'S WAY. A domestic radical story. Elmina D. Slenker. 25c.

KAREZZA. Ethics of Marriage. A bold, brave book, teaching ideal marriage, rights of the unborn child, a designed and controlled maternity. Sample pages free. $1.

LIBERTY IN LITERATURE. Testimonial to Walt Whitman. "Let us put wreaths on the brows of the living." An address delivered in Philadelphia, Oct. 31, 1890, with portrait of Whitman. Containing also Col. Ingersoll's address at the funeral of Walt Whitman, Mar. 30, 1892. Cloth, 50c; paper, 25c.

LIBERTY. Political, Religious, Social, and Moral. A. F. Tindall. 5c.

LITTLE LESSONS FOR LITTLE FOLKS. Elmina D. Slenker. Boards, 40c.

LIZZIE MELTON. A story of a self-reliant girl. By Albert Chavannes. With portrait of author. 25c.

MAGNETATION, and Its Relation to Health and Character. Albert Chavannes. 25c.

MARRIAGE. An address by Dr. Juliet H. Severance. 5c.

MARRIAGE AND MORALITY. Lillian Harman. 5c.

MARTYRDOM OF MAN. Winwood Reade. This is a very interestingly pictured epitome of universal history, showing what the race has undergone—its martyrdom—in its rise to its present plane. It shows how war and religion have been oppressive factors in man's struggle for liberty; and the last chapter, of some 150 pages, describes his intellectual struggle from the animal period of the earth to the present, adding an outline of what the author conceives would be a religion of reason and love. Winwood Reade's reputation as a writer of fine English, of deep study and careful reasoning, needs no word of praise. Cloth, $1.

MEN, WOMEN AND CHANCE. William Platt. Containing two tales: The Ascent to the Heights, and Blind Men and Seeing. Well printed on heavy paper and artistically bound in cloth. Gilt top, rough edges. 75c.

MEN, WOMEN, AND GODS. Helen H. Gardener. With preface by Col. R. G. Ingersoll. Contents: Introduction by Col. Ingersoll. Men, Women, and Gods. Vicarious Atonement. Historical Facts and Theological Fictions. Appendix. Address to the Clergy and Others. Letter to Cleveland Congress of Freethinkers. The only authorized and correct edition. Large 12mo, heavy-toned paper. Portrait. This volume is by far the best writing this famous author ever did. It is very fine. Cloth, $1; paper, 50c.

MISSING LINK IN MODERN SPIRITUALISM, THE. A. Leah (Fox) Underhill. With portraits of the Fox Sisters and others. 478 pages. Cloth. Reduced to $1.

MORIBUND SOCIETY AND ANARCHY. Jean Grave. Cloth, 40c; paper, 25c.

MOTHERHOOD IN FREEDOM. M. Harman. 5c.

MUTUAL BANKING. A simple plan to abolish interest on money. William B. Greene. 10c.

OUR WORSHIP OF PRIMITIVE SOCIAL GUESSES. E. C. Walker. Contents: Love and Law; The Mollock of the Monogamic Meal; The Continuity of Race-Life, and Tyranny; Food and Her Fallacies, a Criticism; When Men and Women Are and When They Are Not Varieties; The New Woman: What Is she? What will she be? The Stats Hiding Behind Its Own Mistakes; Bishop Potter's Opinion of Divorce; Love: Its Attraction and Expression; Is She an Honest Girl? Lloyd, Platt, and the Pitiful Facts; Social Radicals and Parentage; Anthropology and Monogamy; Love and Trust Versus Fear; Reflections upon Reading William Platt's "Women, Love, and Life." 15c.

PERSONAL RIGHTS AND SEXUAL WRONGS. Oswald Dawson. 20c.

PRIESTLY CELIBACY. Prof. A. L. Rawson. Together with The Incoherence of Transition (E. C. Walker), Motherhood in Freedom (Moses Harman), The Greatest Sin (an allegory, E. B. Kerr), and Jealousy, the Foe of Freedom (Oscar Rotter). 25c.

RELIGION AND RATIONALISM. The relation of each to human liberty. The religionist, fancying that he has the whole truth, is logically opposed to investigation, and he appeals to physical force to arrest the discovery of new truths. What Rationalism is, and how many believe themselves Freethinkers who are only unbelieving or disgruntled religionists. The necessity for separate organizations and a division of labor among reformers. The Secular Union. Important facts and arguments in a compact form. E. C. Walker. 5c.

RIGHTS OF WOMEN AND THE SEXUAL RELATIONS. Karl Heinzen. A new edition, together with the startling letters of "Louise Mayer" on Men and Women, and a report of the Convention of German Women at Frankenstadt. A book of 226 pages, handsomely printed on good paper. It is more than twice the size of the original edition of "Rights of Women" alone and yet is sold at a lower price. Heinzen's great book is destined to become a classic and is sure to open the eyes of those who think women have their rights already. Its price is so low that every reader of this advertisement can afford to buy it, and no better book can be found to interest those who heretofore have given little or no thought to the necessity for the emancipation of women from ownership by men. Cloth, $1.

RIGHTS OF MAN. Thomas Paine. Answer to Burke's attack upon the French revolution. A political treatise of great general value, as advocating liberty and democracy. Contains the fundamental principles of true republicanism. Cloth, 50c; paper, 25c.

RUBAIYAT (Quatrains) OF OMAR KHAYYAM. Edward FitzGerald's interpretation; with original introduction; special cover; latest version. Paper, 10c.

RULED BY THE TOMB. A discussion of free thought and free love. Orford Northcote. 10c.

SCIENCE IN STORY; or, Sammy Tubbs, the Boy Doctor, and Sponsie, the Troublesome Monkey. For young folks. Dr. H. B. Foote. Five volumes in "red line," presentation edition. $5. Five volumes, plainer binding, $2.50; all in one volume, $2.

SEXUAL PHYSIOLOGY FOR THE YOUNG. Being the fifth volume of "Science in Story." 250 pages; cloth bound; illustrated. 50c.

SONGS OF THE UNBLIND CUPID. J. Wm. Lloyd. Edition de luxe. Verses printing from Kelmscott type upon deckle edged hand made paper of cerulean tint. Initial letters, ornaments and borders are in red; initial letter and sketch upon the opening page are hand painted in water colors. Covers brown, with choice of silver or gold lettering. Very handsome gift book. 50c.

TALKS ON NATURE. Important information for both sexes. Dr. J. H. Greer. 192 pages. Reduced from 50 to 25c.

THE ABOLITION OF MARRIAGE. John Beverly Robinson. Together with Isabel's Intention (Mariette), Reminiscences of Berlin Heights (A. Warren), and The Sexes and Love in Freedom (Oscar Rotter). 25c.

THE BAR SINISTER AND LICIT LOVE, including the first biennial proceedings of the Lancaster Liberal League, and a full account of the Lanchester case, with full-page half-tone pictures of Edith Lanchester, and Lillian Harman. Handsomely bound in green and gold covers. 367 pages. 25c.

THE BRITISH BARBARIANS. Grant Allen, the greatest of the Hill-Top pioneers. Dedicated "to all who have heart enough, brain enough, and soul enough to understand it." Handsomely bound in cloth. 251 pages. $1.

THE WOMAN WHO DID. Grant Allen. A powerful story of a refined, educated and high-spirited woman who dared to defy the tyranny of church and state and ignore the institution of marriage. Handsomely bound in cloth. $1.

THE NEW HEDONISM. Grant Allen. The opening paragraph says: "The old ascetism said: 'Be virtuous and you will be happy.' The new hedonism says: 'Be happy and you will be virtuous.'" In another place the writer says: "In proportion as men have freed themselves from mediæval superstitions have they begun to perceive that the unclean and impure things are celibacy and ascetism; that the pure and beautiful and ennobling thing is the fit and worthy exercise of the reproductive function." Paper covers; 32 large pages; twelve copies, 50c. Single copy, 5c.

THE CHICAGO MARTYRS. The famous speeches of the eight condemned anarchists in Judge Gary's Court, and Altgeld's reasons for pardoning Fielden, Neebe and Schwab. 25c.

THE COMING WOMAN. Lillie D. White. 5c.

THE EVOLUTION OF MODESTY. Jonathan Mayo Crane. A consideration of the origin of clothes and the reasons why people wear clothing. Here are a few questions it answers: What is modesty? What is the cause of it? What is the use of it? What is the cause of the feeling of shame? Is nudity immodest? What is the cause of the notion that it is shameful to expose some parts of the body? Why do not all peoples agree as to what parts of the body should be concealed? 5c.

THE FOUNTAIN OF LIFE; or, The Threefold Power of Sex. Lois Waisbrooker. 50c.

THE PRODIGAL DAUGHTER; or, The Price of Virtue. Rachel Campbell. Together with Legal Wifehood (Lucinda B. Chandler), Life's Gifts (Olive Schreiner), and Marriage—What It Was and Is; Will the Coming Woman Marry? 25c.

THE SANCTITY OF MARRIAGE. As viewed from a moral and sanitary standpoint. A solemn protest against the present demoralizing management of that institution, its effects upon offspring and its influence upon education. By Dr. Robert A. Greer. A valuable "opening wedge" in missionary work. Price reduced from 25c to 10c.

THE REVIVAL OF PURITANISM. E. C. Walker. 10c.

THE RIGHTS OF CHILDREN. R. B. Kerr. Together with What Are Women Here For? (E. B. Foote, M. D.), The New Martyrdom (Lillian Harman), and The Will, from the French of Guy de Maupassant. 25c.

THE UNWOMANLY WOMAN. Lizzie M. Holmes. Together with That Great Fraud, Yclept Society (Moses Hull), Virgin Soil (George Egerton), and Normal Sexual Action (Ernest Winne). 25c.

THE WORM TURNS. Revolutionary Poems. Voltairine de Cleyre. 10c.

THOMAS JEFFERSON. His Political, Social and Religious Philosophy. Gen. M. M. Trumbull. 5c.

THOMAS PAINE. The Good and Evil of His Life and Writings. George Lippard. 10c.

TOKOLOGY. A book for every woman. By Alice B. Stockham, M. D. Illustrated. Tokology teaches possible painless pregnancy and parturition, giving full, plain directions for the care of a woman before and after confinement. The ailments of pregnancy can be prevented as well as the pains and dangers of childbirth avoided and women need not go down to death giving birth to children. English, German or Swedish. $2.25.

WHAT IS PROPERTY? An Inquiry into the Principle of Right and of Government. P. J. Proudhon. Translated by B. R. Tucker. 360 pages. Cloth. (Slightly shelf-worn.) Reduced to $1.

TRAVELS IN FAITH. By Capt. Robert C. Adams. His mental experience from supersitition to rationalism. Cloth, 75c; paper, 25c.

VINDICATION OF THOMAS PAINE. Col. R. G. Ingersoll. Dealing with all the slanders brought against the name and fame of Paine. A little pamphlet which every admirer of Thomas Paine should have by him for reference. Paper, 15c.

VITAL FORCE. Magnetic Exchange and Magnetation. Albert Chavannes. 25c.

WHY THE UNDERTONE? An open letter to Judge Gary. Sarah E. Ames. 15c.

WHEN IS FREEDOM FREE OR EQUALITY EQUAL in the Social Evil or is Marriage? Ory W. Lee. 10c.

WHEN LOVE IS LIBERTY AND NATURE LAW. John Badcock, Jr. 10c.

WOMAN, CHURCH, AND STATE. Matilda Joslyn Gage. 7[illegible] is Mrs. Gage's last and crowning work. Every woman ought to read it. Every liberal woman and man will want it. A burning protest against the tremendous wrong done woman by the church, which controlled the state. It ought to be widely read for the good it will do. Cloth, $1.50; paper, 75c.

WHAT THE YOUNG NEED TO KNOW: a Primer of Sexual Rationalism. Edwin C. Walker. "Let us cease to be ashamed of what makes us men, of what makes us women, of what gives us the kisses of lovers and the encircling arms of babes." Paper covers; 42 large pages. 15c.

WHAT IS RELIGION? Ingersoll's last public address, delivered at the meeting of the Free Religious Association in Boston on June 2, 1899. To which is appended the poem, "Declaration of the Free," the last verse written by the great Freethinker. 5c.

WOMAN IN THE PAST, PRESENT AND FUTURE. Woman was the first human being that tasted bondage. Woman was a slave before the slave existed. The basis of all oppression is economic dependence on the oppressor. This has been the condition of woman in the past and is so still. She is now a slave of the slave. This work is August Bebel's masterpiece. 8vo, 122 pages. 25c.

Address M. Harman, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

Price 2 Cents.

LUCIFER.

THE LIGHT-BEARER.

THIRD SERIES, VOL. VI., No. 4. CHICAGO, ILLINOIS, FEB. 6, E. M. 302. [C. E. 1902.] WHOLE No. 903

Are England and America Doing "God's Will"?

Several years ago our present Secretary of State, John Hay, wrote the following lines, entitled

"THY WILL BE DONE."

Not in dumb resignation
We lift our hands on high;
Not like the nerveless fatalist,
Content to trust and die.
Our faith springs like the eagle
That soars to meet the sun,
And cries exulting unto thee:
"O Lord! thy will be done!"

When tyrant feet are trampling
Upon the commou weal,
Thou dost not bid us cringe and writhe
Beneath the iron heel;
In thy name we assert our rights
With sword and tongue and pen,
And e'en the headman's ax may flash
Thy message unto men.

Thy will! it bids the weak be strong,
It bids the strong be just;
No lip to fawn, no hand to beg,
No brow to seek the dust.
Wherever man oppresses man
Beneath thy liberal sun,
O God! be there thine arm made bare,
Thy righteous will be done.

Finding it hard to reconcile Mr. Hay's approval of the course of England with the spirit of the poem, Mrs. Celia B. Whitehead wrote to him asking if he were the author, or if another John Hay had written the lines. In reply Mr. Hay's private secretary confirmed the authorship and added: "The Secretary is unable to relieve the confusion of mind you seem to be in in regard to the contradiction you see between his words and his acts." But the reading public will be able to make a tolerably accurate conjecture. L. H.

The history of persecution is a history of endeavor to cheat nature, to make water run up hill, to twist a rope of sand. It makes no difference whether the actors be many or one, a tyrant or a mob. A mob is a society of bodies voluntarily descending to the nature of the beast. Its fit hour of activity is night. Its actions are insane, like its whole constitution. It persecutes a principle; it would whip a right; it would tar and feather justice by inflicting fire and outrage upon the houses of those who have these. It resembles the pranks of boys, who run with fire engines to put out the ruddy aurora streaming to the stars. The martyr cannot be disbonored. Every lash inflicted is a tongue of fame; every prison a more illustrious abode; every burned book or house enlightens the world; every suppressed or expunged word reverberates through the earth from side to side. The minds of men are at last aroused; reason looks out and justifies her own, and malice finds all her work in ruin. It is the whipper who is whipped and the tyrant who is undone. —Emerson.

The Pocketbook.

Late one evening Jean Loqueteux decided that it was time to go home. By that he meant a bench under a chestnut tree on the Place d'Anvers, where he had slept during the last few weeks. Famished, he had only made two cents—two foreign coins at that—at the entrance of the Vaudeville Theater, opening the door of a cab.

"Such hard luck," remarked the poor man, talking to himself. "If I had only two sous to buy a crust of bread in the morning."

Dragging painfully his ill-clad person, hungry, suffering besides from illness, he resumed his walk toward the bench under the chestnut tree, hoping that he would meet a providential man willing to part with ten centimes, the price of his breakfast. Suddenly he stumbled against something in the darkness. Was it worth the trouble to look and see what it could be? Who knows? Providence has little regard for the poor, yet she is kind to them at times. Once he had found a leg of mutton in the mud; maybe this time it was a chop.

"Let me see!" he said, and picked up the object.

"Humph! This time I am deceived! It is no good to eat!"

No one, not even a sergeant de ville, could be seen in the street. Jean Loqueteux went under a lamp post to examine what he had in his hand.

"Well," he said aloud, "this is funny!"

The object was a black pocketbook containing ten thousand francs in government bills, but no letters, no cards, nothing to identify the owner.

"To think," he remarked to himself, "that some people carry ten thousand francs in that way in their pockets. It is enough to make any one sick. And now I have to go to the police station, out of my way, and I am so tired. Decidedly I have no luck tonight."

And Jean Loqueteux went to the police station, where he experienced all kinds of trouble trying to see the commissary, on account of his dilapidated appearance. Finally the magistrate consented to receive him.

"Monsieur Commissary," he said, very politely, handing the portfolio, "I have found this."

"And, naturally, there is nothing in it?"

"Look for yourself, Monsieur Commissary."

This gentleman opened the pocketbook, saw the bills, which he counted at once.

"Ten thousand francs! An enormous amount of money, my friend. You are a brave man, an honest man, a hero! Do you know that?"

Jean Loqueteux remained very quiet, only repeating, "To think that some people carry in that way ten thousand francs in their pockets!"

The commissary was considering the vagrant with more astonishment than admiration.

"And you have found this? There is no use talking, you are a hero! What is your name?"

"Jean Loqueteux."

"What is your profession?"

"I have none."

"Then I suppose you have an income. Where do you live?"

"Alas! Monsieur Commissary, I am a poor beggar. I have no residence."

"What? No residence? This is astonishing. He has no residence," remarked the commissary. Then, addressing Jean Loqueteux, he added, "You have no residence, therefore you are a vagrant. You are a hero, evidently. Yes, you are a hero. But you are also a vagrant, and I am compelled to apply the law. Here is the pocketbook; no doubt about that. You may receive a reward, possibly five francs, if the owner is discovered. But this does not alter the fact that you live in a state of vagrancy: Believe me, it would have been much better for you to find a residence than to find a pocketbook containing ten thousand francs. The law does not compel you to find a pocketbook but it compels you to find a residence; otherwise——"

"Otherwise?" asked Jean Loqueteux.

"Otherwise I have to lock you up for the night and send you in the morning to the police-court."

The commissary rang the bell and two policemen led the vagrant to a cell.

"Really," said the disheartened Jean Loqueteux. "I have no luck today!"—Octave Mirbeau, in "Current Literature."

Health and Medicine.

Both parties to the drug versus hygiene controversy are manifestly in the wrong. The truth is equally at variance with both positions. The correct view to take is that medicine is a grand though not mathematically exact science, and that the failures are in great part due to the mediocre intellect of the practitioners. People love to be humbugged. The most skillful physician is not the one of greatest repute. A medical man of brains will apply scientific principles, including those of hygiene, while the witless leech will not find water cure nor rest cure in his books. Drugs are at times an efficient supplement to good habits. I speak from the standpoint of one who could not live without the most drastic applications of water and long continued fasting. The controversialists have only lost sight of the fact that, as humanity runs, not more than one per centum of the 70,000 doctors can be expected to have any reasoning power.

EDGAR D. BRINKERHOFF.

To Lucifer's Press-Writers.

There is one point in connection with the obscenity law that I should very much like to see written up.

I think we have received at least a hundred letters asking for information as to what our comrades have been arrested for. These letters have come from every part of the United States, and the temptation to send them the articles is very great; but if we do so we are liable to imprisonment. Is not the court then, so far as the great people are concerned, a secret tribunal?

Again, consider the defamation of character that we are not allowed to refute. In the minds of the people at large obscenity is something different from what the courts are pronouncing obscene; thus many people look upon us as vile. Could they know just what it is that we are fined and imprisoned for sending through the mails, they would honor instead of despising us; yet they are not allowed to know.

Our postmistress asked the inspector here if it was the words or the ideas in the article he was criticising, that were obscene. He replied the ideas, and told her further that if an article could possibly be construed as obscene it was her duty to report it.

Now will not the Press-Writers show this side of the Comstock law to the people? By the way, the article in question affirms the right of woman to herself, claims that there are no "fallen women" in the sense the world calls fallen—that they have been knocked down. How do you like that, my sister the idea that it is obscene to claim that you belong to yourselves?

LOIS WAISBROOKER, Home, Washington.

In What Does Purity Consist?

BY GRACE LEE ORR.

Not long ago a certain woman in this city wished to be admitted to one of the federated woman's clubs. She was a perfect lady, refined and cultured, stood well in the church and was well known for her charitable deeds. Her application for admission to the club was refused because one of the good members had delved back into the past and discovered the fact that she had once given herself to a man she loved without having first been prayed over by a priest.

In excusing their conduct one of the club members said to another: "I do not think it right that we who have always lived pure lives should be obliged to associate with such people."

Now the question naturally arises, "What constitutes a pure life?"

Does it consist simply in a legal marriage, leaving persons free, under cover of that relation, to perpetrate all sorts of horrors against the higher nature?

The accepted idea seems to be that anything is all right between two people so long as they are married. But if they do not happen to have had certain words spoken over them, no matter how sacred their relation, how high their ideals, how great their devotion, they are "impure."

Is this right? Every natural instinct cries out against an idea so false. Purity is a condition of the mind; it is an attribute of the soul, and cannot be put on or laid off at will. To those who are pure every act becomes invested with the essence of their own purity, while persons of evil thought are impure, no matter how legal their acts.

The French have a proverb which translated reads, "Evil to him who evil thinks," and it is perfectly true, that the evil in the world is the direct result of evil thinking.

There is nothing either pure or impure per se in the sex relation. It is simply a natural function of the body, just as eating is. The whole question is, "What is the motive behind it?" Where two souls are in harmony and sympathy and where both desire this relation as but the physical expression of the love that is between them spiritually, then, it matters not what their outward surroundings may be, there can be no question of impurity. It is where this relation is forced, where its sacredness is degraded for material ends, that there is impurity.

The woman who sells herself for a home, who yields her body to a man she no longer loves, simply because he supports her, is just as much a prostitute as is the one whose body is her only merchandise. In the one case the law compels it, in the other case the law winks at it. With both it is simply a question of "body," and how dare either of them prate of purity or presume to judge the motives of one whose life has been built along lines of sacrifice and devotion?

Our purity is shown by our lives. It consists in high ideals; in sympathy and love for others; in charity and toleration; in looking always for the good in people and things; in "thinking no evil." Persons with these attributes cannot help radiating purity, and whatever they do their influence will be for the betterment of those about them in the very highest sense. Such persons are not given to carping criticism. They are not posessed by the demon of fear. They walk alone perhaps. They may even be shunned by the Pharisees, but the kingdom of heaven is within them. "Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God."

Matrimonial Item.

Col. Yerger—I hear your son is going to get married.

Judge Peterby—Yes, he is about to become a Benedict.

"Why don't you make him wait until he is older and gets more sense?"

"Humph! If he should get a sensible spell he would not marry at all."—Exchange.

The Paine Memorial Association

Was organized for the purpose of defending the character of Thomas Paine from the false charges of his enemies, to purchase and preserve all historic matter relating thereto, believing that "Truth wears no mask, bows to no human shrine, seeks neither place nor applause, but only asks a hearing."

The membership of this organization is composed of liberty-loving people of both sexes who reside in all parts of the world and who believe that Thomas Paine wrote more and did more in defense of mental and political liberty than did any man that ever lived, and has been more abused and misrepresented by those he sought to free. Its membership consists of people holding different shades of political and religious belief—Socialists, Anarchists, Single Taxers, Republicans, Deists, Atheists, Spiritualists, Protestant Christians, and one Catholic.

There are editors, doctors of law and divinity, on its roll of honor, but all united on the one main object of the association. During the past year no public attack on Paine's character has been permitted to go unanswered, and often these attacks have been refuted by several of our members through the press. We have an arsenal stocked with historical dynamite, also a regiment of intellectual artillerists, ready at a moment's notice to charge the common enemy.

We have this day presented to the Independent Hall Museum a copy of the original edition of "The Crisis," the most effective of Paine's pamphlets, written January, 1776, while he was aide-de-camp to General Greene at Fort Lee and during the retreat of the Continental army from Newark. We have many more such plans under consideration which we hope to consummate during the present year.

When it is remembered what the association has done to repair the neglect of the past hundred and twenty-six years it ought to comment itself to all admirers of Thomas Paine.

The thanks of the Association are due to Lucifer and the liberal press of the United States and Canada for favorable notices of our work.

When Paine died, 1809, Abraham Lincoln was born. Thomas Paine and William McKinley were both born January 29, and my father, an admirer of Paine, was born January 29 1809.

Certificates of membership only twenty-five cents.

JAMES B. ELLIOTT, Secretary Paine Memorial Association, 3515 Wallace St., Philadelphia, Pa.

The Impolitic Wise Man.

There was a wise man once
  Who sought the Truth; who dared
To stand for Right, who struck at Wrong
  Where'er its front was bared.

The clamor of the crowd
  He suffered not to sway
Him from the course his reason told
  Him was the honest way.

When masters wronged the men
  Who did their bidding, he Cried out against the masters then,
  And shamed them fearlessly.

When servants, led astray,
  Wronged those above, he came
Forth boldly, as a righteous judge,
  To tell them of their shame.

Oh, he was wise, and he Was Error's fearless foe—
He never got elected to A public office, though.

—Exchange.

It was Heine who pointed out that the Berliners are moral—because they sit in snow up to the navel; and this is the morality of art and letters today. It is an artificial and unclean morality. It is the insincere modesty of the fig leaf. Ah! for the frank, sweet innocence that used the fig leaf as a fan.—Vance Thompson.

The American Press-Writers' Association.

Dr. R. S. Clymer continues to keep up the anti-vaccination fight. The "Illinois State Register" (Springfield), Jan. 16, gives him a column's space to answer the Secretary of the State Board of Health; and on Jan. 17, F. Wm. E. Callingford follows Dr. Clymer with the facts about the vaccination horror at Camden, N. J., which the State vaccinator had flatly denied. Both articles are fine, and any reader of Lucifer interested should procure a copy for reference.

Rockland, (Mass.) "Independent," Jan. 17, prints a note from J. T. Small and a column article by J. A. Labadie, that was, with some half dozen others, refused by the Provincetown "Advocate" when sent to that paper in answer to the sermon of Rev. Massey on Anarchy.

The "Boston Traveler" wants its letter writers to choose a larger number of topics. Perhaps some of our writers on the sex question can find an opening here. Letters are limited to 300 words.

In "The Adept" for February Dr. R. S. Clymer, has a fine article on "Compulsory Vaccination a Crime Against the People," and Francis B. Livesey says: "Andrew Carnegie is the Man to Furnish a People's Newspaper."

NEW MEMBERS.

213 c. Barkley A. Harrison, 1449 N. Springfield Ave., Chicago, Ill.

214 d. McClelland, C. J., Riverside Block, Pueblo, Col.

215 bf. Caldbeck, William, 504 E. Locust St., Des Moines, Iowa. $1.

HONORABLE MENTION.

211 f. Hollis, Ella M., Groveland, Mass. Donation $1.

A. C. ARMSTRONG, 17 Leroy St., Dorchester, Mass.

A Great Work.

EDITOR OF LUCIFER:—I have received the book, "The Prodigal Daughter," and have read every word. While I do not exactly agree with the writer about free love—not that I in any way agree with marriage as now instituted, because it is simply a license of the body of the second party—yet in her plea for fallen women, I fully agree. I cannot give the book a recommendation that is good enough, for it speaks plainly, truly and to the point. It is one of the grandest pleas for fallen women that I have ever read. If I had the money, I would personally see that every family in the land would receive one of these books and have the opportunity to read it thoroughly, and follow the advice therein given concerning the fallen sisters of our times.

We have societies for the prevention of cruelty to animals, children, etc., but we have no society to help our fallen sisters. They are looked upon as being lower than the beast. While I am in favor of these societies, yet I think that a woman, although she may have fallen, is far better than the best of beasts. Why, then, should she alone of all things be condemned? People do not stop to consider why a girl may have been ruined; they do not take time to think that circumstances may have forced her to sell her body. Many a woman has sold her body for money to feed a starving mother or child. Should such a woman be condemned?

Most fallen women could be saved if only a kind word would be spoken, and a little help be given them. Reader, do you not think that it would be a grand and noble idea to form a society for the saving of fallen sisters? I think it would be the grandest work that a true man could undertake. If you think so, then write to me and give me your views. I am trying to form such a society, not to make money in any way, but simply to help fallen humanity. Write to me; I want no money; will be pleased to receive stamp for answer. If you think this is a work that an honest and noble man should help along, then do your part.

R. SWINBURNE CLYMER, M. D., Souderton, Pa.

I would trust any people with the custody of its own liberty I would trust no people with the custody of liberty other than its own.—Henry Grattan.

Lucifer, the Lightbearer

M. HARMAN, EDITOR AND PUBLISHER.

PUBLISHED EVERY WEEK AT 500 FULTON STREET, CHICAGO, ILL.

Terms: One year, $1; six months, 50 cents; three months, 25 cents.

Entered at the Chicago Postoffice as Second-Class Mail Matter.

Eastern Representative, E. C. Walker, 344 W. 143d street, New York.

903.

If these figures correspond with the number printed on the wrapper of your Lucifer, your subscription expires with this number.

If a copy of Lucifer fails to reach you, please order by number or date.

Lucifer will not be sent "by return mail" unless stamps for postage are enclosed with order.

To NEW SUBSCRIBERS: Your subscription is paid to No. If you have not ordered Lucifer, a friend has subscribed for you. If you do not wish to receive it, please notify us by card or through your postmaster. If you wish to become a regular subscriber you will confer a favor by renewing before the expiration of your trial subscription.

William McKinley and Thomas Paine.

Twenty-ninth January, 302—Brunonian Era—was the fifty-ninth anniversary of the birth of William McKinley, twenty-fourth President of the United States. It was also the one hundred and sixty-fifth anniversary of the birth of Thomas Paine, "Author Hero of the American Revolution of 1776."

This coincidence of natal days suggests a brief comparison—perhaps CONTRAST would be the better word—between the characteristics and life-work of these two world-famous men.

In the ages to come, William McKinley will probably be remembered as the champion, the chief promoter, of imperialistic expansion and of foreign conquests more than for any other reason. He will be remembered as the man who took twenty millions of money from the national treasury and bought a robber's title to some hundreds of islands in the Pacific Ocean, on the opposite side of the globe; bought them without asking leave of the owners of the money, and without first obtaining consent of the people sold with the islands.

Then, when the Filipinos refused to ratify the sale, when they expressed a decided preference for independence, for self-ownership, for self-government, they were treated by their purchaser as REBELS against rightful authority, were called "insurgents" by their purchaser and by the armies he sent to convince them—by fire and sword, by Mauser rifle and machine gun—that they were not fit to own and govern themselves.

* * *

Not only as the champion of colonial expansion and imperialistic conquest will the name of William McKinley be long remembered, but also as the author of the famous "McKinley Bill," a legislative measure that denies and defeats the people's natural right to freely exchange commodities with the people of other nations—a political robber law, a piratical law that takes many millions of money every year from the pockets of the real workers and puts it into the pockets of the privileged classes, the parasitic classes of human society. Some of these human parasites are known as office-holders who receive large salaries for little work, others as "captains of industry" or "employers of labor," "promoters," "corporation bosses," "franchise holders," etc.

In religious matters William McKinley was known as Methodist—a religious sect whose creed denies the principle of equality of rights, the principle of brotherhood of man regardless of creed, or of sectarian speculative belief. A sect that believes in a partial god, one that dooms to an eternity of pain good men and women simply because of their inability to believe in miraculous interventions into or against the usual order of nature's operations, and because of inability to believe in the efficacy of vicarious blood-atonement. A sect that denies the teachings of reason, of experience and observation, all of which show that punishment for sin is unphilosophical, savage and brutal, and that ALL THINGS CONSIDERED the saint is no more deserving of praise than is the sinner; and the sinner no more deserving of blame than the saint: that we are, each and all, the creatures, the product, the victims of heredity and environment, and that when it comes to the last analysis of actions we all do as we must. A sect that is today venting its anathemas and emptying its vials of wrath upon the head of Prof. Pearson of Northwestern University, because he dared to question the traditional interpretations of the so-called miracles upon which the creeds of his church are based, thereby showing that the church, of which William McKinley was an active, an influential member, is a non-progressive, a narrow and bigoted organization.

* * *

THOMAS PAINE.

As Lucifer's readers are supposed to be all acquainted with the character and life-work of Thomas Paine, there is no need that I should take up valuable space in showing that there is little of resemblance but much of contrast between the characters and the work of the men whose names stand at the head of this article. In all his writings and in all his acts Paine was the fearless advocate of equal liberty for all, the uncompromising foe of despotism, of the subjection of any man to the will of his fellowman.

He was the first to publicly advocate the independence of the thirteen American colonies, and it was his writings more than anything else—notably the pamphlet called "The Crisis"—that united all these colonies in that demand, thus securing unity of thought without which unity of action would have been impossible. In the language of John Adams, "The sword of Washington would have been powerless without the pen of Paine."

Always the friend of peace, always the opponent of revenge and of unnecessary bloodshed he was condemned to death by the French Assembly—of which body he was a duly elected member—because he opposed the bloody measures of the Revolutionists, escaping death at their hands by the merest accident.

The uncompromising foe of privilege, instead of making money for himself out of his very popular writings and out of his inventions—such as his iron bridge that was and is extensively used—he refused all copyrights and patents, thus setting an example that if followed would have prevented much of the inequalities, the millionaire fortunes and the poverty and misery of the present day. He gave his earnings to the suffering soldiers, encouraging others to do likewise, and would have died a very poor man if the American Congress, out of gratitude for his great services in behalf of human liberty, had not provided him a comfortable home in his old age.

* * *

But great as was his service to mankind as an apostle of political liberty and of equality of economic opportunity, his service as emancipator of the mind from slavery to religious dogma was, and is, still greater. In this regard the name of Thomas Paine stands, perhaps, without a rival. The measure of his worth as an iconoclast in the realm of religious superstitions is the abuse that for more than one hundred years has been heaped upon his name.

The prestige of the name of Paine as a writer on political liberty made the English speaking world ready to listen to what he might have to say on religious questions, and it was this fact, more than any other, perhaps, that alarmed the clergy—both Protestant and Catholic—and caused them to fear that their enormous privileges, their coveted power and emoluments of office, were about to be taken from them.

Hence, with one accord the clergy did their best to demolish the "Age of Reason" by defaming the WRITER thereof, and especially by circulating stories of his AWFUL condition when about to die—his "recantation," his remorse of conscience for having written anything so wicked, so "blasphemous."

All this was done not to answer Paine's arguments—which his defamers well knew they could not do—but to keep people from reading those arguments—by making the impression that it was useless to spend time reading the work of a man who, in the "trying hour of death," had recanted and asked forgiveness of the "merciful God whose name he had so often blasphemed."

The fact that the falsehood of these stories has been again and again exposed, did not and does not prevent their persistent repetition, and the fact that many clergymen of fame and influence now substantially adopt the views advocated in the "Age of Reason," has not had the effect of inducing the "orthodox clergy" to treat the memory of Paine with justice and decency. Indeed the defections in their own ranks seem to still further enrage the power-and-pelf-loving clericals against the name of one whom they evidently think (and correctly too) to be chiefly responsible for the current lack of faith in the "infallibility of the Bible," as the "Inspired Word" of the Creator of Universe.

Thomas Paine's religion was expressed by himself in these words:

"I believe in one God and no more; and I hope for happiness beyond this life."

"I believe in the equality of man, and I believe that religious duties consist in doing justice, loving mercy and endeavoring to make our fellow-creatures happy."

Condensed into a motto this religious creed was most beautifully expressed thus:

"The world is my country; to do good is my religion."

* * *

If the Anglo-Saxon race had more of Paine's religion and less of McKinley's, we as Americans would not to-day be trying, at such tremendous cost, to shoot our religion, our politics, our economics and our morals into the Filipinos, and England would not be trying so hard to exterminate the Boers in order to possess their mines, and in order to extend the limits of the empire ruled over by His Royal Corpulency, Edward the Seventh.

M. HARMAN

Archy, Archism----Its Cause and Cure.

At the Chicago Commons a few evenings since was delivered to a full house of attentive listeners a discourse on "Anarchy, its Cause and Cure," by one of Chicago's most popular preachers, Jenkyn Lloyd Jones, pastor of All Soul's Church, and editor of the weekly magazine called "Unity."

That this is not a new subject for discussion by the clergy, also by politicians, lawyers, legislators, judges, editors and leaders of thought generally, needs not to be said. Ever since the untimely taking off of William McKinley in September last, the words Anarchy and Anarchist have been in everybody's mouth, and today, nearly five months after that memorable event, everybody is more or less on the QUI VIVE with anxiety to know what action is to be taken by our national legislative body in carrying out the recommendations of McKinley's successor in office, in regard to "stamping out Anarchy" and suppressing the doctrines taught by leaders of that cult.

* * *

Having read much and heard much on the subject of the cause and cure of Anarchism it has sometimes occurred to me that our doctors of theology as well as our political savants and our wise editors are all laboring under a very serious mistake in their diagnosis of the disease that threatens the life of our present civilization—so-called. As I see it, all these doctors make the very common blunder, the very serious blunder of most medical doctors—mistaking the SYMPTOMS of disease for the disease itself.

Not having an official report of the discourse of Reverend Doctor Jones, who evidently makes the usual mistake, I will take, instead, in order to make my meaning clearer, the leading article in the February number of the "Arena," (N. Y.), entitled, "Political, Economic and Religious Causes of Anarchism," written by Reverend Doctor Heber Newton of New York, who, if I mistake not, agrees in the main with the Chicago reverend doctors who have been giving this city and this nation the benefit of their wise counsels as to what is best to be done to cure economic and political diseases and prevent their recurrence in the future.

* * *

The article of Doctor Newton in the February "Arena" seems a continuation or further elaboration of a previous article on the same subject in the January "Arena." Its opening paragraph reads thus:

> President Roosevelt to the contrary notwithstanding, Anarchism is "a social product" of profound significance in a study of the pathology of modern civilization. A sore in the body politic displaying so much virulence betokens so much bad blood in the social organism. There is a case here not merely for the repressive measures of a symptomatic treatment but for the alteratives of a constitutional treatment. . . . In the present paper it is proposed to study "the disease of Anarchism," as one of our great dailies called it a number of years ago, as a constitutional disorder of society, and to indicate how it must be treated constitutionally—the causes engendering it removed, that its symptoms may disappear. Its virus is to be found in the blood of the modern State, of our economic system, and of the Church.

Rev. Newton's reproof of Roosevelt's sophomoric and unphilosophic tirade against Anarchism is a hopeful sign; also the recognition that revolutionary violence—misnamed Anarchy—is the SYMPTOM of a disease, not the disease itself, is a good sign of mental sanity on the part of the distinguished New York "divine;" but what are we to think of the mental obfuscation which immediately speaks of the "disease of Anarchism," and of its treatment as a "constitutional disorder of society?" and then again to wind up the paragraph by reverting to his recognition that Anarchism is a symptom and not a disease, but that the real cause of the trouble, the real "virus is to be found in the blood of the modern State, of our economic system, and the Church?"

It has often been pointed out that the clerical mind is not logical. The man in the pulpit is treated so tenderly, so deferentially, that he does'n't need to be logical. There is no one that dares to call him to account for his lack of logic, lack of common sense or reason, and so he gradually comes to reason loosely, illogically, irrationally.

As the best method of unravelling this illogical tangle, as it seems to me, the matter should be stated thus:

The disease that afflicts the people of this country, the virus that is eating out the life of modern civilization is and not "Anarchy"—not revolutionary violence, at all; no more than the throwing of the cargo of tea into Boston Harbor was the disease that afflicted the American colonists in 1773. Then as now the real disease was Archy, Archism—government of man by his fellow man without the consent of the governed. Revolutionary violence was but the symptom.

ARCHY—ARCHISM,

To make the matter plain, let us once more go to the lexicons for definitions of terms. The average reader seldom thinks of the real meaning of words, but accepts without question the popular definitions, however false and misleading.

The word Archy is derived from the Greek verb ARCHEIN, to be first, to rule, to govern, from which root-word we have adopted into English such combinations as

Mon-archy, government by one—the King.
Olig-archy, government by a few.
Poly-archy, government by the many.
Hier-archy, government by priests.
Arist archy, government by the best—the nobility.
Plut-archy, government by the rich.
Hept-archy, government by seven persons.
An-archy, without government, denial of government.
Tetr-arch, governor of fourth of a province.
Aut-arch, a self-governor, self-ruler.

From these dictionary definitions it would seem that the last mentioned—Autarch, Autarchy—would be a much better name for philosophic Anarchists than the much misrepresented name now used by them. It will be seen also that the parent of the terrible word Anarchy is the same that gave birth to all the despotisms under which mankind have struggled, suffered and died—monarchy, oligarchy, hierarchy, etc.; so that if we would destroy Anarchy as a political theory or cult, we must destroy its parent, its cause—Archy.

* * *

Rev. Newton evidently recognizes this fact, though he does not clearly state it, in his next paragraph:

> Had the governments of the earth been just, there would have been none of the appalling outbursts of hatred for all government at which we shudder in Anarchism today. The violence of this fever is the measure of the virus in the blood of the State. The reason why men are found today calling frenziedly for the overthrow of all States is that scarce a State can escape severest condemnation before the bar of conscience. Christian governments have proved most Anarchistic, bolstering up unjust privileges of the titled and the wealthy, enslaving the poor and weak, ruling by force, wasting the resources of the people, sacrificing millions of lives every generation on the altar of war.

This terribly truthful indictment of the "governments [the archies] of the earth" was not written by a "wild-eyed Anarchist" but by an eminently respectable, highly honored and cultured, well-fed and housed, bishop—that is, by a leading HIERARCH of an eminently respectable and honored Protestant church. The only criticism I wish to make of this utterance is his perversion of the words "Anarchistic" and "Anarchism." Christian governments are simply ARCHISTIC, not Anarchistic at all, when they "bolster up unjust privileges, etc.," and especially when they "sacrifice millions of lives every generation on the altar of war." These are quite in line with the nature and purpose of all archies—whether monarchies, aristarchies, hierarchies, oligarchies or plutarchies, such as our own government, for instance.

This is what they were all organized for, and the inevitable outcome of the use of power over others is the abuse of that power. That which Rev. Newton deplores as the abuse of government is the legitimate, the necessary function of all archies, all governments of man by man.

* * *

It will doubtless be objected that, however true the charge may be that monarchies, oligarchies, aristarchies, were organized to "bolster up privileges of the titled and wealthy, to enslave the poor and weak," etc., it is not true in regard to our own DEMOCRATIC government—a government of, by and for the PEOPLE—ALL the people, the poor and weak as well as the rich and powerful; that the preamble of our national constitution declares: "We the PEOPLE of the United States, do ordain and establish this constitution in order to promote the general welfare [not the privileges of the few] and secure the blessings of LIBERTY to ourselves and posterity," etc.

That such is the usual argument of American Archists, and also of their victims, I am well aware. That the document called the constitution of the United States is NOT a democratic instrument is demonstrable; that it was never intended to be such in the true sense of that word; not intended to secure equal justice to poor and rich alike; to high and low, to the ignorant as well as the learned, I claim is abundantly provable from the constitution itself.

Its very first sentence is a LIE outright. "The people" of the United States did NOT formulate this constitution, nor did they adopt it by general vote, and if they had done so it would be no proof, under our voting system, that the people, or even a majority of them, approved of its provisions.

The cold, hard facts of the case show that the over-praised framers of the United States constitution were USURPERS of power. They were not elected or delegated by the people of their respective states, to formulate organic laws for all the people. The original purpose of this convention contemplated no such power, and if these people had intended to delegate such power they would have been false to liberty and justice, for no people can delegate powers they do not themselves rightfully possess.

The speeches of Patrick Henry in the Virginia legislative body against the adoption of this constitution abundantly prove these charges.

* * *

Yes, the Constitution of the United States is an ARCHISTIC document, under which shelter all kinds of archistic privileges, murders and robberies—monarchic, plutarchic, hierarchic, etc., and the worst, most hopeless feature of it all is that the masses of people are hoodwinked into the belief that they are SELF-GOVERNING!

As the genus homo is the epitome, the summary, the embodiment of all the provisional genera and species of the animal world, so in the American archy—United States—we find an epitome, a summary, an embodiment of all, or nearly all, the old world archies.

* * *

The position accorded to the articles of Bishop Newton in "The World's Leading Review," is a matter of such significance at this particular moment in the world's history that, time and strength permitting, another attempt will be made in these columns to show, from the Reverend Doctor's own diagnosis and admissions, that the acts of the revolutionary Anarchists, are only surface symptoms of the real, the constitutional disease which for many ages has afflicted organized human society, and that that disease is rightly named ARCHY, instead of Anarchy.

M. HARMAN.

AT HALF-PRICE

100 COPIES
OF
DR. FOOTE'S HOME CYCLOPEDIA.

While they last, a copy will be sent for only $1 to any subscriber to Lucifer whose subscription is paid one year in advance.

A FAMILY GUIDE-BOOK OF THE TWENTIETH CENTURY.

1248 PAGES. 500,000 WORDS. 400 PICTURES. 250 RECIPES.
80 CHROMOS ON 18 COLOR PLATES.

A few among the many subjects treated:

PART I.—Disease: Cause, Prevention, Cure.—Common Sense Remedies.
PART II.—Chronic Diseases of the Breathing Organs.—Diseases of the Heart and Blood Vessels.—Diseases of Liver, Stomach, Bowels.—Chronic Affections of the Urinary Organs.—Private Words for Men and Women.—"Hints to the Children."—Constitutional Diseases.—Affections of the Eyes and Ears.—The Treatment of Disease, Containing 250 Prescriptions for Common Ailments and Complete Table of Antidotes for Poisons.
PART III.—Plain Home Talks About the Sexual Organs.—The Natural Relation of the Sexes.—Civilization and Marriage.—History of Marriage.—Defects in Marriage Systems.—Social Immorality. (Part III. takes a view of marriage and the sexual relations from a physiological standpoint. It is searching, interesting, original, and startling.
PART IV.—Improving Monogamic Marriage.—Adaptation in Marriage.—Restricted Marriage and Parentage.—Three Phases of Monogamic Marriages.—Intermarriage of Relatives.—Essays for Married People.—What Determines Sex.—Philosophy of Child-Marking.—Essays for the Future.

Is your subscription paid to No. 952? If so, the Home Cyclopedia will be sent to you for $1 net. Postage 18 cts.

DO YOU EVER THINK

Of the fate of the Prodigal Daughter? The Prodigal Son is forgiven and received with rejoicing—why should different treatment be accorded to his sister? For a vivid, true picture of the conditions in homes and factories which produce thousands of so-called fallen women every year, read "The Prodigal Daughter; or, The Price of Virtue," by Rachel Campbell.

SPECIAL OFFER.

This valuable work sent free on receipt of twenty-five cents for a thirteen week's trial subscription to Lucifer, the Light-Bearer. M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton Street, Chicago, Ill.

VICE: ITS FRIENDS AND ITS FOES

BY EDWIN C. WALKER.

CONTENTS—Brotherhood of Man; The Recognition of Facts; Folly of "For Men Only," Definition of Vice; Horrors of Prostitution; Abnormal Sexuality; Errors of Fathers, Mothers and Teachers; Persecution Does Not Reform; Prostitution and the Crusaders; The "Spoiling of the Heathen;" What are the Effects of Raids and Crusades? The Economic Side of the Problem; Party Politics in Vice Crusading; In What Does Prostitution Consist? Some Causes of Prostitution; Two Kinds of Prostitution Compared; The Opponents of Divorce; "Purifying" the Tenements; Action for Advanced Women.

WITH APPENDIX:—The Wanderings of a Spirit; Our Fair Civilization; The Folly and Cruelty of it All. Price 10c.

Address M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

Personal, Would like to hear from a liberal lady, between 30 and 40 years of age, in need of a home. Address E. H., Look Box 8, Mongo, Ind.

ADDITIONS TO OUR BOOK LIST.

ANARCHISM: Its Philosophy and Ideal. Peter Kropotkin. 5c.
ANARCHIST MORALITY. Peter Kropotkin. 5c.
BALZAC'S SERAPHITA: The Mystery of Sex. Mary Hanford Ford. Cloth, $1.
CHICAGO CONFERENCE OF TRUSTS. Speeches, debates, etc.; 31 portraits of delegates, including Benj. R. Tucker, Laurence Gronlund, William Jennings Bryan, Samuel Gompers, Louis F. Post, and Georg Schilling. 426 pages. 50c.
FIELDS, FACTORIES, AND WORKSHOPS; or, Industry Combined with Agriculture and Brain Work with Manual Work. Peter Kropotkin. 362 pages. 25c. Postage, 5c.
GIORDANO BRUNO. His Life, Teachings, and Martyrdom. Burned for heresy in Rome, Feb. 17, 1600. 5c.
INFIDEL DEATH-BEDS. "Idle Tales of Dying Horrors." G. W. Foote. Brief biographical sketches of 37 Freethinkers, including Bruno, Buckle, Byron, Comte, Darwin, George Eliot, Gibbon, Goethe, Hugo, Harriet Martineau, Mill, Paine, Madame Roland, George Sand, Shelley, Voltaire, etc. 25c.
KORADINE. A story for young and old. Extra levant cloth. $1.
LUCIFER. Third Series, Vol. III. (1890). Cloth, $1.25. Postage, 25c.
MARRIAGE IN FREE SOCIETY. Edward Carpenter. A dainty little gift book. 25c.
MONOPOLY, or How Labor Is Robbed. William Morris. Illustrated. 5c.
NORA, A DOLL'S HOUSE, and GHOSTS. Ibsen. Cloth. 75c.
PERSONAL EXPERIENCES of Two American Anti-Vivisectionists in Various Countries. Philip G. Peabody. With an Appendix by Col. R. G. Ingersoll. Reduced from 25c to 15c.
STUDIES IN SOCIOLOGY. In four parts: I., The Law of Happiness; II., The Law of Individual Control; III., The Law of Exchange; IV., The Law of Environment. Albert Chavannes. 25c.
THE BLUE LAWS OF CONNECTICUT. Taken from the Code of 1650 and the public records of the Colony of Connecticut previous to 1665. With an account of the persecution of Witches and Quakers in New England, and some extracts from the Blue Laws of Virginia. Copiously illustrated. 25c.
THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM. Principles and platform of organized Freethought. 10c.
THE FUTURE OF SECULARISM. When will the Cause of Justice triumph? 5c.
THE PYRAMID OF TYRANNY. The School; The Church; The Press; The Police; The Law; The Army. F. Domela Nieuwenhuis. 5c.
THE SECRET INSTRUCTIONS OF THE JESUITS. A reprint from an edition published in 1725, quoted by the highest authorities as authentic. The work is a depart of Jesuit craft and is a plain index to the underhand working of that order against the welfare of individuals and society. 15c.
THE STATE: ITS HISTORIC ROLE. Prince Peter Kropotkin. 10c.
THE TROUBADOURS AND COURTS OF LOVE. J. F. Rowbotham. Cloth. 250 pages. $1.50. Postage, 13c.
USEFUL WORK VERSUS USELESS TOIL. William Morris. 5c.
VACCINATION A GIGANTIC CRIME. Samuel Darling. 15c.
WOMAN: Four Centuries of Progress. Susan H. Wixon. 5c.

Address M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

Wanted.

"Common Sense Theology," by D. Howland Hamilton.
"The Truth About Love."
State condition and price. Cash paid or other books given in exchange, by M. Harman, 500 Fulton St., Chicago.

Wanted: A woman partner. Pleasant business. Give age and occupation. Address Dr. Georgean Miller, Latham, Ark.

RADICAL LITERATURE.

For Sale by M. Harman, 500 Fulton St., Chicago.

A CHAMBERMAID'S DIARY. By Octave Mirbeau. Translated from the French by Benj. R. Tucker. 460 pages. Handsomely bound in cloth. $1.50.
ADVANCEMENT OF SCIENCE. Prof. John Tyndall's famous Inaugural Address before the British Association for the Advancement of Science, with the articles on Prayer which so stirred the religious world. Cloth, 50c; paper, 25c.
AGE OF REASON (The). Presentation edition. Part I reprinted from the first English edition. Part II corrected by M. D. Conway's edition. With Paine's own account of his arrest in Paris. Photogravure portrait from the Romney painting exhibited in London. Containing also portrait from the Jarvis painting; from the Peale painting, known as the Bonneville portrait, representing Paine as a member of the French Assembly, and a half-tone of the Peale painting. Large half-tones of the house presented to Paine, in which he lived in New Rochelle, and of the monument and surroundings, Yorktown, Pa.; scenes; also eight half-tone views of buildings, etc., associated with Paine's life in Paris, and other illustrations. With Preface, Chronological Table, Notes, Index, etc. Printed on antique wove paper, large octavo, wide margins, gilt edge. Special cover design in colors. The finest and most accurate of all editions. Boxed. Postpaid, $2.
AGE OF REASON. Thomas Paine. Cloth, with steel plate portrait, 50c; paper 15c.
A PHYSICIAN IN THE HOUSE. A New Family Medical Work, by Dr. J. H. Greer. This book is up-to-date in every particular. It will save you hundreds of dollars in doctors' bills. It tells you how to cure yourself by simple and harmless home remedies. It recommends no poisonous or dangerous drugs. It teaches how to save health and life by safe methods. It teaches prevention—that it is better to know how to live and avoid disease than to take any medicine as a cure. It is not an advertisement and has no medicine to sell. It has hundreds of excellent recipes for the cure of the various diseases. It has 16 colored plates showing different parts of the human body. The chapter on Painless Midwifery is worth its weight in gold to women. The "Care of Children" is something every mother ought to read. It teaches the value of Air, Sunshine, and Water as medicines. It contains valuable information for the married. This book cannot fail to please you. If you are looking for health by the safest and easiest means, do not delay getting it. It has eight hundred pages, is neatly bound in cloth, with gold letters, and will be sent by mail or express, prepaid to any address, for $2.75.
A PLEA FOR THE NEW WOMAN. May L. Collins. With large new half-tone portrait. 10c.
A TALE OF THE STRASSBURG GEESE. R. B. Kerr. Together with The Strike of the Strassburg Geese (C. W. Coolridge), A Traveler's Tale (R. B. Kerr), The Cat's Story (Emile Zola). 5c.
AUTONOMY, SELF-LAW. A fragmentary dissertation on the right to non-invasive self-bood. 5c.
A WEEK ON THE CONCORD AND MERRIMAC RIVERS. Henry D. Thoreau. 25c.
BIBLE TEMPERANCE. E. C. Walker. Proving that Liquor Drinking is Commended, Defended and Enjoined by the Bible, and giving close reference to the chapters and verses. 10c.
BORNING BETTER BABIES—Through regulating reproduction by controlling conception. E. B. Foote, Jr., M. D. 25c.
CAUSES OF HARD TIMES, and the Money Question. Albert Chavannes. 5c.
CHILDREN OF THE ITALIAN POOR. Paola Lombroso. 5c.
CITYLESS AND COUNTRYLESS WORLD. Henry Olerich. The author of this epoch-making book tells in a very charming way the story of the evolution of human society on the planet Mars, and in so doing outlines a practicable way out of the slaveries now endured by earth's inhabitants. Handsomely bound in red silk, with gold lettering on back and sides; 447 pages. Price, $1.

DARWIN, THE. (A novel.) Elmina D. Slenker. 50c.

DAWN OF CIVILIZATION, The; or, England in the Nineteenth Century. J. C. Spence. 178 pages. 25c.

DAWN THOUGHT ON THE RECONCILIATION. By J. Wm. Lloyd. An inspired treatise that, with insight and solution, touches all the questions of life, love, soul and society. A prose-poem, simple enough for a child to enjoy, deep enough to make a philosopher think. The largest creed, the most generous theory, the gladdest gospel. A book of life. A religion of growth and the overlook—freedom and optimism. Read it. Printed in old style antique type, rubricated with portrait of the author. In three editions, de luxe, plain and paper bound. Prices, $1.25, $1.00 and 50c.

DIANA. A psycho-physiological essay on the sexual relations; for married men and women. 25c.

DIGGING FOR BED-ROCK. Camp-meeting talks and sketches by Moses Harman. 5c.

DIVORCE. A lecture by E. B. Foote, Jr., M. D., and extracts from noted authors. 25c.

DR. FOOTE'S SOCIAL SCIENCE SERIES OF DIME PAMPHLETS—Wedlock; Scientific Marriage; Heredity; A B C of Temperaments; Powell and his Critics; Physiological Marriage; Physical Improvement of Humanity; Causes of Disease, Insanity, and Premature Death; A Step Backward. Any of the above books sent by mail on receipt of price.

DYNAMIC THEORY OF LIFE AND MIND. An attempt to show that all organic beings are both constructed and operated by the dynamic agencies of their respective environments. By James H. Alexander. Over 400 illustrations, 67 chapters, 1,067 pages and a 2-columns index of 11 pages. Cloth, $3.75.

EAST TENNESSEE SKETCHES. A and Cecile Chavannes. 25c.

ECONOMICS OF ANARCHY. A Study of the Industrial Type. Dyer D. Lum. 15c.

EIGHT-HOUR MOVEMENT. John P. Altgeld, ex-Governor of Illinois. 5c.

EVOLUTION AND REVOLUTION. Elisee Reclus. 5c.

FALSE CLAIMS OF THE CHURCH. John E. Remsburg. Analyzing and confuting the claims made by churchmen that the Christian religion has promoted morality, learning, temperance, science, freedom, and showing how she has opposed progress. Paper, 10c.

FREE LOVE; or, A Philosophical Demonstration of the Non-Exclusive Nature of Connubial Love. Austin Kent. Reduced to 25c.

FREE PRESS. Arguments in support of demurrer to the indictment of M. Harman, E. C. Walker and Geo. Harman, under the Comstock law. G. C. Clemens and David Overmyer. 20c.

GOD AND THE STATE. Bakounine. 25c.

GOVERNMENT ANALYZED. A remarkable work by a remarkable man, Col. John S. Kelso, the history of whose life reads more like romance than reality. This book is the last of a series—Deity Analyzed, Bible Analyzed, Universe Analyzed. By the author's death this work was left unfinished, but was completed by his wife, Etta Dunbar Kelso. 319 pages; cloth. Price reduced from $1.50 to $1.

HELEN HARLOW'S VOW. Lois Waisbrooker. 25c.

HILDA'S HOME. Rose Graul. "An o'er true tale" of woman's wrongs and of one woman's struggles and final triumphs in her attempt to secure justice for herself and for her sisters. 426 pages. Cloth, $1; paper, 50c.

HUMAN RIGHTS. J. Madison Hook. 5c.

IMPORTANCE OF HONEST MONEY. A simple, scientific, invariable standard of price. James Adleman. 250 pages. Paper, 50c.

IN BRIGHTER CLIMES; or, Life in Socioland. Albert Chavannes. 5c.

IN HELL AND THE WAY OUT. A plan of Social Democracy outlined. Henry E. Allen. 10c.

INSTITUTIONAL MARRIAGE. From the viewpoint of an exiled Marsian. M. Harman. 5c.

JOHN'S WAY. A domestic radical story. Elmina D. Slenker. 25c.

KAREZZA. Ethics of Marriage. A bold, brave book, teaching ideal marriage, rights of the unborn child, a designed and controlled maternity. Sample pages free. $1.

LIBERTY IN LITERATURE. Testimonial to Walt Whitman. "Let us put wreaths on the brows of the living." An address delivered in Philadelphia, Oct. 21, 1888, with portrait of Whitman. Containing also Col. Ingersoll's address at the funeral of Walt Whitman, Mar. 30, 1892. Cloth, 50c; paper, 25c.

LIBERTY. Political, Religious, Social, and Moral. A. F. Tindall. 5c.

LITTLE LESSONS FOR LITTLE FOLKS. Elmina D. Slenker. Boards, 40c.

LIZZIE MELTON. A story of a self-reliant girl. By Albert Chavannes. With portrait of author. 25c.

MAGNETATION, and Its Relation to Health and Character. Albert Chavannes. 25c.

MARRIAGE. An address by Dr. Juliet H. Severance. 5c.

MARRIAGE AND MORALITY. Lillian Harman. 5c.

MARTYRDOM OF MAN. Winwood Reade. This is a very interestingly pictured synopsis of universal history, showing what the race has undergone—its martyrdoms—in its rise to its present plane. It shows how war and religion have been oppressive factors in man's struggle for liberty; and the last chapter, of some 150 pages, describes his intellectual struggle from the animal period of the earth to the present, adding an outline of what the author conceives would be a religion of reason and love. Winwood Reade's reputation as a writer of fine English, of deep study and careful reasoning, needs no word of praise. Cloth, $1.

MEN, WOMEN AND CHANCE. William Platt. Containing two tales: The Ascent to the Heights, and Blind Men and Seeing. Well printed on heavy paper and artistically bound in cloth. Gilt top, rough edges. 75c.

MEN, WOMEN, AND GODS. Helen H. Gardener. With preface by Col. R. G. Ingersoll. Contents: Introduction by Col. Ingersoll. Men, Women, and Gods. Vicarious Atonement. Historical Facts and Theological Fictions. Appendix. Address to the Clergy and Others. Letter to Cleveland Congress of Freethinkers. The only authorized and correct edition. Large 12mo, heavy-toned paper. Portrait. This volume is by far the best writing this famous author ever did. It is very fine. Cloth, $1; paper, 50c.

MISSING LINK IN MODERN SPIRITUALISM, THE. A Leah (Fox) Underhill. With portraits of the Fox Sisters and others. 478 pages. Cloth. Reduced to $1.

MORIBUND SOCIETY AND ANARCHY. Jean Grave. Cloth, 60c; paper, 25c.

MOTHERHOOD IN FREEDOM. M. Harman. 5c.

MUTUAL BANKING. A simple plan to abolish interest on money. William B. Greene. 10c.

OUR WORSHIP OF PRIMITIVE SOCIAL GUESSES. E. C. Walker. Contents: Love and Law; The Moloch of the Monogamic Ideal; The Continuity of Race-Life, and Tyranny; Food and Sex Fallacies a Criticism; When Men and Women Are and When They Are Not Varieties; The New Woman: What is she? What will she be? The State Hiding Behind Its Own Mistakes; Bishop Potter's Opinion of Divorce; Love: Its Attraction and Expression; Is She an Honest Girl? Lloyd, Platt, and the Pluful Facts; Social Radicals and Parentage; Anthropology and Monogamy; Love and Trust Versus Fear; Reflections upon Reading William Platt's "Women, Love, and Life." 15c.

PERSONAL RIGHTS AND SEXUAL WRONGS. Oswald Dawson. 25c.

PRIESTLY CELIBACY. Prof. A. L. Rawson. Together with The Incoherence of Transition (E. C. Walker), Motherhood in Freedom (Moses Harman), The Greatest Sin (an allegory, R. B. Kerr), and Jealousy, the Foe of Freedom (Oscar Rotter). 25c.

RELIGION AND RATIONALISM. The relation of each to human liberty. The religionist, fancying that he has the whole truth, is logically opposed to investigation, and he appeals to physical force to arrest the discovery of new truths. What Rationalism is, and how many believe themselves Freethinkers who are only unbelieving or disgruntled religionists. The necessity for separate organizations and a division of labor among reformers. The Secular Union. Important facts and arguments in a compact form. E. C. Walker. 5c.

RIGHTS OF WOMEN AND THE SEXUAL RELATIONS. Karl Heinzen. A new edition, together with the startling letters of "Louise Mayer" on Man and Woman, and a report of the Convention of German Women at Frankenstadt. A book of 336 pages, handsomely printed on good paper. It is more than twice the size of the original edition of "Rights of Women" alone and yet is sold at a lower price. Heinzen's great book is destined to become a classic and is sure to open the eyes of those who think women have their rights already. Its price is so low that every reader of this advertisement can afford to buy it, and no better book can be found to interest those who heretofore have given little or no thought to the necessity for the emancipation of women from ownership by men. Cloth, $1.

RIGHTS OF MAN. Thomas Paine. Answer to Burke's attack upon the French revolution. A political treatise of great general value, as advocating liberty and democracy. Contains the fundamental principles of true republicanism. Cloth, 50c; paper, 25c.

RUBAIYAT (Quatrains) OF OMAR KHAYYAM. Edward FitzGerald's interpretation; with original introduction; special cover; latest version. Paper, 10c.

RULED BY THE TOMB. A discussion of free thought and free love. Orford Northcote. 10c.

SCIENCE IN STORY; or, Sammy Tubbs, the Boy Doctor, and Sponsle, the Troublesome Monkey. For young folks. Dr. E. B. Foote. Five volumes in "red line," presentation edition. $5. Five volumes, plainer binding, $2.50; all in one volume, $2.

SEXUAL PHYSIOLOGY FOR THE YOUNG. Being the fifth volume of "Science in Story." 250 pages; cloth bound; illustrated. 50c.

SONGS OF THE UNBLIND CUPID. J. Wm. Lloyd. Edition de luxe. Verses printed from Kelmscott type upon deckle edged hand made paper of cerulean tint. Initial letters, ornaments and borders are in red; initial letter and tint. Initial letters, ornaments and borders are in red; initial letter and tint. Initial letters, ornaments and borders are hand painted in water colors. Covers sketch upon the opening page are hand painted in water colors. Covers brown, with choice of silver or gold lettering. Very handsome gift book. 25c.

TALKS ON NATURE. Important information for both sexes. Dr. J. H. Greer. 192 pages. Reduced from 50 to 25c.

THE ABOLITION OF MARRIAGE. John Beverly Robinson. Together with Isabel's Intention (Mariette), Reminiscences of Berlin Heights (A. Warren), and The Sexes and Love in Freedom (Oscar Rotter). 25c.

THE BAR SINISTER AND LICIT LOVE, including the first biennial proceedings of the Legitimation League, and a full account of the Lanchester case, with full-page half-tone pictures of Edith Lanchester, and Lillian Harman. Handsomely bound in green and gold covers. 257 pages. 25c.

THE BRITISH BARBARIANS. Grant Allen, the greatest of the Hill-Top pioneers. Dedicated "To all who have heart enough, brain enough, and soul enough to understand it." Handsomely bound in cloth. 281 pages. $1.

THE WOMAN WHO DID. Grant Allen. A powerful story of a refined, educated and high-spirited woman who dared to defy the tyranny of church and state and ignore the institution of marriage. Handsomely bound in cloth. $1.

THE NEW HEDONISM. Grant Allen. The opening paragraph says: "The old ascetism said: 'Be virtuous and you will be happy.' The new hedonism says: 'Be happy and you will be virtuous.'" In another place the writer says: "In proportion as men have freed themselves from mediæval superstitions have they begun to perceive that the unclean and impure things are celibacy and asceticism; that the pure and beautiful and ennobling thing is the fit and worthy exercise of the reproductive function." Paper covers; 32 large pages; twelve copies, 25c. Single copy, 5c.

THE CHICAGO MARTYRS. The famous speeches of the eight condemned anarchists in Judge Gary's Court, and Altgeld's reasons for pardoning Fielden, Neebe and Schwab. 25c.

THE COMING WOMAN. Lillie D. White. 5c.

THE EVOLUTION OF MODESTY. Jonathan Mayo Crane. A consideration of the origin of clothes and the reasons why people wear clothing. Here are a few questions it answers: What is modesty? What is the cause of it? What is the use of it? What is the cause of the feeling of shame? Is nudity immodest? What is the cause of the notion that it is shameful to expose some parts of the body? Why do not all peoples agree as to what parts of the body should be concealed? 5c.

THE FOUNTAIN OF LIFE; or, The Threefold Power of Sex. Lois Waisbrooker. 50c.

THE PRODIGAL DAUGHTER; or, The Price of Virtue. Rachel Campbell. Together with Legal Wifehood (Lucinda B. Chandler), Life's Gifts (Olive Schreiner), and Marriage—What It Was and Is; Will the Coming Woman Marry? 25c.

THE SANCTITY OF MARRIAGE. As viewed from a moral and sanitary standpoint. A solemn protest against the present demoralizing management of that institution, its effects upon offspring and its influence upon education. By Dr. Robert A. Greer. A valuable "opening wedge" in missionary work. Price reduced from 25c to 10c.

THE REVIVAL OF PURITANISM. E. C. Walker. 10c.

THE RIGHTS OF CHILDREN. R. B. Kerr. Together with What Are Women Here For? (E. B. Foote, Jr., M. D.), The New Martyrdom (Lillian Harman), and The Will, from the French of Guy de Maupassant. 25c.

THE UNWOMANLY WOMAN. Lizzie M. Holmes. Together with That Great Fraud, Xtcpt Society (Moses Hull), Virgin Soil (George Egerton), and Normal Sexual Action (Ernest Winse). 25c.

THE WORM TURNS. Revolutionary Poems. Voltairine de Cleyre. 10c.

THOMAS JEFFERSON. His Political, Social and Religious Philosophy. Gen. M. M. Trumbull. 5c.

THOMAS PAINE. The Good and Evil of His Life and Writings. George Lippard. 10c.

TOKOLOGY. A book for every woman. By Alice B. Stockham, M. D. Illustrated. Tokology teaches possible painless pregnancy and parturition, giving full, plain directions for the care of a woman before and after confinement. The ailments of pregnancy can be prevented as well as the pains and dangers of childbirth avoided and women need not go down to death giving birth to children. English, German or Swedish. $2.25.

WHAT IS PROPERTY? An Inquiry into the Principle of Right and of Government. P. J. Proudhon. Translated by B. R. Tucker. 500 pages. Cloth. (Slightly shelf-worn.) Reduced to $1.

TRAVELS IN FAITH. By Capt. Robert C. Adams. His mental experience from superstition to rationalism. Cloth, 35c; paper, 25c.

VINDICATION OF THOMAS PAINE. Col. R. G. Ingersoll. Dealing with all the slanders brought against the name and fame of Paine. A little pamphlet which every admirer of Thomas Paine should have by him for reference. Paper, 15c.

VITAL FORCE. Magnetic Exchange and Magnetation. Albert Chavannes. 25c.

WHY THE UNDERTONE? An open letter to Judge Gary. Sarah E. Ames. 10c.

WHEN IS FREEDOM FREE OR EQUALITY EQUAL in the Social Evil or in Marriage? Orr W. Jay. 10c.

WHEN LOVE IS LIBERTY AND NATURE LAW. John Badcock, Jr. 10c.

WOMAN, CHURCH, AND STATE. Matilda Joslyn Gage. This is Mrs. Gage's last and crowning work. Every woman ought to read it. Every liberal woman and man will want it. A burning protest against the tremendous wrong done woman by the church, which controlled the state. It ought to be widely read for the good it will do. Cloth, $1.50; paper, 75c.

WHAT THE YOUNG NEED TO KNOW: a Primer of Sexual Rationalism. Edwin C. Walker. "Let us cease to be ashamed of what makes us men, of what makes us women, of what gives us the kisses of lovers and the encircling arms of babes." Paper covers; 42 large pages. 10c.

WHAT IS RELIGION? Ingersoll's last public address, delivered at the meeting of the Free Religious Association in Boston on June 3, 1896. To which is appended the poem, "Declaration of the Free," the last verse written by the great Freethinker. 5c.

WOMAN IN THE PAST, PRESENT AND FUTURE. Woman was the first human being that tasted bondage. Woman was a slave before the slave existed. The basis of all oppression is economic dependence on the oppressed. This has been the condition of woman in the past and is so still. She is now a slave of the slave. This work is August Bebel's masterpiece. 8vo, 375 pages. 25c.

Address M. Harman, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

Price 2 Cents.

LUCIFER.

THE LIGHT-BEARER.

THIRD SERIES, VOL. VI., No. 5. CHICAGO, ILLINOIS, FEB. 13, E. M. 302. [C. E. 1902.] WHOLE No. 904

THE WAR SPIRIT.

I hate that drum's discordant sound,
Parading round and round and round;
To thoughtless youth it pleasure yields,
And lures from cities, farms and fields,
To sell their liberties for charms
Of tawdy lace and glittering arms,
And, when the ambitious voice commands,
To march, and fight and fall in foreign lands.

I hate that drum's discordant sound,
Parading round and round and round;
To me it speaks of ravaged plains,
Of burning towns and ruined swains;
Of mangled forms and broken bones;
Of widows' tears and orphans' moans,
And all that misery's hand bestows
To swell the catalogue of human woes.

—Thomas Paine.

Church-State Archism Indicted by A Woman.

Crimes and criminals are built and born because of the great wrong first done to mothers. They are the offspring of church and state. Science now declares crime to be a disease, but it has not yet discovered the primal cause of this disease. It is an inheritance from centuries of legalized crime against woman, of which the church in its teachings is prime factor.

WILL GAIN NOTHING BY COMPROMISE.

Woman will gain nothing by a compromising attitude towards the church, by attempting to excuse its great wrong toward her sex, or by palliation of its motives. On the contrary a stern reference to facts, keeping the face of the world turned to its past teachings, its present attitude, is her duty. Wrongs of omission equal in magnitude those of commission.

MUST NOW ATTACK THE STRONGHOLD.

Advance for woman is too well established, woman has had too much experience, has borne too much ridicule, misrepresentation and abuse to now hesitate in an attack upon the stronghold of her oppression—the church. She possesses too full knowledge of its subtle touch upon civil law to dare leave it alone; it has become one of woman's first duties, one of her greatest responsibilities, to call public attention to its false teachings in regard to the origin, condition and subjection of woman. She has engaged in too many battles, weathered too many storms to longer hesitate in exposure of its stupendous crimes toward one half of humanity.

COWARDS WILL HIDE; THE BRAVE REJOICE.

Let those who fear, hide themselves, if they will, until the storm is past. Let those who dare, defiantly rejoice that they are called upon to bear still more, in order that woman may be FREE.

A BRIGHTER DAY DAWNING.

A brighter day is to come for the world; a day when the intuitions of woman's soul shall be accepted as part of humanity's spiritual wealth; when force shall step backward, and love, in reality, rule the teachings of religion; and may woman be strong in the ability and courage necessary to bring about this millennial time. The world is full of signs of the near approach of this period; as never before is there an arousing sense of something deeper, holier in religion than the Christian church has given.

THE ADVENT OF HEROIC SOULS.

The world has seemingly awaited the advent of heroic souls who once again should dare all things for the truth. The woman who possesses love for her sex, for the world, for truth, for justice and right, will not hesitate to place herself upon record as opposed to falsehood, no matter under what guise of age or holiness it appears. A generation has passed since the great struggle began, but not until within ten years has woman dared attack upon the veriest stronghold of her oppression, the Church.

BENT BEFORE BIRTH.

The state, agent and slave of the church, has so long united with it in suppression of woman's intelligence, has so long preached of power to man alone, that it has created an inherited tendency, an inborn line of thought toward repression. Bent in this line before his birth, man still unwittingly thinks of woman as not quite his equal, and it requires a new creation of mind to change his thought. A second generation has arisen, in whom some slight inherited tendencies toward recognition of woman's right to herself are seen. In the next generation this inherited line of thought will have become stronger, both Church and State more fully recognizing woman's inherent right to share in all the opportunities of life; but at what cost to all who have taken part in the great struggle!

A SCATHING IMPEACHMENT.

Has woman no wrongs to avenge upon the church? As I look backward through history I see the church everywhere stepping upon advancing civilization, hurling woman from the plane of "natural rights" where the fact of her humanity had placed her, and through itself, and its control over the state, in the doctrine of "revealed rights" everywhere teaching an inferiority of sex; a created subordination of woman to man; making her very existence a sin; holding her accountable to diverse code of morals from man; declaring her possessed of fewer rights in church and in state; her very entrance into heaven made dependent upon some man to come as mediator between her and the Savior it has preached, thus crushing her personal, intellectual and spiritual freedom.

THE GREATEST CONFLICT YET TO COME.

Looking forward I see evidence of a conflict more severe than any yet fought by reformation or science; a conflict that will shake the foundations of religious belief, tear into fragments and scatter to the winds the old dogmas upon which all forms of Christianity are based. It will not be the conflict of man with man upon rites and systems; it will not be the conflict of science upon church theories regarding creation and eternity; it will not be the light of biology illuminating the hypothesis of resurrection of the body; but it will be the rebellion of one half of the church against those theological dogmas upon which the very existence of the church is based. In no other country has the conflict between natural and revealed rights been as pronounced as in the United States; and in this country where the conflict first began, we shall see its full and final development. During the ages no rebellion has been of like importance with that of Woman against the tyranny of Church and State; none has had its far reaching effects. We note its beginning; its progress will overthrow every existing form of these institutions; its end will be A REGENERATED WORLD.—Matilda Joslyn Gage in "Woman, Church and State."

Marooning the Anarchists.

By reference to the President's message it will be seen he makes the assertion that if the country (or world) were turned over to the tender mercies of Anarchism its reign would last for but one red moment; then all the achievements of civilization would be succeeded by centuries of dark ages. What can he mean by such a declaration? Does he imagine that it is possible to destroy all our inventions, our literature and our sciences? Does he believe in a world holocaust? Even if such a thing were possible are the Anarchists the people to advocate or even endorse such a scheme?

Then we see statements in the big dailies, small weeklies and middling monthlies that Anarchists' "rule" would be nothing more nor less than hell on earth, where greed and grab would be the common rule of action, and arson, assault and murder of daily occurrence, while hate and strife would be the perpetual curse of life. Such is, in fact, the chronic condition of society under government, where craft and cunning are the leading principles by which all business transactions are governed.

There is also much talk about deporting and marooning the Anarchists of the world on some island, there to work out their own salvation in their own way, and intimating that such a course would soon wipe them from the face of the earth. All the writers for these papers try to make it appear that the word Anarchism is synonymous with chaos, and that an Anarchist community is an impossibility.

As a matter of fact, an Anarchist community, conducted on Anarchist principles, would provide an ideal condition of human existence—a heaven on earth. Might and greed would be replaced by a policy of non-resistance and prodigality. Everybody would be protected in his natural rights by natural laws, though sometimes enforced by human beings. There would be no murder, rape, robbery and arson or other outrages, for the simple reason that there would be no occasion for them, as there would be no private property in land, in money, machinery and human beings as we know it in the archistic state of society. There would most likely be free and abundant production by all and free consumption for all. There would be institutions of learning including the best of training schools that would instruct the youth in the industrial arts as well as in economics, sociology and the sciences. The field, farm and factory would be much better understood by young and old alike than they are under so-called "law and order," where speculation and gambling are looked upon as very important industries, and where the accumulation of wealth without rendering quid pro quo is held in high esteem, and the worker, the producer of all wealth, is looked down upon as an inferior being.

If the government will set aside an inhabitable island large enough to support upwards of a million inhabitants and supply a reasonable amount of seeds and tools to insure a fair start for all the deported and agree to keep hands off, it will have no trouble in getting rid of the Anarchists. There would no doubt be thousands—yea, hundreds of thousands—who would not only be willing but anxious to try life under such conditions. Nothing would suit the Anarchists better than a fair opportunity to try their theories of life without let or hinderance, for they are fully convinced that such a trial will prove the utility and value of their teachings.

Anarchism is the nearer goal in the march of civilization for which all mankind is consciously and unconsciously striving. As to what the ultimate goal in human progress will be, or whether the race will ever establish absolute liberty is something that we can leave to posterity to solve. What we are most concerned about is the acquisition of all the liberty we can without infringing on the liberty of others.

Archism is self-destructive, for the simple reason that authority and liberty cannot exist side by side, the one must destroy and supplant the other. Where authority begins liberty ceases, hence under Archism there can be no real liberty. Authority begets power, power begets force, force begets brutality, and it in turn begets more brutality and tyranny until the limit is reached and the brutalized masses resort to revolution. But how many revolutions has it taken to establish what little liberty we possess today, and how many more will it take to secure the real or absolute article?

Anarchism being based on liberty, its advocates, when permitted to do so, will live in peace and harmony, happy and content in the employment of their faculties as by nature inclined, making the most out of this life by really living like human beings, without drudging and slaving to make and accumulate money to leave to thankless progeny or other relatives to fight over; in short, making this world as near as possible an ideal abode for mankind without reference to what may or may not come hereafter.

Some one says: But why should the government of this country or the governments of the world, furnish the seeds, implements and provisions for a fair start, as well as the island for these detested Anarchists to live on? Simply because they are entitled to that much in return as a very small share of what they have produced and have been robbed of by the capitalists of the world. If the producers the world over were permitted to keep the full value of the products of their labor there would be no millionaires, nor would there be any destructionists to keep them and their rulers in constant terror. There would and will be Anarchists, in the true meaning of the word, until all human government of force, fraud, tyranny and robbery disappear from the face of the earth.

Then, again, it is objected that an island large enough to accommodate a million people is out of all proportion to the number to be provided for. Here is where our statesmen and rulers make their greatest mistake, unless they want to confine their law strictly to the "American output." Even then it is more than likely that an island with a capacity for sustaining a million people would be entirely too small in less than five years from the landing of the first shipment. There are many people who are not avowed Anarchists who are perfectly willing to take their chances with them, fully confident that their social and economic conditions cannot be worse than they now are. Moreover if there is no change for the better in the conditions of the producing classes soon, there will be millions of Anarchists where there are hundreds or thousands now, and the question of providing room for them outside of the countries owned by the capitalists will be a very serious one. In view of all these facts, it will be well to start this deportation scheme on a proper scale to begin with, or else it might become an object of ridicule and jest.

C. H. WESSELER.

Ouray, Colo.

Proudhon and His Critics.

The oft-observed fact that it depends very largely upon what is already in the mind of the reader or hearer as to what impression will be made by reading a book or hearing a discourse, is well illustrated by the comments and criticisms received at this office upon the famous work of P. J. Proudhon, entitled "What is Property?"

As samples of such comments and criticisms the following paragraphs, written by two of Lucifer's subscribers are herewith submitted, without offering an opinion as to the correctness of either critic.

M. H.

Whenever I find any one who recommends "What is Property?" by P. J. Proudhon, as being an Anarchistic book, I show symptoms of paresis, being compelled to conclude that all known rules of reasoning from facts must be gibberish. In No. 899 Mr. Henry Bool says he has placed three Anarchistic volumes in Cornell University Library, and if "What is Property?" is not there it will be soon. The only thing that will restore my sanity is for Mr. Bool to declare that his intent is to place a State-Socialistic book alongside those other three to counteract their influence. He evidently never read the work, or if he did he was in a trance, the condition of Mr. Tucker when he translated the book, as he has since been oblivious to the fact that it is a State-Socialistic work, of the paternalistic sort, if there be such.

Mr. Proudhon sanctions the "authority of law" in this work, would give the state "eminent domain over all capital," and "transform every trade and profession into a public function," declares against competition, and for equal rewards to labor, and thus goes to a greater extreme than do American Socialists today, who declare for collectivism only as regards monopolies. Mr. Bool thus adds to the confusion as to the meaning of Anarchism and Socialism, and assists Lucifer in this, which journal classes "the feudalistic, the oligarchic, and aristocratic tendencies of our present political industrial and ethical systems" along with the "boodle" system, as Socialistic. (See No. 899).

C. F. H.

It is a mistake to suppose that Proudhonian Anarchists would be satisfied with any voluntary protective association simply because it is voluntary so far as its own members were concerned. No such society would be satisfactory unless it granted the accused the right of trial by jury. When education in juryism has spread sufficiently, an organization offering real jury trial would draw membership, leaving aggressive societies to die for want of support. The Scotts, Kerrs, Montagus and Capulets are not examples of the voluntary associations advocated by libertarians. Some critics set up an Anarchistic man of straw to be knocked down by a Socialistic stuffed club.

EDGAR D. BRINKERHOFF.

The American Press-Writers' Association.

If I were to write the thought that comes uppermost, it would be the strenuous life of a Press-Writer. My mail today consisted of seventeen rolls of papers, ten letters and four postal cards, and all in the interest of the good work. From one of the letters I quote the subjoined, which shows that there are others quite as busy:

"I have been quite seriously indisposed this winter and feel that I have not been keeping up my end of the traces, though I have endeavored to whack things orthodox which appeared in our local papers. Wrote up Thanksgiving, Christmas, and New Year's, and have one ready for St. Valentine's Day. Sent another article to Spokesman Review two or three weeks since; a long one on "Cremation" to Omaha World-Herald last week; one to Waterloo (Ia.) Times; one to San Francisco Bulletin; two to Baltimore American; three to Boston Traveller; one to Iowa Homestead; one to Chicago Record-Herald; one to Chicago Post, besides some unimportant contributions. A couple of weeks ago a letter from Mason, Iowa, inclosed a plagiarized paragraph of Robert Ingersoll by a South Dakota priest, printed in North Western Catholic of Sioux City, Iowa. I immediately wrote that paper, asking for an explanation, and received a letter stating that the matter had been referred to the priest, but I have as yet not heard from him. I have had printed in pamphlet form "Canon Law for Woman" and shall send you one soon. I hope to be able to do more work a little later. Trust you keep well, and am rejoicing over the good work being done by the Press-Writers. Fraternally yours,

HARRIET M. CLOSZ."

So I would say to this good worker and many others: May you have the strength to keep on as you are nobly doing I like to read your reports, but cannot find time to answer all your letters.

NEW MEMBERS.

216 c. Abbey, Maud, Box 65, Wathena, Kansas.
217 c. Campbell, James, Havelock, Neb.

218 b. Baruch, Mrs. Bertha Hirsch, 1300 N. 18th St. Philadelphia, Pa.
219 d. de Crane, Miss May C. P., Lake City, Iowa.
220 b. Callingham, William M., Box 184 Camden, N. J.
221 d. Burnside, D., Cross Hill, S. C.
222 b. Rose, Howard, Chariton, Iowa.
223 d. Pierce, C. J. L., 13 Crescent Place, Brockton, Mass.
224 d. Lamb, L. L., Dryden, Lapeer Co., Mich.
225 b. Moore, Prof. John, 206 Northampton St., Sta. A. Boston, Mass.

A. C. ARMSTRONG, 17 Leroy St., Dorchester, Mass.

VARIOUS VOICES.

Mary Gird Peters, Fall Brook, Cal.:—Lucifer is showing an intensity of purpose that makes it a standing rebuke to all lukewarm reformers. I hope it is not utterly wearing you and your father out. You are surely in no danger of rusting out.

S. J. Hickok, Canton, Pa.:—On a street car in Philadelphia last week I saw a lady reading a copy of your paper. I asked to see it and took the address. Please send it to me. I discovered some interesting facts, though I had it only five minutes and never saw a copy before.

L. M. Graves, Newport, Oregon:—I do not wish the paper longer. Please stop it. There are many good things in it, but nothing but obedience to Christ will make this world better; so I am thankful for having read your paper, for I want to prove all things and cleave to that which is good.

E. Gillies, 408 Corydon Ave., Ft. Rouge, Winnipeg, Man.:—I want to take advantage of your generous offer of Dr. Foote's "Home Cyclopedia" at half price, so hasten to send you $2.18 for which extend my subscription one year and send me the book. I see so much in Lucifer that I enjoy reading that I could not do without the paper.

L. W., Ohio:—I have received a supplement to "Clothed With the Sun" which told of an outrage on a paper called "Discontent" of Home, Washington. It seems to me that we ought to make every effort to maintain absolute freedom of speech for every sect in this country, and as this case will be used as a precedent we ought to make every effort to assert that great principle now, regardless of the cost.

Nellie M. Mastick, 712 Beacon Place, Seattle, Wash.:—I enclose $2 to apply on subscription, and 25 cents for another copy of "The Prodigal Daughter." I must have had at least half a dozen already, but don't seem to be able to keep one on hand. Lucifer grows better and better. I like your attitude on the McKinley affair and also the stand you have taken on vaccination and anti-toxin. It is an outrage that we must submit to having our children poisoned in such ways or not be allowed to send them to school. For myself I have solved the problem by sending my children to Home, and am pleased to say they are learning faster and better there than they have ever done before.

Herbert Gries, Cal.:—Please enroll my name on your list for the bound volumes of Lucifer for 1901. Let me know when ready. Is "Our New Humanity" still published? If so, please take my subscription.

[We would like to hear, as soon as possible, from all who want bound volumes of Lucifer for 1900 and 1901, as we wish to know approximately how many to send to the binder. 52 copies in each volume, bound in cloth, $1.25 per volume, net, postage 25 cents.

"Our New Humanity" is no longer published; but we have back numbers on hand, price 25 cents each. L. H.]

THE CHICAGO Society of Anthropology meets every Sunday at 3:30 P. M., Hall 913 Masonic Bldg. Admission free. Free discussions. Feb. 16, Prof. J. M. Clarke will read a paper on "Law as an Anti-Social Institution."

Lucifer, the Lightbearer

M. HARMAN, EDITOR AND PUBLISHER.

PUBLISHED EVERY WEEK AT 500 FULTON STREET, CHICAGO, ILL.

Terms: One year, $1; six months, 50 cents; three months, 25 cents.

Entered at the Chicago Postoffice as Second-Class Mail Matter.

Eastern Representative, E. C. Walker, 244 W. 143d street, New York.

904.

If these figures correspond with the number printed on the wrapper of your Lucifer, your subscription expires with this number.

If a copy of Lucifer fails to reach you, please order by number or date.

Lucifer will not be sent "by return mail" unless stamps for postage are enclosed with order.

TO NEW SUBSCRIBERS: Your subscription is paid to No. If you have not ordered Lucifer, a friend has subscribed for you. If you do not wish to receive it, please notify us by card or through your postmaster. If you wish to become a regular subscriber you will confer a favor by renewing before the expiration of your trial subscription.

To Our Press-Writers.

There is never a lack of opportunities for the American Press-Writers' Association to get in their work to good advantage. There never has been a time since government of man by man began, that watchmen were not needed to see that the ruling classes did not seek, stealthily or openly, to enlarge their power over the governed, by securing new legislative enactments, by new imperial decrees, by new judicial rulings, or by new interpretations of older statutes, decrees, judicial rulings, etc., etc.

The recent assassination of a chief ruler of the United States has been seized upon and apparently welcomed, by the ruling classes in this country as a suitable occasion for securing additional legislation in their interest. Ever since the death of William Mckinley the organs of the party of which he was a member, and also many leaders of opinion that do not belong to that party, have been urging that new laws should be enacted by our national legislature, abridging the freedom of speech and of press and making it more clear than ever before that this government is not one of equal rights but that the lives of rulers should be safeguarded in ways that are not thought necessary for the safety of the average citizen—or, more correctly speaking, of the SUBJECT masses.

In obedience to this demand for new legislation—legislation in line with the imperialistic, the archistic tendencies of our national government, an "anti-anarchy bill" has been reported to the so-called house of representatives at Washington.

A Chicago daily—"The Chronicle"—of recent date has this to say in regard to the proposed monarchic legislation:

> The house committee on judiciary has reported an anti-anarchy bill surprisingly sweeping in its provisions. Even if the legislation is discreet, it will be difficult to enforce and can hardly be expected to run the gauntlet of the courts.

Judging the effect of the proposed legislation by the history of a law somewhat similar in its object, the so-called "Comstock" postal law, it will depend on the ignorance and the prejudices of judge and jury as to whether the accused shall be adjudged guilty and punished for exercising his citizen rights or not.

* * *

The plain duty, then, of every man and woman who would prevent the arbitrary use of power—power whose use necessarily means ABUSE—is to prevent the enactment of laws under which such abuses can be sheltered, made respectable and honorable, that is, made LEGAL! The only way to prevent such legislative enactments is to create a public conscience that will be felt and heeded by our national law-makers. The way to create such public conscience is to "AGITATE, AGITATE, AGITATE," as the old Abolitionists used to say and do.

For this purpose there is nothing equal to the public press. Therefore, while we still have a modicum of freedom of press, let us use that freedom to the utmost of our ability, to prevent the loss of what freedom we still have.

Not only should our Press-Writers use every opening to get in their protest against the proposed "anti-anarchy" legislation, but every freedom-lover should do the same. Whether we sympathize with the doctrines called "anarchistic" or not, our legislators should be shown the dangers of such enactments. Anything may be called anarchistic that opposes the party that happens to be in power.

* * *

Another excellent way to prevent the enactment of bills into laws, such as that spoken of in the quotation from the "Chronicle," is the writing of personal letters to the members of congress by their constituents, and by the public in general. If these office-loving congressmen should receive hundreds or thousands of letters every week, protesting against the new un-American legislation, they would soon come to the conclusion that their chances of re-election would be endangered by a vote in favor of the bill to suppress or limit the freedom of speech and of press.

* * *

To our Press-Writers, and to all readers of this issue, who may think that back numbers of Lucifer would be good educational documents to help build up a healthy public sentiment on the question of suppression of speech and press, we would say that we have many hundreds of surplus copies of the paper issued since the assassination of McKinley, that we would be glad to send to such readers and helpers as will send us the amount of necessary postage thereon. Also, we have many thousands of surplus copies of numbers issued previous to the date named, that would be promptly sent on the same terms.

Please let us know at once how many copies to send to each reader who cares to help in this work. Never was there a time when prompt action was more necessary than at the present moment.

Not a single day or hour should be lost through apathy or procrastination.

M. HARMAN.

The Disease of Diseases---Archism.

For more than twenty-one years our Light-Bearer, our little "Herald of the Dawn," has been telling its readers that the worst foe to human rights, to human justice, to human progress, and therefore the worst foe to the human race itself, is AUTHORITY, LEGALITY, LAW—CIVIL AND CANONICAL.

Through Lucifer's columns a few of us have constantly and unflaggingly preached the gospel of SELF-LAW, self-rule, self-government, self-ownership, self-knowledge, self-healing, the doctrine sometimes called "Anarchy," but more correctly called AUTARCHY, from the Greek words AUTOS "self," and ARCHEIN to rule.

Though constantly opposed by those whose interest it is to have people divided into two distinct classes, the rulers and the ruled, the law-makers and the law-obeyers, the priesthood and the laity, the privileged few and the unprivileged masses; notwithstanding misrepresentations the most persistent and calumnies the most groundless and shameless; in the face of persecutions through many courts of justice (miscalled) ending, after years of expensive legal defense, in imprisonment for some of the defenders of the right of protest against outrage and invasion of the most intimate and sacred of personal rights—notwithstanding all these hardships and discouragements we feel well rewarded for all the pain, the weariness, the pecuniary loss, when we note the change in tone and attitude of many of the popular leaders of the present day, as compared to that tone and attitude only a few years ago.

In last week's Lucifer was printed part of the leading article in the February "Arena," called by some "The World's Leading Review," a journal of thought and opinion published in New York City—the same Review that was published and edited several years in Boston by B. O. Flower, who is still one of its editors under the new management. This leading article from which we quoted was written by Reverend Heber Newton, a bishop of the Protestant Episcopal Church, a position that gives great influence to whatever he may say on any line of current thought. This article is headed, "Political, Economic and Religious Causes of Anarchism," and is the second essay on that subject by the same distinguished writer, published in the "Arena."

As partially shown in our last week's comments, this distinguished leader of current thought—not only of religious thought but also on questions that are commonly regarded as secular, or this-worldly—has substantially endorsed Lucifer's long contention that it is not the revolt against church-state authority that is the real disease, not such killings as that of McKinley by Czolgosz, but that the disease is to be found in the church and state themselves, that is, in the rulership of man by his fellowman.

* * *

It is not to be expected that a man who has looked out upon the world for half a century through glasses colored by church-state superstitions can be truly logical and rationalistic in his diagnosis of the diseases that afflict our common humanity. Accordingly we find Dr. Newton indulging in arguments like this:

> The most superficial student of Anarchism should not miss the fact that it is a revolt against the social oppression and the economic injustice of our competitive civilization. It is men maddened by a burning sense of industrial wrongs who turn to the bullet and the bomb to right these wrongs. Below the political tyrannies of Russia, Poland, and Italy lie the economic tyrannies of those lands. Tolstoi and the wonderful group of modern Russian novelists must surely have opened the eyes of our blindest optimists to this fact. It is a starving peasantry that recruits the armies of Anarchism.

How many of Lucifer's readers, or those of the "Arena," are willing to admit that the "civilization" of so-called Christian lands is really "competitive"?

How much competition is allowed in supplying the volume of circulating medium, commonly called "legal tender" MONEY?

How much real competition in securing LAND on which to build a home?

How much man-to-man competition in securing opportunities of obtaining a livelihood from the soil, or from mines of coal, petroleum, or of the useful metals?

How much chance for honest competition between the tariff-protected and the non-protected industries? or between the "patent-holder" on labor-saving inventions and the man not thus favored?

Where is real honest competition to be found between the holders of ANY kind of franchise or monopoly or privilege, and him who has neither money nor influence to purchase such franchise, monopoly or privilege?

Everywhere we find the competitive principle throttled, defeated, killed, by privilege, by discrimination, by monopoly, and nowhere is equitable competition and generous emulation so disastrously defeated as by the church-state laws in regard to the mating of human beings for REPRODUCTION!—I mean, of course, our marriage and divorce laws, whereby the prospective mothers of the race are denied their natural right to choose and obtain the best possible FATHERHOOD for their children.

In the working of these last named laws and customs—which laws and customs were made and are now supported mainly by the hierarchies of which Rev. Newton is himself a conspicuous example—do we find the chief and underlying cause of all the inequalities, all the slaveries, deformities, vices, crimes and diseases that defeat and curse what is called civilization today.

In calling our civilization "competitive" instead of monopolistic and archistic, Dr. Newton makes the common, the fatal error in his diagnosis of the disease that afflicts the patient he seems anxious to assist in regaining health and happiness.

* * *

After dwelling at some length upon the darker shadows that furnish the background of the picture of economic life in Europe our High Church physician adds:

> Thank God, the conditions in our country are lighter than in the Old World! None the less, the shadows even here are dark enough. He who knows anything of the life of our New York "east side," of our sweat-shops, of our great stores with their multitudes of shop-girls earning on an average $4 per week, of our coal mines and other industrial fields where similar conditions reign, knows the hell out of which rise every now and then the sulphurous fumes at which we shudder.

When we consider the comparatively few years that archistic monopoly and privilege have had in this country in which to get in their work and to consolidate their power, and when considering the immensely greater natural advantages possessed by the United States over the European archies in the matter of unoccupied lands, rich in all the elements that invite and reward industry—fertility of soil, boundless stores of all the useful minerals, coal, iron, lead, copper, to say nothing of timber for fuel and for its endless uses in building, in manufacture of articles of utility and luxury—when all these advantages are considered the odds are against us! Instead of being "lighter" the "shadows" are really DARKER, when we consider all the circumstances just hinted at, and if we are to judge by the rate of advance toward monopolistic despotism made in the past forty years in this country, the time is not far distant when not only comparatively but actually and really the conditions of the poor will be worse in every particular, on this side the Atlantic than they are now in any part of the so-called "Old World."

* * *

Much to the same purport are the paragraphs which follow the words just quoted. Our learned doctor thinks "these horrors are not due, ultimately to the badness of individual men," though admitting "there is enough of this in all conscience"—mentioning the case of a "certain Western Senator whose income from mines is reputed to be at least one million dollars per month, who is reported lately to have bitterly opposed the efforts of his miners to establish an eight-hour work-day."

No, the men who thus oppress and rob their employes, and rob both producer and consumer, are not exceptionally bad men. Under like circumstances the men who now denounce Senator Clark of Montana would do just as he is doing. The love of wealth and power grows with their pursuit and possession, until it becomes a veritable mania.

* * *

Our eminent New York "divine" thinks "the responsibility for the conditions of poverty in our world today lies at the door of our imperfectly developed economic system which binds us all together in the responsibility for economic wrongs to whose heinousness we are blinded by use."

"True, O King!" but why confuse matters by calling our legalized robber system an "imperfectly evolved economic system?" If our land laws, money laws, franchise laws, etc., had been specially framed with a view to enable the few greedy and unscrupulous ones to rob the many of their share of nature's opportunities their framers could scarcely have done their work better than they did. Then why not call things by their right names and say, "our monarchic, plutarchic, aristarchic robber system!"

With our marriage ethics what they are; with our family or home training what it is; with our school training what it is, all teaching us to grasp and to hold all we can—in which contest the clergy are quite as ambitious and covetous as is the average of farmers, mechanics or tradesmen—the result is just what we might reasonably expect. Under all the circumstances the result could not possibly be different from what it is.

* * *

Proceeding with his indictment Bishop Newton says:

> The burning wrongs entailed by this now outgrown system—unethical, immoral, irreligious—fire the revolt which we know as Anarchism. Anarchism is one with Socialism in the belief that our present competition is essentially and unescapably unjust and oppressive; that it imposes a new slavery on labor, politically freed; that it wrests to the luxury of the few the provision of Nature for the support of the many; that it turns bread-winning into a strife more cruel than the struggle of existence among the lower lives around us.

Herein, while accepting and endorsing the manifest spirit of the writer I take exception to his terminology, to his use of words, maintaining that it is an abuse of language to call our present system a "competition," for reasons already stated. To speak of this monopolistic system as "unethical and immoral" is certainly correct, but whether it is "irreligious" may be a matter of opinion. It depends on what you mean by "religious." If it be religious to be like the god of the Hebrews and Christians, then our present system, military, commercial and industrial, is eminently religious—if we are to believe what the Hebrew Bible says of the god of Moses and of Joshua; of David—"the man after God's own heart;" the god of Samuel who anointed David to be king over Israel. In the treatment of the Canaanites by this "peculiar people," this eminently religious people, an example was set that fully justifies all the robberies and murders committed by the armies of the United States and of England in the Philippines and in South Africa; also all the legalized robberies by the pious Rockyfellow, by the managers of the steel trust, the coal and railway trusts, by the land monopolies, etc., etc.

To speak of our present monopolistic system as "outgrown," is evidently a misnomer. If to be popular with rich and poor; if to have the united and unqualified support of the leaders in church and state, and also of the leaders in what is known as polite, cultured and refined "society"—if all these mean anything then the system condemned by Reverend Newton is NOT outgrown. On the contrary it was never before so vigorous; never before had it so strong a hold on life as at the present moment.

* * *

Proceeding with his impeachment of our archistic economic and social system, the writer of the "Arena" article on the causes of anarchism says:

> Anarchism could not be, were society well organized and industry just and Christian. It is the cry of insane wrath against the horrors of our civilization—a civilization that dooms hosts of hard-working men to squalid poverty, joyless toil, hourly fear of the morrow, ghastly disease, and untimely death, and that opens below hosts of hard-working, half-starved women the hell of harlotry.

As with the word "religious" it all depends upon what we mean by the word "Christian" when used in connection with "industry." The much-praised "Sermon on the Mount" advises the followers of the Nazarene to "take no thought for the morrow," and to lay not up "treasures upon earth," but to look for daily bread to their "father in heaven." So thoroughly imbued were the early Christians with the idea that their God would provide for their daily wants, even as he fed the ravens and clothed the lilies, that they discouraged industry, except perhaps to supply their most pressing needs. Many Christian orders through out the middle ages, even down to the present, led and lead vagrant lives, or live without industry in monasteries and convents, depending on charity for their daily bread.

* * *

The writer of the "Arena" article may have a revised creed of his own making, but if "Christian" ethics are really based upon the creeds of the leading denominations known by that name, including the Roman and Greek Catholic—the mothers and grandmothers of all the younger Christian sects—then it is nothing to be wondered at that Christians rob and butcher each other in their wars of conquest, or that they rob and starve each other in their industrial wars, or that they look with unconcern upon the hells of economic suffering, the hells of vice and of crime caused by their own narrow selfishness and remorseless greed. Men who can accept the theology of the Method'st Church, for instance, whose leaders are now sitting in judgment upon and condemning Prof. Pearson for his "heresy" in regard to "Bible miracles;" men who can believe in an endless hell for the majority of mankind in the next world, and yet remain sane enough to keep out of the mad house—such men can logically be expected to look with indifference and even complacency upon the temporary and comparatively mild sufferings of their fellow beings in the hells of this world.

* * *

Yes, Brother Newton—if you will allow a layman and a "heretic" to call you brother—the trouble with our "civilization" today is not that we have too little love for or belief in Christianity, of the creedal kind, archistic kind, and not that we have too little respect and reverence for "law," of the statutory, the archistic kind, but because we have TOO MUCH love and reverence for these.

It is because we have too much of the religion, the ethics, of the late Wm. McKinley, and too little of the religion, the ethics, of Thomas Paine, (whose natal days were celebrated in many lands a week or two ago) that we have so much of poverty, so much of crime, and so much of misery in the United States, a country so bountifully blessed by nature with all that is necessary to make human life worth living.

M. HARMAN.

IN EVIDENCE, in part, of what our Press-Writers are doing, see page 35—this issue. See also suggestions under the head of "Various Voices" on same page.

The advocates of the scheme of Senator Hoar to maroon on an uninhabited island all unbelievers in the divine institution of government, are numerous and influential. The arrangement, however, so far as its aspects have been presented, is altogether one-sided. What guarantee do they offer that if their plan is adopted the Anarchists shall be left alone to work out their destiny? Some voluntary exiles to the wilds of the state of Washington, where the moccasin tract is not as yet obliterated by white civilization, began a few years ago just such an experiment as Senator Hoar proposes, but their isolation has been broken in upon in the name of Comstock, their foremost men imprisoned, and their newspaper confiscated by official perfidy. If Mr. Hoar and those who agree with him are annoyed by the presence in this country of certain dissenters from their political and social faith, how would the proposition strike them to try the island plan themselves? Their ancestors, the Puritans, made such an experiment, and it was attended with success, the only sufferers being those who came before and after them. —Geo. E. Macdonald, in "Truth Seeker."

AT HALF-PRICE

100 COPIES

OF

DR. FOOTE'S HOME CYCLOPEDIA.

While they last, a copy will be sent for only $1 to any subscriber to Lucifer whose subscription is paid one year in advance.

A FAMILY GUIDE-BOOK OF THE TWENTIETH CENTURY.

1248 PAGES. 500,000 WORDS. 400 PICTURES. 250 RECIPES.
10 CHROMOS ON 18 COLOR PLATES.

A few among the many subjects treated:

PART I.—Disease: Cause, Prevention, Cure—Common Sense Remedies.

PART II.—Chronic Diseases of the Breathing Organs.—Diseases of the Heart and Blood Vessels.—Diseases of Liver, Stomach, Bowels.—Chronic Affections of the Urinary Organs.—Private Words for Men and Women.—Hints to the Children.—Constitutional Diseases.—Affections of the Eyes and Ears.—The Treatment of Disease. Containing 200 Prescriptions for Common Ailments and Complete Table of Antidotes for Poisons.

PART III.—Plain Home Talks About the Sexual Organs.—The Natural Relation of the Sexes.—Civilization and Marriage.—History of Marriage.—Defects in Marriage Systems.—Social Immorality. (Part III. takes a view of marriage and the sexual relations from a physiological standpoint. It is searching, interesting, original and startling.

PART IV.—Improving Monogamic Marriage.—Adaptation in Marriage.—Restricted Marriage and Parentage.—Three Phases of Monogamic Marriages.—Intermarriage of Relatives.—Essays for Married People.—What Determines Sex.—Philosophy of Child-Getting.—Essays for the Future.

Is your subscription paid to No. 956? If so, the Home Cyclopedia will be sent to you for $1 net. Postage 18 cts.

DO YOU EVER THINK

Of the fate of the Prodigal Daughter? The Prodigal Son is forgiven and received with rejoicing—why should different treatment be accorded to his sister? For a vivid, true picture of the conditions in homes and factories which produce thousands of so-called fallen women every year, read "The Prodigal Daughter; or, The Price of Virtue," by Rachel Campbell.

SPECIAL OFFER.

This valuable work sent free on receipt of twenty-five cents for a thirteen week's trial subscription to Lucifer, the Light-Bearer. M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton Street, Chicago, Ill.

VICE: ITS FRIENDS AND ITS FOES

BY EDWIN O. WALKER.

CONTENTS:—Brotherhood of Man; The Recognition of Facts; Folly of "For Men Only." Definition of Vice; Horrors of Prostitution; Abnormal Sexuality; Errors of Fathers, Mothers and Teachers; Persecution Does Not Reform; Prostitution and the Crusaders; The "Spoiling of the Heathen;" What are the Effects of Raids and Crusades? The Economic Side of the Problem; Party Politics in Vice Crusading; In What Does Prostitution Consist? Some Causes of Prostitution; Two Kinds of Prostitution Compared; The Opponents of Divorce; "Purifying" the Tenements; Action for Advanced Women.

WITH APPENDIX:—The Wanderings of a Spirit; Our Fair Civilization; The Folly and Cruelty of It All. Price 10c.

Address M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

SELF-HYPNOTIC HEALING.—37,49? people to date of Jan. 1, 1902, professed curing themselves of such diseases as they had failed in with medicine. All accomplished through the teachings of my oriental system of Self-Hypnotic Control, which also develops the psychic powers of man, enabling him to control his dreams, read the minds of friends and enemies, visit unknown parts of the earth, solve hard problems in this trance and remember all when awake. 5 lve complete trial lessons will be sent for only 10 cents, actually enabling the student to accomplish wonders without further charge. Prof. E. E. DUTTON, Ph. D., Lincoln, Neb., U. S. A.

Notice! I would be glad to hear from Liberals who would like to correspond with other Liberals. Address (with stamp)
Snowville, Va. ELMINA DRAKE SLENKER

RADICAL LITERATURE.

For Sale by M. Harman, 500 Fulton St., Chicago.

A CHAMBERMAID'S DIARY. By Octave Mirbeau. Translated from the French by Benj. R. Tucker. 466 pages. Handsomely bound in cloth. $1.50.

ADVANCEMENT OF SCIENCE. Prof. John Tyndall's famous Inaugural Address before the British Association for the Advancement of Science, with the articles on Prayer which so stirred the religious world. Cloth, 50c; paper, 25c.

AGE OF REASON (The). Presentation edition. Part I reprinted from the first English edition. Part II corrected by M. D. Conway's edition. With Paine's own account of his arrest in Paris. Photogravure portrait from the Romney painting exhibited in London. Containing also portrait from the Jarvis painting; from the Peale painting, known as the Bonneville portrait, representing Paine as a member of the French Assembly, and a half-tone of the Peale painting. Large half-tones of the house presented to Paine, in which he lived in New Rochelle, and of the monument and surroundings. Yorktown, Pa., scenes; also eight half-tone views of buildings, etc., associated with Paine's life in Paris, and other illustrations. With Preface, Chronological Table, Notes, Index, etc. Printed on antique wove paper, large octavo, wide margins, gilt edge. Special cover design in colors. The finest and most accurate of all editions. Boxed. Postpaid, $2.

AGE OF REASON. Thomas Paine. Cloth, with steel plate portrait, 75c; paper 15c.

ANARCHISM: Its Philosophy and Ideal. Peter Kropotkin. 5c.

A PHYSICIAN IN THE HOUSE. A New Family Medical Work, by Dr. J. H. Greer. This book is up-to-date in every particular. It will save you hundreds of dollars in doctors' bills. It tells you how to cure yourself by simple and harmless home remedies. It recommends no poisonous or dangerous drugs. It teaches how to save health and life by safe methods. It teaches prevention—that it is better to know how to live and avoid disease than to take any medicine as a cure. It is not an advertisement and has no medicine to sell. It has hundreds of excellent recipes for the cure of the various diseases. It has 24 colored plates showing different parts of the human body. The chapter on Painless Midwifery is worth its weight in gold to women. The "Care of Children" is something every mother ought to read. It teaches the value of Air, Sunshine, and Water as medicines. It contains valuable information for the married. This book cannot fail to please you. If you are looking for health by the safest and easiest means, do not delay getting it. 1,000 hundred pages, is neatly bound in cloth, with gold lettering, and will be sent by mail or express, prepaid to any address, for $2.75.

A PLEA FOR THE NEW WOMAN. May L. Collins. With large new half-tone portrait. 10c.

A TALE OF THE STRASSBURG GEESE. R. B. Kerr. Together with The Strike of the Strassburg Geese (C. W. Coolridge), A Traveler's Tale (R. B. Kerr), The Cat's Story (Emile Zola). 5c.

AUTONOMY, SELF-LAW. A fragmentary dissertation on the right to non-invasive self-hood. 3c.

A WEEK ON THE CONCORD AND MERRIMAC RIVERS. Henry D. Thoreau. 25c.

BALZAC'S SERAPHITA: The Mystery of Sex. Mary Hanford Ford. Cloth, $1.

BIBLE TEMPERANCE. E. C. Walker. Proving that Liquor Drinking is Commended, Defended and Enjoined by the Bible, and giving close reference to the chapters and verses. 10c.

BORNING BETTER BABIES—Through regulating reproduction by controlling conception. E. B. Foote, Jr., M. D. 25c.

CAUSES OF HARD TIMES, and the Money Question. Albert Chavannes. 5c.

CHICAGO CONFERENCE OF TRUSTS. Speeches, debates, etc.; 81 portraits of delegates, including Benj. R. Tucker, Laurence Gronlund, William Jennings Bryan, Samuel Gompers, Lewis F. Post, and George Schilling. 626 pages, 50c.

CHILDREN OF THE ITALIAN POOR. Paola Lombroso. 5c.

DARWIN, THE (A novel.) Elmina D. Slenker. 50c.

DAWN OF CIVILIZATION, The; or, England in the Nineteenth Century. J. C. Scence. 176 pages. 25c.

DAWN-THOUGHT ON THE RECONCILIATION. By J. Wm. Lloyd. An inspired treatise that, with insight and solution, touches all the questions of life, love, soul and society. A prose-poem, simple enough for a child to enjoy, deep enough to make a philosopher think. The largest creed, the most generous theory, the gladdest gospel. A book of life. A religion of growth and the overlook—freedom and optimism. Read it. Printed in old style antique type, rubricated with portrait of the author. In three editions, de luxe, plain and paper bound. Prices, $1.25, $1.00 and 50c.

DIGGING FOR BED-ROCK. Camp-meeting talks and sketches by Moses Harman. 5c.

DR. FOOTE'S SOCIAL SCIENCE SERIES OF DIME PAMPHLETS—Wedlock; Scientific Marriage; Heredity; A B C of Temperaments; Powell and his Critics; Physiological Marriage; Physical Improvement of Humanity; Causes of Disease, Insanity, and Premature Death; A Step Backward. Any of the above books sent by mail on receipt of price.

DYNAMIC THEORY OF LIFE AND MIND. An attempt to show that all organic beings are both constructed and operated by the dynamic agencies of their respective environments. By James B. Alexander. Over 400 illustrations, 27 chapters, 1,067 pages and a 3-column index of 11 pages. Cloth, $3.75.

EAST TENNESSEE SKETCHES. A. and Cecile Chavannes. 25c.

ECONOMICS OF ANARCHY. A Study of the Industrial Type. Dyer D. Lum. 10c.

EIGHT-HOUR MOVEMENT. John P. Altgeld, ex-Governor of Illinois. 5c.

EVOLUTION AND REVOLUTION. Elisee Reclus. 5c.

FALSE CLAIMS OF THE CHURCH. John E. Remsburg. Analyzing and confuting the claims made by churchmen that the Christian religion has promoted morality, learning, temperance, science, freedom, and showing how she has opposed progress. Paper, 10c.

FIELDS, FACTORIES, AND WORKSHOPS; or, Industry Combined with Agriculture and Brain Work with Manual Work. Peter Kropotkin. 280 pages. 40c. Postage, 5c.

FREE PRESS. Arguments in support of demurrer to the indictment of M. Harman, E. C. Walker and Geo. Harman, under the Comstock law. G. C. Clemens and David Overmyer. 20c.

GIORDANO BRUNO. His Life, Teachings, and Martyrdom. Burned for heresy in Rome, Feb. 17, 1600. 5c.

GOD AND THE STATE. Bakounine. 25c.

GOVERNMENT ANALYZED. A remarkable work by a remarkable man, Col. John H. Kelso, the history of whose life reads more like romance than reality. This book is the last of a series—Deity Analyzed, Bible Analyzed, Universe Analyzed. By the author's death this work was left unfinished, but was completed by his wife, Etta Dunbar Kelso. 312 pages; cloth. Price reduced from $1.50 to $1.

HILDA'S HOME. Rosa Graul. "An o'er true tale" of woman's wrongs and of one woman's struggles and final triumphs in her attempt to secure justice for herself and for her sisters. 426 pages. Cloth, $1; paper, 50c.

HUMAN RIGHTS. J. Madison Hook. 5c.

IMPORTANCE OF HONEST MONEY. A simple, scientific, invariable standard of price. James Adleman. 320 pages. Paper, 50c.

IN BRIGHTER CLIMES; or, Life in Socioland. Albert Chavannes. 5c.

INFIDEL DEATH-BEDS. "Idle Tales of Dying Horrors." G. W. Foote. Brief biographical sketches of 27 Freethinkers, including Bruno, Buckle, Byron, Comte, Darwin, George Eliot, Gibbon, Goethe, Hugo, Harriet Martineau, Mill, Paine, Madame Roland, George Sand, Shelley, Volney, and Voltaire. 25c.

IN HELL AND THE WAY OUT. A plan of Social Democracy outlined. Henry E. Allen. 10c.

INSTITUTIONAL MARRIAGE. From the viewpoint of an exiled Marsian. M. Harman. 5c.

JOHN'S WAY. A domestic radical story. Elmina D. Slenker. 25c.

KAREZZA. Ethics of Marriage. A bold, brave book, teaching ideal marriage, rights of the unborn child, a designed and controlled maternity. Sample pages free. $1.

KORADINE. A story for young and old. Extra levant cloth. $1.

LIBERTY IN LITERATURE. Testimonial to Walt Whitman. "Let us put wreaths on the brows of the living." An address delivered in Philadelphia, Oct. 21, 1906, with portrait of Whitman. Containing also Col. Ingersoll's address at the funeral of Walt Whitman, Mar. 30, 1892. Cloth, 50c; paper, 25c.

LIBERTY. Political, Religious, Social, and Moral. A. F. Tindall. 5c.

LITTLE LESSONS FOR LITTLE FOLKS. Elmina D. Slenker. Boards, 40c.

LIZZIE MELTON. A story of a self-reliant girl. By Albert Chavannes. With portrait of author. 25c.

LUCIFER. Third Series, Vol. III. (1899). Cloth, $1.25. Postage, 25c.

MAGNETATION, and Its Relation to Health and Character. Albert Chavannes. 25c.

MARRIAGE. An address by Dr. Juliet H. Severance. 5c.

MARRIAGE IN FREE SOCIETY. Edward Carpenter. A dainty little gift book. 25c.

MARTYRDOM OF MAN. Winwood Reade. This is a very interestingly pictured synopsis of universal history, showing what the race has undergone—its martyrdom—in its rise to its present plane. It shows how war and religion have been oppressive factors in man's struggle for liberty; and the last chapter, of some 150 pages, describes his intellectual struggle from the animal period of the earth to the present, adding an outline of what the author conceives would be a religion of reason and love. Winwood Reade's reputation as a writer of fine English, of deep study and careful reasoning, needs no word of praise. Cloth, $1.

MEN, WOMEN AND CHANCE. William Platt. Containing two tales: The Ascent to the Heights, and Blind Men and Seeing. Well printed on heavy paper and artistically bound in cloth. Gilt top, rough edges. 75c.

MEN, WOMEN, AND GODS. Helen H. Gardener. With preface by Col. R. G. Ingersoll. Contents: Introduction by Col. Ingersoll. Men, Women, and Gods. Vicarious Atonement. Historical Facts and Theological Fictions. Appendix. Address to the Clergy and Others. Letter to Cleveland Congress of Freethinkers. The only authorized and correct edition. Large 12mo, heavy-toned paper. Portrait. This volume is by far the best writing this famous author ever did. It is very fine. Cloth, $1; paper, 50c.

MISSING LINK IN MODERN SPIRITUALISM, THE. A Leah (Fox) Underhill. With portraits of the Fox Sisters and others. 478 pages. Cloth. Reduced to $1.

MORIBUND SOCIETY AND ANARCHY. Jean Grave. Cloth, 60c; paper, 25c.

MOTHERHOOD IN FREEDOM. M. Harman. 5c.

MUTUAL BANKING. A simple plan to abolish interest on money. William B. Greene. 10c.

NORA: A DOLL'S HOUSE, and GHOSTS. Ibsen. Cloth. 75c.

OUR WORSHIP OF PRIMITIVE SOCIAL GUESSES. E. C. Walker. Contents: Love and Law; The Modoch of the Monogamic Ideal; The Continuity of Race-Life, and Tyranny; Food and Sex Fallacies, a Criticism; When Men and Women Are and When They Are Not Varieties; The New Woman: What Is she? What will she be? The State Hiding Behind Its Own Mistakes; Bishop Potter's Opinion of Divorce; Love, Its Attraction and Expression: Is She an Honest Girl? Lloyd, Platt, and the Pitiful Facts; Social Radicals and Parentage; Anthropology and Monogamy; Love and Trust Versus Fear; Reflections upon Reading William Platt's "Women, Love, and Life." 15c.

PERSONAL EXPERIENCES of Two American Anti-Vivisectionists in Various Countries. Philip G. Peabody. With an Appendix by Col. R. G. Ingersoll. Reduced from 25c to 15c.

PERSONAL RIGHTS AND SEXUAL WRONGS. Oswald Dawson. 25c.

PRIESTLY CELIBACY. Prof. A. L. Rawson. Together with The Incoherence of Transition (E. C. Walker), Motherhood in Freedom (Moses Harman), The Greatest Sin (an allegory, R. B. Kerr), and Jealousy, the Foe of Freedom (Oscar Rotter). 25c.

RELIGION AND RATIONALISM. The relation of each to human liberty. The religionist, fancying that he has the whole truth, is logically opposed to investigation, and he appeals to physical force to arrest the discovery of new truths. What Rationalism is, and how many believe themselves Freethinkers who are only unbelieving or disgruntled religionists. The necessity for separate organizations and a division of labor among reformers. The Secular Union. Important facts and arguments in a compact form. E. C. Walker. 5c.

RIGHTS OF WOMEN AND THE SEXUAL RELATIONS. Karl Heinzen. A new edition, together with the startling letters of "Louise Mayen" on Men and Women, and a report of the Convention of German Women at Frauenstadt. A book of 256 pages, handsomely printed on good paper. It is more than twice the size of the original edition of "Rights of Women" alone and yet is sold at a lower price. Heinzen's great book is destined to become a classic and is sure to open the eyes of those who think women have their rights already. Its price is so low that every reader of this advertisement can afford to buy it, and no better book can be found to interest those who heretofore have given little or no thought to the necessity for the emancipation of women from ownership by men. Cloth, $1.

RIGHTS OF MAN. Thomas Paine. Answer to Burke's attack upon the French revolution. A political treatise of great general value, as advocating liberty and democracy. Contains the fundamental principles of true republicanism. Cloth, 50c; paper, 25c.

RUBAIYAT (Quatrains) OF OMAR KHAYYAM. Edward FitzGerald's interpretation; with original introduction; special cover; latest version. Paper, 15c.

RULED BY THE TOMB. A discussion of free thought and free love. Orford Northcote. 10c.

SCIENCE IN STORY; or, Sammy Tubbs, the Boy Doctor, and Sponsie, the Troublesome Monkey. For young folks. Dr. E. B. Foote. Five volumes in "red line," presentation edition. $5. Five volumes, plainer binding, $3.50; all in one volume, $2.

SEXUAL PHYSIOLOGY FOR THE YOUNG. Being the fifth volume of "Science in Story." 250 pages; cloth bound; illustrated. 50c.

SONGS OF THE UNBLIND CUPID. J. Wm. Lloyd. Edition de luxe. Verses printed from Kelmscott type upon deckle edged hand made paper of cerulean tint. Initial letters, ornaments and borders are in red; initial letter and sketch upon the opening page are hand painted in water colors. Covers brown, with choice of silver or gold lettering. Very handsome gift book. $5.

STUDIES IN SOCIOLOGY. In four parts: I., The Law of Happiness; II., The Law of Individual Control; III., The Law of Exchange; IV., The Law of Environment. Albert Chavannes. 25c.

TALKS ON NATURE. Important information for both sexes. Dr. J. H. Greer. 192 pages. Reduced from 50 to 25c.

THE ABOLITION OF MARRIAGE. John Beverly Robinson. Together with Isabel's Intention (Mariette), Reminiscences of Berlin Heights (A. Warren), and The Sexes and Love in Freedom (Oscar Rotter). 25c.

THE BAR SINISTER AND LICIT LOVE, including the first biennial proceedings of the Legitimation League, and a full account of the Lanchester case, with full-page half-tone pictures of Edith Lanchester, and Lillian Harman. Handsomely bound in green and gold covers. 207 pages. 25c.

THE BLUE LAWS OF CONNECTICUT. Taken from the Code of 1650 and the public records of the Colony of Connecticut previous to 1665. With an account of the persecution of Witches and Quakers in New England, and some extracts from the Blue Laws of Virginia. Copiously illustrated. 25c.

THE BRITISH BARBARIANS. Grant Allen, the greatest of the Hill-Top pioneers. Dedicated "to all who have heart enough, brain enough, and soul enough to understand it." Handsomely bound in cloth. 281 pages. $1.

THE WOMAN WHO DID. Grant Allen. A powerful story of a refined, educated and high-spirited woman who dared to defy the tyranny of church and state and ignore the institution of marriage. Handsomely bound in cloth. $1.

THE NEW HEDONISM. Grant Allen. The opening paragraph says: "The old ascetism said: 'Be virtuous and you will be happy.' The new hedonism says: 'Be happy and you will be virtuous.'" In another place the writer says: "In proportion as men have freed themselves from mediæval superstitions have they begun to perceive that the unclean and impure things are celibacy and ascetism; that the pure and beautiful and ennobling thing is the fit and worthy exercise of the reproductive function." Paper covers; 81 large pages; twelve copies, 50c. Single copy, 5c.

THE CHICAGO MARTYRS. The famous speeches of the eight condemned anarchists in Judge Gary's Court, and Altgeld's reasons for pardoning Fielden, Neebe and Schwab. 25c.

THE COMING WOMAN. Lillie D. White. 5c.

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM. Principles and platform of organized Freethought. 10c.

THE EVOLUTION OF MODESTY. Jonathan Mayo Crane. A consideration of the origin of clothes and the reasons why people wear clothing. Here are a few questions it answers: What is modesty? What is the cause of it? What is the use of it? What is the cause of the feeling of shame? Is nudity immodest? What is the cause of the notion that it is shameful to expose some parts of the body? Why do not all peoples agree as to what parts of the body should be concealed? 5c.

THE FOUNTAIN OF LIFE; or, The Threefold Power of Sex. Lois Waisbrooker. 50c.

THE FUTURE OF SECULARISM. When will the Cause of Justice triumph? 5c.

THE PRODIGAL DAUGHTER; or, The Price of Virtue. Rachel Campbell. Together with Legal Wifehood (Lucinda B. Chandler), Life's Gifts (Olive Schreiner), and Marriage—What It Was and Is; Will the Coming Woman Marry? 25c.

THE REVIVAL OF PURITANISM. E. C. Walker. 10c.

THE RIGHTS OF CHILDREN. R. B. Kerr. Together with What Are Women Here For? (E. B. Foote, Jr., M. D.), The New Martyrdom (Lillian Harman), and The Will, from the French of Guy de Maupassant. 25c.

THE SANCTITY OF MARRIAGE. As viewed from a moral and sanitary standpoint. A solemn protest against the present demoralizing management of that institution, its effects upon offspring and its influence upon education. By Dr. Robert A. Greer. A valuable "opening wedge" in missionary work. Price reduced from 25c to 10c.

THE SECRET INSTRUCTIONS OF THE JESUITS. A reprint from an edition published in 1723, quoted by the highest authorities as authentic. The work is redolent of Jesuit craft and is a plain index to the underhand working of that order against the welfare of individuals and society. 15c.

THE STATE: ITS HISTORIC ROLE. Prince Peter Kropotkin. 10c.

THE TROUBADOURS AND COURTS OF LOVE. J. F. Rowbotham. Cloth. 350 pages. $1.50. Postage, 12c.

THE UNWOMANLY WOMAN. Lizzie M. Holmes. Together with That Great Fraud, Ycleept Society (Moses Hull), Virgin Soil (George Egerton), and Normal Sexual Action (Ernest Wilson). 25c.

THE WORM TURNS. Revolutionary Poems. Voltairine de Cleyre. 10c.

THOMAS JEFFERSON. His Political, Social and Religious Philosophy. Gen. M. M. Trumbull. 5c.

TOKOLOGY. A book for every woman. By Alice B. Stockham, M. D. Illustrated. Tokology teaches possible painless pregnancy and parturition, giving full, plain directions for the care of a woman before and after confinement. The ailments of pregnancy can be prevented as well as the pains and dangers of childbirth avoided and thousands need not go down to death giving birth to children. English, German or Swedish. $2.25.

WHAT IS PROPERTY? An Inquiry into the Principle of Right and of Government. P. J. Proudhon. Translated by B. R. Tucker. 500 pages. Cloth. (Slightly shelf-worn.) Reduced to $1.

TRAVELS IN FAITH. By Capt. Robert C. Adams. His mental experience from superstition to rationalism. Cloth, 75c; paper, 25c.

VACCINATION A GIGANTIC CRIME. Samuel Darling. 15c.

VINDICATION OF THOMAS PAINE. Col. R. G. Ingersoll. Dealing with all the slanders brought against the name and fame of Paine. A little pamphlet which every admirer of Thomas Paine should have by him for reference. Paper, 15c.

VITAL FORCE. Magnetic Exchange and Magnetation. Albert Chavannes. 25c.

WHAT THE YOUNG NEED TO KNOW: a Primer of Sexual Rationalism. Edwin C. Walker. "Let us cease to be ashamed of what makes us men, of what makes us women, of what gives us the kisses of lovers and the encircling arms of babes." Paper covers; 42 large pages. 10c.

WHAT IS RELIGION? Ingersoll's last public address, delivered at the meeting of the Free Religious Association in Boston on June 2, 1899. To which is appended the poem, "Declaration of the Free," the last verse written by the great Freethinker. 5c.

WHEN LOVE IS LIBERTY AND NATURE LAW. John Badcock, Jr. 10c.

WHY THE UNDERTONE? An open letter to Judge Gary. Sarah E. Ames. 10c.

WOMAN, CHURCH, AND STATE. Matilda Joslyn Gage. This is Mrs. Gage's last and crowning work. Every woman ought to read it. Every liberal woman and man will want it. A burning protest against the tremendous wrong done woman by the church, which controlled the state. It ought to be widely read for the good it will do. Cloth, $1.50; paper, 75c.

WOMAN: Four Centuries of Progress. Susan H. Wixon. 5c.

WOMAN IN THE PAST, PRESENT AND FUTURE. Woman was the first human being that tasted bondage. Woman was a slave before the slave existed. The basis of all oppression is economic dependence on the oppressor. This has been the condition of woman in the past and is so still. She is now a slave of the slave. This work is August Bebel's masterpiece. 8vo, 372 pages. 25c.

Address M. Harman, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

Price 2 Cents.

LUCIFER.

THE LIGHT-BEARER.

THIRD SERIES, VOL. VI., No. 6. CHICAGO, ILLINOIS, FEB. 20, E. M. 302. [C. E. 1902.] WHOLE No. 905

BLIND SAMPSON.

When first the spark of Reason fired the brain
Of man, and lifted him above the brute,
It lit within his breast the grand desire
To Work, to Toil, to mould the world anew;
To tame the forces that in nature lay,
To grasp the secrets of Eternity.
And down through all the ages of the past,
From that first morning gleam of light, the earth
Has felt the impulse of his Hope; the universe
Has trembled at the touch of his vast hands—
The hands that shaped the kingdom, long forgot,
Lost in the blackness of antiquity.

Oh Labor, from the first enslaved and scorned—
Thou great blind Samson of the centuries—
Goaded by hunger's ever present fear,
Ground in the soulless mills of Privilege,
Crushed by the wheels of Wealth and Vested Rights,
Robbed and exploited by the pirate power
Of Church, Armies, and the Tinsel Kings;
Thine were the arms upheld the pomp and show
Of all the empires of the mouldy past.

By thy strong hands the Pyramids were built—
And stone on stone cemented with thy blood.
Thy hands have fashioned and have swept away,
Then built again and to destruction turned
The thing they made, yet ever has gone on
The march of Progress and Enlightenment.
The reaching after Righteousness and Truth—
The striving after Universal Peace.

And now throughout thy veins a tremor runs,
A gleam of purpose flashes from thine eyes.
The bonds that bind the eager hands of Toil
Are snapping one by one. From lofty peaks,
Whence prophet eyes have seen the Star of Hope,
The trumpet call of Equity rings out
The glad reveille of Democracy—
The muster call of Human Brotherhood.

Arise, oh Labor, in thy mighty strength!
The thick black veil of Ignorance is rent—
The creeds have lost their terrifying power—
Intolerance and Bigotry must flee—
The reign of Social Justice is at hand!
Arise and claim thine own!

—Robert T. Whitelaw, in "Socialist Spirit."

The Coal Miners of The Old Dominion.

A few Sundays ago I attended church in a place called McDonald, on Loop Creek, in West Virginia. In the course of his sermon the preacher gave the following as a conversation that had recently taken place between him and a miner.

"I met a man last week," said the preacher, "who used to be a very good church member. When I asked him what he was doing at the present time he said that he was organizing his fellow craftsmen of the mines."

Then according to the preacher the following discussion took place:

"What is the object of such a union?" asked the preacher.

"To better our condition," replied the miner.

"But the miners are in a prosperous condition now."

"There is where we differ."

"Do you think you will succeed?"

"I am going to try."

Commenting on this conversation to his congregation the preacher said: "Now I question if such a man can meet with any success. If he were only a college graduate he might be able to teach these miners something and in this way give them light, but as the miners of this creek are in a prosperous condition at the present time I do not see what such a man can do for them."

Yet this man was professing to preach the doctrines of the Carpenter of Nazareth.

Let us compare his condition with that of the "prosperous" miners and perhaps we can see why he talked as he did.

At this same service he read his report for the previous six months. For his share of the wealth these miners had produced during that time he had received $847.67, of which $45 had been given for missionary purposes.

Besides receiving this money he had been frequently wined and dined by the mine operators and probably had a free pass on the railroad.

What had he done for the miners during this time? He had spoken to them twenty-six times, for which he received $32.41 a talk, and if they were all like the one I heard he was at no expense either in time, brains or money to prepare them.

During all this time the "prosperous" miners were working ten hours a day beneath the ground amid poisonous gases and crumbling rocks. If they were fortunate enough to be allowed to toil every working day throughout the year they would have received in return for 3,080 hours of most exhausting toil less than $400.

Jesus, whose doctrines this man claimed to be preaching, took twelve men from among the laborers of his time (no college graduates among them) and with them founded an organization that revolutionized the society amid which it rose. Just so in our day the organization of the workers must be the first step to the overthrow of capitalism.

* * *

Then my mind turns to the thousands of "trap boys," with no sunshine ever coming into their lives. These children of the miners put in 14 hours a day beneath the ground for sixty cents, keeping their lone watch in the tombs of the earth with never a human soul to speak to them. The only sign of life around them is when the mules come down with coal. Then as they open the trap doors to let the mules out a gush of cold air rushes in chilling their little bodies to the bone. Standing in the wet mud up to their knees there are times when they are almost frozen and when at last late at night they are permitted to come out into God's fresh air they are sometimes so exhausted that they have to be carried to the corporation shack they call a home.

The parents of these boys have known no other life than that of endless toil. Now those who have robbed and plundered the parents are beginning the same story with the present generation. These boys are sometimes not more than nine or ten years of age. Yet in the interests of distant bond and stockholders these babes must be imprisoned through the long, beautiful daylight in the dark and dismal caverns of the earth.

Savage cannibals at least put their victim out of his misery before beginning their terrible meal, but the cannibals of today feast their poodle dogs at the seashore upon the life blood of these helpless children of the mines. A portion of this blood-stained plunder goes to the support of educational incubators called universities, that hatch out just such ministerial fowls as the one referred to.

The very miner with whom this minister had been talking had been blacklisted up and down the creek for daring to ask for a chance to let his boy go to school instead of into the mines. This miner could have told the minister more about the great industrial tragedy in the midst of which he was living, in five minutes than all his college training had taught him.

* * *

At the bidding of these same stock and bondholders, often living in a foreign land, the school houses of Virginia are closed to those who built them and to whom they belong by every right. The miners pay the taxes, build the school and support the officers, but if they dare to even stand upon the school house steps a snip of a mine boss comes along with pistol in hand and orders them off. "——free speech," said one of them to me when I protested, "we do not need any free speech. You get off the earth." Not only the school rooms, but every church or public hall is locked against us. On every school board you will find at least one company clerk or mining boss, and it is the business of this henchman of the mine owners to see to it that the school buildings are not used for public meetings by the miners.

Yet these same school buildings are used by the operators for any kind of meeting they choose and any demoralizing, degrading show that comes along has free access to them, as well as all political meetings of the old capitalist parties. But when the labor agitator, or trade-union organizer comes along trying to make it possible for the miner's children to go to school, the school houses are tightly closed.

* * *

In some of these camps the miners are forced to pay as much as $9 a barrel for flour, 14 cents a pound for sugar, 18 cents a pound for fat pork, and $8 to $10 a month rent for a company shack, the roof of which is so poor that when it rains the bed is moved from place to place in the attempt to find a dry spot. Many a miner works his whole life and never handles a cent of money. All he earns must be spent in the "Pluck me." Every miner has one dollar stopped for a company doctor. With 1,200 men working in a mine and a young doctor paid $300 a year, this means a nice little lump for the company. And this is the Divine system the preacher was defending.

* * *

In the closing hours of the baby year of the twentieth century I stood on the soil that gave birth to a Patrick Henry who could say, "Give me liberty or give me death," and a Jefferson, the truth of whose prophecy that the greatest tyranny and danger to American liberty would come from the judges on the bench, has been so often shown in these last few years. I had just left West Virginia with all its horrors, and as I was whirled along on the railroad I wondered if when I stood on the soil stained with the blood of so many Revolutionary heroes, I would once more really breathe the air of freedom.

Well, this is the first breath I received. I arrived in the northern part of Wise County, Virginia, over the L. & N. R. R., to find a message waiting me from the superintendent of the mines saying that if I came down to the Dorcas mines to talk to the miners of his company he would shoot me. I told him to shoot away, and that I did not propose to be scared out by the growling of any English bull-dog of capitalism.

Here is the oath which every miner is forced to take before he can go into a mine or get an opportunity to live. (The name of the miner is omitted for obvious reasons.)

"I, John Brown, a Justice of the Peace, in and for the County of Wise and State of Virginia, do hereby certify that —— ——has this day personally appeared before and made statement on oath, that he would not in any way aid or abet the labor organization, known as the United Mine Workers of America, or any other labor organization calculated to bring about trouble between the Virginia Iron, Coal and Coke Company, and its employes, in or near the vicinity of Tom's Creek, Wise Co., Virginia.

"Witness my hand and seal, this the 19th day of Dec., 1901.

—— ——J. P."

This superintendent should remember that the shooting of John Brown did not stop the onward march of the Civil War and the emancipation of the blacks, and should know that the shooting of Mother Jones will never stop the onward march of the United Mine Workers toward the goal of emancipation of the white slaves from capitalistic oppression. The laborers will move onward in their work until every child has an opportunity to enjoy God's bright sunlight and until some Happy New Year shall bring to every toiler's home the joyful news of freedom from all masters.—Mother Jones, in "Socialist Review."

Definitions.

BY R. B. KERR.

Recent discussion in the daily press has shown clearly that the general public attaches no definite meaning at all to such words as Socialism and Anarchism. It may be worth while to give a short explanation of these words, and to point out the differences between the creeds they represent.

In the first place it must be admitted that there is some excuse for the existing confusion of thought, because it is only a short time since the words obtained a perfectly distinct meaning even to those who used them to designate their own beliefs. Fifty years ago those who are now called Socialists were called "Communists," and sneered at "Socialists"; while those who are now called Anarchist Communists were known thirty years ago as the "Alliance of the Socialist Democracy." Today, however, each word has a distinct meaning, which can be clearly explained.

The aim of the persons called Socialists, Social Democrats, or Collectivists is to nationalize or municipalize land, railways, mines, factories, stores, and the other instruments of production, distribution, and exchange, and to work them by associated effort for the general benefit of the people of the community. As to what proportion of the common product each should receive, opinions differ; some hold that reward should be proportional to the value of work done; others, that the product should be equally divided; others again, that each should give according to his powers, and take according to his needs. These last are now called Communists.

As for the administration of public affairs, it is proposed to carry on that by means of public bodies elected by the adult men and women. The existing administrative machinery is to be used, and probably supplemented by subsidiary organization for the separate industries. Most Socialists, however, wish to make the public administration more democratic, giving the electors the power to withdraw their representatives at any time by majority vote, and instituting direct legislation by the people through the initiative and referendum.

The Anarchist Communist, sometimes called Autonomist or Amorphist, is a Socialist with a great dislike of centralization and delegated authority. His ideal is the "free federation of autonomous communes." He wishes to see the world divided into communities so small that the people can all meet together as they do in the Russian Mir and the Swiss communes, and make their own regulations without the intervention of any representative machinery at all. He wishes each of these communes to be sovereign and independent, but he would send delegates with "imperative and revocable mandate" to conventions of representatives of a number of communes. These delegates, however, could only discuss, but could not bind the different communes, and any commune could at any time secede from the convention. Each commune would own the instruments of production within its limits. In short, the difference between the Social Democrat and the Anarchist Communist is not unlike that which formerly existed between the Republicans and the Democrats of the United States. Both Socialist and Anarchist, however, believe in far more local and individual freedom than either of the old parties ever did.

The Christian Anarchist is a variety of Anarchist Communist who believes that it is wrong to use force in any circumstances whatever. He literally adheres to every precept of the Sermon on the Mount, and advocates complete non-resistance to evil.

The Individualist Anarchist, sometimes called Philosophic Anarchist or Mutualist, would abolish the community altogether. He does not believe that all the people who happen to inhabit a certain territory should on that account belong to one community and be ruled by the majority, but he thinks that those who wish social organization should choose their own partners, so that there may be any number of voluntary organizations living independently side by side within a given territory. As he does not believe in a community, of course he does not believe in the public ownership of the instruments of production. But he is in favor either of voluntary co-operation between any number of individuals who wish to co-operate, or of the conduct of industry by isolated individuals if they prefer that method. He thinks that each person, or association of persons, should be allowed to have the free use and possession of such land as he or it can reasonably "use and occupy" on the principle of first come first served; and that those who cannot get land should move on to some place where they can. He thinks it wise for individuals to join voluntary protective associations to defend themselves from aggression, and suggests that, when disputes arise, a peaceful way to settle them would be to select a "free jury" of the people of the district to act as arbitrators. Of course he believes in no specific code of laws binding on all the people within any given territory; but he sets great store by the inculcation of the precept of Herbert Spencer that "everyone has the right to do whatsoever he wills, so long as he does not invade the equal rights of others." He believes that free banking, free land, and free trade are a sufficient remedy for all economic evils, and that with these the dangers of individualism would vanish.

These different classes of people differ a good deal as to the best way of gaining their ends. The method of the Christian Anarchist is obvious, namely, to suffer evil without resistance, and persuade others to do so, until there are no people hard-hearted or shameless enough to injure those who only return good for evil. The Individualist Anarchist, belonging mainly to the class of educated doctrinaires, are averse to force, and advocate education and passive resistance. The Social Democrats formerly believed in a violent revolution, but are now almost unanimous in favor of political methods. The Anarchist Communists are still generally in favor of violence and even assassination. Their views are not unfairly set forth in "The Principles of the Revolution", by Bakounin: "Admitting no other activity than that of destruction, we declare that the forms in which that activity should express itself may be widely varied: poison, poignard, running noose. The revolution sanctifies all means without distinction."

Of the different movements Christian Anarchism is easily the oldest. Its chief publications are "The Sermon on the Mount," by Jesus Christ, and many of the writings of Leo Tolstoi. Individualist Anarchism dates from the publication in 1840 of "What is Property?" by Proudhon. This school has had few exponents in Europe, but in America its doctrines have been set forth by many intellectual men, the best known being Benjamin Tucker. Social Democracy and Anarchist Communism were twin born, arising together in the stormy period from 1845 to 1848. Bakounin and Alexander Herzen may be called the father of Anarchist Communism. The writings of this school are somewhat meager, for its members have been more than usually endowed with the "holy and wholesome ignorance" so much praised by Bakounin. Yet the school is adorned by Peter Kropotkin's great work on "Fields, Factories, and Workshops," which roused the London "Times" to admiration and almost to eloquence. Social Democracy may be said to date from the publication in 1847 of "The Manifesto of the Communist Party," by Karl Marx and Frederick Engels. Without doubt the literature of Social Democracy far surpasses in profundity and power all the rest of the reform literature of the world. Most of it we owe to an illustrious galaxy of Germans, but there have been important contributions in English, the most widely known being by Edward Bellamy. Bellamy had two faculties not often united in one man. In "Looking Backward" he showed himself the greatest popularizer of scientific thought that ever lived, and then in "Equality" he let us see that he himself was one of the most penetrating thinkers of the age. Just after "Equality" came out, I had the pleasure of discussing it with Kropotkin, and he expressed his admiration with a Russian exuberance which I shall not try to describe.

So far as numbers are concerned, the Anarchist Communists are the most numerous of the Anarchists, but the Social Democrats are far ahead of all the schools of Anarchism combined. For more than a generation it was a neck and neck race between the Socialists and the Anarchist Communists. The struggle between Marx and Bakounin was a veritable battle of the gods. In Germany, Denmark, Sweden, Norway, and England, Bakounin could never make any headway. But twenty years ago Emile de Laveleye could truly say of Bakounin that "it is his ideas which today form the basis of the programmes adopted by the majority of Socialist Associations in Italy, in Switzerland, in Belgium, in Spain, and even in France." (From "The Socialism of Today," Chap. 10). That is no longer true. The shade of Bakounin is still mighty in Spain and Italy; but Belgium is now the citadel of Social Democracy, and France and Switzerland are among its strongholds. Russia has no working class movement, but doubtless Bakounin has many adherents in the middle class.

From the struggle for existence of more than half a century we at last see Social Democracy emerging as the leading movement, because best suited to the economic conditions and the genius of the age. But each of the three forms of Anarchism contains a great half truth. Decentralization and local autonomy are very important, though we must have some centralization. Individualism reminds us that the world exists for individuals after all, and that we must be slow to sacrifice the flesh and blood of men and women to that somewhat abstract thing, "the general interest." Christian Anarchism makes us reflect how much value there is in the half truth of John Bright, that "force is no remedy," as well as in the opposite half truth of Karl Marx, that "force is the midwife of progress."

The Crumb of Contention.

[Sacred to the Memory of an Arbitration Meeting.]

"Oh, why are men so wicked?"
Said the gosling to the goose.
"Oh, why are men so wicked?"
Said the goose.
Then the gosling claimed a crumb
That the goose held 'neath her thumb,
Which she didn't need and didn't want to use;
But the goose stood on her "dig,"
And she said: "My dear child, figuratively you're entitled to the feed;
While I'm not disturbed at all
At your most obtrusive gall,
Still I will not, can not, tolerate your greed."
Then they fought a knock-out fight,
Each one conscious of her right,
And in all their bitter quarrel never thought
Of the silent little crumb
That the goose's right-foot thumb
Held in jeopardy before the fight was fought.

—S. F. Star.

Lucifer, the Lightbearer

M. HARMAN, EDITOR AND PUBLISHER.

PUBLISHED EVERY WEEK AT 500 FULTON STREET, CHICAGO, ILL.

Terms: One year, $1; six months, 50 cents; three months, 25 cents.

Entered at the Chicago Postoffice as Second-Class Mail Matter.

Eastern Representative, E. C. Walker, 244 W. 143d street, New York.

905.

If these figures correspond with the number printed on the wrapper of your Lucifer, your subscription expires with this number.

If a copy of Lucifer fails to reach you, please order by number or date.

Lucifer will not be sent "by return mail" unless stamps for postage are enclosed with order.

To NEW SUBSCRIBERS: Your subscription is paid to No. If you have not ordered Lucifer, a friend has subscribed for you. If you do not wish to receive it, please notify us by card or through your postmaster. If you wish to become a regular subscriber you will confer a favor by renewing before the expiration of your trial subscription.

A Study of "Rights."

One of Chicago's well known institutions, its Society of Anthropology, was organized to supply the demand for an absolutely free platform, or arena, upon which the battles of the various opposing schools of thought and opinion might be "fought to a finish," to use a prize-ring phrase.

Here the clergy, the priestly champions of old-time theologies and of the systems of human ethics founded upon theology, can meet on equal terms the religious heretic, the agnostic, the "rationalist," the "nature-ist," the disbeliever in all so called "revealed religion."

Here the Socialist, the Anarchist, the Single-Taxer, the Republican, the Democrat, the Populist, the imperialist, the plutocrat, the aristocrat, the millionaire and the pauper, are all made welcome; all are allowed equal privilege—the freedom of speech. No limits thereto except such as common courtsey and the rules of civility or decorum impose.

* * *

On Sunday last this free platform was occupied for the opening speech by one of Chicago's recognized expounders of legalism, of legality; that is, by a "doctor of law"—Geo. W. Warvelle, LL. D., by name. His subject was "The Law of Property."

To begin, the speaker said that all objects of sense are referable to two classes—persons and things; and that in the relation of things to persons arises the idea, the concept, known as "Property," "property rights," "real estate," etc., etc Without attempting to follow the learned gentleman in his various lines of argument, his conclusions mainly will be reported—as far as memory serves.

In very concise and unmistakable language his hearers were told that all the rights that we as human beings possess, or can lay claim to, are conferred upon us by "the State"—by which term he evidently meant the highest civil power existing in any given country, or political division of the earth. That the term "natural rights" is a misnomer, and that whatever of social rights, political rights, personal rights, etc., we can lay claim to, are all referable, in the final analysis, to the sovereign State.

* * *

To illustrate this point the learned doctor of law mentioned Potter Palmer, a Chicago millionaire, and his hotel, the Palmer House. Said he, Mr. Palmer doubtles sspeaks of this fine hotel as his property. In a sense this is true and yet the right to the ground on which the house is built is not his, never was his, and never can be his. This land, all the land in the city, belongs to the State. For reasons of its own it grants the privilege of the use of land to Mr. Palmer, and to other persons, but the RIGHT to the land remains with the State; the personal or "fee simple" right granted to persons can be withdrawn or revoked by the State at any time.

A few years ago, said Dr. Warvelle, the right of property in man, known as "chattel slavery," stood upon precisely the same footing as the right to land, to horses, houses or any other kind of property, stands today. The right to property in man was conferred by the State; the time came when the State, for its own reasons, revoked that right—destroyed many millions of dollars worth of property in black men, women and children, without compensation to the legal, the rightful owners.

In like manner the State can annul, reclaim or destroy, with or without compensation, ANY property, whether in land, houses or chattels, held by the individual citizen, or by combinations of citizens.

* * *

Pursuing this line of argument Dr. Warvelle maintained that the property now owned and controlled by J. D. Rockefeller, M. Schwab, J. P. Morgan, and other millionaires, is as truly and rightfully theirs as the wages earned by the day-laborer, in the mine or in the factory, are his; that the money or other property in either case, is not a personal, not a natural right, but a right conferred by the State. To speak as some do, of Rockefeller's millions as "stolen property," is absurd, illogical, false. In 1865 Rockefeller was a day-laborer, at one dollar per day, hauling oil-barrels. By watching his chances he soon became an employer of labor. What Rockefeller did any other man could have done, by using the same diligence and good sense in business.

Such in brief were some of the chief points in Dr. Warvelle's opening address on the Law of Property. His talk was extemporaneous throughout, but delivered with the clearness and readiness of diction that indicate the daily lecturer or teacher of classes.

* * *

In his introductory remarks Dr. Warvelle alluded deprecatingly to the common custom of dissecting the speaker instead of the address. Said that on a previous occasion when delivering a lecture before the Society of Anthropology the members had criticised the "lawyer," instead of the lawyer's address upon "law."

As some of us laymen see it, the value of any opinion or utterance depends greatly upon the point of view of the speaker or writer thereof. Anarchistic utterances by Emerson or Whitman would mean something very different if said by the Roman Pontiff, or by Saul of Tarsus, and therefore I maintain that we must know something of the speaker, his vocation in life, his training, his associations and affiliations, in order to correctly estimate the value of his opinions or arguments, and in order to make a fitting reply thereto.

When listening to a clergyman in his pulpit, or to a professor in a theological college, we consciously or unconsciously remember that the speaker is under HEAVY BONDS to say nothing that will militate against the creeds of the church organization that hires him to preach or to teach, and we consciously or unconsciously ask ourselves, "Would he talk thus, or thus, if he were free to say what he thinks? or if he were free to pursue his own line of thought to its logical landings?"

And so likewise, when listening to a priest of "the law," a man whose vocation depends, not only for its honors and emoluments but for its very existence, upon the popular acceptance of a creed that is very similar to that of the theologian, if not identical with it in many respects.

The doctor of divinity posits or postulates an almighty Creator or Ruler, as the basic doctrine or fact of his creed; a ruler who can do no wrong, but whose acts must be accepted as right because HE does them. Likewise, the "doctor of laws"—of civil law—posits or postulates an almighty State, as the basic fact or doctrine of his creed; a power from which all civil and personal rights proceed; a power whose commands must be obeyed, not because they are always right or just, but because the State SAYS so; and until the State changes its mind its behests must be accepted as right by all loyal and law-abiding citizens.

* * *

In the course of his remarks Dr. Warvelle quoted the Biblical text, "The earth is the Lord's and the fullness thereof," justifying the inference that he accepts the view of the compilers of Constantine's Bible that "the powers that be [the State] are ordained of God. Whoso therefore resisteth the power [the State] resisteth the ordinance of God: and they that resist shall receive to themselves damnation."

So then, the priests of the church, the clergy, and the priests of the law, the lawyers, having agreed together that the duty of the citizen is OBEDIENCE—unquestioning obedience to the commands of God and State, as interpreted by these same priests, we see how and why it is that the laity's demand that Church and State should be kept separate, must forever go unheeded.

Each of these priesthoods supports the other, and without such mutual support both would soon find themselves shorn of their power, their right and power, to tax industry to pay their salaries, their fees and perquisites so enormously greater than the pay received by the average wage-earner; also to build their enormously costly and untaxed buildings—churches, parsonages, church hospitals and church schools, also the untaxed State Houses, City Halls, Court Houses, etc., etc., all of which labor must build and support, but in the control or management of which the laborer himself has practically neither "part nor lot;" the right to such management being monopolized by the priests of Church and State aforesaid.

* * *

PER CONTRA—MAN VERSUS GOD AND STATE.

The unanimous vote of thanks tendered the speaker for his "able and interesting address," was well earned. When an enemy is to be met and fought, it is always very desirable that he should come out into the open and not hide his real purpose by stratagem, by decoys, by pretense of friendship. Hence the value of the address of Dr. Warvelle, whose theme would perhaps have been better named,

STATE RIGHTS VERSUS HUMAN RIGHTS.

Under the five-minute rule the replies to the first speaker were necessarily incomplete and unsatisfactory. Most of those who followed took decided issue with the views advanced by the champion of State Rights—using that phrase in the larger or cosmical sense and not in its narrow, its political sense—though agreeing that the address was a truthful, a masterful presentation of the popular, the "legal," basis of human ethics.

For lack of space I shall be compelled to confine my comments to my own views of the matter, some of which views were crudely enunciated in the five minutes allowed to each member, or visitor, who cares to reply to the first speaker:

From my viewpoint Dr. Warvelle has got things URSIDE DOWN! Instead of man owing everything to the State the State owes its power, its every existence, to man. Man created the State and man can change or destroy the State—destroy it without the shedding of blood and without infringing any real RIGHT.

All rights belong to living beings. The State is not a living being and can have no rights as such. The State, like its twin-brother "God," is an abstraction, a personification, a myth, a superstition, having no existence outside the imagination of man.

"An honest God is the noblest work of man"—that is to say, every man makes his god after his own heart, or image; a brutal man or brutal people will have a brutal god a humane man or people will have a humane god—if they want a god at all.

Just so with the mental concept called the State. A crude, brutal and aggressive people will have a crude, brutal and aggressive state; a justice-loving, peace-loving people will have a just and peaceful state—if they feel the need of such a thing at all!

* * *

ORIGIN OF RIGHTS.

The word right is used in three senses chiefly:

First, as meaning that which is true; not false; not deceptive.

Second, that which is equitable or just; not wrong not unjust.

Third, a thing, a PROPERTY, necessary to the life, development or happiness of a PERSON, or persons. It is in this last sense that the word was mainly used in the address of Dr. Warvelle, and in the comments thereon.

Instance: Atmospheric air is necessary to the life of man—generic man—and therefore air is one of man's rights; one of the human rights, and because necessary to human life it may be called "inalienable" by artificial law, by statutory enactment, or by act of the State.

The same may be said of water; also of food, and as the earth is the only source of food it follows that the use of the earth is one of man's inalienable rights. As all of these—air, water, earth, are, like man himself, products of nature, not of art, not of the State, we may properly call the right to each of these

A NATURAL RIGHT.

Webster derives the word right from Scandinavian roots, also from the German RECHT, "right;" and from the Latin RECTUS, "straight." From this latter root we get "rectitude," "correct," "correction," "erect," "direct," "direction," etc., etc. These indispensable ethical terms seem to indicate man's relation to his natural environment, to the world in which we find ourselves, to nature itself, whereas the other Latin word of kindred meaning, JUS (juris) "law," has reference mainly to artificial enactments, to "legal rights," so-called. From this root word we get jurist, "one versed in the law;" juror, "one sworn on a jury," jurisdiction, "the right of making and enforcing laws;" justice, "right"—as interpreted by the State.

Webster says: "RECTITUDE—absolute conformity to the rule of right in principle and practice. JUSTICE refers more especially to the carrying out of law." Hence rectitude, from rectus, "straight," is incomparably the more important word in our ethical vocabulary, in our ideas of right, while justice, from jus, "law," is the word upon which the artificial State is built, and from which the lawyer, the judge, the legislator, the ruler—all PARASITES in an ethical sense—draw their power and their enormous revenues. Hence also the reason is plain why lawyers have little use for rectitude—natural right, and its cognate words, and why they tell us that all rights are referable to the State,—to artificial law—to law-made justice.

"ILLEGITIMATES' —"BASTARDS."

From the foregoing we very clearly see and understand why the terms illegitimate and bastard have such terrible meaning to the unmarried mother and to the child born out of wedlock. The source of all human rights, including the right to be born, is the sovereign State, and he who dares to come into the world without permission granted by the State, through its authorized agents, is an interloper, an unwelcome guest, an unlawful person, that is, an ILLEGITIMATE or bastard.

Natural right, rectitude, equity, would say that whoever is born well-formed in body and well-endowed in mind, is a legitimate child, a rightful person, entitled to his equitable share of the earth and its opportunities. But "No," says the State—and its right-bower the Church. "No," say all the priests of State and Church, and all the superstitious dupes and slaves of the (un)Holy Alliance, State and Church.

"The right to be born is not a natural right, not a personal right," say all these; "it is a State-and-Church conferred right. Better not be born at all than to be born without the pale of 'holy matrimony.' Better be born deformed, physically or mentally; better to be born an idiot, an epileptic, a foredoomed thief or murderer, if only legalized by State or Church, than to come into life with the highest possible endowment of mind and body, if with all these advantages you still lack the one thing needful—the 'Union Label,' the stamp of Legitimacy, of Legality, which can only be conferred by statute or canon law."

* * *

Among human rights the first and chief is the right to be born well—if born at all! But if ALL were born well—born approximately EQUAL in mental and physical power, the occupation, the rule and the emoluments of the priests of "law and gospel," would be gone. Hence as a matter of self-preservation these priests are doing what they can—by legislation and by working on the ignorant fears of the masses—to discredit the right to be born well through free, intelligent and responsible motherhood. Knowledge of how to control and limit the size of families is made a crime, punishable by heavy fines and by confinement at hard labor in States' prison. Divorce is declared by the Church to be "sin against God" and destructive of "social order," and the State makes divorce difficult by the expense, and disgraceful through the publicity given to marital troubles.

From these and other like considerations I believe the priests of State and Church—as a class—to be the greatest of all enemies to HUMAN RIGHTS, and therefore the greatest enemies to human progress and happiness. M. HARMAN.

The American Press-Writers' Association.

Francis B. Livesey has been waging a big fight against two compulsory education bills that have been introduced in the Maryland Legislature at the instance of the Arundell Club of Baltimore, and the Women's Club of Kensington, Md., both clubs being composed of rich and influential ladies. Bro. Livesey is profoundly impressed with the need of individual mental liberty and at this writing it looks as if success will crown his efforts in Maryland for the fourth time. He has been largely aided in his present efforts by Thomas O. Clark, "Marion Truman," Dr. William N. Hill, Cassius V. Cook, and Mrs. Laura J. Langston.

We learn with regret of the death of one of our most active writers in San Francisco, Mr. Alfred Cridge. The Boston papers announce that Dr. Pfeiffer is critically ill with confluent smallpox. In the interests of science he visited a pest-house and exposed himself to the disease, in an endeavor to demonstrate that it was not contagious.

NEW MEMBERS.

226 b. Brady, James E., 216 W. Biddle St., Baltimore, Md.
227 d. Koontz, T. Huber, Smithsburg, Md.
228 b. Leverson, Dr. M. R., 81 Lafayette Ave., Brooklyn, New York.
229 c. Allen, Henry Ware, El Paso, Texas.
230 b. Allen, Walter S., Palmer Mass.
231 c. Harecurt, Miss Calla, Chestnut, Logan County, Ill.

CORRECTION.

32 a. Clymer, Dr. R. S., Room 6, 247 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

A. C. ARMSTRONG, 17 Leroy St., Dorchester, Mass.

VARIOUS VOICES.

Jas. W. Adams, Home, Wash.:—To say we appreciate the frequent notice of us is but a feeble expression at best. The correspondence has been a heavy tax on my time and also on my purse.

S. O. Bishop, Broadhead, Wis.:—"Dawn Thought" is a great book. Everybody should read it. It covers a field inexhaustible. Yet, how about his boundless universe with a "Center?" It has gone to Witchita, Kansas and now I must have more books; for which I enclose $2.50.

A. M., Datil, New Mexico:—I see in late Lucifer a list of "Bargain Counter." Kindly send me one copy each of the whole "shooting match" as I have wanted the bulk of this whole list—especially "Government Analyzed" and other things. It's winter and I want to read and study and this whole outfit will keep me busy.

L. R., Canada:—I enclose $1 to renew my subscription to Lucifer for another year. Please accept my thanks for the articles I have read, all of which are good except those on vivisection and anti-vivisection, vaccination and anti-vaccination. I believe that science is not advanced enough to permit the literary men—that is the sentimental men—to settle these vitally interesting questions. For my part, all the columns I read did not convince me on either side.

E. B., Nebraska City, Neb.:—Lucifer is all right—even though I cannot agree with all it contains. I often think it too radical for missionary work. Truth is much like sin—presented in its bare condition it often shocks and is repulsive; but clothed in pleasing language it becomes in itself pleasing and acceptable. Radical thought has little influence with the masses; but it is necessary and fills its place, gets the kicks and cuffs of beneficiaries, while the moderate nicely dressed idea (the same) comes along and is swallowed whole by the masses.

S. R. Shepherd, Leavenworth, Kas.:—Lucifer should record all important events connected with the great question—the relation of the sexes—but it never noticed the decision of the United States Court of Appeals at St. Louis—that a common law marriage was just as good as a Priest-or Judge-made-law marriage. The case was appealed from Oklahoma United States District Court. A common law wife was defending her rights in her common law husband's estate. His children by a first wife were trying to kick her out penniless but—failed. Tally one for Uncle Sam. It is mighty seldom he does anything commendable.

THE CHICAGO Society of Anthropology meets every Sunday at 3:30 P. M., at Hall 913 Masonic Temple. Subject for Feb. 23 will be "Browning's Caliban," by Prof. Oscar L. Triggs of the University of Chicago. Seats and discussions free.

Little Freddie—Please Mr. Druggist, papa wants a bottle of liniment, and mamma wants a bottle of china cement, right away.

Druggist—All right. What's wrong?

Freddie—Mamma hit papa with the sugar bowl.—Ex.

Lucifer—Its Meaning and Purpose.

LUCIFER—The planet Venus; so called from its brightness.—Webster's Dictionary.

LUCIFEROUS—Giving Light; affording light or the means of discovery.—Same.

LUCIFIC—Producing Light.—Same.

LUCIFORM—Having the form of Light.—Same.

The name Lucifer means Light-Bringing or Light-Bearing, and the paper that has adopted this name stands for Light against Darkness—for Reason against Superstition—for Science against Tradition—for Investigation and Enlightenment against Credulity and Ignorance—for Liberty against Slavery—for Justice against Privilege.

AT HALF-PRICE

100 COPIES
OF
DR. FOOTE'S HOME CYCLOPEDIA.

While they last, a copy will be sent for only $1 to any subscriber to Lucifer whose subscription is paid one year in advance.

A FAMILY GUIDE-BOOK OF THE TWENTIETH CENTURY.

1248 PAGES. 500,000 WORDS. 400 PICTURES. 250 RECIPES.
80 CHROMOS ON 18 COLOR PLATES.

A few among the many subjects treated:

PART I.—Disease: Cause, Prevention, Cure.—Common Sense Remedies.
PART II.—Chronic Diseases of the Breathing Organs.—Diseases of the Heart and Blood Vessels.—Diseases of Liver, Stomach, Bowels.—Chronic Affections of the Urinary Organs.—Private Words for Men and Women.—Hints to the Children."—Constitutional Diseases.—Affections of the Eyes and Ears.—The Treatment of Disease. Containing 200 Prescriptions for Common Ailments and Complete Table of Antidotes for Poisons.
PART III.—Plain Home Talks About the Sexual Organs.—The Natural Relation of the Sexes.—Civilization and Marriage.—History of Marriage.—Defects in Marriage Systems.—Social Immorality. (Part III. takes a view of marriage and the sexual relations from a physiological standpoint. It is searching, interesting, original, and startling.
PART IV.—Improving Monogamic Marriage.—Adaptation in Marriage.—Restricted Marriage and Parentage.—Three Phases of Monogamic Marriages.—Intermarria of Relatives.—Essays for Married People.—What Determines Sex.—Philosophy of Child-Varking.—Essays for the Future.

Is your subscription paid to No. 957? If so, the Home Cyclopedia will be sent to you for $1 net. Postage 18 cts.

DO YOU EVER THINK

Of the fate of the Prodigal Daughter? The Prodigal Son is forgiven and received with rejoicing—why should different treatment be accorded to his sister? For a vivid, true picture of the conditions in homes and factories which produce thousands of so-called fallen women every year, read "The Prodigal Daughter; or, The Price of Virtue," by Rachel Campbell.

SPECIAL OFFER.

This valuable work sent free on receipt of twenty-five cents or a thirteen week's trial subscription to Lucifer, the Light-Bearer. M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton Street, Chicago, Ill.

VICE: ITS FRIENDS AND ITS FOES

BY EDWIN C. WALKER.

CONTENTS:—Brotherhood of Man; The Recognition of Facts; Folly of "For Men Only," Definition of Vice; Horrors of Prostitution; Abnormal Sexuality; Errors of Fathers, Mothers and Teachers; Persecution Does Not Reform; Prostitution and the Crusaders; The "Spoiling of the Heathen;" What are the Effects of Raids and Crusades? The Economic Side of the Problem; Party Politics in Vice Crusading; In What Does Prostitution Consist? Some Causes of Prostitution; Two Kinds of Prostitution Compared; The Opponents of Divorce; "Purifying" the Tenements; Action for Advanced Women.

WITH APPENDIX:—The Wanderings of a Spirit; Our Fair Civilization; The Folly and Cruelty of It All. Price 10c.

Address M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

SELF-HYPNOTIC HEALING.—27,490 people to date of Jan. 1, 1902, professed curing themselves of such diseases as they had failed in with medicine. All accomplished through the teachings of my oriental system of Self-Hypnotic Control, which also develops the psychic powers of man, enabling him to control his dreams, read the minds of friends and enemies, visit unknown parts of the earth, solve hard problems in this trance and remember all when awake. A five cump ete trial lessons will be sent for only 10 cents, actually enabling the student to accomplish wonders without further charge. Prof H. E. DUTTON, Ph. D., Lincoln, Neb., U. S. A.

Notice! I would be glad to hear from Liberals who would like to correspond with other Liberals. Address (with stamp) ELMINA DRAKE SLENKER
Snowville, Va.

RADICAL LITERATURE.

For Sale by M. Harman, 500 Fulton St., Chicago.

A CHAMBERMAID'S DIARY. By Octave Mirbeau. Translated from the French by Benj. R. Tucker. 460 pages. Handsomely bound in cloth. $1.50.
ADVANCEMENT OF SCIENCE. Prof. John Tyndall's famous Inaugural Address before the British Association for the Advancement of Science, with the articles on Prayer which so stirred the religious world. Cloth, 50c; paper, 25c.
AGE OF REASON (The). Presentation edition. Part I reprinted from the first English edition. Part II corrected by M. D. Conway's edition. With Paine's own account of his arrest in Paris. Photogravure portrait from the Romney painting exhibited in London. Containing also portrait from the Jarvis painting; from the Peale painting, known as the Bonneville portrait, representing Paine as a member of the French Assembly, and a half-tone of the Peale painting. Large half-tones of the house presented to Paine, in which he lived in New Rochelle, and of the monument and surroundings, Yorktown, Pa., scenes; also eight half-tone views of buildings, etc., associated with Paine's life in Paris, and other illustrations. With Preface, Chronological Table, Notes, Index, etc. Printed on antique wove paper, large octavo, wide margins, gilt edge. Special cover design in colors. The finest and most accurate of all editions. Boxed. Postpaid, $1.
AGE OF REASON. Thomas Paine. Cloth, with steel plate portrait, 75c; paper 15c.
ANARCHISM: Its Philosophy and Ideal. Peter Kropotkin. 5c.
A PHYSICIAN IN THE HOUSE. A New Family Medical Work, by Dr. J. H. Greer. This book is up-to-date in every particular. It will save you hundreds of dollars in doctors' bills. It tells you how to cure yourself by simple and harmless home remedies. It recommends no poisonous or dangerous drugs. It teaches how to save health and life by safe methods. It teaches prevention—that it is better to know how to live and avoid disease than to take any medicine as a cure. It is not an advertisement and has no medicine to sell. It has hundreds of excellent recipes for the cure of the various diseases. It has 16 colored plates showing different parts of the human body. The chapter on Painless Midwifery is worth its weight in gold to women. The "Care of Children" is something every mother ought to read. It teaches the value of Air, Sunshine, and Water as medicines. It contains valuable information for the married. This book cannot fail to please you. If you are looking for health by the safest and easiest means, do not delay getting it. It has eight hundred pages, is neatly bound in cloth, with gold letters, and will be sent by mail or express, prepaid to any address, for $2.75.
A PLEA FOR THE NEW WOMAN. May L. Collins. With large new half-tone portrait. 10c.
A TALE OF THE STRASSBURG GEESE. R. B. Kerr. Together with The Strike of the Strassburg Geese (C. W. Coolridge), A Traveler's Tale (R. B. Kerr), The Cat's Story (Emile Zola) 5c.
AUTONOMY, SELF-LAW. A fragmentary dissertation on the right to non-invasive self-hood. 5c.
A WEEK ON THE CONCORD AND MERRIMAC RIVERS. Henry D. Thoreau. 25c.
BALZAC'S SERAPHITA: The Mystery of Sex. Mary Hanford Ford. Cloth, $1.
BIBLE TEMPERANCE. E. C. Walker. Proving that Liquor Drinking is Commended, Defended and Enjoined by the Bible, and giving close reference to the chapters and verses. 10c.
BORNING BETTER BABIES—Through regulating reproduction by controlling conception. H. B. Foote, Jr., M. D. 25c.
CAUSES OF HARD TIMES, and the Money Question. Albert Chavannes. 5c.
CHICAGO CONFERENCE OF TRUSTS. Speeches, debates, etc.; 32 portraits of delegates, including Benj. R. Tucker, Laurence Gronlund, William Jennings Bryan, Samuel Gompers, Louis F. Post, and George Schilling. 128 pages, 50c.
CHILDREN OF THE ITALIAN POOR. Paola Lombroso. 5c.
DARWINS, THE. (A novel.) Elmina D. Slenker. 60c.
DAWN OF CIVILIZATION, The; or, England in the Nineteenth Century. J. C. Spence. 178 pages. 25c.
DAWN-THOUGHT ON THE RECONCILIATION. By J. Wm. Lloyd. An Inspired Thought, that, with insight and solution, touches all the questions of life, treats them, and will save you hundreds of dollars in doctors' bills. It tells you how to cure yourself by simple and harmless home remedies. It recommends no poisonous or dangerous drugs. It teaches how to save health and life by safe methods. It teaches prevention—that it is better to know how to live and avoid disease than to take any medicine as a cure. It is not an advertisement and has no medicine to sell. It has hundreds of excellent recipes for the cure of the various diseases. It has 16 colored plates showing different parts of the human body. The chapter on Painless Midwifery is worth its weight in gold to women. The "Care of Children" is something every mother ought to read. It teaches the value of Air, Sunshine, and Water as medicines. It contains valuable information for the married. This book cannot fail to please you. If you are looking for health by the safest and easiest means, do not delay getting it. It has eight hundred pages, is neatly bound in cloth, with gold letters, and will be sent by mail or express, prepaid to any address, for $2.75.
DIGGING FOR BED-ROCK. Camp-meeting talks and sketches by Moses Harman. 5c.
DR. FOOTE'S SOCIAL SCIENCE SERIES OF DIME PAMPHLETS—Wedlock; Scientific Marriage; Heredity; A B C of Temperaments; Powell and his Critics; Physiological Marriage; Physical Improvement of Humanity; Causes of Disease, Insanity, and Premature Death; A Step Backward. Any of the above books sent by mail on receipt of price.
DYNAMIC THEORY OF LIFE AND MIND. An attempt to show that all organic beings are both constructed and operated by the dynamic agencies of their respective environments. By James B. Alexander. Over 400 illustrations, 37 chapters, 1,067 pages and a 3-column index of 11 pages. Cloth, $3.75.
EAST TENNESSEE SKETCHES. A and Cecile Chavannes. 25c.
ECONOMICS OF ANARCHY. A Study of the Industrial Type. Dyer D. Lum. 15c.
EIGHT-HOUR MOVEMENT. John P. Altgeld, ex-Governor of Illinois. 5c.

EVOLUTION AND REVOLUTION. Elisee Reclus. 5c.

FALSE CLAIMS OF THE CHURCH. John E. Remsburg. Analyzing and confuting the claims made by churchmen that the Christian religion has promoted morality, learning, temperance, science, freedom, and showing how she has opposed progress. Paper, 10c.

FIELDS, FACTORIES, AND WORKSHOPS; or, Industry Combined with Agriculture and Brain Work with Manual Work. Peter Kropotkin. 280 pages. 40c. Postage, 5c.

FREE PRESS. Arguments in support of demurrer to the indictment of M. Harman, E. C. Walker and Geo. Harman, under the Comstock law. G. C. Jemens and David Overmyer. 20c.

GIORDANO BRUNO. His Life, Teachings, and Martyrdom. Burned for heresy in Rome, Feb. 17, 1600. 5c.

GOD AND THE STATE. Bakounine. 25c.

GOVERNMENT ANALYZED. A remarkable work by a remarkable man, Col. John R. Keleo, the history of whose life reads more like romance than reality. This book is the last of a series—Deity Analyzed, Bible Analyzed, Universe Analyzed. By the author's death this work was left unfinished, but was completed by his wife, Etta Dunbar Keleo. 419 pages; cloth. Price reduced from $1.50 to $1.

HILDA'S HOME. Rosa Graul. "An o'er true tale" of woman's wrongs and of one woman's struggles and final triumphs in her attempt to secure justice for herself and for her sisters. 426 pages. Cloth, $1; paper, 50c.

HUMAN RIGHTS. J. Madison Hook. 5c.

IMPORTANCE OF HONEST MONEY. A simple, scientific, invariable standard of price. James Adleman. 320 pages. Paper, 50c.

IN BRIGHTER CLIMES; or, Life in Socioland. Albert Chavannes. 5c.

INFIDEL DEATH-BEDS. "Idle Tales of Dying Horrors." G. W. Foote. Brief biographical sketches of 97 Freethinkers, including Bruno, Buckle, Byron, Comte, Darwin, George Eliot, Gibbon, Goethe, Hugo, Harriet Martineau, Mill, Paine, Madame Roland, George Sand, Shelley, Volney, and Voltaire. 25c.

IN HELL AND THE WAY OUT. A plan of Social Democracy outlined. Henry E. Allen. 10c.

INSTITUTIONAL MARRIAGE. From the viewpoint of an exiled Marxian. M. Harman. 5c.

JOHN'S WAY. A domestic radical story. Elmina D. Slenker. 25c.

KAREZZA. Ethics of Marriage. A bold, brave book, teaching ideal marriage, rights of the unborn child, a designed and controlled maternity. Sample pages free. $1.

KORADINE. A story for young and old. Extra levant cloth. $1.

LIBERTY IN LITERATURE. Testimonial to Walt Whitman. "Let us put wreaths on the brows of the living." An address delivered in Philadelphia, Oct. 31, 1890, with portrait of Whitman. Containing also Col. Ingersoll's address at the funeral of Walt Whitman, Mar. 30, 1892. Cloth, 50c; paper, 25c.

LIBERTY. Political, Religious, Social, and Moral. A. F. Tindall. 5c.

LITTLE LESSONS FOR LITTLE FOLKS. Elmina D. Slenker. Boards, 40c.

LIZZIE MELTON. A story of a self-reliant girl. By Albert Chavannes. With portrait of author. 25c.

LUCIFER. Third Series, Vol. III. (1899). Cloth, $1.25. Postage, 15c.

MAGNETATION, and Its Relation to Health and Character. Albert Chavannes. 25c.

MARRIAGE. An address by Dr. Juliet H. Severance. 5c.

MARRIAGE IN FREE SOCIETY. Edward Carpenter. A dainty little gift book. 25c.

MARTYRDOM OF MAN. Winwood Reade. This is a very interestingly pictured synopsis of universal history, showing what the race has undergone—its martyrdom—in its rise to its present plane. It shows how war and religion have been oppressive factors in man's struggle for liberty; and the last chapter, of some 150 pages, describes his intellectual struggle from the animal period of the earth to the present, adding an outline of what the author conceives would be a religion of reason and love. Winwood Reade's reputation as a writer of fine English, of deep study and careful reasoning, needs no word of praise. Cloth, $1.

MEN, WOMEN AND CHANCE. William Platt. Containing two tales: The Ascent to the Heights, and Blind Men and Seeing. Well printed on heavy paper and artistically bound in cloth. Gilt top, rough edges. 75c.

MEN, WOMEN, AND GODS. Helen H. Gardener. With preface by Col. R. G. Ingersoll. Contents: Introduction by Col. Ingersoll. Men, Women, and Gods. Vicarious Atonement. Historical Facts and Theological Fictions. Appendix. Address to the Clergy and Others. Letter to Cleveland Congress of Freethinkers. The only authorized and correct edition. Large 12mo, heavy-toned paper. Portrait. This volume is by far the best writing this famous author ever did. It is very fine. Cloth, $1; paper, 50c.

MISSING LINK IN MODERN SPIRITUALISM. THE. A Leah (Fox) Underhill. With portraits of the Fox Sisters and others. 479 pages. Cloth. Reduced to $1.

MORIBUND SOCIETY AND ANARCHY. Jean Grave. Cloth, 60c; paper, 25c.

MOTHERHOOD IN FREEDOM. M. Harman. 5c.

MUTUAL BANKING. A simple plan to abolish interest on money. William B. Greene. 10c.

NORA, A DOLL'S HOUSE, and GHOSTS. Ibsen. Cloth. 75c.

OUR WORSHIP OF PRIMITIVE SOCIAL GUESSES. E. C. Walker. Contents: Love and Law: The Moloch of the Monogamic Ideal: The Continuity of Race-Life, and Tyranny: Food and Sex Fallacies, a Criticism: When Men and Women Are and When They Are Not Varieties: The New Woman: What is she? What will she be? The State Hilding Behind Its Own Mistakes: Bishop Potter's Opinion of Divorce: Love: Its Attraction and Expression: Is She an Honest Girl? Lloyd, Platt, and the Pitiful Facts: Social Radicals and Parentage: Anthropology and Monogamy: Love and Trust Versus Fear; Reflections upon Reading William Platt's "Women, Love, and Life." 15c.

PERSONAL EXPERIENCES of Two American Anti-Vivisectionists in Various Countries. Phillip G. Peabody. With an Appendix by Col. R. G. Ingersoll. Reduced from 25c to 15c.

PERSONAL RIGHTS AND SEXUAL WRONGS. Oswald Dawson. 20c.

PRIESTLY CELIBACY. Prof. A. L. Rawson. Together with The Incoherence of Transition (E. C. Walker), Motherhood in Freedom (Moses Harman), The Greatest Sin (an allegory, R. B. Kerr), and Jealousy, the Foe of Freedom (Oscar Rotter). 25c.

RELIGION AND RATIONALISM. The relation of each to human liberty. The religionist fancying that he has the whole truth, is logically opposed to investigation, and he appeals to physical force to arrest the discovery of new truths. What Rationalism is, and how many believe themselves Freethinkers who are only unbelieving or disgruntled religionists. The necessity for separate organizations and a division of labor among reformers. The Secular Union. Important facts and arguments in a compact form. E. C. Walker. 5c.

RIGHTS OF WOMEN AND THE SEXUAL RELATIONS. Karl Heinzen. A new edition, together with the startling letters of "Louise Mayer" on Men and Women, and a report of the Convention of German Women at Frauenstadt. A book of 256 pages, handsomely printed on good paper. It is more than twice the size of the original edition of "Rights of Women" alone and yet is sold at a lower price. Heinzen's great book is destined to become a classic and is sure to open the eyes of those who think women have their rights already. Its price is so low that every reader of this advertisement can afford to buy it, and no better book can be found to interest those who heretofore have given little or no thought to the necessity for the emancipation of women from ownership by men. Cloth, $1.

RIGHTS OF MAN. Thomas Paine. Answer to Burke's attack upon the French revolution. A political treatise of great general value, as advocating liberty and democracy. Contains the fundamental principles of true republicanism. Cloth, 50c; paper, 25c.

RUBAIYAT (Quatrains) OF OMAR KHAYYAM. Edward FitzGerald's interpretation: with original introduction: special cover: latest version. Paper, 10c.

RULED BY THE TOMB. A discussion of free thought and free love. Orlint Northcote. 10c.

SCIENCE IN STORY; or, Sammy Tubbs, the Boy Doctor, and Sponsie, the Troublesome Monkey. For young folks. Dr. E. B. Foote. Five volumes in "red line," presentation edition. $5. Five volumes, plainer binding, $3.50; all in one volume, $2.

SEXUAL PHYSIOLOGY FOR THE YOUNG. Being the fifth volume of "Science in Story." 250 pages; cloth bound; illustrated. 50c.

SONGS OF THE UNBELIND CUPID. J. Wm. Lloyd. Edition de luxe. Verses printed from Kelmscott type upon deckle edged hand made paper of cerulean tint. Initial letters, ornaments and borders are in red; initial letter and sketch upon the opening page are hand painted in water colors. Covers brown, with choice of silver or gold lettering. Very handsome gift book. 50c.

STUDIES IN SOCIOLOGY. In four parts: I., The Law of Happiness; II., The Law of Individual Control; III., The Law of Exchange; IV., The Law of Environment. Albert Chavannes. 25c.

TALKS ON NATURE. Important information for both sexes. Dr. J. H. Greer. 192 pages. Reduced from 50 to 25c.

THE ABOLITION OF MARRIAGE. John Beverly Robinson. Together with Isabel's Intention (Mariette), Reminiscences of Berlin Heights (A. Warren), and The Sexes and Love in Freedom (Oscar Rotter). 25c.

THE BAR SINISTER AND LICIT LOVE, including the first biennial proceedings of the Legitimation League, and a full account of the Lanchester case, with full-page half-tone pictures of Edith Lanchester, and Lillian Harman. Handsomely bound in green and gold covers. 207 pages. 25c.

THE BLUE LAWS OF CONNECTICUT. Taken from the Code of 1650 and the public records of the Colony of Connecticut previous to 1665. With an account of the persecution of Witches and Quakers in New England, and some extracts from the Blue Laws of Virginia. Copiously illustrated. 25c.

THE BRITISH BARBARIANS. Grant Allen, the greatest of the Hill-Top pioneers. Dedicated "to all who have heart enough, brain enough, and soul enough to understand it." Handsomely bound in cloth. 191 pages. $1.

THE WOMAN WHO DID. Grant Allen. A powerful story of a refined, educated and high-spirited woman who dared to defy the tyranny of church and state and ignore the institution of marriage. Handsomely bound in cloth. $1.

THE NEW HEDONISM. Grant Allen. The opening paragraph says: "The old ascetism said: 'Be virtuous and you will be happy.' The new hedonism says: 'Be happy and you will be virtuous.'" In another place the writer says: "In proportion as men have freed themselves from mediaeval superstitions have they begun to perceive that the unclean and impure things are celibacy and ascetism; that the pure and beautiful and ennobling thing is the fit and worthy exercise of the reproductive function." Paper covers; 32 large pages; twelve copies, 50c. Single copy, 5c.

THE CHICAGO MARTYRS. The famous speeches of the eight condemned anarchists in Judge Gary's Court, and Altgeld's reasons for pardoning Fielden, Neebe and Schwab. 25c.

THE COMING WOMAN. Lillie D. White. 5c.

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM. Principles and platform of organized Freethought. 10c.

THE EVOLUTION OF MODESTY. Jonathan Mayo Crane. A consideration of the origin of clothes and the reasons why people wear clothing. Here are a few questions it answers: What is modesty? What is the cause of it? What is the use of it? What is the cause of the feeling of shame? Is nudity immodest? What is the cause of the notion that it is shameful to expose some parts of the body? Why do not all peoples agree as to what parts of the body should be concealed? 5c.

THE FOUNTAIN OF LIFE; or, The Threefold Power of Sex. Lois Waisbrooker. 50c.

THE FUTURE OF SECULARISM. When will the Cause of Justice triumph? 5c.

THE PRODIGAL DAUGHTER; or, The Price of Virtue. Rachel Campbell. Together with Legal Wifehood (Lucinda B. Chandler), Life's Gifts (Olive Schreiner), and Marriage—What It Was and Is; Will the Coming Woman Marry? 25c.

THE REVIVAL OF PURITANISM. E. C. Walker. 10c.

THE RIGHTS OF CHILDREN. R. B. Kerr. Together with What Are Women Here For? (E. B. Foote, Jr., M. D.), The New Martyrdom (Lillian Harman), and The Will, from the French of Guy de Maupassant. 25c.

THE SANCTITY OF MARRIAGE. As viewed from a moral and sanitary standpoint. A solemn protest against the present demoralizing management of that institution, its effects upon offspring and its influence upon education. By Dr. Robert A. Greer. A valuable "opening wedge" in missionary work. Price reduced from 25c to 10c.

THE SECRET INSTRUCTIONS OF THE JESUITS. A reprint from an edition published in 1723, quoted by the highest authorities as authentic. The work is redolent of Jesuit craft and is a plain index to the underhand working of that order against the welfare of individuals and society. 15c.

THE STATE: ITS HISTORIC ROLE. Prince Peter Kropotkin. 10c.

THE TROUBADOURS AND COURTS OF LOVE. J. F. Rowbotham. Cloth. 350 pages. $1.50. Postage, 15c.

THE UNWOMANLY WOMAN. Lizzie M. Holmes. Together with That Great Fraud, Y(o)ga Society (Moses Hull), Virgin Soil (George Egerton), and Normal Sexual Action (Ernest Winnek). 25c.

THE WORM TURNS. Revolutionary Poems. Voltairine de Cleyre. 15c.

THOMAS JEFFERSON. His Political, Social and Religious Philosophy. Gen. M. M. Trumbull. 5c.

TOKOLOGY. A book for every woman. By Alice B. Stockham, M. D. Illustrated. Tokology teaches possible painless pregnancy and parturition, giving full, plain directions for the care of a woman before and after confinement. The ailments of pregnancy can be prevented as well as the pains and dangers of childbirth avoided and women need not go down to death giving birth to children. English, German or Swedish." $2.25.

WHAT IS PROPERTY? An Inquiry into the Principle of Right and of Government. P. J. Proudhon. Translated by B. R. Tucker. 500 pages. Cloth. (Slightly shelf-worn.) Reduced to $1.

TRAVELS IN FAITH. By Capt. Robert C. Adams. His mental experience from superstition to rationalism. Cloth, 75c; paper, 25c.

VACCINATION A GIGANTIC CRIME. Samuel Darling. 15c.

VINDICATION OF THOMAS PAINE. Col. R. G. Ingersoll. Dealing with all the slanders brought against the name and fame of Paine. A little pamphlet which every admirer of Thomas Paine should have by him for reference. Paper, 15c.

VITAL FORCE. Magnetic Exchange and Magnetation. Albert Chavannes. 25c.

WHAT THE YOUNG NEED TO KNOW; a Primer of Sexual Rationalism. Edwin C. Walker. "Let no cause to be ashamed of what makes us men, of what makes us women, of what gives us the kisses of lovers and the encircling arms of babes." Paper covers; 42 large pages. 10c.

WHAT IS RELIGION? Ingersoll's last public address, delivered at the meeting of the Free Religious Association in Boston on June 3, 1898. To which is appended the poem, "Declaration of the Free," the last verse written by the great Freethinker. 5c.

WHEN LOVE IS LIBERTY AND NATURE LAW. John Badcock, Jr. 10c.

WHY THE UNDERTONE? An open letter to Judge Gary. Sarah E. Ames. 10c.

WOMAN, CHURCH, AND STATE. Matilda Joslyn Gage. This is Mrs. Gage's last and crowning work. Every woman ought to read it. Every liberal woman and man will want it. A burning protest against the tremendous wrong done woman by the church, which controlled the state. It ought to be widely read for the good it will do. Cloth, $1.50; paper, 75c.

WOMAN: Four Centuries of Progress. Susan H. Wixon. 5c.

WOMAN IN THE PAST, PRESENT AND FUTURE. Woman was the first human being that tasted bondage. Woman was a slave before the slave existed. The basis of all oppression is economic dependence on the oppressor. This has been the condition of woman in the past and is so still. She is now a slave of the slave. This work is August Bebel's masterpiece. 8vo, 378 pages. 25c.

Address M. Harman, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

Price 2 Cents.

LUCIFER.

THE LIGHT-BEARER.

THIRD SERIES, VOL. VI., No. 7. CHICAGO, ILLINOIS, FEB. 27, E. M. 302. [C. E. 1902.] WHOLE No. 906

THE ANTIQUITY OF FREEDOM.

My thoughts go up the long, dim paths of years,
Back to the earliest days of liberty.
Oh Freedom, thou art not, as poets dream,
A fair young girl, with light and delicate limbs,
And wavy tresses, gushing from the cap
With which the Roman master crowned his slave
When he took off the gyves. A bearded man,
Armed to the teeth, art thou; one mailed hand
Grasps the broad shield, and one the sword; thy brow,
Glorious in beauty though it be, is scarred
With tokens of old wars; thy massive limbs
Are strong with struggling.
Power at thee has launched his bolts,
And with his lightnings smitten thee;
They could not quench the life thou hast from heaven.
Merciless power has dug thy dungeon deep,
And his swart armorers, by a thousand fires,
Have forged thy chain; yet while he deems thee bound,
The links are shivered, and the prison walls
Fall outward; terribly thou springest forth,
As springs the flame above the burning pile,
And shoutest to the nations, who return
Thy shoutings, while the pale oppressor flies.
Thy birthright was not given by human hands;
Thou wert twin-born with man. In pleasant fields,
While yet our race was few, thou sat'st with him,
To tend his quiet flock, and watch the stars,
And teach the reed to utter simple airs.
Thou by his side, amid the tangled wood,
Didst war upon the panther and the wolf,
His only foes; and thou with him didst draw
The earliest furrows on the mountainside
Soft with the deluge.

Tyranny himself,
Thy enemy, although of reverend look,
Hoary with many years, and far obeyed,
Is later born than thou; and as he meets
The grave defiance of thine elder eye,
The usurper trembles in his fastnesses.
Thou shalt wax stronger with the lapse of years,
But he shall fade into a feeble age;
Feebler, yet subtler. He shall weave his snares,
And spring them on thy careless steps, and clap
His withered hands, and from their ambush call
His hordes to fall upon thee.

—William Cullen Bryant.

Cause and Cure.

In a hospital I knew a soldier who had a wound in his leg. That wound healed and the man seemed cured, but soon another wound appeared a little lower, a similar wound on the same leg. This wound was also cured, but a third wound came still lower on the same bone, on the same leg. Then this wound was cured, and the man seemed to recover again, but another wound came still lower on the same bone, on the same leg. Then the doctors and surgeons held a consultation and agreed that no common means of curing would be sufficient. They must have a radical, a capital operation, after which the man recovered.

Now, listen! An emperor is killed. Oh, how bad! How wrong! What confusion it brought! But there were some reasons for this killing. It was removing the head of a monarchy that was sometimes tyrannical and cruel. But then the man was caught and ordered shot. That is right. That is good. He must be prevented from killing another emperor.

Then things seemed to be quiet. Order and confidence were restored. But after a short time a king is killed, a good king, a king who was kind to his subjects, beloved. Well, this man was taken. He was not killed, but he was shut up in a cage, where he was to have no intercourse with his kind for his whole life. That is good. That is right. He must be prevented from killing some other king.

Again all is quiet. Again there is confidence. But, lo, an empress is killed! Now an empress. Oh, that is too bad! A woman, and a very charming woman. She was not responsible for the deeds of her husband. She was not in public life. She was a very good woman. What is the matter? The man is caught again. He also was shut up. He was not allowed to speak to any man, see anybody. He was put in a cage. That is right. That is fine. He must understand that to kill an empress is not a proper thing. He must be prevented from doing similar wrong.

Well, again quiet for a certain time. But, lo, a president is killed! A president! Oh, oh, that is too bad! There must be some excuse for killing emperors and kings, but to kill a president in a free country, the choice of the people. Oh, that is very foolish. What of this murderer? Why he must be killed twice. A special law must be enacted. This thing must be stopped. But what is the matter?

It is evident that society is sick. It is suffering from a very severe wound, and the killing now and then of an emperor and a king cannot cure it. But it is well to understand; we must realize that the revolver which killed President McKinley was the same revolver which killed the Russian Emperor, the King of Italy, and the Empress of Austria, and that this revolver was the revolver of poverty, of misery of despair.

How cure such sickness? There is need of radical treatment. The money, millions and millions, and more millions, which is spent in taking life in different wars, must be applied to the curing of society. We must make war against war, seek to save life and not to destroy it.—Verestchagin.

Comrade E. C. Walker ought to be dead. I do not say this from any unkind feeling toward Comrade Walker. Far from it. But I have noticed that a man is appreciated after death, and certainly this man is not sufficiently appreciated while alive. We have, I think, no liberal in the United States, or in the world, more worthy of the name, more logical, unselfish and sincere. I write this after laying down his clear, vigorous, temperate, yet radical and altogether to-be-commended pamphlet, "Vice: Its Friends and its Foes." Read it, Free Comrades, if you would understand the true causes of and remedies for prostitution, and the folly and futility of political vice-reform.—The Free Comrade.

Comstock versus Craddock.

History seems to be about to repeat itself by adding one to the long list of crucified saviors. The victim of coming events has all the marks of a "self-anointed" or "divinely-appointed one." She has been led by the spirit up into a high place and told that all the world is hers—to reform. She has earnestly, diligently, unswervingly, yet quietly and unobtrusively, gone about her business. She has forsaken relatives for the sake of her mission, and been forsaken by friends because of it. She has traveled far without scrip or purse and not always been sure of a place to lay her head or a cornfield to pluck from. She has pleaded to a wicked and perverse generation in many of the Sodoms and Gomorrahs of to-day, and been several times requested to move on by courts that dared not face her as accuser. Now she comes to this Holy City of New York, whose purity is preserved by the agents of the societies for maintenance of ignorance, darkness, disease and death, except in the matter of red-lights and cadets. The Reverend Parkhurst made an ineffectual raid on the former and backed down, because there seemed to be a settled conviction that such places must, like poverty, always exist in a great city of multiplex wants. It appears to be the Low-cal option to permit a continuance of some necessary evils including Sunday saloons and red-light resorts, so long as the approach be by a side or back door, and the outer lights be not lit. Over a hundred years ago Judge Jeffries convicted and hanged three young men for high treason because they went about instituting a reform by pulling down some houses of ill-fame (which were then, as now, of course, a source of revenue for the king's officials). Now a woman comes forward to institute a reform in the morals and manners of men, and there is no place for her. It is a felony, says the tyrant accuser, and she must be suppressed.

The accusation is an old one—endangering the morals of youth. For this Socrates was forced to drink himself to death with hemlock. For this the priestess of better marital manners must be crushed, lest the young men of Gotham be harmed by her gospel, as though there could be any within her reach that could be hurt by her teaching. The absurdity of it! Her mission has been mainly among adults, and it is simply not a supposable case that she could impair their morals or impress any influence on them other than one to their advantage. She has worked so quietly and inoffensively that there was no occasion for complaint or interference, and even the most conservative opponents who may hold that "no good can be accomplished" thereby must lay the blame of public scandal to the agent who has so needlessly dragged her into the glaring light of a public court.

If the public and the "reformers" in city government can afford to ignore ineradicable social evils, they may with more wisdom be blind to feeble and harmless efforts for the enlightenment of "men about town." When such are "out for fun," in search of a new sensation, and discover "a religious fanatic" with a new-fangled gospel of self control and reverence for higher ideals, what need to interfere on the ground of "prevention of vice." That is what she is doing, if anything. There is an old story of how the light came into darkness and the darkness comprehended it not. That is the fact of this case to-day. The need of enlightenment is often expressed, but the workers in the field are few, because the road is made so hard for them. Dr. Weir Mitchell, well known as an expert nervous specialist and entertaining writer, has said that much could be done for the betterment of women by educating them as to common causes of their undoing, but that he had not the courage to write what he knew and what they needed. Many other men of great experience have expressed themselves similarly. Even rarely will one who cares not to undertake the task himself, lend his name to the person who will. Here is what Dr. Byron Robinson of Chicago, a man of the best social and professional standing, was willing to say for one of Mrs. Craddock's pamphlets:

"I have carefully read your little book. You have written an interesting and valuable pamphlet. I approve of the methods of teaching. It will do good work if placed in the hands of the young, so that they may be instructed in sexual matters, as forewarned is forearmed. Knowledge injures no one. The young woman is the subject who especially requires sexual instruction, whereas in the present state of society, she receives almost none. I hope that sooner or later sexual instruction for the young will be more general." Several in this city would say the same if they dared let their voices be heard in the face of the frowns of Mother Grundy. Many are ready to say that there is work to be done, but they are not entirely in sympathy with Mrs. Craddock's views or methods, and hence they are not willing to stand for even the qualified approval of saying she ought not to be suppressed. They are only willing to stand for the rights of free press when the preachment is just what they think. They are willing to let anything be suppressed that does not fit their notions of what is right.

Among the delusions entertained by this new enthusiast is the notion that she has the right to speak, teach, and print her ideas of reform—"under constitutional guarantees." She has not yet learned that the constitution is a "back number," that the ink is faded, the spirit and purpose forgotten; that this great and free country now has "subjects," and is run by bosses for trusts and combinations. She is learning a costly lesson in acting as though she had rights under the constitution which courts will maintain. What trust, social or constitutional, stands by her? When Samuel Colgate was president of the Comstock Society he was quietly notified by the United States District Attorney to discontinue mailing a pamphlet to advertise vaseline as a preventive of conception. He was not arrested and given a cell in Ludlow jail, as was this lady of higher purpose. Let the women who stand for their rights demand notice before arrest in such cases, with opportunity to choose to desist if they can be shown to be transgressing the law.

As to my standing in the case, I wish to say that I advised Mrs. Craddock long ago to desist, on the ground that the work was too great for one woman without backing; that she was casting pearls before swine, and they would turn and rend her. The world is not yet entirely reconciled to hear women talk religion from pulpits or politics from platforms, and the prejudice against her entering the field of remodeling the marital manners of men is simply insuperable; like the infinity of space, beyond powers of comprehension. The "common folk," physicians, and even noted clergymen have asked me for literature for the newly married as plain, decent, and useful as Mrs. Craddock's efforts, and I have been obliged to confess that here is a long-felt want I dared not supply. The "salt of the earth," the few who would appreciate and accept, are too few and too timid in times of storm and stress, while the swine who would trample down the giver of "words in pearl" are too many. My father paid dearly for one experience, when a medical tract that had elements of infinite utility was suppressed by ignoramuses who "know not what they do." Sexual education, scientifically studied and plainly presented, must come eventually, but "woe to them" who have not the wisdom to keep but little in advance of public opinion. It appears to be the folly as well as fate of mankind to progress through martyrdoms, but while I have not the personal courage or "stuff in me" to push progress as a martyr I have the ability to sense a high-minded, self-sacrificing purpose and personality, and enough courage to say that my sympathies are with the felon who goes about instituting a reform by any effort for the betterment of existing social evils in and out of marriage.

While I am not able to say that everything that Mrs. Craddock says or does is all right, I do say that official or other interference is all wrong, entirely unnecessary, and of no advantage to public or private morals. Those who cannot lend her a hand should at least throw no stones, and if there be any who yet have a lingering love for the spirit of the fathers, for free press and fair play, they can send their substantial sympathy for Mrs. Craddock and her defense to,

E. B. Foote, Jr., M. D.
120 Lexington Ave., New York.

The Coming Sexualism.

The type of men that I conceive emerging in the coming years will deal simply and logically not only with the business of death but with birth. At present the sexual morality of the civilized world is the most illogical and incoherent system of wild permission and insane prohibition, foolish tolerance and ruthless cruelty, that it is possible to imagine. Our current civilization is a sexual lunatic. And it has lost its reason in the difficulties that have stood in the way, and do still, in diminishing degrees, stand in the way of any sane discussion of the matter as a whole. To approach it is to approach excitement.

So few people seem to be living happy and healthy sexual lives that to mention the very word sexual is to set them stirring, to brighten the eye, lower the voice, and blanch or flush the cheek with a flavor of guilt. We are all, as it were, keeping our secrets and hiding our shame. And thus it is that some late fiction pressing upon the problems of women as wives and mothers has roused all sorts of respectable people to a quite insane vehemence of condemnation. Now, there are excellent reasons for the preservation of decency and for an even more stringent suppression of matter merely intended to excite than at present prevails, and the chief of these reasons lies in preserving the young from a premature awakening, and in the interest of civilization lengthening the period of growth and preparation as much as possible. But purity and innocence may be prolonged too late; innocence is really no more becoming to adults than would be a baby rattle, and the bashfulness that hampers discussion and permits it only in a silly furtive way has its ugly consequences in shameless cruelties and miserable households and pitiful crisises, and in the production of countless needless unhappy lives.

Indeed, we often may indulge in decency so far as to make it stimulating and suggestive in a non-natural way; we invest the plain business of reproduction with a mystic religious quality far more unwholesome than a savage nakedness possibly could be. In our bashfulness about these things we talk an abominable lot of nonsense. The essential aspect of all this wild and windy business of the sexual relations is after all births. And upon this plain fact the people of the emergent new republic will unhesitatingly go. St. Paul has told us that it is better to marry than to burn, but to beget children on that account will appear, I think, to these coming men as an absolutely loathsome proceeding. They will stifle no spread of knowledge that will diminish the swarming misery of childhood in poverty, and they will regard the disinclination of the witless "society" woman to become a mother as a most admirable trait in her folly.

Most of the undesirable types in civilization would die out now if they could only be encouraged a little. They multiply in sheer ignorance, but do not desire to multiply, and they can easily be made to dread it. I believe the men of the new republic will deliberately shape their public policy along this line. The development of science has lifted famine and pestilence from the shoulders of men, and it will yet lift men from cruel horrible reproduction. No doubt sentimentalists and moralists trained in the old school will find this a dreadful suggestion.

All our philanthropists, all our religious teachers, seem to be in a sort of informal conspiracy to preserve an atmosphere of mystical ignorance about these matters, which, in view of the irresistible nature of the sexual impulse, results in a swelling tide of miserable little lives. Consider what it will mean to have perhaps half of the population of the world in every generation restrained from or tempted to avoid reproduction. I believe in the future it will be planned and achieved.—H. G. Wells in "North American Review."

The Chicago Society of Anthropology meets every Sunday at 3:30 P. M., at Hall 913 Masonic Temple. Seats and discussions free. Subject for March 2 will be An Inquiry into the Basis of Society, by Rev. E. J. Gleason S. J., of St. Ignatius College.

The Church of This World.

BY MYRA PEPPER.

I think the readers of Lucifer will be interested to know of the movement to extend the teachings of free thought, that is now in progress in Kansas City.

The trustees of the "Church of This World," of which Dr. J. E. Roberts is pastor, have planned to expand the local church so that agnostics all over the world may be included in its membership. Kansas City is to be the center of agnosticism, with Dr. Roberts as the leader.

It is intended to send Dr. Roberts to every part of the United States to deliver lectures and organize churches.

An assistant will be appointed to occupy the platform in the Auditorium while the doctor is away. Dr. Roberts is a worthy sucessor of Robert G. Ingersoll and several thousand people in this city are attendants on his weekly addresses.

As a champion of free-speech, free-press, the largest liberty of thought and action Dr. Roberts has no superior.

Personally, he is an attractive, magnetic man, and his numerous friends are pleased to know that his field of work is to be enlarged.

Dr. Roberts is aided in his work by his wife, who is a most charming and talented lady. She filled his engagements on the rostrum during an absence of some weeks, and won the unqualified approval and the well-merited praise of the audiences.

Mrs. Roberts is the granddaughter of our loyal fellow-worker, Abner J. Pope, of Home Washington.

Letters have come from all parts of the United States since the announcement was made to organize.

The orthodox churches seem to be very much afraid of Dr. Roberts' teaching, and they say many things that show a rather unchristian spirit.

The members of the Church of This World may contribute if they feel like it, but if not, they are welcome to a free seat in a comfortable theater. They hear delightful music from Carl Baschs' orchestra, and a scholarly address from the doctor who teaches that truth, liberty, justice and love, are the cardinal points of civilization, and that our first and highest duty is to be intellectually honest with ourselves and just in dealing with our fellowmen.

Among the noticeable features of the audiences that attend, is the large number of elderly people always present, and also the increasing number of young people.

Strangers are surprised, too, to note that in this church the ladies remove their hats during the services.

The Church of This World is unique and is no doubt destined to become a world power.

There may arise many able and eloquent teachers in this work, men who will champion the cause of liberalism, but even as Ingersoll stood alone, so there will never be but one John Emerson Roberts.

Natural Sense of Justice.

I have lived with communities of savages in South America and in the East, who have no laws or law-courts but the public opinion of the village freely expressed. Each man scrupulously respects the rights of his fellow, and any infraction of those rights rarely or never takes place. In such a community all are nearly equal. There are none of those wide distinctions of education and ignorance, wealth and poverty, master and servant which are the product of our civilization. There is none of that wide-spread division of labor, which while it increases wealth, produces also conflicting interests. There is not that severe competition and struggle for existence or for wealth which the dense population of civilized countries inevitably creates. All incitements to great crimes are thus wanting, and petty ones are suppressed partly by the influence of public opinion, but chiefly by that natural sense of justice and his neighbor's right which seem to be in some degree inherent in every race of men. —Alfred Russell Wallace, "Malay Archipelago," (1869) II. p. 406, Chap. XI.

Lucifer, the Lightbearer

M. HARMAN, EDITOR AND PUBLISHER.

PUBLISHED EVERY WEEK AT 500 FULTON STREET, CHICAGO, ILL.

Terms: One year, $1; six months, 50 cents; three months, 25 cents.

Entered at the Chicago Postoffice as Second-Class Mail Matter.

Eastern Representative, E. C. Walker, 244 W. 143d street, New York.

906.

If these figures correspond with the number printed on the wrapper of your Lucifer, your subscription expires with this number.

If a copy of Lucifer fails to reach you, please order by number or date.

Lucifer will not be sent "by return mail" unless stamps for postage are enclosed with order.

TO NEW SUBSCRIBERS: Your subscription is paid to No. If you have not ordered Lucifer, a friend has subscribed for you. If you do not wish to receive it, please notify us by card or through your postmaster. If you wish to become a regular subscriber you will confer a favor by renewing before the expiration of your trial subscription.

Theism versus Atheism.

In last Lucifer the longest article was devoted to "A Study of Rights"—human rights, natural rights, rights of the State, etc.—closing in these words: "I believe the priests of State and Church—as a class—to be the greatest of all enemies to human rights, and therefore the greatest enemies to human progress and happiness."

In confirmation of this somewhat sweeping statement an instance, the main facts of which were known to the writer of these lines, is herewith given:

In ante-bellum times, in Washington County, Missouri, a case of unusual importance was on trial in court. The property and the good name of a prominent citizen, named Matthews, were in legal peril. The fate of these depended, apparently, on the testimony of one witness. When the name of that witness was called the plaintiff's counsel objected, and when asked his reason the lawyer said:

"Call William Lunsford."

On being interrogated Lunsford testified under oath that he once heard defendant's witness say that "he did not believe in life after death of the body; he believed that man shares the fate of extinction with his kindred, the brute beasts," or words to that effect.

The lawyer then read the clause in the "Statutes of Missouri," denying to atheists the right to testify as witnesses in court.

The defendant's witness raised his hand and began to speak, evidently desiring to make some sort of explanation in regard to his religious belief but was peremptorily ordered to keep silent.

"Shut up! Not one word"—thundered the plaintiff's attorney.

For lack of this one witness the defendant lost his case, involving, as it did, a large property in land and chattels, as well as his good name—"better than riches"—which up to this time had been unimpeached.

At that time the same discrimination was made in most States of the American Union, against unbelievers in Christian dogmas, showing that the priests of "law and of gospel" were united in robbing their fellow citizens of a most important human right, the right to give testimony on oath—or affirmation—in matters of greatest moment to themselves and their neighbors. In how many States of this falsely called Republic these mediæval laws still exist I know not, but have good reason to know that the alliance between church and state is scarcely less omnipresent and powerful in this country today than it was half a century ago.

* * *

Even as I write these lines my attention is called to an article in the "Topeka (Kan.) Journal," dated February 19, containing a detailed account of the denial of school privileges to pupils who decline to participate in the religious exercises now made compulsory in all the public schools of that city. The article opens thus:

"J. B. Billard filed suit against the board of education of Topeka in the district court this afternoon as a result of the controversy between the board and Mr. Billard over the suspension of his son, Philip Billard, for refusing to take part in the religious exercises at the opening of school. On January 9 Philip Billard was suspended from Quincy school, in North Topeka, by Principal Wright, for refusing to take part in the religious exercises at the opening of school, which has been made compulsory by the board of education as a result of a petition presented the board by the Ministerial Union asking that the Lord's prayer be repeated and passages from the Bible read at the opening exercises of every public school each day."

Having known Mr. Billard for many years I can testify that the stand he takes in this matter is not for the sake of notoriety, but because of life-long conviction. Though very pronounced and consistent in his opinions he is by no means obtrusive in their expression; a man of large business affairs he has neither time nor inclination to meddle with what does not properly concern him. A man who has the confidence and respect of the whole community in which he lives, as witness their unsought bestowal upon him of many offices of trust and responsibility, including the mayoralty of the city in which he lives. By heredity a foe to religious bigotry and intolerance, descended from a noted family of French Huguenots—his own father dying in exile because of political heresies—it is fortunate that Mr. Billard has ample means to fight the battle to a finish, for liberty and citizen rights against the Kansas priests of church and state.

* * *

Since the dawn of human history, and doubtless also in prehistoric times, a conflict between theism and atheism has been raging. More correctly speaking, perhaps, it should be said that theists have ever persecuted non-theists, commonly called atheists, because of their non-belief in a god or in a plurality of gods, while atheists as such have scarcely ever been known to persecute for opinion's sake. Not only have atheists been subjected to perpetual persecution on account of their lack of faith in gods or the so-called supernatural, but theists, with scarcely less persistency and malignity, have persecuted, tortured, robbed, imprisoned and murdered each other.

"Nothing ever hated like religion," said a distinguished writer in the "Arena," a few years ago, and the history of religious wars, religious massacres, inquisitions, etc., etc., fully bears out the statement. The more of "godliness," of god-worship, that is, the more of theism, there is in any form of religion the more inclined to bigotry, intolerance and persecution. The Buddhistic religion has very little of theism—godism—in its make-up, and though it has far more believers than any other religious cult, it has never been known to persecute for opinion's sake.

* * *

THE ATHEISM OF ANARCHY.

One of the most common and most effective of the charges against the people called Anarchists is that they are all atheists. Reverend Heber Newton in his "Arena" article for February from which quotations have been made in late numbers of Lucifer, makes this charge with great particularity of detail, beginning with these words:

"Below the economic causes of Anarchism lie the religious causes, or, more strictly speaking, the irreligious causes of Anarchism. . . . . Anarchism believes in no God whatever. It rejects any supernatural government of the world. . . . . It recognizes no Father of man's spirit. . . . . It is the loss of all faith, and therefore the paralysis of all hope. Hence its wild despair, its mad revolt. . . . Alas, that in the midst of Christendom this new anti-christ should lift its horrific head!"

Looking for causes of this new, this "horrific head of anti-christ" our high priest of theism, Rev. Dr. Newton, does not hesitate to fix the blame directly upon the Church itself:

The atheism of Anarchy is due directly to the atheism of religion. The Church has throned above the universe a divine devil; a being so monstrously unjust and cruel, so diabolically inhuman, that it were better far to have no God at all. Anarchism has accepted the Church's picture of God, and then frankly and flatly turned this God out of the universe. One of the leading Anarchists speaks of God as the "universal tyrant." It is the Church which taught him thus to see throned upon the universe a more despotic Czar. The Church can best end this atheism by once more causing man to see the loving God, the God of infinite goodness, the Father of Jesus Christ. It ought to be evident now to the blindest that the old theology is the mother of the new atheism, and that the hope of social salvation lies in the spread of the New Thought, called by some "heresy."

Is not this another way of saying that theism is the cause of atheism? and that if we would destroy atheism as a religious cult we must first destroy its parent—theism? And if there is to be a new theism, a new Church founded on the New Thought, the "Higher Criticism," may there not arise contemporaneously, a new atheism, founded on the newer interpretation of nature? an interpretation that includes the PSYCHIC as well as what is commonly called the MATERIALISTIC?

M. HARMAN.

Personal-Rights and Collective Property.

EDITOR LUCIFER:—I am surprised that you assume to define a doctrine regardless of the utterances of believers of that doctrine. There is no clue to what any man or set of men believe except their own declarations. It is not sufficient that you let your definitions go for what they are worth. You have no ethical right to invent definitions for beliefs.

For Anarchism you search the dictionary and the Greek language for support. Why not be equally fair toward other doctrines?

You find that the real "disease that afflicts the people of this country" is "archism," or "government of man by his fellowman without the consent of the governed." Please give an instance of some one or class in the United States who are governed without their consent, and show that all their ills result from this fact. Are the 7,000,000 voters for McKinley ruled by the policy of imperialism without their consent? and do not they suffer the same ills as those who voted otherwise? I do not say that you will find no such person; but I do think you will discover that CONSENT to monopoly and privilege does not mitigate the effects of these evils; also that almost the whole people consent to and even advocate them. Suppose not even a minority objects to the tariff; still the robbery of the tariff would strip our backs and starve us just the same. A medicine will produce its usual effect regardless of the willingness of the patient to take it.

You believe Anarchists repudiate majority rule, and advocate "simply self-government, self-control, by equal citizens who attend to their own business and expect all others to do the same." No Socialist will object to this. What he dissents from is the proposition that this sphere of personal business is sufficient for all the affairs of society, and I have noticed that Anarchists try to avoid the subject of social wealth,—that wealth which must be collective in its use, and hence should be in its ownership. They prefer to enlarge upon their rights to purely personal actions, and then imagine they have vanquished the Socialist.

The article "What is Anarchism?" by S. T. Byington, lately printed by you, is more puzzling than instructive. He tells us that Anarchism is the doctrine that government (in the political sense) ought to be abolished, that is, when the millennium arrives. He says: "What Anarchists regard as the essential and objectionable principle of government is the use of force to prevent a man from doing as he pleases," yet his plan for resisting "crime" (a term which means violation of law of some sort) is the "ordinary machinery of police, courts and jails." "Thus the triumph of Anarchism would not prevent the continuance of police and jails, and such continuance is to be expected."

As Mr. Hugh Pentecost once said, "If I had a marble statue that could not see the fun in that, I would break it all up." Abolish government, of course law along with it, then arm men as police to "defend" society without any rule to define either invasion or defense, using force to put men in jails who have, in their own opinion perhaps, committed no "crime" for there is nothing to define crime. (In connection with subjects of law and government, the Anarchist should not ignore the primary meaning of this word "crime," i.e. violation of law, and infer only its secondary or colloquial meaning, i.e. violation of an undefined moral code.) Mr. Byington, like the rest, avoids the subject of collective capital and its management. Note the following account of an Anarchist which Mr. Byington would probably disown:

"Paterson, N. J., Jan. 28.—Hugo Mohr, a self-confessed Anarchist, who was only yesterday released from jail, where he had been committed for wife-beating, started in to abuse his family today. The neighbors sent for the police. Before they arrived Mohr went to his room and, turning on the gas, put one end of the tube in his mouth. When the police arrived he was dead. Mohr was the most rabid Anarchist of the Paterson group. For eleven months he made his wife and daughter work, took their earnings and gave them to Herr Most, when the latter was in trouble."

C. F. H.

REPLY.

First. The charge that I "define a doctrine regardless of the utterances of believers in that doctrine" is certainly not correct. Claiming to be a Socialist—a Socialist in the broadly ethical sense, it is my natural, my inalienable right to define the word for myself! I certainly do not claim the right to define it for any one else.

Second. I have frequently stated the origin of the word "socialism." It is from the Latin socius, "a companion."

Third. There is probably no man or woman in the United States that is not governed against his or her consent, in some particular. If C. F. H. is a taxpayer he doubtless pays some part of his taxes under protest. Very few Archists want artificial government for themselves, and the only reason they have for submitting to such government is that they expect thereby to have a hand in governing "the other fellow."

Fourth. While it is doubtless true that a part of the seven millions who voted for McKinley approve of his imperialistic policy, it is a reasonably sure thing that not all do so, or did so. Some of these millions voted the Republican ticket because they were in favor of high tariff—tariff on some things, but all these were opposed to it on other articles; some things they prefer to be on the free list. Many voted for McKinley because they were opposed to "free silver;" some for one reason and some for another, and some doubtless for no other reason than that they called themselves "Republicans." It is one of the fatal vices of our voting system that the people are not allowed to express their wishes on a single line of public policy—as is well shown in the following paragraph taken from an Indianapolis paper:

This is about the best form of government on earth, take it all in all, but sometimes when one thinks what a free hand the imperialists have wielded during the last few years one cannot but wish that our government had the English feature of deciding questions whereby a ministry may be compelled to resign and take its case before the country. The people of this country have not had a fair chance at the imperialistic policy and by the time they do get a chance the strenuous leaders may have things so fixed that a straight vote on the question may be impossible.

But whether the majority of voters in the United States are now in favor of the imperialistic policy of McKinley and Roosevelt, is of much less importance than is the question, What do the Filipinos, the Cubans, the Porto Ricens, et al., want, for themselves?

Fifth. Yes, it is quite true that "consent," or lack of consent, does not prevent the evil effects of monopoly, but always the victim lays the blame on that part of monopolistic legislation that he himself does not approve—instead of frankly admitting that the whole system is vicious and should be abolished.

Sixth. As to "collective wealth:" I have not assumed to speak for Anarchists on this question, for the simple reason that Anarchists are not agreed among themselves on that question. They all believe in self-government, however, and there is nothing in autarchy that would prevent combination of interests—the "Co-operative Commonwealth," so long as based upon the principle of Voluntaryism. To illustrate:

I lived many years in a community in which there was very little compulsory government, because there was very little need thereof. Public sentiment stood in place of statute law. There was much common property—collective wealth, and comparatively little strife in regard thereto, such as fish, game, timber and pasture land. Every man kept up his own fences and when his neighbor's cattle destroyed his crops the damage was settled by arbitration, and he that would not submit to arbitration was reckoned as a bad citizen, and punished by the boycott. The nearest post-office was fifteen miles from the little settlement. An arrangement that worked well, was that each house-holder in turn would bring the mail once a week, for all who joined the group. Those who did not want to join could bring their own mail or go without.

Since that time our invasive general government has given to a favored few the power to own and control that which in the nature of things belongs equally to all, including land, mines, right of way in transportation, the right to issue "currency," etc., etc., so that now the greatest of all problems for Socialists as well as Anarchists—Autarchists—is, how to reclaim our lost inheritance without resort to violence; how to reclaim our rightful share in nature's wealth; also our "inalienable" right to do as we please with our own, so long as we do not invade the equal right of our neighbor to do as he pleases with himself and his personal belongings.

Seventh. A note of inquiry addressed to Mr. Byington would probably bring an explanation of what seems so "puzzling" to C. F. H. Meantime I recommend to the careful consideration of our correspondent the observations of Prof. Alfred Russell Wallace, as reproduced in this issue, under the head, "Natural Sense of Justice," and would simply add that the chief reason why the natural sense of justice is so weak in so-called civilized communities as compared to what it is among so-called savage peoples, is that government—Archism—destroys the natural sense of justice, prenatally—through unwelcome, invaded and debased motherhood—and by the example itself sets for its subjects. The subject sees the ruler rob and murder by wholesale; is it strange that the subject should do a little retail robbing and murdering, whenever the opportunity offers of doing so with safety to himself?

Read also the book, "Century of Dishonor," by Helen Hunt, showing the incomparably better moral record of anarchistic "savages" as compared with that of their civilized and "Christian" conquerors and would-be teachers.

* * *

The newspaper clipping with which C. F. H. closes his article deserves no reply whatever. First because it lacks authenticity. It has been proved so often that the popular Archistic journals cannot or will not tell the truth about Anarchists, especially of the Herr Most type—see article on first page of Lucifer No. 895, by F. W. Mitchell, entitled "A Glance Behind the Scenes"—that no notice should be taken of such sensational reports. Second, because if true, the man Mohr showed himself an Archist, not an Anarchist, by compelling his wife and daughter to work and then taking away from them their earnings. Such conduct is strictly lawful in most States of the American Union, also the beating, provided the husband and father did not use a rod larger in diameter than "his thumb."

Friend C. F. H. should study the etymologic meanings of words, and also the definitions of Anarchism as given by educated and well-behaved members of that cult.

M. HARMAN.

Notice to Correspondents.

Having for many months taken an unduly large share of Lucifer's limited space—mainly in definitions and discussions regarding basic principles of ethics, and especially in defense of the much threatened and much invaded freedom of speech and of press, Lucifer's editor now purposes to let others have the floor for a time, and to say comparatively little himself through the paper, in order that he may have the time and freedom from care that he finds absolutely necessary to finishing and putting to press his long deferred and long promised autobiography.

No change in the general management of the paper, or in the business department of the office, is contemplated but simply to let our correspondents know that the editor must be excused from answering questions of a controversial nature, such as has been his wont to give attention to.

The revision of contributed matter, also the decision as to its eligibility for insertion in the paper, will devolve mainly upon Lillian Harman—together with the details of the publishing department—until the book is ready for delivery to subscribers.

Once more thanking all friends and helpers for their constant, efficient and fraternal support and co-operation, and soliciting a continuance of the same—especially thanking all who have waited long and patiently for the appearance of the book paid for in advance of publication, I remain gratefully and fraternally,

M. HARMAN.

VARIOUS VOICES.

S. R. B., West Chester, Pa.:—Dr. Foote has done a noble work in adding to his great Cyclopedia; and your idea of introducing it with Lucifer is bright. Do continue it until every family in the land has both!

Mrs. W. E. T., Delaware, Ohio:—I inclose $1.18 for which please send Dr. Foote's "Home Cyclopedia" to my address. My subscription is paid a year in advance, and I intend it to be always so. I think Lucifer one of the best papers for women to read and would miss it very much if it failed to reach us each week.

J. W. W., Paris, Idaho:—I can readily comprehend the evils of imaginary laws from imaginary worlds. But how we can get along in a mixed community or even in the family without law or some regulation (better I admit, when mutually agreeable,) is a condition I confess I cannot realize. Maybe the literature in inclosed list may inform me. I inclose $1 for which you may forward it to me and send Lucifer for three months.

Mary M. Clark, Albia, Iowa:—Find inclosed $1 to apply on subscription to Lucifer and $1.18 for copy of Dr. Foote's Home Cyclopedia. I can do but little now for our good work, but I feel such an interest in the doings of others. Little Lucifer will always be my companion. I am proud of the Pre s-Writers. I will join them as soon as I dare tax my feeble strength with more work.

W. N. Slocum, 417 W. 4 St., Los Angeles, Cal.:—Inclosed I send a decision in suit for divorce, by reading which you will see that judicial "wisdom" is not confined to the region east of the Rockies.

The substance of the decision is that a woman who refuses to live with an idle, worthless husband, and after years of separation, sues for divorce because of his failure to provide, can not secure divorce on such ground if it is proven (as in this case) that she is able to earn her own living. If she as well as he had been idle, and she had suffered in consequence of such mutual idleness, her prayer would be granted, but being an industrious woman, she is not entitled to a divorce on the ground of his idleness.

This learned judge approves also the usual ruling of other wise judges that in cases where one party to the marriage contract desires a divorce on statutory grounds, and the facts are proved, divorce is granted; but if both desire separation, neither can get it. To a person who is blessed with common sense, instead of legal lore, it seems that when both parties to the marriage contract desire release, there is double reason why divorce should be granted, but the man who sits on the "bench" need not trouble himself about common sense unless he wishes to decide a case on its own merits, which judges seldom do. Their labor is confined to the letter of the law and the search for precedents; so when we consider the vast amount of poor material they have to draw upon, it is not a matter for wonder that they make so many absurd decisions.

AT HALF-PRICE

100 COPIES

OF

DR. FOOTE'S HOME CYCLOPEDIA.

While they last, a copy will be sent for only $1 to any subscriber to Lucifer whose subscription is paid one year in advance.

A FAMILY GUIDE-BOOK OF THE TWENTIETH CENTURY.

1248 PAGES. 500,000 WORDS. 400 PICTURES. 250 RECIPES.
80 CHROMOS ON 18 COLOR PLATES.

A few among the many subjects treated:

PART I.—Disease: Cause, Prevention, Cure.—Common Sense Remedies

PART II.—Chronic Diseases of the Breathing Organs.—Diseases of the Heart and Blood Vessels.—Diseases of Liver, Stomach, Bowels.—Chronic Affections of the Urinary Organs.—Private Words for Men and Women.—Hints to the Children."—Constitutional Diseases.—Affections of the Eyes and Ears.—The Treatment of Disease, Containing 200 Prescriptions for Common Ailments and Complete Table of Antidotes for Poisons.

PART III.—Plain Home Talks About the Sexual Organs.—The Natural Relation of the Sexes.—Civilization and Marriage.—History of Marriage.—Defects in Marriage Systems.—Social Immorality. (Part III. takes a view of marriage and the sexual relations from a physiological standpoint. It is searching, interesting, original, and startling.

PART IV.—Improving Monogamic Marriage.—Adaptation in Marriage.—Restricted Marriage and Parentage.—Three Phases of Monogamic Marriages.—Intermarria of Relatives.—Essays for Married People.—What Determines Sex.—Philosophy of Child-Marking.—Essays for the Future.

Is your subscription paid to No. 957? If so, the Home Cyclopedia will be sent to you for $1 net. Postage 18 cts.

DO YOU EVER THINK

Of the fate of the Prodigal Daughter? The Prodigal Son is forgiven and received with rejoicing—why should different treatment be accorded to his sister? For a vivid, true picture of the conditions in homes and factories which produce thousands of so-called fallen women every year, read "The Prodigal Daughter; or, The Price of Virtue," by Rachel Campbell.

SPECIAL OFFER.

This valuable work sent free on receipt of twenty-five cents for a thirteen week's trial subscription to Lucifer, the Light-Bearer. M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton Street, Chicago, Ill.

VICE: ITS FRIENDS AND ITS FOES

BY EDWIN C. WALKER.

CONTENTS:—Brotherhood of Man; The Recognition of Facts; Folly of "For Men Only," Definition of Vice; Horrors of Prostitution; Abnormal Sexuality; Errors of Fathers, Mothers and Teachers; Persecution Does Not Reform; Prostitution and the Crusaders; The "Spolling of the Heathen;" What are the Effects of Raids and Crusades? The Economic Side of the Problem; Party Politics in Vice Crusading; In What Does Prostitution Consist? Some Causes of Prostitution; Two Kinds of Prostitution Compared; The Opponents of Divorce; "Purifying" the Tenements; Action for Advanced Women.

WITH APPENDIX:—The Wanderings of a Spirit; Our Fair Civilization; The Folly and Cruelty of It All. Price 10c.

Address M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

SELF-HYPNOTIC HEALING—37,480 people to date of Jan. 1, 1903, professed curing themselves of such diseases as they had failed in with medicine. All accomplished through the teachings of my oriental system of Self-Hypnotic Control, which also develops the psychic powers of man, enabling him to control his dreams, read the minds of friends and enemies, visit unknown parts of the earth, solve hard problems in this trance and remember all when awake. Five complete trial lessons will be sent for only 10 cents, actually enabling the student to accomplish wonders without further charge. Prof. R. E. DUTTON, Ph. D., Lincoln, Neb., U. S. A.

Wanted:— Address of Ladies, untrammeled by religion or Mother Grundy, who will correspond with Gentlemen likewise untrammeled. Gentlemen must send ten cents silver and two cent stamp for List. Arthur C. Everett, N. M., San Diego, General Delivery, California.

RADICAL LITERATURE.

For Sale by M. Harman, 500 Fulton St., Chicago.

A CHAMBERMAID'S DIARY. By Octave Mirbeau. Translated from the French by Benj. R. Tucker. 400 pages. Handsomely bound in cloth. $1.50.

ADVANCEMENT OF SCIENCE. Prof. John Tyndall's famous Inaugural Address before the British Association for the Advancement of Science, with the articles on Prayer which so stirred the religious world. Cloth, 50c; paper, 25c.

AGE OF REASON (The). Presentation edition. Part I reprinted from the first English edition. Part II corrected by M. D. Conway's edition. With Paine's own account of his arrest in Paris. Photogravure portrait from the Romney painting exhibited in London. Containing also portrait from the Jarvis painting; from the Peale painting, known as the Bonneville portrait, representing Paine as a member of the French Assembly, and a half-tone of the Peale painting. Large half-tones of the house presented to Paine, in which he lived in New Rochelle, and of the monument and surroundings. Yorktown, Pa., scenes; also eight half-tone views of buildings, etc., associated with Paine's life in Paris, and other illustrations. With Preface, Chronological Table, Notes, Index, etc. Printed on antique wove paper, large octavo, wide margins, gilt edge. Special cover design in colors. The finest and most accurate of all editions. Boxed. Postpaid, $2.

AGE OF REASON. Thomas Paine. Cloth, with steel plate portrait, 75c; paper 25c.

ANARCHISM: Its Philosophy and Ideal. Peter Kropotkin. 5c.

A PHYSICIAN IN THE HOUSE. A New Family Medical Work, by Dr. J. H. Greer. This book is up-to-date in every particular. It will save you hundreds of dollars in doctors' bills. It tells you how to cure yourself by simple and harmless home remedies. It recommends no poisonous or dangerous drugs. It teaches how to save health and life by safe methods. It teaches prevention—that it is better to know how to live and avoid disease than to take any medicine as a cure. It is not an advertisement and has no medicine to sell. It has hundreds of excellent recipes for the cure of the various diseases. It has 16 colored plates showing different parts of the human body. The chapter on Painless Midwifery is worth its weight in gold to women. The "Care of Children" is something every mother ought to read. It teaches the value of Air, Sunshine, and Water as medicines. It contains valuable information for the married. This book cannot fail to please you. If you are looking for health by the safest and easiest means, do not delay getting it. It has eight hundred pages, is neatly bound in cloth, with gold letters, and will be sent by mail or express, prepaid to any address, for $1.75.

A PLEA FOR THE NEW WOMAN. May L. Collins. With large new half-tone portrait. 10c.

A TALE OF THE STRASSBURG GEESE. R. B. Kerr. Together with The Strike of the Strasburg Geese (C. W. Coolridge), A Traveler's Tale (R. B. Kerr), The Cat's Story (Emile Zola) 5c.

AUTONOMY, SELF-LAW. A fragmentary dissertation on the right to non-invasive self-hood. 5c.

A WEEK ON THE CONCORD AND MERRIMAC RIVERS. Henry D. Thoreau. 25c.

BALZAC'S SERAPHITA: The Mystery of Sex. Mary Hanford Ford. Cloth, $1.

BIBLE TEMPERANCE. E. C. Walker. Proving that Liquor Drinking is Commended, Defended and Enjoined by the Bible, and giving close reference to the chapters and verses. 10c.

BORNING BETTER BABIES—Through regulating reproduction by controlling conception. H. B. Foote, Jr., M. D. 25c.

CAUSES OF HARD TIMES, and the Money Question. Albert Chavannes. 5c.

CHICAGO CONFERENCE OF TRUSTS. Speeches, debates, etc.; 41 portraits of delegates, including Ben]. R. Tucker, Laurens Gronlund, William Jennings Bryan, Samuel Gompers, Louis F. Post, and George Schilling. 526 pages. 50c.

CHILDREN OF THE ITALIAN POOR. Paola Lombroso. 25c.

DARWIN'S, THE. (A novel.) Elmina D. Slenker. 50c.

DAWN OF CIVILIZATION, The; or, England in the Nineteenth Century. J. C. Spence. 176 pages. 25c.

DAWN: THOUGHT ON THE RECONCILIATION. By J. Wm. Lloyd. An inspired treatise that, with insight and solution, touches all the questions of life, love, soul and society. A prose-poem, simple enough for a child to enjoy, deep enough to make a philosopher think. The largest creed, the most generous theory, the gladdest gospel. A book of life. A religion of growth and the overlook—freedom and optimism. Read it. Printed in old style antique type, rubricated with portrait of the author. In three editions, de luxe, plain and paper bound. Prices, $1.25, $1.00 and 50c.

DIGGING FOR RED-ROCK. Camp-meeting talks and sketches by Moses Harman. 5c.

DR. FOOTE'S SOCIAL SCIENCE SERIES OF DIME PAMPHLETS—Wedlock; Scientific Marriage; Heredity; A B C of Temperaments; Powell and his Critics; Physiological Marriage; Physical Improvement of Humanity; Causes of Disease, Insanity, and Premature Death; A Step Backward. Any of the above books sent by mail on receipt of price.

DYNAMIC THEORY OF LIFE AND MIND. An attempt to show that all organic beings are both constructed and operated by the dynamic agencies of their respective environments. By James B. Alexander. Over 400 illustrations, 37 chapters, 1,067 pages and a 3-column index of 11 pages. Cloth, $3.75.

EAST TENNESSEE SKETCHES. A. and Cecile Chavannes. 25c.

ECONOMICS OF ANARCHY. A Study of the Industrial Type. Dyer D. Lum. 10c.

EIGHT-HOUR MOVEMENT. John P. Altgeld, ex-Governor of Illinois. 5c.

EVOLUTION AND REVOLUTION. Elisee Reclus. 5c.

FALSE CLAIMS OF THE CHURCH. John E. Remsburg. Analyzing and confuting the claims made by churchmen that the Christian religion has promoted morality, learning, temperance, science, freedom, and showing how she has opposed progress. Paper, 10c.

FIELDS, FACTORIES, AND WORKSHOPS; or, Industry Combined with Agriculture and Brain Work with Manual Work. Peter Kropotkin. 200 pages. 40c. Postage, 5c.

FREE PRESS. Arguments in support of demurrer to the indictment of M. Harman, E. C. Walker and Geo. Harman, under the Comstock law. O. C. Semens and David Overmyer. 20c.

GIORDANO BRUNO. His Life, Teachings, and Martyrdom. Burned for heresy in Rome, Feb. 17, 1600. 5c.

GOD AND THE STATE. Bakounine. 25c.

GOVERNMENT ANALYZED. A remarkable work by a remarkable man, Col. John R. Kelso, the history of whose life reads more like romance than reality. This book is the last of a series—Deity Analyzed, Bible Analyzed, Universe Analyzed. By the author's death this work was left unfinished, but was completed by his wife, Elita Dunbar Kelso. 518 pages; cloth. Price reduced from $1.50 to $1.

HILDA'S HOME. Rosa Graul. "An o'er true tale" of woman's wrongs and of one woman's struggles and final triumphs in her attempt to secure justice for herself and for her sisters. 426 pages. Cloth, $1; paper, 50c.

HUMAN RIGHTS. J. Madison Hook. 5c.

IMPORTANCE OF HONEST MONEY. A simple, scientific, invariable standard of price. James Adleman. 250 pages. Paper, 50c.

IN BRIGHTER CLIMES; or, Life in Socioland. Albert Chavannes. 25c.

INFIDEL DEATH-BEDS. "Idle Tales of Dying Horrors." G. W. Foote. Brief biographical sketches of 37 Freethinkers, including Bruno, Burkle, Byron, Comte, Darwin, George Eliot, Gibbon, Goethe, Hugo, Harriet Martineau, Mill, Paine, Madame Roland, George Sand, Shelley, Volney, and Voltaire. 25c.

IN HELL AND THE WAY OUT. A plan of Social Democracy outlined. Henry E. Allen. 10c.

INSTITUTIONAL MARRIAGE. From the viewpoint of an exiled Marxian. M. Harman. 5c.

JOHN'S WAY. A domestic radical story. Elmina D. Slenker. 25c.

KAREZZA. Ethics of Marriage. A bold, brave book, teaching ideal marriage, rights of the unborn child, a designed and controlled maternity. Sample pages free. $1.

KORADINE. A story for young and old. Extra levant cloth. $1.

LIBERTY IN LITERATURE. Testimonial to Walt Whitman. "Let us put wreaths on the brows of the living." An address delivered in Philadelphia, Oct. 31, 1890, with portrait of Whitman. Containing also Col. Ingersoll's address at the funeral of Walt Whitman, Mar. 30, 1892. Cloth, 50c; paper, 25c.

LIBERTY. Political, Religious, Social, and Moral. A. F. Tindall. 5c.

LITTLE LESSONS FOR LITTLE FOLKS. Elmina D. Slenker. Boards, 40c.

LIZZIE MELTON. A story of a self-reliant girl. By Albert Chavannes. With portrait of author. 25c.

LUCIFER. Third Series, Vol. III. (1889). Cloth, $1.25. Postage, 25c.

MAGNETATION, and Its Relation to Health and Character. Albert Chavannes. 25c.

MARRIAGE. An address by Dr. Juliet H. Severance. 5c.

MARRIAGE IN FREE SOCIETY. Edward Carpenter. A dainty little gift book. 25c.

MARTYRDOM OF MAN. Winwood Reade. This is a very interestingly pictured synopsis of universal history, showing what the race has undergone—its martyrdom—in its rise to its present plane. It shows how war and religion have been oppressive factors in man's struggle for liberty; and the last chapter, of some 150 pages, describes his intellectual struggle from the animal period of the earth to the present, adding an outline of what the author conceives would be a religion of reason and love. Winwood Reade's reputation as a writer of fine English, of deep study and careful reasoning, needs no word of praise. Cloth, $1.

MEN, WOMEN AND CHANCE. William Platt. Containing two tales: The Ascent to the Heights, and Blind Men and Seeing. Well printed on heavy paper and artistically bound in cloth. Gilt top, rough edges. 75c.

MEN, WOMEN, AND GODS. Helen H. Gardener. With preface by Col. R. G. Ingersoll. Contents: Introduction by Col. Ingersoll. Men, Women, and Gods. Vicarious Atonement. Historical Facts and Theological Fictions. Appendix. Address to the Clergy and Others. Letter to Cleveland Congress of Freethinkers. The only authorized and correct edition. Large 12mo, heavy-toned paper. Portrait. This volume is by far the best writing this famous author ever did. It is very fine. Cloth, $1; paper, 50c.

MISSING LINK IN MODERN SPIRITUALISM, THE. A Leah (Fox) Underhill. With portraits of the Fox Sisters and others. 478 pages. Cloth. Reduced to $1.

MORIBUND SOCIETY AND ANARCHY. Jean Grave. Cloth, 60c; paper, 25c.

MOTHERHOOD IN FREEDOM. M. Harman. 5c.

MUTUAL BANKING. A simple plan to abolish interest on money. William B. Greene. 10c.

NORA, A DOLL'S HOUSE, and GHOSTS. Ibsen. Cloth. 75c.

OUR WORSHIP OF PRIMITIVE SOCIAL GUESSES. E. C. Walker. Contents: Love and Law; The Moloch of the Monogamic Ideal; The Continuity of Race-Life, and Tyranny; Food and Sex Fallacies, a Criticism; When Men and Women Are and When They Are Not Varieties; The New Woman: What is she? What will she be? The State Hiding Behind Its Own Mistakes; Bishop Potter's Opinion of Divorce; Love: Its Attraction and Expression: Is She an Honest Girl? Lloyd, Platt, and the Pitiful Facts; Social Radicals and Parentage; Anthropology and Monogamy; Love and Trust Versus Fear; Reflections upon Reading William Platt's "Women, Love, and Life." 15c.

PERSONAL EXPERIENCES of Two American Anti-Vivisectionists in Various Countries. Philip G. Peabody. With an Appendix by Col. R. G. Ingersoll. Reduced from 25c to 15c.

PERSONAL RIGHTS AND SEXUAL WRONGS. Oswald Dawson. 20c.

PRIESTLY CELIBACY. Prof. A. L. Rawson. Together with The Incoherence of Transition (E. C. Walker), Motherhood in Freedom (Moses Harman), The Greatest Sin (an allegory, R. B. Kerr), and Jealousy, the Foe of Freedom (Oscar Rotter). 25c.

RELIGION AND RATIONALISM. The relation of each to human liberty. The religionist, fancying that he has the whole truth, is logically opposed to investigation, and he appeals to physical force to arrest the discovery of new truths. What Rationalism is, and how many believe themselves Freethinkers who are only unbelieving or disgruntled religionists. The necessity for separate organizations and a division of labor among reformers. The Secular Union. Important facts and arguments in a compact form. E. C. Walker. 5c

RIGHTS OF WOMEN AND THE SEXUAL RELATIONS. Karl Heinzen. A new edition, together with the startling letters of "Louise Mayer" on Men and Women, and a report of the Convention of German Women at Frauenstadt. A book of 256 pages, handsomely printed on good paper. It is more than twice the size of the original edition of "Rights of Women" alone and yet is sold at a lower price. Heinzen's great book is destined to become a classic and is sure to open the eyes of those who think women have their rights already. Its price is so low that every reader of this advertisement can afford to buy it, and no better book can be found to interest those who heretofore have given little or no thought to the necessity for the emancipation of women from ownership by men. Cloth, $1.

RIGHTS OF MAN. Thomas Paine. Answer to Burke's attack upon the French revolution. A political treatise of great general value, as advocating liberty and democracy. Contains the fundamental principles of true republicanism. Cloth, 50c; paper, 25c.

RUBAIYAT (Quatrains) OF OMAR KHAYYAM. Edward FitzGerald's interpretation; with original introduction; special cover; latest version. Paper, 10c.

RULED BY THE TOMB. A discussion of free thought and free love. Orford Northcote. 10c.

SCIENCE IN STORY; or, Sammy Tubbs, the Boy Doctor, and Sponate, the Troublesome Monkey. For young folks. Dr. E. B. Foote. Five volumes in "red line," presentation edition. $5. Five volumes, plainer binding, $3.50; all in one volume, $2.

SEXUAL PHYSIOLOGY FOR THE YOUNG. Being the fifth volume of "Science in Story." 250 pages; cloth bound; illustrated. 50c.

SONGS OF THE UNBLIND CUPID. J. Wm. Lloyd. Edition de luxe. Verses printed from Kelmscott type upon deckle edged hand made paper of cerulean tint. Initial letters, ornaments and borders are in red; initial letter and tint. Initial letters, ornaments and borders are in water colors. Covers sketch upon the opening page are hand painted in water colors. Covers brown, with choice of silver or gold lettering. Very handsome gift book. 25c.

STUDIES IN SOCIOLOGY. In four parts: I., The Law of Happiness; II., The Law of Individual Control; III., The Law of Exchange; IV., The Law of Environment. Albert Chavannes. 25c.

TALKS ON NATURE. Important information for both sexes. Dr. J. H. Greer. 192 pages. Reduced from 50 to 25c.

THE ABOLITION OF MARRIAGE. John Beverly Robinson. Together with Isabel's Intention (Marisette), Reminiscences of Berlin Heights (A. Warren), and The Sexes and Love in Freedom (Oscar Rotter). 25c.

THE BAR SINISTER AND LICIT LOVE, including the first biennial proceedings of the Legitimation League, and a full account of the Lanchester case, with full-page half-tone pictures of Edith Lanchester, and Lillian Harman. Handsomely bound in green and gold covers. 207 pages. 25c.

THE BLUE LAWS OF CONNECTICUT. Taken from the Code of 1650 and the public records of the Colony of Connecticut previous to 1665. With an account of the persecution of Witches and Quakers in New England, and some extracts from the Blue Laws of Virginia. Copiously illustrated. 25c.

THE BRITISH BARBARIANS. Grant Allen, the greatest of the Hill-Top pioneers. Dedicated "to all who have heart enough, brain enough, and soul enough to understand it." Handsomely bound in cloth. 251 pages. $1.

THE WOMAN WHO DID. Grant Allen. A powerful story of a refined, educated and high-spirited woman who dared to defy the tyranny of church and state and ignore the institution of marriage. Handsomely bound in cloth. $1.

THE NEW HEDONISM. Grant Allen. The opening paragraph says: "The old asceticism said: 'Be virtuous and you will be happy.' The new hedonism says: 'Be happy and you will be virtuous.'" In another place the writer says: "In proportion as men have freed themselves from mediæval superstitions have they begun to perceive that the unclean and impure things are celibacy and asceticism; that the pure and beautiful and ennobling thing is the fit and worthy exercise of the reproductive function." Paper covers; 96 large pages; twelve copies, 50c. Single copy, 5c.

THE CHICAGO MARTYRS. The famous speeches of the eight condemned anarchists in Judge Gary's Court, and Altgeld's reasons for pardoning Fielden, Neebe and Schwab. 25c.

THE COMING WOMAN. Lillie D. White. 5c.

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM. Principles and platform of organized Freethought. 10c.

THE EVOLUTION OF MODESTY. Jonathan Mayo Crane. A consideration of the origin of clothes and the reasons why people wear clothing. Here are a few questions it answers: What is modesty? What is the cause of it? What is the use of it? What is the cause of the feeling of shame? Is nudity immodest? What is the cause of the notion that it is shameful to expose some parts of the body? Why do not all peoples agree as to what parts of the body should be concealed? 5c.

THE FOUNTAIN OF LIFE; or, The Threefold Power of Sex. Lois Waisbrooker. 50c.

THE FUTURE OF SECULARISM. When will the Cause of Justice triumph? 5c.

THE PRODIGAL DAUGHTER; or, The Price of Virtue. Rachel Campbell. Together with Legal Wifehood (Lucinda B. Chandler), Life's Gifts (Olive Schreiner), and Marriage—What It Was and Is; Will the Coming Woman Marry? 25c.

THE REVIVAL OF PURITANISM. E. C. Walker. 10c.

THE RIGHTS OF CHILDREN. R. B. Kerr. Together with What Are Women Here For? (E. B. Foote, Jr., M. D.), The New Martyrdom (Lillian Harman), and The Will, from the French of Guy de Maupassant. 25c.

THE SANCTITY OF MARRIAGE. As viewed from a moral and sanitary standpoint. A solemn protest against the present demoralizing management of that institution, its effects upon offspring and its influence upon education. By Dr. Robert A. Greer. A valuable "opening wedge" in missionary work. Price reduced from 25c to 10c.

THE SECRET INSTRUCTIONS OF THE JESUITS. A reprint from an edition published in 1723, quoted by the highest authorities as authentic. The work is redolent of Jesuit craft and is a plain index to the underhand working of that order against the welfare of individuals and society. 15c.

THE STATE: ITS HISTORIC ROLE. Prince Peter Kropotkin. 10c.

THE TROUBADOURS AND COURTS OF LOVE. J. F. Rowbotham. Cloth. 358 pages. $1.50. Postage, 15c.

THE UNWOMANLY WOMAN. Lizzie M. Holmes. Together with That Great Fraud, Trilipit Society (Moncie Hall), Virgie Bell (George Egerton), and Normal Sexual Action (Ernest Winse). 25c.

THE WORM TURNS. Revolutionary Poems. Voltairine de Cleyre. 25c.

THOMAS JEFFERSON, His Political, Social and Religious Philosophy. Geo. M. M. Trumbull. 5c.

TOKOLOGY. A book for every woman. By Alice B. Stockham, M. D. Illustrated. Tokology teaches possible painless pregnancy and parturition, giving full, plain directions for the care of a woman before and after confinement. The ailments of pregnancy can be prevented as well as the pains and dangers of childbirth avoided and women need not go down to death giving birth to children. English, German or Swedish. $2.

WHAT IS PROPERTY? An Inquiry into the Principle of Right and of Government. P. J. Proudhon. Translated by B. R. Tucker. 500 pages. Cloth. (Slightly shelf-worn.) Reduced to $1.

TRAVELS IN FAITH. By Capt. Robert C. Adams. His mental experience from superstition to rationalism. Cloth, 75c; paper, 25c.

VACCINATION A GIGANTIC CRIME. Samuel Darling. 15c.

VINDICATION OF THOMAS PAINE. Col. R. G. Ingersoll. Dealing with all the slanders brought against the name and fame of Paine. A little pamphlet which every admirer of Thomas Paine should have by him for reference. Paper, 15c.

VITAL FORCE. Magnetic Exchange and Magnetation. Albert Chavannes. 25c.

WHAT THE YOUNG NEED TO KNOW: a Primer of Sexual Rationalism. By Edwin C. Walker. "Let us cease to be ashamed of what makes us men, of what makes us women, of what gives us the kisses of lovers and the encircling arms of babes." Paper covers; 41 large pages. 10c.

WHAT IS RELIGION? Ingersoll's last public address, delivered at the meeting of the Free Religious Association in Boston on June 3, 1899. To which is appended the poem, "Declaration of the Free," the last verse written by the great Freethinker. 5c.

WHEN LOVE IS LIBERTY AND NATURE LAW. John Badcock, Jr. 10c.

WHY THE UNDERTONE? An open letter to Judge Gary. Sarah E. Ames. 10c.

WOMAN, CHURCH, AND STATE. Matilda Joslyn Gage. "[illegible]" is Mrs. Gage's last and crowning work. Every woman ought to read it. Every liberal woman and man will want it. A burning protest against the tremendous wrong done woman by the church, which controlled the state. It ought to be widely circulated for the good it will do. Cloth, $1.50; paper, 75c.

WOMAN: Four Centuries of Progress. Susan H. Wixon. 5c.

WOMAN IN THE PAST, PRESENT AND FUTURE. Woman was the first human being that tasted bondage. Woman was a slave before the slave existed. The basis of all oppression is economic dependence on the oppressor. This has been the condition of woman in the past and is so still. She is now a slave of the slave. This work is August Bebel's masterpiece. Two, 175 pages. 25c.

Address M. Harman, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

Price 2 Cents.

LUCIFER.

THE LIGHT-BEARER.

THIRD SERIES, VOL. VI., No. 8. CHICAGO, ILLINOIS, MAR. 6, E. M. 302. [C. E. 1902.] WHOLE No. 907

BROTHERHOOD.

I will not ask my neighbor of his creed,
Nor what he deems of doctrine old or new.
I ask not by what name—among the rest
That Christians go by—he is named or known;
Whether his faith has been 'professed,'
Or whether proven by his deeds alone,
I find in him discipleship so true,
So full, that nothing further I demand;
He may be bondman, freeman, gentile, jew,
But we are brothers—walk we hand in hand.

—Selected.

The Meaning of the Press Censorship.

At first when "Freedom" was held up I only got a narrow and inadequate idea of the intention that instigated it. I supposed that the department was acting honestly on the misrepresentation of a few unprincipled enemies of mine in this place, and had no idea that other papers would be attacked; or at least I did not dream that it would become a constantly recurring thing among the papers of the country. . . . .

Since "Freedom" was attacked there have been scores of other papers attacked, and many of them whose owners had not the means to contest the thing, simply dropped out of existence. Others are struggling along under unprecedented injustice, and many of them will be compelled to yield.

Since so very many papers have been subjected to this outrage it becomes apparent that there is a mighty scheme of paternalism behind it. The wealth that has aggregated so monstrously in the hands of the few is still farther trying to obtain more power. To do this it is necessary for this privileged class to silence the voice of the people to a greater extent than has ever been attempted before. The American race was born into the air of freedom, and the people give up their birthright most unwillingly. A constant struggle has been going on for years between labor and capital; and labor would have been reduced to absolute serfdom before this but for the privilege of free speech and a free press, in consequence of which the masses have made the necessary opposition that has prevented their entire subjection to the power of that wealth which they have created, and which has been insidiously wrested from them and converted into a mighty engine for the ruin of their manhood, the destruction of all that is dear to them and the crushing out of every part of them but the muscular force of their bodies.

But up to this time—in spite of the wrongs put upon them—they have still had the power to make their grievances heard. Their spoken and written opinions have gone out and have had decided influence in retarding the action of the plan that would crush them utterly. In a measure they have been free. They have been free to protest against the system that was killing them, even while submitting—through penalty of starvation—to its operation.

But now, I call the world to look at this last outrage! I tell you, friends, it is nothing less than the destruction of free thought, whose expression is the only thing that for years has stood between you and your complete ruin. No wonder I have changed my opinion of this matter since my paper was attacked. This attack was among the first instances of what has since become an every day thing; and week by week it becomes steadily worse. And now I ask the people what it means.

TO ME IT MEANS THE DEADLIEST BLOW EVER STRUCK AT LIBERTY.

If the people do not wake up to a consideration of this thing it will be evidence of a degree of deadness on their part I had not imagined. That there is a deep plot behind the present manifestations I see no reason longer to doubt. One of the leading free papers of San Francisco, "The Star," says:

"What is now being attempted is the establishment of the power to suppress papers which are distasteful to the dominant party. A censorship is maintained in Manila, in Havana, in Porto Rico—wherever the administration has the power. This latest statement of the third assistant postmaster general can mean nothing less than the assumption of a right to deal with publishers individually, without reference to general rulings and without the creation of precedents for future cases. That is not government according to law, but according to the caprice of Mr. Madden. He does not even pretend that he is enforcing a law or rule of the postoffice department in his treatment of the New York publisher, whoever he may be, and yet he bars him from the newspaper mailing rate, which means ruin to any publication. If the right of any official to thus act as judge, jury, and executioner in the case of one newspaper, be granted, immediately the press of the United States is at the mercy of that official, and he is bound to act, not 'according to law,' nor according to general rules, but according to his own will and interest."

With reference to Mr. Madden personally; it is hardly possible that his overbearing conduct could be exercised as it evidently is being done, unless he had the sanction of those in position higher than his own. No, there is an effort to complete the subjugation of the people by others of more influence than Mr. Madden. He is only a barometer being used for the purpose of testing public opinion. He is neither a specially good or a particularly bad man; he is simply a man to faithfully serve a purpose. There is a power behind him of which he is only the spokesman.

And where is Congress, and what is it doing, and what does it intend to do? It is easier to ask this question than to answer it. But surely it is the business of Congress to see that the present enormity is ended.

I doubt whether Mr. Madden or his backers had the faintest idea of the storm this attempted suppression of free thought would bring about. I have an idea that Mr. Madden is just the kind of inconsequent individual to put to the front in such an undertaking; evidently he doesn't know "where he is at." I think he will find out before this thing is settled. No doubt he will lose his position or resign as the first postmaster general, Mr. Smith, did. But this will not settle the matter; the compilication is too big to be tackled by anything but the United States Congress.

Since writing the above it has come to our knowledge that "The Commoner," Mr. Bryan's paper, has been attacked.

Probably nothing shows the animus of the whole movement more than this. Mr. Bryan was defeated in his effort to reach the presidency, but it is not in the man to remain defeated, and our political bosses know it. Mr. Bryan is a dangerous man to the conspirators of our country's freedom. It is a wise thing on their part to get him out of the way—if they can.

"If they can!" There is the rub. It may be that in squeezing him down they will "plump" him up in the other direction. Such things have happened before. In fact, they generally happen.—Helen Wilmans, in "Freedom."

An Original Bible Lesson.

BY J. F. MILES, P. A. W.

In Lucifer No. 904, I notice a communication in "Various Voices" from L. M. Graves in which I heartily concur, except in one very important particular. He says "stop my paper." I say keep sending mine for the next million years, and if it keeps up its past and present healthy tone I will try and find some way to keep my subscription up to date, even though I have to submit to being elected to congress once more to get the money.

Where I do agree with him is his assertion that "Nothing but obedience to Christ will make this world better." This has been Lucifer's contention from its first issue to the present time. The difference in opinion comes in the definition of the word Christ.

It is self-evident from Mr. Graves' communication that he has studied the traditions of the elders diligently, and the gospels and epistles very little. Had he gone to tradition for his information, he would have found that "Lucifer" meant the devil, and Harman his satanic majesty's agent and servant, but had he gone to unimpeachable authority, would have found the exact opposite to be the truth, and this is a very good rule in all cases of information received from the elders, or orthodox clergy.

Now, gentle reader, let us see if we can find the Bible definition of Christ. The elders and teachers have used the words Jesus and Christ indiscriminately as the name of a person. Nothing could be farther from fact, (if such an individual ever existed), and few things can be more clearly demonstrated by supposed apostolic writings.

To understand the Bible definition of Christ, we must first find the Bible definition of God; which we find in three places only, and in three words in each. "God is truth." "God is a spirit." "God is Love." In the second definition, the indefinite "a" should be left out for it is not in the original manuscript, so also the Greek word that is here translated spirit, is translated ghost in many other places in the Bible, but with our ideas of what a ghost looks like, it would shock modern people to read John 4:24. "God is a Ghost." Now as we have learned the true meaning of God as defined in the Bible, it will be easy to get at the meaning of Christ as defined by the same authority.

To commence at the beginning of the history, we find that a messenger (angel) appeared to a young woman in those days, and told her that in due time she would have a baby, and that she should name it Jesus. The messenger was a truthful one, the babe was born and was named Jesus, and was nothing but Jesus "until he began to be about thirty years old," when he was baptized by John, (see Acts 10:37, 38.) and was anointed by God with the Holy Spirit, which is as we have seen, the Christ, or all prevailing spirit of Love, and from this time during the rest of his short and eventful life he accentuated those wonderful words of Thomas Paine, "The world is my country, and to do good my religion." Hence we find that Jesus was man; Christ the spirit that controlled every act and impulse of the man. Christ, Love—one and the same. And had L. M. Graves used the latter word, and said, "Nothing but obedience to Love will make this world better," I should have shouted amen, and I think Lucifer would have echoed the sentiment.

Having gone so far, we cannot conscientiously stop without giving a lucid Lucifer Bible lesson. We have found in the Bible three definitions for God. First, God is truth. What is truth? was asked thousands of years since, and has never been answered, neither can be, for truth in one place and condition, would be falsehood in another place and under other conditions. Spirit we know nothing of, except that it is an intelligence. Love we see exemplified every day of our lives, and although it is beyond our comprehension, yet every man, woman and child has felt its influence, and has a conception of what it is, although it is undefinable.

Now we have cracked the nut and come to the meat, and will try and find what true Christian marriage is by the authority of the Bible, and not by the traditions of the elders, the sayings of the priest, or the decree of the State.

Now take your Bible and turn to Matt. 19:6. and we find these words from the lips of the man on whose teaching every Christian sect claims to be founded. "Whom therefore Love (God) hath joined together, let no man put asunder," and we find it accented by being recorded a second time in Mark 10:9. From this it is shown from the Christ—the incarnated spirit of Love—that love and love only can make "the twain one flesh", and all words of priest or potentate are but a hollow mockery. I believe that has been Lucifer's contention from the first.

The Tender Mercy of the Good.

Royle was a good man, hampered in life with a heart that could never harden itself against a tale of distress. He held a comfortable position in a big merchant's office, had a nice little home, and loved his wife with the placid affection of the easily contented. Sometimes he wistfully dreamed of a little one, who would come to him for the solution of the infinite mysteries of the childish mind.

Mrs. Royle's religion was "Conventionality"; her god, "Respectability." She demanded unfailing virtue of her sex, and in her creed there was no extenuating circumstances.

. . . . . .

He had been working late; and, as he stepped out against the cutting wind, his thoughts turned contentedly to his fire and his slippers. His way led through streets where were the women who have no future. He shuddered with disgust, tempered with pity, at the invitations, brazen or whining, and his thoughts reverted to his wife and home. . . . .

——But this one was different—the glimpse of the desperate sadness in her eyes, revealed by the electric light, stirred him uncomfortably. He hesitated—and turned back.

She was a pathetic little figure, and the brown eyes held only misery; she burst into tears at his kindly voice, and he waited hopelessly.

The tale was perhaps not so unusual, but none the less sad. Hard-shell Baptist parents, and a baby not authorised by the chapel, contribute largely to the numbers of the damned; but Royle felt that the half-sovereign in his hand would be only a salve to his conscience; and here, he thought, was a duty.

She had tried for work; but she knew not a soul in the city, and she was penniless and starving. Tomorrow she must leave her one room. She had struggled and been beaten, and tonight had come to the last resource of her sex.

Yes; it was dead, so it mattered not so much; but would he save her for a little longer?

He left her at the door of her lodging, with a sovereign in hand, and a promise to see what he could do.

. . . . . .

"You're late, Henry," said his wife.

Then Royle made a mistake. He should have told her all, and stood by his action and intentions. But he hated scenes; and he knew the inevitable ultimatum: "A case for a charitable institution!"

He knew those institutions—the committe of women who have not "fallen" (perhaps through lack of opportunity)—the pitiless inquisition—and the slavery in exchange for a bare, joyless subsistence in the gloom of reproach.

. . . . . .

She was installed in decent lodgings, and he sought for something for her to do. She was fairly educated, and knew enough music to teach the few small pupils he found. Also he posted a small allowance weekly.

He went to see her occasionally; but her passionate gratitude embarassed him. Perhaps, had he guessed the height of his pedestal, he would have seen even less of her; but he could not quite leave the poor child to her loneliness. In time she would make friends; meanwhile, it was good to see the shadows leaving her eyes.

. . . . . .

And then the crash came. One evening he found her in the utter abandonment of grief. His wife had been, and she had said dreadful things. She had ruined his life; he must let her struggle alone now.

He pacified her, and went home with a cold fear at his heart. He knew his wife, and her letter did not surprise him greatly. She had gone to her mother in Melbourne.

He wrote explaining everything, acknowledging what fault there was, and pleading for some mercy. The reply, and subsequent letters returned unopened, extinguished all hope, and roused a feeling of wild resentment in him.

. . . . . .

A man's good deeds find him out. The head sent for him: "Mr. Royle, I've heard distressing rumors which I find it hard to believe; but perhaps you can explain."

He began his story, but saw the hopelessness of it reflected but too fully in his listener's face—and he stopped abruptly.

"Um! yes, but—er—a married man!"

. . . . . .

A dull rage took possession of him. "Curse all these 'respectable' people!" He would go to her.

And then he fought a battle with himself, and—lost—or won—which? He had some money; they would leave this cursed place, if she would come with him.

. . . . . .

"Little one," he said, "I am going away!"—he smiled sadly at her stricken look—"will you come with me?"

And the glory in her eyes answered and comforted him.—G. Elburg, in "The Century," Adelaide, S. Australia.

The Sex Question Again.

BY W. D.

FRIEND HARMAN:—In response to your kind invitation I again write you.

You take the broad ground that personal liberty (not injurious to others) and natural impulse are and should be superior to Mrs. Grundy's opinions or any form of statute law. This view opens a wide door for discussion.

The perils and mistakes of adolescence are important factors. All mankind know that boys and girls from the fourteenth to the twentieth year are guilty of grave indiscretions, hence the inquiry: How shall these indiscretions be prevented, or provided for? There are two remedies.

1. Moral and physical agencies which may serve to prevent.

2. Impulse being dominant, with offspring as a possible result, provision should be made for said offspring. In the present order of things it seems most equitable that the parents of the young people should provide for the undesired progeny.

Under the Co-operative Commonwealth—alias Socialism—said progeny would become the wards of the State, without ignominy to anyone.

Dr. E. B. Foote, of New York City, many years ago, studied out a third remedy in the line of prevention. He originated a harmless device which would render offspring impossible, not only with the youthful and unmarried but also the married who chance to be poor, and liable to have unwelcome children.

Dr. Foote was prosecuted, convicted and sentenced to one year in prison and to pay a fine of five thousand dollars. The imprisonment was remitted, the fine paid, and the device suppressed.

His prosecutors preferred alternatives such as these: Abortion; child-murder; prostitution of the unmarried mother, because disowned by relatives and despised by the world generally.

Another result of the triumph of Dr. Foote's foes is that the promiscuity of prostitution kills the female and engenders diseases loathsome and almost impossible to cure.

The friends of Dr. Foote thought he had the best of the argument, but the ignorant and prejudiced majority thought not; hence the conviction. I fear his opponents are yet in the majority.

Now as to your comments on my former letter. What I incline to call promiscuity you would call variety. Your point is a fine one. When a man selects a prostitute for gratification he may be said to be indulging in variety because he is free to choose. While the woman, with no power of choice, is the victim of promiscuity.

You think a woman, whether married or not, should be free to protect herself and her prospective child from intrusion, and that with correct intuition and good sense she will not fail to do so. Also that a man if married, should be free to guard his own organism from evils consequent upon disuse; free also to consider the invitations of a woman, or women, other than his mate. This, in a former letter, I called "promiscuity." You claim that it is properly called "variety," because selection is made, and this selection may be confined to a few women only.

Is not this your position? The prospective mother should do as she pleases, and her mate should be free to do [non-invasively] as he pleases, and this you call Freedom in Love. Under the freedom idea you have no objection to the continence of such women and men as prefer exclusiveness and fidelity to their mates. This explanation, I think, disposes of the questions which I thought difficult to answer. Your defense of "Hilda's Home" is consistent with this line of argument.

Your remarks about the mating of birds is quite interesting and needs no response. I think you will agree with me in the affirmation that spiritual love is superior to pure carnality—more ennobling and longer lived. A young married man abstained from exercising his marital privileges for several days because—as he said—of his "profound respect" for his married partner. As a consequence his carnally minded friends made of him a butt of ridicule.

The first loves of the youth of both sexes ignore the carnal idea. It seems sacrilege in their eyes.

You refer to "perfection of types" as the only justification of monogamy. I fear that our present mating customs will long postpone such perfection. The monopolistic control of the male by the female you think equivalent to ownership, and therefore improper.

The idea is a very prevalent one that excessive carnality effectually destroys spirituality, which is the higher manifestation in love.

Your remark, "One world at a time" I think appropriate and conclusive. If we act up to our highest ideals in this world there will be little danger of calamity in the world to come.

* * *

What is your remedy for the results of premature exercise of the youthful sexual impulse, which is well-nigh ungovernable when the period of puberty arrives?

Again: In the interest of temperance and hygiene, do you not think it wise for the married or mated to sleep in separate beds, and to come together only on rare and sacred occasions selected with the wish or purpose of securing offspring superior to themselves?

Nearly all of our sensuous impulses are liable to excess; for example, we have the drunkard, the glutton, etc. Is not the sexual impulse included in the same category, and should it not be subjected to such restraints as experience and judgment dictate?

Many persons think that free love is synonymous with unlimited license, which means excess. Hence a reply to these questions will doubtless interest your numerous readers.

The people are governed too much already, losing their personal freedom, and multiplying tyrants.—Judge F. M. Finch, Ex-Judge of the N. Y. Court of Appeals.

Lucifer, the Lightbearer

M. HARMAN, EDITOR AND PUBLISHER.

PUBLISHED EVERY WEEK AT 500 FULTON STREET, CHICAGO, ILL.

Terms: One year, $1; six months, 50 cents; three months, 25 cents.

Entered at the Chicago Postoffice as Second-Class Mail Matter.

Eastern Representative, E. C. Walker, 244 W. 143d street, New York.

907.

If these figures correspond with the number printed on the wrapper of your Lucifer, your subscription expires with this number.

If a copy of Lucifer fails to reach you, please order by number or date.

Lucifer will not be sent "by return mail" unless stamps for postage are enclosed with order.

To NEW SUBSCRIBERS: Your subscription is paid to No. If you have not ordered Lucifer, a friend has subscribed for you. If you do not wish to receive it, please notify us by card or through your postmaster. If you wish to become a regular subscriber you will confer a favor by renewing before the expiration of your trial subscription.

A Few More Definitions.

In its classification of journals "The Literary Digest" (N. Y.) reckons Lucifer as "Anarchistic." Other contemporary journals have done and continue to do likewise. In order that there may be no misunderstanding of our position and object I would say:

Names are apt to be misleading if not carefully defined or explained. The Latin word Lucifer, as used by us, is defined by its English translation—"The Light-Bearer," and by the picture at the head of our title page, showing that the name Lucifer is synonymous with "Star of the Morning."

The Greek word ANARCHY translated into English means "without government; denial of government," which latter term is commonly understood to mean RULERSHIP; control of man by his fellow man, thus leaving the reader to conjecture as to what kind of social arrangement the professed Anarchist would substitute for such government, such rulership.

The Century Dictionary says:

"Anarchy—a social theory which regards the union of order with the absence of all direct government of man by man as the political ideal: absolute individual liberty."

But the Century Dictionary is a comparatively recent publication: but few people know of its existence and if their attention were called to it they would probably say, "WEBSTER is the standard American dictionary; it is the oldest and best."

Webster defines Anarchy thus:

"The state of society where there is no law or supreme power, or where the laws are not efficient, and individuals do what they please with impunity; political confusion"—illustrating and confirming this view by such quotations as: 'Spread ANARCHY and terror all around—Cowper;' "Imperial ANARCHS doubling human woes—Byron."

By such one-sided quotations from well known authors, Webster, or his revisers, evidently act the part of propagandists of opinion, instead of confining themselves to the legitimate business of dictionary-making, which is simply showing the etymology and giving definitions of words.

As we all know there are many grades and shades of Anarchy and of Anarchists—from the peace loving and non-resistant Tolstoi to the Czar-killing Nihilists of Russia, or the king-killing and prime minister-killing revolutionists of Italy and Spain, there is constant need of definition. As in the case of the people called Socialists there are scarcely two Anarchists who are agreed on all lines of thought or of propaganda work

For this reason mainly—and not because we fear the odium, the ostracism, the loss of liberty, etc., that may be the penalty of calling ones self an Anarchist, a Socialist, a Revolutionist or what not, some of us prefer not to label ourselves with any badge, tag or cognomen whatsoever.

Speaking for myself alone, while I do not object to the name Anarchist, Socialist, Free Thinker, Free Lover, Atheist, Infidel, Christian, or many others that I could mention, provided always that I be allowed to define these words to suit MYSELF, I want to be judged by what I DO and what I SAY, rather than by what others do or say, or call themselves.

I want no handicap, no trammels or fetters of any sort, that may prevent change of opinion or intellectual growth.

He who calls himself by the name of any party, creed or sect, thereby DISCOUNTS himself, discredits himself, as an unprejudiced investigator or seeker after truth for truth's sake. Whatever he may thereafter say upon questions that have an immediate or remote bearing upon the success of his party, his sect, his propaganda, will have lost much of its value in the opinion of his hearers, because of his supposed mental bias in favor of such party, sect or creed.

* * *

In line with this thought I prefer not to classify Lucifer as an organ of Anarchistic thought, doctrine or action.

Lucifer is not a Communist, Socialist, Atheist, Agnostic, Christian or Infidel publication.

Lucifer's name alone, together with the symbolism expressed by the Star—just risen above the mountain-top, heralding the near approach of "full-orbed Day"—is sufficient definition or prospectus of its character and purpose.

Lucifer is unique, original, individualistic.

Lucifer is the follower, the imitator, the echo, of no other journal; but will gladly co-operate with all journals of similar aims.

In accord with its name and symbolism Lucifer aims to throw all the light possible on all subjects of human interest and especially upon subjects that most need the full light of day.

"Ignorance is the only darkness." To dispel the darkness of ignorance is therefore Lucifer's special mission.

In order that the light may shine in darkest places Lucifer demands LIBERTY—liberty of Thought, of Speech, of non-invasive Action—including liberty of press and of mails; also the right of free assembly for the purpose of comparison of ideas.

* * *

Lucifer's motto: Freedom to know, freedom to grow, and freedom to impart life-giving and life-saving knowledge.

M. HARMAN.

Race Culture—Homo Culture.

Briefly replying to the questions of W. D. I would say,

First. The only rational, the only effective means of preventing the "premature exercise of the youthful sexual impulse" is KNOWLEDGE. Correct, scientific information in regard to the proper uses, and the dangers of abuse, of the sex function should take the place of the prevalent ignorance, and the incorrect or baneful knowledge, that now characterize the almost universal training—or lack of training—received by the young, in relation to this the most important department of human anatomy, physiology and hygiene.

One of the most impressive and, as I think, most important of all the lessons ever given to teachers of youth, was that related by David P. Page, the veteran "principal" of one of the first "Normal" schools ever established in this country. In condensed form it was this:

An ear of corn was held up before the class, in a primary school, with request that its uses be enumerated. After apparently exhausting the list of uses the teacher was still not satisfied till the youngest member of the class, with great earnestness said:

"It's to PLANT! It's to grow!"

"Yes," said the teacher. "Reproduction of its kind is the most important of all the uses to which the ear of corn can be put," and carrying the illustration to all forms of organized life we can say that the most important of all the uses to which any plant or animal can be put is to reproduce its kind; to leave behind, if possible, an improved specimen or specimens of the race or species to which such plant or animal belongs.

How to impress upon the plastic minds of the young the importance of sex, and of the sex function, and of the misery and debasement of the individual and of the race, that follow the abuse of sex, is a problem second to none among all the problems that confront the parent and teacher. In a recent issue of Lucifer was reproduced an article by Mary Baker of Kansas City, Mo., addressed "To Mothers," that is replete with suggestions in regard to this most difficult as well as most important of educational problems—rendered difficult very largely by the religious superstitions that represent the sex-nature as something inherently vile; something concerning which "the less said the better."

If instead of compelling the young to learn their first lessons in regard to sex from the fowls and pigs of the barn-yard or, what is worse, from ignorant and depraved playmates older than themselves, children could be taught the mysteries of reproduction in a rational manner by parents and teachers, the precocity of sexual development that impels to premature gratification, with its very serious consequences, would be largely if not wholly prevented.

It is much to be regretted that suitable literature for the young, in regard to this subject is almost wholly lacking. One of the best books yet written is that by Dr. Foote of New York, entitled "Sexual Physiology for the Young."

The suggestion of W. D., that the parents of indiscreet young people should be held responsible—by public sentiment I presume he means—for the care and maintenance of "undesired progeny," should such progeny result from sexual "indiscretions" between "the fourteenth and twentieth year," seems sensible and just, in view of the fact that it is probably owing chiefly to the lack of proper instruction from parents that such youthful indiscretions occur.

The subject of rational and hygienic "prevention," alluded to in connection with the prosecution of Dr. Foote, is one that should receive the earnest and candid consideration of every American citizen, woman as well as man, and especially woman, because of the fact that upon her falls chiefly the penalty, the burden, from lack of such physiologic knowledge.

Just why it is that a people whose proud boast it is that they are free, self-owning, self-governing, will submit to such high-handed outrages as that committed by our law-courts in the case of Dr. Foote, is one of the unexplained "mysteries of godliness"—or of demonism, whichever we choose to call it.

* * *

In last issue of Lucifer, under the head, "Comstock vs. Craddock," written by Dr. E. B. Foote Jr., is given an account of another outrage of similar character in New York, another attempt to prevent the spread of vitally important knowledge in regard to sex and reproduction, by the agent of a self-constituted religious oligarchy known as the "New York Society for the Prevention of Vice"—a better name for which would be, "The New York Society for the Suppression of Knowledge"—especially the knowledge pertaining to health and happiness in the conjugal relation, and to the right of children to be born well, if born at all.

SEPARATE BEDS.

Second. Yes, "in the interest of temperance and hygiene," and especially in order to "secure offspring superior to themselves," married or mated couples should not habitually sleep in the same bed nor in the same room, for the simple reason that such nightly added to daily association eventually results in satiety if not disgust. The old saying, "Familiarity breeds contempt," is quite as true in the conjugal and reproductive relation as in any other.

When people meet, as in courtship, at rare intervals only, and after special preparation so as to make the best possible impression, then, if really adapted by nature, they not only see each other at their best but idealize each other—IMAGE (or imagine) each other to be better than they really are, and while in this condition of mutual admiration, mutual idealization, they are prepared to become parents of offspring superior to themselves.

This is nature's way. "The ascent of life is the ascent of ideals," says Stinson Jarvis. Darwin dwells much on this fact in his "Descent of Man," which book should have been named "Ascent of Man."

But if the fateful associative act that gives life and character to a new human being, occurs when both parents are at their worst instead of best—if indifferent to, or disgusted with, each other through long continued intimacy—if the reproductive act has become tame and insipid through HABIT, what should we expect but offspring inferior to either parent?

The subject of stirpiculture—race culture, has never received the attention its importance demands, at least HOMO-culture, man-culture, has not; chiefly, perhaps, because we have all been taught by parents, and especially by the clergy that it is impious to put the human on the same plane with the "beasts that perish," in the matter of generation—taught that "God" gives to each his or her endowments of mind and body.

As Portia said of one of her suitors, "God made him, and so he must needs be a man," so we put the responsibility upon HIM, and upon the parson who in God's name joins people together "for better or worse"—without whose ministerial sanction we are considered to have no right to be born.

LIABILITY TO EXCESS.

W. D's. last question would seem quite superfluous if we did not know that the signs of sexual intemperance are met with everywhere, and among the legally married quite as frequently as among the unmarried, if not more frequently. The marriage vow, the legal license and ministerial certificate, instead of a guarantee of temperance and help to prudence, undoubtedly work just the opposite result in many if not the great majority of cases; whereas freedom in love relations—self-ownership in love relations—naturally imposes restraint—a sense of responsibility to self and to the other party immediately concerned, not forgetting responsibility to the possible offspring.

As in the case of other analogous appetites and instincts—the appetite for food and drink, the only effective safeguard against excess is KNOWLEDGE—right education—coupled with liberty and responsibility for one's acts; not responsibility to arbitrary law but responsibility, as just said, to self and to those immediately concerned.

Considerations of responsibility to God—the priest, or to the State—the magistrate, have not prevented men and women from becoming gluttons or drunkards, neither have such considerations prevented excess and abuse of the appetite through the indulgence of which new human beings are created.

M. HARMAN.

* * *

NOTE: Our correspondents will please remember the friendly warning given in last issue, namely, that, for a time somewhat indefinite in duration, the editor "must be excused" from giving personal attention to questions involving time and labor to answer—such for instance as those of W. D., in the article, "The Sex Question Again." Questions may still be asked as usual, but they will be attended to by the editor's assistants—and for the reasons mentioned last week. M. H.

Lucifer's Outlook.

Once more the harbingers of Spring are with us.

Once more the "Ides of March" are here.

During the winter months just past, Lucifer has tried to do its part in resisting the onward sweep, the rising tide, of monopolization of the sources of wealth, and centralization of power in this country. Our pages have been largely filled with articles showing whither we are drifting as a people, and showing the necessity of looking after the landmarks of freedom, the safeguards of liberty and justice for all and denying special privileges to the few.

In supplying the necessary financial means of carrying on this defensive war, many of Lucifer's friends have done nobly. They have renewed subscription for themselves, have sent us the names of their friends for sample copies, and some have sent money for new subscriptions, for longer or shorter periods. Many have bought books for their own reading and to lend and to give to others.

For all these substantial evidences of interest in Lucifer's work, and also for good words of encouragement and appreciation, we of the publication office are duly thankful. Though not openly attacked by the suppressors of speech and press Lucifer has not been overlooked by them. In more ways than one we have been made aware, during the past few months, that the same or similar agencies that for a period of nearly ten years sought through the courts to crush Lucifer and its radical work, are still active and vigilant.

* * *

And now, what of the future? Is there less need for resistance now than in the past? Read the article reproduced from Mrs. Wilmans' paper, in this week's Lucifer. Read also the little paper called "Discontent," published by the colony at Home, Washington, the editors of which paper are now under arrest for alleged violation of the postal laws, but whose real offense is that they oppose the concentration of the wealth and power of the country in the hands of the favored few, and because they are now giving to the world an object lesson in co-operative self-help, which, if made universal, would destroy monopoly and bring the long sought Co-operative Commonwealth.

Again thanking all who have made Lucifer's work their own work, and who have remembered to send us help in ways just mentioned, we venture to remind those who have postponed renewing subscription, or sending for books, or sending us names of new subscribers and names for sample copies, that journals of radical thought find it more difficult to pay expenses during the spring and summer months than during fall and winter, but that by a little prompt attention in the ways suggested, the educational work of Lucifer will go forward with renewed hope and brighter prospects for final triumph of the right, the true, the just and the equitable. M. HARMAN.

The American Press-Writers' Association.

On Tuesday, Feb. 11, your scribe met with a slight accident, got burned in the face from ear to nose inclusive by a rush of flame from the furnace where he works, which laid him up for five days and caused the omission of notes last week.

"Our Home Rights" for January has been mailed to subscribers and contains articles from twenty-one Press-Writers. Dr. Pfeiffer is reported to be on the road to recovery. Dr. R. S. Clymer is in charge of "Our Home Rights" office and hopes to get the February number out as soon as possible.

We hope to have an up-to-date list of members ready for distribution by the time this reaches the readers of Lucifer.

We learn with regret of the arrest on a Comstock charge of Press-Writer No. 38, Mrs. Ida C. Craddock. Brothers Chamberlain and Foote are interesting themselves in her defense.

J. Herbert Rowell has a very suggestive article in "Discontent," (Home, Wash.) Feb. 12. Maud Abbey, in the Philadelphia "Bulletin," Feb. 18, has a good one entitled "Is There a Better Way?" and "Free Society" Feb. 16, prints her well written verses on the useless and the useful.

NEW MEMBERS.

232b. Guernsey, Glenn R., Kingfisher, Okla.
233f. Serl, Mrs. C. S., 3803 Vincennes Ave., Chicago, Ill.
234b. Coomer, Mrs. M. C., 707 E. Central St., Wichita, Kansas.
235b. Tarpinian, Caspar H., British Post Office, Smyrna, Turkey.
236c. Conroy, John F., 56 Murdock St., Youngstown, O.
237b. Jones, Levin T., 202 W. Barre St., Baltimore, Md.
238f. Lee, Thomas P., Box 98, Lakeport Lake Co., Cal.
239a. White, Frederick, 417 5th St. S., Minneapolis, Minn.
240b. Holmes, William H., La Veta, Colo.

CORRECTION.

25a. Clark, C. W., 908 W. Third St., Des Moines, Iowa.
84f. Johnson, A., 414 Lilley Ave., San Francisco, Cal.
94f. Libbey H. A., 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.
212af. Loomis, Mrs. Hulda L. Potter, 64 Center St., Chicopee, Mass.
224b. Lamb, Mrs. Lydia L., Dryden, Lapeer Co., Mich.

A. C. ARMSTRONG, 17 Leroy St., Dorchester, Mass.

VARIOUS VOICES.

Frank Eccleston, Home, Washington.—Please continue my paper. It brightens the home and makes us all happy. Couldn't do without it.

H. B., Ithaca, N. Y.:—For the enclosed send me "Fields, Factories, and Workshops," "The State," and "Anarchism"—all by Kropotkin, and as many copies of Lucifer No. 905 as you can afford. I think highly of your own comments, Kerr's article and Mother Jones, and want to hand copies out. For an opponent Kerr is quite the exception in giving the fairest definitions. I should suppose he is a Social Democrat?

J. C. Durant, Ind. Ter.: In response to your ad in "Our Home Rights" I send you 25 cents for Lucifer thirteen weeks, and "The Prodigal Daughter." By accident I once had the privilege of reading a copy of your paper. I liked it, and all that has kept me from taking it is that I feared some one would brand me an Anarchist. I am not an educated man, but I do love truth and justice. I have for years known that many of our laws were wrong—laws in regard to marriage, especially.

L. H. Earle, Germantown, Pa.:—I see by the number of Lucifer just received that your offer of Dr. Foote's "Home Cyclopedia" for $1, with a subscription to Lucifer, is still open. So I enclose $2.18 for both, with postage. My subscription is already paid up to No. 918; but I am very glad to renew early as there is no doubt of my wanting the paper. Lucifer is admirable for its out-spokenness. I cannot agree with those who urge you to be more moderate in your expression of the truth. To my mind the truth is better naked than "nicely dressed."

Sarah Stone Rockhill, Alliance, Ohio:—I want to say for your encouragement that Lucifer is more than holding its own on the Anarchist question. The editors are fully up to the standard of fearless, untrammeled utterance of advanced thought—I would call it the "Higher Criticism," on the awful theme. I send you a clipping showing that at least one judge would put the sexes on the same social level. Have sent a letter to Dr. Clymer, bidding him "God-speed" in his noble work in uplifting "the fallen"—so-called. I hope your health and strength will hold out for many years to come, so that you may do what your hand findeth to do, with comfort and satisfaction to yourself.

[Many thanks for kind wishes and words of encouragement; also for clippings. Among these clippings is an extended report of an address by Mrs. Rockhill before a local club, and printed in an Alliance paper, on the subject of "Political Equality;" the editor giving the lecturer much commendation for her "excellent paper." Like Mrs. Lamb our Alliance friend is one of Lucifer's old time helpers, whose letters are always welcome. M. H.]

Lydia L. Lamb, Dryden, Mich.:—I enclose you, dear old friend Moses, a gift ($1) for this new year—not so new as when I first thought of sending it—now that my birthday anniversary has again come round. This may make you glad I was born? At any rate I am always glad you were. Now don't change the number on my wrapper. I want to send you $5. Lucifer is still progressive—always ahead of the times; always leading the minds of the people; always bright with new if not unexpected thought. I could dispose of at least three each of the back numbers you mention in a late issue, and will gladly aid you with stamps. I would write you folks oftener but always fear to trespass upon your valuable time. I count the paper as hearing from you.

[We are always glad to hear from our friends, though not always able to reply to letters of friendship; especially glad to hear from any who like the writer of the above, has been a reader and helper of Lucifer for two score of years or thereabouts. The birth-day remembrance is most thankfully received, also the order for back numbers of Lucifer for distribution; also the promise of financial aid later on. M. H.]

The day before the Chinese New Year the mistress of one of San Francisco's fine homes went into her kitchen to give an order to her Chinese cook, Lem. To her surprise, she noticed that he was preparing a very curious mixture which she hadn't ordered.

Mrs. R.—What is that, Lem?

Lem—Me got frien' in grabeyard. To-morrow Chinese New Yoer. Me go put this by his grabe for him.

"Why Lem! Do you think your friend will come out of his grave to eat the food you put there?"

Lem drew himself up and retorted with a cold scorn worthy of his predecessor, Confucius.

"You t'ink your frien' come out his grabe to smell flowers you put there?"—Life.

AT HALF-PRICE

100 COPIES

OF

DR. FOOTE'S HOME CYCLOPEDIA.

While they last, a copy will be sent for only $1 to any subscriber to Lucifer whose subscription is paid one year in advance.

A FAMILY GUIDE-BOOK OF THE TWENTIETH CENTURY.

1248 PAGES. 500,000 WORDS. 400 PICTURES. 250 RECIPES.
80 CHROMOS ON 18 COLOR PLATES.

A few among the many subjects treated:

PART I.—Disease: Cause, Prevention, Cure.—Common Sense Remedies

PART II.—Chronic Diseases of the Breathing Organs.—Diseases of the Heart and Blood Vessels.—Diseases of Liver, Stomach, Bowels.—Chronic Affections of the Urinary Organs.—Private Words for Men and Women—Hints to the Children."—Constitutional Diseases.—Affections of the Eyes and Ears.—The Treatment of Disease, Containing 200 Prescriptions for Common Ailments and Complete Table of Antidotes for Poisons.

PART III.—Plain Home Talks About the Sexual Organs.—The Natural Relation of the Sexes.—Civilization and Marriage.—History of Marriage—Defects in Marriage Systems.—Social Immorality. (Part III. takes a view of marriage and the sexual relations from a physiological standpoint. It is searching, interesting, original, and startling.

PART IV.—Improving Monogamic Marriage.—Adaptation in Marriage—Restricted Marriage and Parentage.—Three Phases of Monogamic Marriages.—Intermarria of elatives.—Essays for Married People.—What Determines Sex.—Philosophy of Child-Marking.—Essays for the Future.

Is your subscription paid to No. 957? If so, the Home Cyclopedia will be sent to you for $1 net. Postage 18 cts.

DO YOU EVER THINK

Of the fate of the Prodigal Daughter? The Prodigal Son forgiven and received with rejoicing—why should different treatment be accorded to his sister? For a vivid, true picture of the conditions in homes and factories which produce thousands o so-called fallen women every year, read "The Prodigal Daughter; or, The Price of Virtue," by Rachel Campbell.

SPECIAL OFFER.

This valuable work sent free on receipt of twenty-five cents for a thirteen week's trial subscription to Lucifer, the Light-Bearer. M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton Street, Chicago, Ill.

VICE: ITS FRIENDS AND ITS FOES

BY EDWIN C. WALKER.

CONTENTS.—Brotherhood of Man; The Recognition of Facts; Folly of "For Men Only." Definition of Vice; Horrors of Prostitution; Abnormal Sexuality; Errors of Fathers, Mothers and Teachers; Persecution Does Not Reform; Prostitution and the Crusaders; The "Spoiling of the Heathen;" What are the Effects of Raids and Crusades? The Economic Side of the Problem. Party Politics in Vice Crusading; In What Does Prostitution Consist? Some Causes of Prostitution; Two Kinds of Prostitution Compared; The Opponents of Divorce; "Purifying" the Tenements; Action for Advanced Women.

WITH APPENDIX:—The Wanderings of a Spirit; Our Fair Civilization The Folly and Cruelty of It All. Price 15c.

Address M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

RADICAL LITERATURE.

For Sale by M. Harman, 500 Fulton St., Chicago.

A CHAMBERMAID'S DIARY. By Octave Mirbeau. Translated from the French by Benj. R. Tucker. 400 pages. Handsomely bound in cloth. $1.50.

ADVANCEMENT OF SCIENCE. Prof. John Tyndall's famous Inaugural Address before the British Association for the Advancement of Science, with the articles on Prayer which so stirred the religious world. Cloth, 50c; paper, 25c.

AGE OF REASON (The). Presentation edition. Part I reprinted from the first English edition. Part II corrected by M. D. Conway's edition. With Paine's own account of his arrest in Paris. Photogravure portrait from the Romney painting exhibited in London. Containing also portrait from the Jarvis painting; from the Peale painting, known as the Bonneville portrait, representing Paine as a member of the French Assembly, and a half-tone of the Peale painting. Large half-tones of the house presented to Paine, in which he lived in New Rochelle, and of the monument and surroundings, Yorktown, Pa., scenes; also eight half-tone views of buildings, etc., associated with Paine's life in Paris, and other illustrations. With Preface, Chronological Table, Notes, Index, etc. Printed on antique wove paper, large octavo, wide margins, gilt edge. Special cover design in colors. The finest and most accurate of all editions. Boxed. Postpaid, $1.

AGE OF REASON. Thomas Paine. Cloth, with steel plate portrait, 50c; paper 15c.

ANARCHISM: Its Philosophy and Ideal. Peter Kropotkin. 5c.

A PHYSICIAN IN THE HOUSE. A New Family Medical Work, by Dr. J. H. Greer. This book is up-to-date in every particular. It will save you hundreds of dollars in doctors' bills. It tells you how to cure yourself by simple and harmless home remedies. It recommends no poisonous or dangerous drugs. It teaches health and life by safe methods. It teaches prevention—that it is better to know how to live and avoid disease than to take any medicine as a cure. It is not an advertisement and has no medicine to sell. It has hundreds of excellent recipes for the cure of the various diseases. It has 16 colored plates showing different parts of the human body. The chapter on Painless Midwifery is worth its weight in gold to women. The "Care of Children" is something every mother ought to read. It teaches the value of Air, Sunshine, and Water as medicines. It contains valuable information for the married. This book cannot fail to please you. If you are looking for health by the safest and easiest means, do not delay getting it. It has eight hundred pages, is neatly bound in cloth, with gold letters, and will be sent by mail or express, prepaid to any address, for $2.75.

A PLEA FOR THE NEW WOMAN. May L. Collins. With large new half-tone portrait. 10c.

A TALE OF THE STRASSBURG GEESE. R. B. Kerr. Together with The Strike of the Strassburg Geese (C. W. Coolridge), A Traveler's Tale (R. B. Kerr), The Cat's Story (Emile Zola) 5c.

AUTONOMY, SELF-LAW. A fragmentary dissertation on the right to non-invasive self-hood. 5c.

A WEEK ON THE CONCORD AND MERRIMAC RIVERS. Henry D. Thoreau. 25c.

BALZAC'S SERAPHITA: The Mystery of Sex. Mary Hanford Ford. Cloth, $1.

BIBLE TEMPERANCE. E. C. Walker. Proving that Liquor Drinking is Commended, Defended and Enjoined by the Bible, and giving close reference to the chapters and verses. 10c.

BORNING BETTER BABIES—Through regulating reproduction by controlling conception. E. B. Foote, Jr., M. D. 25c.

CAUSES OF HARD TIMES, and the Money Question. Albert Chavannes. 5c.

CHICAGO CONFERENCE OF TRUSTS. Speeches, debates, etc.; 81 portraits of delegates, including Benj. R. Tucker, Laurence Gronlund, William Jennings Bryan, Samuel Gompers, Louis F. Post, and George Schilling. 128 pages. 50c.

CHILDREN OF THE ITALIAN POOR. Paola Lombroad. 25c.

DARWIN, THE. (A novel.) Elmina D. Slenker. 50c.

DAWN OF CIVILIZATION, The; or, England in the Nineteenth Century. J. C. Steele. 178 pages. 25c.

DAWN-THOUGHT ON THE RECONCILIATION. By J. Wm. Lloyd. An inspired treatise that, with insight and solution, touches all the questions of life, love, soul and society. A prose-poem, simple enough for a child to enjoy, deep enough to make a philosopher think. The largest creed, the most generous theory, the gladdest gospel. A book of life. A religion of growth and the overlook—freedom and optimism. Read it. Printed in old style antique type, rubricated with portrait of the author. In three editions, de luxe, cloth and paper bound. Prices, $1.25, $1.00 and 50c.

DIGGING FOR BED-ROCK. Camp-meeting talks and sketches by Moses Harman. 5c.

DR. FOOTE'S SOCIAL SCIENCE SERIES OF DIME PAMPHLETS—Wedlock; Scientific Marriage; Heredity; A B C of Temperaments; Powell and his Critics; Physiological Marriage; Physical Improvement of Humanity; Causes of Disease, Insanity, and Premature Death; A Step Backward. Any of the above books sent by mail on receipt of price.

DYNAMIC THEORY OF LIFE AND MIND. An attempt to show that all organic beings are both constructed and operated by the dynamic agencies of their respective environments. By James H. Alexander. Over 400 illustrations, 27 chapters, 1,067 pages and a 2-column index of 11 pages. Cloth, $2.75.

EAST TENNESSEE SKETCHES. A and Cecile Chavannes. 25c.

ECONOMICS OF ANARCHY. A Study of the Industrial Type. Dyer D. Lum. 10c.

EIGHT-HOUR MOVEMENT. John P. Altgeld, ex-Governor of Illinois. 5c.

EVOLUTION AND REVOLUTION. Elisee Reclus. 5c.

FALSE CLAIMS OF THE CHURCH. John E. Remsburg. Analyzing and confuting the claims made by churchmen that the Christian religion has promoted morality, learning, temperance, science, freedom, and showing how she has opposed progress. Paper, 10c.

FIELDS, FACTORIES, AND WORKSHOPS; or, Industry Combined with Agriculture and Brain Work with Manual Work. Peter Kropotkin. 260 pages. 40c. Postage, 5c.

FREE PRESS. Arguments in support of demurrer to the indictment of M. Harman, E. C. Walker and Geo. Harman, under the Comstock law. G. C. Siemens and David Overmyer. 20c.

GIORDANO BRUNO. His Life, Teachings, and Martyrdom. Burned for heresy in Rome, Feb. 17, 1600. 5c.

GOD AND THE STATE. Bakounine. 25c.

GOVERNMENT ANALYZED. A remarkable work by a remarkable man, Col. John H. Kelso, the history of whose life reads more like romance than reality. This book is the last of a series—Deity Analyzed, Bible Analyzed, Universe Analyzed. By the author's death this work was left unfinished, but was completed by his wife, Elita Dunbar Kelso. 519 pages; cloth. Price reduced from $1.50 to $1.

HILDA'S HOME. Rose Graul. "An o'er true tale" of woman's wrongs and of one woman's struggles and final triumphs in her attempt to secure justice for herself and for her sisters. 426 pages. Cloth, $1; paper, 50c.

HUMAN RIGHTS. J. Madison Hook. 5c.

IMPORTANCE OF HONEST MONEY. A simple, scientific, invariable standard of price. James Adleman. 120 pages. Paper, 50c.

IN BRIGHTER CLIMES; or, Life in Socioland. Albert Chavannes. 2c.

INFIDEL DEATH-BEDS. "Idle Tales of Dying Horrors." G. W. Foote. Brief biographical sketches of 97 Freethinkers, including Bruno, Buckle, Byron, Comte, Darwin, George Eliot, Gibbon, Goethe, Hugo, Harriet Martineau, Mill, Paine, Madame Roland, George Sand, Shelley, Volney, and Voltaire. 25c.

IN HELL AND THE WAY OUT. A plan of Social Democracy outlined. Henry E. Allen. 10c.

INSTITUTIONAL MARRIAGE. From the viewpoint of an exiled Marsian. M. Harman. 5c.

JOHN'S WAY. A domestic radical story. Elmina D. Slenker. 25c.

KAREEZA. Ethics of Marriage. A bold, brave book, teaching ideal marriage, rights of the unborn child, a designed and controlled maternity. Sample pages free. $1.

KORADINE. A story for young and old. Extra levant cloth. $1.

LIBERTY IN LITERATURE. Testimonial to Walt Whitman. "Let us put wreaths on the brows of the living." An address delivered in Philadelphia, Oct. 31, 1894, with portrait of Whitman. Containing also Col. Ingersoll's address at the funeral of Walt Whitman, Mar. 30, 1892. Cloth, 50c; paper, 25c.

LIBERTY. Political, Religious, Social, and Moral. A. F. Tindall. 5c.

LITTLE LESSONS FOR LITTLE FOLKS. Elmina D. Slenker. Boards, 40c.

LIZZIE MELTON. A story of a self-reliant girl. By Albert Chavannes. With portrait of author. 25c.

LUCIFER. Third Series, Vol. III. (1890). Cloth, $1.25. Postage, 25c.

MAGNETATION, and Its Relation to Health and Character. Albert Chavannes. 25c.

MARRIAGE. An address by Dr. Juliet H. Severance. 5c.

MARRIAGE IN FREE SOCIETY. Edward Carpenter. A dainty little gift book. 25c.

MARTYRDOM OF MAN. Winwood Reade. This is a very interestingly pictured synopsis of universal history, showing what the race has undergone—its martyrdom—in its rise to its present plane. It shows how war and religion have been oppressive factors in man's struggle for liberty; and the last chapter, of some 150 pages, describes his intellectual struggle from the animal period of the earth to the present, adding an outline of what the author conceives would be a religion of reason and love. Winwood Reade's reputation as a writer of fine English, of deep study and careful reasoning, needs no word of praise. Cloth, $1.

MEN, WOMEN AND CHANCE. William Platt. Containing two tales: The Ascent to the Heights, and Blind Men and Seeing. Well printed on heavy paper and artistically bound in cloth. Gilt top, rough edges. 75c.

MEN, WOMEN, AND GODS. Helen H. Gardener. With preface by Col. R. G. Ingersoll. Contents: Introduction by Col. Ingersoll. Men, Women, and Gods. Vicarious Atonement. Historical Facts and Theological Fictions. Appendix. Address to the Clergy and Others. Letter to Cleveland Congress of Freethinkers. The only authorized and correct edition. Large 12mo, heavy-toned paper. Portrait. This volume is by far the best writing this famous author ever did. It is very fine. Cloth, $1; paper, 50c.

MISSING LINK IN MODERN SPIRITUALISM, THE. A. Leah (Fox) Underhill. With portraits of the Fox Sisters and others. 472 pages. Cloth. Reduced to $1.

MORIBUND SOCIETY AND ANARCHY. Jean Grave. Cloth, 40c; paper, 25c.

MOTHERHOOD IN FREEDOM. M. Harman. 5c.

MUTUAL BANKING. A simple plan to abolish interest on money. William B. Greene. 10c.

NORA, A DOLL'S HOUSE, and GHOSTS. Ibsen. Cloth. 75c.

OUR WORSHIP OF PRIMITIVE SOCIAL GUESSES. E. C. Walker. Contents: Love and Law; The Moloch of the Monogamic Ideal; The Continuity of Race-Life, and Tyranny; Food and Sex Fallacies, a Criticism; When Men and Women Are and When They Are Not Varietists; The New Woman: What is she? What will she be? The State Hiding Behind Its Own Mistakes; Bishop Potter's Opinion of Divorce; Love: Its Attraction and Expression; Is She an Honest Girl? Lloyd, Platt, and the Pitiful Facts: Social Radicals and Parentage; Anthropology and Monogamy; Love and Trust Versus Fear; Reflections upon Reading William Platt's "Women, Love, and Life." 15c.

PERSONAL EXPERIENCES of Two American Anti-Vivisectionists in Various Countries. Philip G. Peabody. With an Appendix by Col. R. G. Ingersoll. Reduced from 25c to 15c.

PERSONAL RIGHTS AND SEXUAL WRONGS. Oswald Dawson. 20c.

PRIESTLY CELIBACY. Prof. A. L. Rawson. Together with The Incoherence of Transition (E. C. Walker), Motherhood in Freedom (Moses Harman), The Greatest Sin (an allegory, R. B. Kerr), and Jealousy, the Foe of Freedom (Oscar Rotter). 25c.

RELIGION AND RATIONALISM. The relation of each to human liberty. The religionist, fancying that he has the whole truth, is logically opposed to investigation, and he appeals to physical force to arrest the discovery of new truths. What Rationalism is, and how many believe themselves Freethinkers who are only unbelieving or disgruntled religionists. The necessity for separate organizations and a division of labor among reformers. The Secular Union. Important facts and arguments in a compact form. E. C. Walker. 5c

RIGHTS OF WOMEN AND THE SEXUAL RELATIONS. Karl Heinzen. A new edition, together with the startling letters of "Louise Mayer" on Men and Women, and a report of the Convention of German Women at Frauenstadt. A book of 286 pages, handsomely printed on good paper. It is more than twice the size of the original edition of "Rights of Woman" alone and yet is sold at a lower price. Heinzen's great book is destined to become a classic and is sure to open the eyes of those who think women have their rights already. Its price is so low that every reader of this advertisement can afford to buy it, and no better book can be found to interest those who heretofore have given little or no thought to the necessity for the emancipation of women from ownership by men. Cloth, $1.

RIGHTS OF MAN. Thomas Paine. Answer to Burke's attack upon the French revolution. A political treatise of great general value, as advocating liberty and democracy. Contains the fundamental principles of true republicanism. Cloth, 50c; paper, 25c.

RUBAIYAT (Quatrains) OF OMAR KHAYYAM. Edward FitzGerald's interpretation; with original introduction; special cover; latest version. Paper, 15c.

RULED BY THE TOMB. A discussion of free thought and free love. Orford Northcote. 10c.

SCIENCE IN STORY; or, Sammy Tubbs, the Boy Doctor, and Sponge, the Troublesome Monkey. For young folks. Dr. E. B. Foote. Five volumes in "red line," presentation edition. $5. Five volumes, plainer binding, $2.50; all in one volume, $2.

SEXUAL PHYSIOLOGY FOR THE YOUNG. Being the fifth volume of "Science in Story." 290 pages; cloth bound; illustrated. 50c.

SONGS OF THE UNBLIND CUPID. J. Wm. Lloyd. Edition de luxe. Verses printed from Kelmscott type upon deckle edged hand made paper of cerulean tint. Initial letters, ornamentis and borders are in red; initial letter and sketch upon the opening page are hand painted in water colors. Covers brown, with choice of silver or gold lettering. Very handsome gift book. 50c.

STUDIES IN SOCIOLOGY. In four parts: I., The Law of Happiness; II., The Law of Individual Control; III., The Law of Exchange; IV., The Law of Environment. Albert Chavannes. 25c.

TALKS ON NATURE. Important information for both sexes. Dr. J. H. Greer. 192 pages. Reduced from 50 to 25c.

THE ABOLITION OF MARRIAGE. John Beverly Robinson. Together with Isabel's Intention (Marlette), Reminiscences of Berlin Heights (A. Warren), and The Sexes and Love in Freedom (Oscar Rotter). 25c.

THE BAR SINISTER AND LICIT LOVE, including the first biennial proceedings of the Legitimation League, and a full account of the Lanchester case, with full-page half-tone pictures of Edith Lanchester, and Lillian Harman. Handsomely bound in green and gold covers. 207 pages. 25c.

THE BLUE LAWS OF CONNECTICUT. Taken from the Code of 1650 and the public records of the Colony of Connecticut previous to 1665. With an account of the persecution of Witches and Quakers in New England, and some extracts from the Blue Laws of Virginia. Copiously illustrated. 25c.

THE BRITISH BARBARIANS. Grant Allen, the greatest of the Hill-Top pioneers. Dedicated "to all who have heart enough, brain enough, and soul enough to understand it." Handsomely bound in cloth. 281 pages. $1.

THE WOMAN WHO DID. Grant Allen. A powerful story of a refined, educated and high-spirited woman who dared to defy the tyranny of church and state and ignore the institution of marriage. Handsomely bound in cloth. $1.

THE NEW HEDONISM. Grant Allen. The opening paragraph says: "The old ascetism said: 'Be virtuous and you will be happy.' The new hedonism says: 'Be happy and you will be virtuous.'" In another place the writer says: "In proportion as men have freed themselves from mediæval superstitions have they begun to perceive that the unclean and impure things are celibacy and ascetism; that the pure and beautiful and ennobling thing is the fit and worthy exercise of the reproductive function." Paper covers; 32 large pages; twelve copies, 25c. Single copy, 5c.

THE CHICAGO MARTYRS. The famous speeches of the eight condemned anarchists in Judge Gary's Court, and Altgeld's reasons for pardoning Fielden, Neebe and Schwab. 25c.

THE COMING WOMAN. Lillie D. White. 5c.

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM. Principles and platform of organized Freethought. 10c.

THE EVOLUTION OF MODESTY. Jonathan Mayo Crane. A consideration of the origin of clothes and the reasons why people wear clothing. Here are a few questions it answers: What is modesty? What is the cause of it? What is the use of it? What is the cause of the feeling of shame? Is nudity immodest? What is the cause of the notion that it is shameful to expose some parts of the body? Why do not all peoples agree as to what parts of the body should be concealed? 5c.

THE FOUNTAIN OF LIFE; or, The Threefold Power of Sex. Lois Waisbrooker. 50c.

THE FUTURE OF SECULARISM. When will the Cause of Justice triumph? 5c.

THE PRODIGAL DAUGHTER; or, The Price of Virtue. Rachel Campbell. Together with Lucifer's Womhood (Lucinda B. Chandler), Life's Gifts (Olive Schreiner), and Marriage—What It Was and Is; Will the Coming Woman Marry? 25c.

THE REVIVAL OF PURITANISM. E. C. Walker. 10c.

THE RIGHTS OF CHILDREN. R. B. Kerr. Together with What Are Women Here For? (E. B. Foote, Jr., M. D.), The New Martyrdom (Lillian Harman), and The Will, from the French of Guy de Maupassant. 25c.

THE SANCTITY OF MARRIAGE. As viewed from a moral and sanitary standpoint. A solemn protest against the present demoralizing management of that institution, its effects upon offspring and its influence upon education. By Dr. Robert A. Greer. A valuable "opening wedge" in missionary work. Price reduced from 25c to 10c.

THE SECRET INSTRUCTIONS OF THE JESUITS. A reprint from an edition published in 1723, quoted by the highest authorities as authentic. The work is redolent of Jesuit craft and is a plain index to the underhand working of that order against the welfare of individuals and society. 15c.

THE STATE: ITS HISTORIC ROLE. Prince Peter Kropotkin. 10c.

THE TROUBADOURS AND COURTS OF LOVE. J. F. Rowbotham. Cloth. 250 pages. $1.50. Postage, 15c.

THE UNWOMANLY WOMAN. Lizzie M. Holmes. Together with That Great Fraud, Telepathy (Moses Hull), Virgin Soil (George Egerton), and Normal Sexual Action (Ernest Winne). 25c.

THE WORM TURNS. Revolutionary Poems. Voltairine de Cleyre. 15c.

THOMAS JEFFERSON. His Political, Social and Religious Philosophy. Gen. M. M. Trumbull. 5c.

TOKOLOGY. A book for every woman. By Alice B. Stockham, M. D. Illustrated. Tokology teaches possible painless pregnancy and parturition, giving full, plain directions for the care of a woman before and after confinement. The ailments of pregnancy can be prevented as well as the pains and dangers of childbirth avoided and women need not go down to death giving birth to children. English, German or Swedish. $2.25.

WHAT IS PROPERTY? An Inquiry into the Principle of Right and of Government. P. J. Proudhon. Translated by B. R. Tucker. 500 pages. Cloth. (Slightly shelf-worn.) Reduced to $1.

TRAVELS IN FAITH. By Capt. Robert C. Adams. His mental experience from superstition to rationalism. Cloth, 75c; paper, 25c.

VACCINATION A GIGANTIC CRIME. Samuel Darling. 15c.

VINDICATION OF THOMAS PAINE. Col. R. G. Ingersoll. Dealing with all the slanders brought against the name and fame of Paine. A little pamphlet which every admirer of Thomas Paine should have by him for reference. Paper, 15c.

VITAL FORCE. Magnetic Exchange and Magnetation. Albert Chavannes. 25c.

WHAT THE YOUNG NEED TO KNOW: a Primer of Sexual Rationalism. Edwin C. Walker. "Let us cease to be ashamed of what makes us men, of what makes us women, of what gives us the kisses of lovers and the encircling arms of babes." Paper covers; 42 large pages. 10c.

WHAT IS RELIGION? Ingersoll's last public address, delivered at the meeting of the Free Religious Association in Boston on June 3, 1899. To which is appended the poem, "Declaration of the Free," the last verse written by the great Freethinker. 5c.

WHEN LOVE IS LIBERTY AND NATURE LAW. John Badcock, Jr. 10c.

WHY THE UNDERTONE? An open letter to Judge Gary. Sarah E. Ames. 10c.

WOMAN, CHURCH, AND STATE. Matilda Joslyn Gage. This is Mrs. Gage's last and crowning work. Every woman ought to read it. Every liberal woman and man will want it. A burning protest against the tremendous wrong done woman by the church, which controlled the state. It ought to be widely read for the good it will do. Cloth, $1.50; paper, 75c.

WOMAN: Four Centuries of Progress. Susan H. Wixon. 5c.

WOMAN IN THE PAST, PRESENT AND FUTURE. Woman was the first human being that tasted bondage. Woman was a slave before the slave existed. The basis of all oppression is economic dependence on the oppressor. This has been the condition of woman in the past and is so still. She is now a slave of the slave. This work is August Bebel's masterpiece. 8vo, 378 pages. 25c.

Address M. Harman, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

Price 2 Cents.

LUCIFER.

THE LIGHT-BEARER.

THIRD SERIES, VOL. VI., No. 9. CHICAGO, ILLINOIS, MAR. 13, E. M. 302. [C. E. 1902.] WHOLE No. 908

QUATRAINS.

THE NUDE IN ART.

To the pure all things are pure;
The body's beauty with the rose.
Whose soul is carrion must endure
To find its reek where'er he goes.

TRAGEDY.

For tragedy, seek not the mimic stage;
Look thou on men who sink 'neath Plutus' gyves:
These, robbed of manhood, hunger's battle wage,
Giving for beggars' crusts their beggared lives.

DOUBT AND CERTAINTY.

Rather would I my mind were all unfixed,
My thoughts like leaves wind-blown or low or high,
Rather would I dark doubt with doubt were mixed
Than that my life proved constant to a lie.

FREE LOVE.

As sure as love is voluntary now and evermore,
There is no power in any earth or any sky above
With strength enough to make it yours if once the charm is o'er;
Whatever ye hold fast in bonds, know this; ye hold not love.

WILLIAM FRANCIS BARNARD.

For the Day and the Hour.

BY IRONICUS.

Love laughs at wedlock smiths.

* * *

Capital punishment: the exploitation of labor.

* * *

Socialism that is voluntary is superior to authoritarian Socialism.

* * *

When a divorce can be procured because of cold feet certainly it should be easy to procure one because of a cold heart.

* * *

One kind of direct stealing, burglary, is punished by death in the state of Georgia; all kinds of indirect stealing are encouraged and rewarded in Georgia as in all other states.

* * *

Are they Courts of Justice when they punish "Collusion," and declare it a crime for two human beings to say that they do not love each other and therefore wish to have their legal bonds severed?

* * *

The remarriage of divorced persons is forbidden by the Episcopal Church except where cause for divorce existed before the annulled marriage was consummated; thus is the immoral living together of those who do not love made moral in the name of religion. Which is the worse?

* * *

Voluntaryism is opposed to authority, but it is not opposed to defense against crime; in fact voluntaryism is just another name for denial of and defense against crime in the acts of a state. The state commands because it is strong enough to command and because it can exact obedience; even the state's commands against crimes are not made because the state is in the right. The state is a tyrant. It would be more difficult to prove that there is such a right as the right to tyrannize than to prove that a man may justly resist tyranny.

* * *

In love relationships the tyranny of the state, while no more complete and oppressive than in the spheres of other human relationships, is felt more keenly because, love being one of the major emotions or states of feeling, it yields less readily to coercion and oppressive laws than emotions and desires which long ago enslaved, know not the state of liberty any more. The heart then is at war against the state, the heart is frankly an Anarchist. The state tries to control love, it even labors to produce public opinion favorable to the control. What results? Loveless unions, unwelcome offspring, ruined health, prostitution, inconceivable deceit, and life's fairest hopes blasted in the end. If the obstacles in the way of economical justice were removed the plea which the state makes to extenuate interference in love affairs would no longer have any force. The state kills love, but the state must live, though love die.

* * *

And now in a million thistle fields the asses are beginning to bray anew because Miss Herron, a sister of Professor Herron, departs from the time honored crime of promising to love, honor, and obey while life lasts, and proposes to take a partner upon "the new plan," the union to last while love lasts. What the asses want is of course that Miss Herron shall forget love, shall forget purity, shall ignore truth, and accept the fantastic and unreasonable standards of "morality" which prevail in Assdom; they want her to pledge herself to love, which pledge would be a lie, since love is not a creation of the will, and comes not nor goes at command; that lie once told they feel that the demands of virtue are sure to be satisfied and public purity assured. What they do not and will not, or cannot see is that any sex relation which is not voluntary is repulsive to truth, to love, to purity, and that the evil of maintaining such a relation must outweigh by a thousand fold that which results when those whose loves do not unite, part out of self respect and respect for one another. State-made morality again. Let us define it. State made morality is that element of conduct which ensures the power and permanency of the state in all the affairs of the individual and which, by robbing the individual of all initiative makes him believe and finally assert with all his might that the individual was made for the state rather than the state for the individual. An ass loves his thistles; if you point him to sweet tender grass and fragrant clover he replies by calling your attention to his fine personal appearance, which he avers has resulted from a thistle diet. "Now, what a thing it is to be an ass!"

* * *

The State is just now engaged in a vigorous attempt to suppress the advocacy of physical force as a means of solving social problems, and incidentally to discourage the advocacy of any means looking to the amelioration of the economic condition of the common people. Example is better than precept; when the state ceases to rely upon physical force in the shape of armies, soulless judges, police, etc., in order to keep social problems unsolved, terrorism will doubtless become obsolescent and reasoned persuasion will have its way. There is the sound, the hollow sound of insincerity in the protests of a criminal against crime.

* * *

Let the truth be known; the primal function of a state is not to be just, but to be strong. The state is made by strength, upon strength it lives. In a democratic state even, we see but a metamorphosed absolutism. A ballot is a bullet. The paper shots are fired; there are two armies, the larger army wins. The strong rule the weak; it was ever thus. There is no blood relationship between might and justice; the state lives by subduing, justice lives by virtue of the fact of immemorial protest against mere might. Of two petty kings each would rule alone; with their armies they met and fought; one king was killed, afterward the other ruled alone. Two political parties meet and fight; one falls, the other rules alone. The state denies itself when it attempts to put down physical force. "Government is civil war."

The Little Strikers.

It was early, very early, in the mild March morning last year, when the little velvet cutters, in twos and threes, came trooping down the hillsides into Haledon Hollow and found me sitting there in the doorway of the deserted mill.

They seemed more like a band of school children off for a spring holiday than the company of striking wage earners that they were, assembling for their daily mass meeting. Children they were, every one of them. What if their little old faces and bent forms did say ever so plainly that they had never been children, but always women? The heart that beat under every small, shabby jacket, was the heart of a child.

And because they had children's hearts and because every breeze that soft March morning blew the breath of spring each girl grasped the ends of a skipping rope in her rough little hands, and two of the strikers, the tiniest of them all, had not forgotten to bring with them their long neglected dolls. For after all, it was a holiday, a strike holiday, the only holiday the working child knows.

The mass meeting was called for 8 o'clock, and there they were at that hour, every one of the seventy-five strikers, skipping ropes, dolls and all, gathered in small groups and whispering and eyeing me furtively.

Their shyness was the shyness of country children, for such all of them really were. At last two little girls with more courage than the others approached, while their companions fled in dismay and disappeared around the corner of the big unsightly mill.

"Please, Ma'am," one of them asked, "are you a forelady looking for hands?"

She carried a doll in her arms, and when I told her that I was not a forelady, but had come to spend the day with her and the rest of the girls if they would allow me, her big, brown eyes opened wide and she laughed.

"You're surely not Mother Jones, are you? I thought she was an old, white haired woman."

"No."

"And not her daughter, either?"

"We are looking for Mother Jones this morning," the larger girl spoke up, "and we all thought you might be her when we first saw you as we came down the hill. Oh, we do wish Mother Jones would come and help us with our strike! They say that strikers always win when they have Mother Jones to help them." The child with the doll vanished, but in a moment reappeared with two other girls, who began to make shy advances to friendliness by asking me if I lived in Paterson. As soon as I told them that I had come from New York and that I knew, too, what it was to work and suffer and starve, and that I had come to spend the day with them and find out the truth of their condition, every bit of their shy proudness was gone, and they led me into the deserted mill to show me how much human suffering is woven into the warp and woof and pile of every yard of velvet that was ever made.

Were it not for the long frames that fill the floors of the big barren rooms, a velvet factory might well be mistaken for a flour mill. The beams and rafters overhead, the floor under foot, the walls, are all enfolded in a sheet of soft, white dust from the lime-coated webs on the frames.

It is this all pervading lime dust which makes the velvet cutter's work one of the most unendurable of all laborious occupations. As proof, it is only necessary to look at the hands of a velvet cutter who has worked at the frames any length of time. They are hacked and bleeding most of the time, even in the summer, and in the winter, the girls told me, it is something almost unbearable. The finger nails are ruined beyond all remedy, and the pretty, soft hair soon becomes harsh and brittle and breaks off and loses all its luster.

But until some philanthropist gifted with Yankee ingenuity comes along and invents a machine for cutting velvet, little girls' hands must work, though hacked and bleeding, and little girls' ringlets and braids must be sacrificed in order that the edge of the long, steel velvet cutter may be preserved.

"Liming" is the first process which the uncut velvet must go through before it is ready for the cutter's knife. This work each little cutter does for herself, usually at night after the working day is over, so as to have it dry and ready for handling the next morning.

The webs of 100 yards each are stretched over wooden frames and heavily whitewashed with a strong solution of lime. When perfectly dry, the still web is unrolled on the same frame, ten yards at a time, and the "races" cut, one by one, by hand.

To make the most meager wages at this work entails a labor almost herculean in its torture. It means that these fragile girls, these stunted children, as they ply their tasks up and down the velvet frames must walk not less than twenty-five miles a day.

Nine hundred races she has to cut in every twenty-two inch width velvet. Nine hundred times does she have to walk, or rather run, back and forth the length of the ten yard frame before every race in that much velvet is cut. That means something more than five miles of hot, fast, breathless walking, during which she is not allowed to stop one moment to rest, nor could she afford to stop even if she might. She must cut at least forty-five yards of this kind of velvet a day, or it is not worth her while to work at all. Maybe she is working on what is known as "slips," a cheaper quality of velvet and one in which she is expected to make ninety yards a day.

For this toilsome labor the little girl carries home to her mother at the end of every two weeks wages based upon $2.85 for every 200 yards. The most that I found any child to have earned was $6.50 for a fortnight's work. But that was a red-letter pay day, and did not come around very often or to many of the cutters.

What eats into their pitiful earnings are the dockings for damages and broken knives, and then sometimes, only too often, they get a piece of material full of snags and knots which it takes double time to cut.

At 7 o'clock in the morning each little cutter has her long, sharp dagger-like knife in hand and is at her frame ready to run the long day's tread mill. She stops at 12 o'clock long enough to eat a hasty lunch, and then back again to the tread mill until a quarter to 6.

This is the gist of the story of how a yard of velvet is made, as told me and shown me by the little strikers gathered there in their abandoned mill.

"And now," said the child who acted as spokeswoman, "and now we have struck for better pay. We want $3.50 for 200 yards of slips instead of $2.85. Mr. Smith, the superintendent, has offered us $3, but we won't take a cent less than what we have asked for, and no damages either

"Oh, if Mother Jones would only come and help us, we'd surely win," said another.

"Yes, if Mother Jones only knew how our feet and legs ache and swell she'd come to us. I know she would."

And surely Mother Jones or any other mother's heart would have bled to see the pitiful sight that I saw. Little feet swollen and distorted and the blue veins in small ankles and legs gnarled and knotted. The agony suffered from twenty-five mile walks every day on such feet and with such ankles can better be imagined than expressed. Even the children themselves wince when they recount it.

It was pitiful to watch them scanning the hills for Mother Jones. I supposed she had been sent for, but when I made inquiries I found that in their childish ignorance they supposed Mother Jones to be a sort of all-wise feminine providence who turned up just in the nick of time to take the side of the striker as against employer. With all the sublime faith of childhood they stood there in the mill yard and waited and watched for a little, old white-haired woman to come down and help them, and I could not find the courage to tell them that Mother Jones was several hundred miles away, and having two or three other and bigger strikes on hand, had in all likelihood as yet never heard of theirs.

But Mother Jones couldn't come, and three days afterward the brave little strikers were forced to accept the compromise originally offered them, $3, for the cutting of 200 yards of velvet.—Dorothy Adams in "New York Herald."

Sanctity of Motherhood.

An encouraging "sign of the times" is an editorial in the Philadelphia "Times" of Feb. 23, under the above caption, which we herewith reproduce:

In the National Council of Women at Washington on Friday Mrs. Kate Waller Bartlett set forth an idea that does not often find sufficiently intelligent expression. She pleaded for the better recognition of motherhood, irrespective of its particular surroundings or antecedents. She said what has been only too well known to society these many ages, that the wayward woman, if a fair chance be given her in the battle of life, can earn an honest and suitable living for herself and her child. She might have spoken this truth more positively and fully: that Society refuses anything approaching a fair chance to those who have once missed the normal path, and yet at the same time hypocritically fosters in a great degree the vice which it thus affects to punish. And how generous and brave is Society! It visits its punishment on the weak and defenseless, on the woman and the child, while the strong man goes unscathed!

There is a remedy for this condition other than the appeal to Christian charity, which continuously shows itself so un-Christian that it rarely heeds the appeal. That is the cultivation of a higher reverence for the abstract idea of motherhood and a juster appreciation of its concrete meaning.

For many a poor woman there has been moral salvation in motherhood. It has awakened the best that was in her, the existence of which she may not have suspected before; it has caused her to develop virtues truly heroic. For what can be harder for such a one, with a record of shame upon her, than to go forth into the world, endure its hostility, its venom, its Pharisceism, and, conquering herself and it, be what she was not before—good—first for her child, then for herself? If that is not heroism, can there be any?

The chapter of woman's fault can close from the time she knows that this sacred role of motherhood is hers. All the past ought not to damn the new life that is guiltless of it. Even the Pharisees, if they were pinned down to it, would not confess themselves so cowardly as to think that it should do so. And the mother, finding a new soul-life in her motherhood, can keep the door of the past shut—can do so surely—if Society will give her a chance.

Not all erring women would rise to the height of this role. But many, very many, could and would if motherhood for itself alone were held in greater sacredness. Civilization is not at its best where the reverence for motherhood in the abstract is not at the highest, and where the mantle of charity is not thrown broadly about the erring, whatever their antecedents, whose lot it is.

The Fight for Free-Press.

The power of Comstockism is waning. In the past few years the American Press-Writers' Association has so thoroughly shown up its impudence that Federal judges have heeded the "word to the wise," and dismissed cases that ministers and Comstock agents have assiduously worked up and calculated upon accordingly. The last sample of judicial wisdom comes from Denver, in connection with the editor of "The Vampyre," of that city. As usual, he was arrested at the instance of a minister for the publication of alleged "obscene" matter in his "Vampyre." An examination of the magazine proves it to be thoroughly clean and healthy, and really engaged in the highest form of humanitarian and Christian endeavor.

Another Comstock case is one that will come up for trial in March, before United States district judge, Cornelius H. Hanford, at Seattle, Washington, with Wilson R. Gay as prosecuting attorney. This case relates to the arrest of three men connected with the publication of "Discontent," a small paper published by the Anarchist colony at Home, Washington. Since the arrest of the three men, the country has been flooded with the very article whose publication caused their arrest, and if the article in question was in any way "obscene," thousands of persons of both sexes could be arrested for likewise sending it through the mails. But editors, authors, scientists and business men who have seen it, pronounce as ridiculous the "obscene" branding the Comstock agents have been pleased to bestow upon it. At the same time, the papers of the Middle, West and East are alive with articles and letters vindicating the publishers, and formulating public opinion into a contempt for both the law and its agents—F. B. Livesey, in "Our Home Rights."

Husband and Wife.

The following letter and clipping are self-explanatory. Another instance of the ever-present tendency of courts to usurp control over the private and personal affairs of women and men:

DEAR MR. HARMAN:—I send you herewith four clippings that may be of interest to you. They are from the Chicago "Legal News." I notice an Illinois case recently decided by the supreme court making the wife's independent property liable for the husband's maintenance. This is a new line for legal decisions and is made to bridge over the separate property acts of married couples. Learned legality will never allow the family to be anything more than a very limited partnership with all the rights invested on one side only. FRANK D. BLUE.

Terre Haute, Ind.

The "American Law Register" says. The tendency of the courts to restrict the operation of the legislative acts in regard to the rights and liabilities of married women is in evidence in numerous cases. A fresh illustration occurs in the case of Ott v. Hentall, 47 Atl. 80, where the Supreme Court of New Hampshire held that the statutes of that State, enabling married women to hold property to their own use and enlarging their rights and liabilities, do not affect the wife's right to pledge her husband's credit for necessary medical attendance, nursing and board while compelled to live apart from him by his misconduct. The court does not examine to any extent the basis of the husband's liability, assuming as a principle to start with that it is an obligation of the husband suitably to maintain his wife. A ground to relieve the husband might have been found in the theoretical origin of this rule, from the fact that at common law the husband practically controlled his wife's estate and therefore had in consequence a duty of support. When this estate is given back to her control, it might be argued, such duty ceases; but the court takes the conservative position—a position which is certainly supported by common sense.

"Americanists" is a new word in the Philippines. It has the same significance there that "tory" had to the founders of the American republic.—The Public.

Lucifer, the Lightbearer

M. HARMAN, EDITOR AND PUBLISHER.

PUBLISHED EVERY WEEK AT 500 FULTON STREET, CHICAGO, ILL.

Terms: One year, $1; six months, 50 cents; three months, 25 cents.

Entered at the Chicago Postoffice as Second-Class Mail Matter.

Eastern Representative, E. C. Walker, 244 W. 143d street, New York.

908.

If these figures correspond with the number printed on the wrapper of your Lucifer, your subscription expires with this number.

If a copy of Lucifer fails to reach you, please order by number or date.

Lucifer will not be sent "by return mail" unless stamps for postage are enclosed with order.

To NEW SUBSCRIBERS: Your subscription is paid to No. If you have not ordered Lucifer, a friend has subscribed for you. If you do not wish to receive it, please notify us by card or through your postmaster. If you wish to become a regular subscriber you will confer a favor by renewing before the expiration of your trial subscription.

Getting Ready for the Empire.

"Coming events cast their shadows before," says the proverb.

"Prince" Henry, a scion of the royal house, the imperial house of Hohenzollern, Germany, came to Chicago, remained a few hours and is now gone.

Like Cæsar the great, when returning from one of his military campaigns, this Hohenzollern can say of his visit to Chicago: "I came, I saw, I conquered."

Never before in the history of Chicago have such honors been heaped upon any man. If the United States had been a colonial dependency belonging to Germany the display of civic honors and of "loyalty" to the imperialist idea as a basis of human government, could scarcely have been more pronounced and extravagant.

The "Chicago American" gives an itemized statement of the cost to the city of this ovation to royalty, from which we learn that "Prince Henry's entertainment, directly and indirectly, cost Chicago and its citizens $230,750. The length of the royal stay was nineteen and one-half hours, or 1,170 minutes, an expense of $197.22 a minute."

Would any city of Christendom, outside of the United States, have equalled this record of nineteen hours simply to do honor to a scion of royalty who comes not as an ambassador on official business but simply as a Prince of Royal Blood?

Among the items of this bill of expense—all to be paid ultimately by the workers who had no part nor lot in the feasting, the ball, the civic and social functions—except as on-lookers from a very respectful distance—among the items of expense are these:

"Public decorations."
"Maintenance special railroad train."	4,000
"Individual banquet subscription of $50, apiece by 155 committeemen,"	5,000
	7,750.
"Cost of Germania club luncheon.
"Cost [to the city] of hotel entertainment."	20,000
	7,000

Part of which hotel expense, according to the "American," was for the entertainment of "Herman, a huge German stag-hound, who occupies an elaborate room on the second floor of the Auditorium. Two servants have no other care than to look to the safety and comfort of the dog"—"a present to His Royal Highness from Kaiser Wilhelm."

Another very suggestive item of expense to be paid by the city is $8,000 for "police protection and escort," suggesting the inquiry as to how much the city would have had to pay for extra "police protection and escort" on the day that some representative of German workingmen should visit his brother workingmen of Chicago, in an unofficial or even official capacity.

* * *

That Theodore Roosevelt should hob-nob on familiar terms with the representatives of European royalty and imperialism, is a thing to be expected. A man who could treat the memory of Thomas Paine as Roosevelt is reported to have done—Paine, the "Author-hero of the American Revolution;" Paine the greatest of all the writers in defense of the "Rights of Man" as against the assumed rights of kings, emperors, princes and nobles—that this man Roosevelt should be found honoring royalty whenever an opportunity offered, is simply in accord with the "fitness of things."

Also that Washington, D. C., and New York City should receive with open arms and lion'ze ad nauseam a man who has no other claim to social recognition than that he represents the principle announced by his brother William that "God" selects a few to rule over the many, that is, represents the "Divine right of Kings" as against the right of self-government—this, too, is not to be wondered at, for Washington and New York are NOT American cities in any proper sense of the word.

The elect "four hundred" of New York—Wall street, headquarters of plutocracy in the western world, with its remorseless grip on the throat of American industry and finance; the wasteful extravagance, the pharisaic exclusiveness, the monkey-like imitation of European courts and manners, that now characterize both the cities just named, all justify the charge that these two are not representative American cities.

* * *

But CHICAGO!—the great inland city of America; Chicago, with its comparative youth and consequent freedom from the blight of conventionalism and castes that always grow and flourish with age and concentrated wealth; Chicago, with its close affiliation with and dependence upon the vast, the almost boundless prairies of the great middle west, with their suggestions of freedom and equality of rights—that Chicago should go wild over the visit of one man, a very ordinary man intellectually speaking; that Chicago should get down on its knees, so to speak, in the mud of its own very muddy streets, to do honor to old-world royalty, THIS was not to be expected; this was NOT in accord with the eternal fitness of things.

* * *

Speaking of mud—some of us who did not see the show, and would not have spent a nickel in money or a minute of time to see it, are just irreverent enough, just "disloyal" enough, to ask if it would not have been better to use part at least of this quarter million of dollars in removing some of the filth from our disgracefully dirty streets, our disease-producing streets and alleys.

For half the money—to say nothing of time, which, as Franklin says, is money—spent by Chicagoans in entertaining a foreign lord, who never did an hour of really useful work, perhaps, in his whole life, many hundreds of idle men and teams could have been set to work at street-cleaning, adding greatly to the health, beauty and comfort of our city, and making hundreds of needy families happy by the distribution of this money as wages.

For many months past the daily papers have been telling us that Chicago is on the verge of bankruptcy; that the schools cannot be run on full time; that streets must go dirty; that the police force must be cut down; that many needed municipal improvements must wait, all because of lack of money in the city treasury. But now, judging from the splendor and unheard-of extravagance with which this "royal pauper"—to use an English phrase—is entertained at public as well as private expense, the city must have "money to burn!"

* * *

Of the Chicago dailies none, perhaps, filled its pages more completely with pictures and minute details of the show while it lasted than did the "Chicago American," but now that the royal pageant is gone, and the glamour and craze partially dissipated, a reaction seems to be taking place in the editor's mind.

In his evening edition of March 6 the only editorial is devoted to reflections on "Our National Excitement About the Prince."

"It is hereditary," says the editor, "like our conception of heaven."

Illustrating this idea he says, "The republican who sees the Prince is very much like the vegetarian who sees a haunch of roast beef. Neither can help getting excited. We have eaten flesh for so many hundreds of centuries that we cannot hope to become vegetable eaters in our hearts for a long, long time. With the keenest enjoyment, intensest excitement, the most earnest striving, we have bowed and scraped and cringed and kow-towed to royalties or their equivalents for many hundreds of thousands of years."

The editor dwells at considerable length on "the power of heredity. . . . Our idea of heaven is based not on the sound thoughts of today but on heredity. Heaven is described for us by the imaginings of men of Oriental race. The delight of these men, their one ambition was to be well received at court."

In large type and with the word prince in large capitals the "American" proceeds to say:

"We declare ourselves republicans, but the old love of royalty, the old instinctive desire for place and position, is strong within us. When the excitement of revolution is over, when we have succeeded in thrashing and humiliating one King, we are very soon ready to run after and flatter that King's great grandson, his grandson's child.

"There is good, hearty American feeling in the friendly greeting to Prince Henry. There is also a lot of good, hearty American snobbishness. We like the Prince because he represents the German people, who have helped to build up our country. But we pay an enormous price to see him at the opera, or we stand with blue noses to see him on the street free of charge, not because we love the German people, but because in our primitive king-serving hearts we love a German PRINCE."

* * *

As Shakespere puts it, "'Tis true; 'tis pity; and pity 'tis 'tis true!" True, all except the statement that "we like the Prince because he represents the German people!"

On reading words like these—to be found in all the great dailies, if "Prince" Henry did not say out loud, "Lord, what fools these mortals be", he certainly wanted to say it, if he thinks at all.

Prince Henry came to America as the representative of his brother, the German Emperor, to help at the ceremony of launching a royal yacht—a costly pleasure boat in which German workingmen have no interest, no part whatever, except to pay all expenses!

Prince Henry belongs to the ruling class in Germany, which class is the worst enemy the working masses can possibly have—a VAMPYRE class, who rob the people of their hard earnings to spend in show, in parades and in luxurious idleness, or, putting it at the best, in cultivating the arts of war—the arts of MURDER.

The emperor of Germany is called the "War Lord." The army and navy budgets of Europe cost the working masses more than one thousand millions of dollars every year, whether engaged in actual war or not. All this expenditure is not for the good of the working people at all, but simply to prevent these royal robbers from invading and plundering each other. Of this robber system the man whose entertainment cost the people of Chicago one hundred and ninety-seven dollars per minute during his brief stay, is an hereditary representative.

No blame can properly attach to him for being born an hereditary robber, but that the American press, almost without exception should call him a representative of the "German people," this would be simply incredible if we did not have the evidence constantly before our eyes.

* * *

TREATMENT OF THE BOERS.

If anything were needed to prove that it is royalty, monarchy, imperialism, that causes Henry Hohenzollern to be so interesting to the average American, this need is supplied by the contrast between the reception given to him and that accorded to Wolmarans and Wessels, the official representatives of the South African republics. The length of this article forbids enlarging upon this point, but the bare mention of the damning facts of the case should be enough to show that, in the language of the editorial from which we have just quoted, "We are republicans only in name", and that candor, honesty, compels us to say that the "Chicago American's" summing up of the lesson to be learned from the late visit of royalty is true—alas, too true:

"There is a lesson for every American statesman, for every simple American voter, in this visit of Prince Henry. The lesson is this: We are republicans only in name. Our republicanism is only skin deep. A man of great genius like Alexander or Napoleon with the greatest of ease could twist us back to the old times, set us all struggling, not for free government, but for a good place at court."

A man's real character is shown by his ideals—by the thoughts and things he most admires. It is the same with peoples or nations. As a nation we admire royalty; we go wild over titles and rank, and at the same time we turn the cold shoulder to men who represent a people near of kin to us by blood and by what is supposed to be our principles of government, all of which goes to show that we are getting ready to THROW OFF THE MASK, the pretence of being republicans and democrats, and to come out openly for monarchy and empire.

M. HARMAN.

How Shall We Score?

BY TAK KAK.

A good-hearted correspondent of Lucifer invites us to score one for Uncle Sam because it has been decided "that a common-law marriage was just as good as a priest or judge-made-law marriage," this decision being given by a United States Court of Appeals. Of course it is natural to sympathize with the common-law wife defending her claim to her share in her late husband's estate, so-called, probably embodying her own earnings, but before we throw up our hats over the principle of the decision, let us ask what there is in it. The authority which has so decided has a policy that favors marriage. This it shows in certain peculiarities in its homestead land law and other laws. In this instance it decides that a certain couple were married. Common-law marriage being an already recognized mode of marriage, the decision strikes down a claim that the co-habitation in the case in point was anything short of a common-law marriage. It establishes that the fact in that particular union came up to the requirements of common-law marriage.

The right to get married is surely no great thing for us to rejoice over, and in as much as marriage is a very serious matter and common law marriage is somewhat more open to attack than marriage recorded in the regular way it would seem that those who want to be married beyond question would choose the record form.

Some people want to be married or not as they see fit, and choose to avoid making a record so that they can control the evidence to a great extent. This plan involves the woman partner especially in risk of losing what she has helped to save. The evidence of marriage is insufficient just when it is wanted for pecuniary protection.

A court may save individual interests, but why run the risk? Why should a woman have her earnings under a man's control and depend on his kind disposition either by marrying him or pretending to marry him? But if they will marry, why leave the evidence uncertain? There is the less excuse for that where divorces are easy (if they will marry or pretend to marry).

Then again, let us consider that if a judge leaves a little more to common-law presumptions than before and thereby gives one woman a farm, the same decision is pretty sure to fasten the yoke upon other persons who fancied they could throw it off at pleasure and may serve to convict some of them of bigamy.

Nothing is stated to inform us whether in the Oklahoma case there was any extension of the common-law marriage doctrine—any principle involved in the decision. However that may be, the extension of liberty and not the extension of marriage is the aim of Lucifer and the interest of women.

If it were decided that all cohabitation is marriage, then Mr. Shepherd would probably see that his "just as good" can be read "just as bad." In fact the common law entrance to marriage is merely an entrance. Marriage is the something after all. It is the state of being legally yoked. Any tightening of the doubtful yoke is in the line of authoritative control. Every decision which affirms a marriage from circumstances is congenial to the plan of authoritative regulation of the relation of the sexes. The contrary principle is the liberty to live a reasonable sexual life according to the needs of the individuals concerned and not to be bound by conditions arbitrarily prescribed for them by authority.

Common-law marriage may yet become a most dangerous thing. Fanaticism is capable of attempting to construe the first exercise of power to cohabit as being marriage, hence making bigamy of the first act of variety. Is not this the logical complement of common-law marriage? Our forefathers were content to recognize notorious continued relations. Moderns have invented peculiar laws such as that establishing an age of consent not corresponding to puberty and a law (in Colorado) making seduction "provable" on the oath of the complainant unsupported by other evidence. With such reaches visible, some such monkey-trick on the basis of the common-law marriage theory is no improbability.

Legal marriage is the opposite of sexual freedom. All roads into bondage are but variations on the same theme. The really valuable decision,—which we need not expect,—would be that the right to life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness implies the right to cohabit without being married, for that is the right to peaceably cease cohabitation without disability. A common-law marriage is mostly unjust to women, being of the nature of a knife handled in the dark, the possessor does not very certainly know which way it will cut.

A Socialist's View of Political Action.

BY ALBERT STROUT.

The natural instinct of the race to conquer and blend to its uses the resources of the planet it dwells on grows stronger as the centuries pass, therefore, the necessity of united effort grows more and more pressing. As Marcus Hitch has well said, "economic determinism, ... is not an eternal law. It is nearing the end of its course. . . . Under complete political equality economic determinism would be and will be supplanted by political determinism. Society unified by the common ownership of capital will become the conscious master of its own destiny, free from economic class control.

The adherents have for their aim, the organization of the working classes of all countries, regardless of color, creed or sex, into a political party, for the purpose of getting into the possession of the workers the political power that the capitalists now use to maintain their class supremacy.

Every Socialist recognizes the fact that it is by political power that the capitalists make their oppression constitutional, and their robbery legal. The Socialist sees that the only way to abolish class rule, class privilege, and class exploitation, is for the workers to unite and use their political power in the interest of their own class.

The conditions of the workers determine their needs. Owning neither land nor machinery, and working together by the thousand in factories, mills, mines, workshops and on farms, producing wealth for the owners thereof, their real need is the collective ownership and democratic control by the people of all means of producing and distributing wealth. To teach them how to accomplish this, and to point out to them the road of least resistance in its achievement, is the mission of Socialism.

That Socialism will eventually lead to something higher than the human mind has yet conceived, we do not deny. But we do maintain that society will pass through a stage of democracy before its units will be far enough advanced to take intelligent advantage of all the rights that the heritage of a bountiful cosmos has bequeathed them. Therefore, we consider it a criminal act towards humanity to underestimate the value of political action.

Faith. Hope.

BY S. C. CAMPBELL.

As a panacea for the ills of humanity the religion of Christianity has been tried by some for nearly 2000 years. But all are not satisfied with the result, or with the religion. A writer says "O religion! thou art not yet in the full beauty of thy ideal, there is a narrowness about thee and there are spots upon thy beautiful face. But light is increasing, the clouds are breaking, the mist is rolling away and the haze of doubt and superstition is melting in the beautiful dawn of righteousness. This light is not coming from Russia; it cannot come from Protestant lands. The indications are that in the United States a new faith, a new hope is being born."

And this from a late Lucifer: "Mark Twain gives a proper characterization of the closing years of the nineteenth century in a salutation to the twentieth in this way:' 'I bring you the stately matron Christendom, returning bedraggled, besmirched and dishonored from pirate raids in Kinochow, Manchuria, South Africa and the Philippines, with her soul full of meanness, her pockets full of boodle and her mouth full of pious hypocrisies. Give her soap and water but hide the looking glass."

From the very beginning of Christianity its deeds will not bear close inspection. There has ever been a narrowness about it and spots upon its face. Until now, to the close unprejudiced observer and humanitarian, there is so little good and so much error in it that some have decided that something must be done or the wheels of progress can no longer turn, or turn but slowly. So a new faith and new hope are being born in the United States. The faith, the hope, that with FREE MOTHERHOOD we shall have a humanity needing not sacerdotal rites and ceremonies to fit it for heaven—or earth.

Notice.

The New York comrades have published 25,000 copies of a pamphlet composed of articles written by Henry Addis and Jay Fox. The pamphlet is very good for propaganda purposes, and to those who would like to distribute copies free, we will charge one-half cent per copy, no order to be less than twenty-five copies. Single copies 3 cents, including postage. Send all orders and money to R. Fritz, 267 Madison St., New York.

VARIOUS VOICES.

J. Wm. Lloyd, Westfield, N. J.:—Everybody says Lucifer is better and better. The editor's late articles have been very fine. Give him my good word.

Mary M. Clark, Albia, Iowa:—To say we are pleased with Dr. Foote's "Home Cyclopedia" is not expressing our feeling at all. It is surely a wonderful book at a wonderful price and will do an incalculable amount of good.

B. J. W., Springfield, S. D.:—Many thanks for your sample of Lucifer. I cannot say I agree with all it says, but being a progressive thinker much of its contents appeals to me. I enclose 65 cents for Lucifer three months and the accompanying list of pamphlets.

Albina L. Washburn, Denver, Colo.:—Am giving away Lucifers all the time. Find a few others doing the same. I find, too, prudishness becoming obsolete and common sense coming in. There are many groups of progressive people here studying along progressive lines.

O. Wegener, Comrade Pub., Co., 28 Lafayette Place, New York:—We are pleased to note that you have deemed "A Dialogue Between the Machine Gun and the Mauser" worthy of reproduction in Lucifer. We have reprinted the excellent little sketch in leaflet form that it may have a wide distribution. We sell fifty copies for a dime.

Leon Partridge, Milford, Mass.:—In the present condition of affairs, the need for a general movement for the betterment of conditions is plainly shown. Events are moving rapidly, and unless a steady advance is begun the party now in power will carry out its intention of crushing the people. We are in an age of transition, and it rests with us whether the present system or a higher one shall follow.

Protests, violence, and reaction are useless. Non-resistance can't avail. There is a remedy, and it is the reenforcement and steady agitation of socialistic methods and the social party.

The people at large are not able to understand the more advanced methods, but this one—being the next step upward—is open to all.

Under a social democracy or republic it will be possible to carry on liberalist work and live a personally free life. Under present conditions, the oligarchy is everything. Liberals, will you help your weaker brothers and sisters out of the monopolistic bog? If you will, agitate socialistic politics, vote them, talk them. Forego futile discussion and act. So will you win, and so gain liberty to act out your own theories.

By temporarily changing front and going with the course of events, you will make possible a rapid advance. All peoples rise by successive steps—not by long jumps. Set the masses to reaching for another upward step, and it will give you additional power for liberal work.

Personally, be what you are. But make your public work attractive to the mass who are yet in darkness. Don't blind them by a great glare, but let the light in gradually, and slowly enough to let the weakest see safely. And don't hurry others. Do as you would be done by. Remember that great bodies move slowly. Only harm is of haste.

AT HALF-PRICE

100 COPIES

OF

DR. FOOTE'S HOME CYCLOPEDIA.

While they last, a copy will be sent for only $1 to any subscriber to Lucifer whose subscription is paid one year in advance.

A FAMILY GUIDE-BOOK OF THE TWENTIETH CENTURY.

1248 PAGES. 500,000 WORDS. 400 PICTURES. 250 RECIPES.
90 CHROMOS ON 18 COLOR PLATES.

A few among the many subjects treated:

PART I.—Disease: Cause, Prevention, Cure.—Common Sense Remedies.
PART II.—Chronic Diseases of the Breathing Organs.—Diseases of the Heart and Blood Vessels.—Diseases of Liver, Stomach, Bowels.—Chronic Affections of the Urinary Organs.—Private Words for Men and Women.—Hints to the Children."—Constitutional Diseases.—Affections of the Eyes and Ears.—The Treatment of Disease, Containing 250 Prescriptions for Common Ailments and Complete Table of Antidotes for Poisons.
PART III.—Plain Home Talks About the Sexual Organs.—The Natural Relation of the Sexes.—Civilization and Marriage.—History of Marriage.—Defects in Marriage Systems.—Social Immorality. (Part III. takes a view of marriage and the sexual relations from a physiological standpoint. It is searching, interesting, original, and startling.
PART IV.—Improving Monogamic Marriage.—Adaptation in Marriage.—Restricted Marriage and Parentage.—Three Phases of Monogamic Marriages.—Intermarria of elatives.—Essays for Married People.—What Determines Sex.—Philosophy of Child-Yarking.—Essays for the Future.

Is your subscription paid to No. 957? If so, the Home Cyclopedia will be sent to you for $1 net. Postage 18 cts.

DO YOU EVER THINK

Of the fate of the Prodigal Daughter? The Prodigal Son forgiven and received with rejoicing—why should different treatment be accorded to his sister? For a vivid, true picture of the conditions in homes and factories which produce thousands of so-called fallen women every year, read "The Prodigal Daughter; or, The Price of Virtue," by Rachel Campbell.

SPECIAL OFFER.

This valuable work sent free on receipt of twenty-five cents for a thirteen week's trial subscription to Lucifer, the Light-Bearer. M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton Street, Chicago, Ill.

VICE: ITS FRIENDS AND ITS FOES

BY EDWIN C. WALKER.

CONTENTS:—Brotherhood of Man; The Recognition of Facts; Folly of "For Men Only." Definition of Vice; Horrors of Prostitution; Abnormal Sexuality; Errors of Fathers, Mothers and Teachers; Persecution Does Not Reform; Prostitution and the Crusaders; The "Spotting of the Heathen;" What are the Effects of Raids and Crusades? The Economic Side of the Problem. Party Politics in Vice Crusading; In What Does Prostitution Consist? Some Causes of Prostitution; Two Kinds of Prostitution Compared; The Opponents of Divorce; "Purifying" the Tenements; Action for Advanced Women.

WITH APPENDIX:—The Wanderings of a Spirit; Our Fair Civilization The Folly and Cruelty of It All. Price 15c.

Address M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

THE "I AM"

A revelation of the Real Self. Unveiling, disclosing and explaining the SOMETHING WITHIN. Not for sale but a copy will be mailed FREE on receipt of postage stamp to anyone who may feel so desirous of it.

WILLIAM WALKER ATKINSON
878 Auditorium Bldg., Chicago.

RADICAL LITERATURE.

For Sale by M. Harman, 500 Fulton St., Chicago.

A CHAMBERMAID'S DIARY. By Octave Mirbeau. Translated from the French by Benj. R. Tucker. 460 pages. Handsomely bound in cloth. $1.50.
ADVANCEMENT OF SCIENCE. Prof. John Tyndall's famous Inaugural Address before the British Association for the Advancement of Science, with the articles on Prayer which so stirred the religious world. Cloth, 50c; paper, 25c.
AGE OF REASON (The). Presentation edition. Part I reprinted from the first English edition. Part II corrected by M. D. Conway's edition. With Paine's own account of his arrest in Paris. Photogravure portrait from the Romney painting exhibited in London. Containing also portrait from the Jarvis painting; from the Peale painting, known as the Monneville portrait, representing Paine as a member of the French Assembly, and a half-tone of the Peale painting. Large half-tones of the house presented to Paine, in which he lived in New Rochelle, and of the monument and surroundings, Yorktown, Pa., scenes; also eight half-tone views of buildings, etc., associated with Paine's life in Paris, and other illustrations. With Preface, Chronological Table, Notes, Index, etc. Printed on antique wove paper, large octavo, wide margins, gilt edge. Special cover design in colors. The finest and most accurate of all editions. Boxed, Postpaid, $2.
AGE OF REASON. Thomas Paine. Cloth, with steel plate portrait, 50c; paper 25c.
ANARCHISM: Its Philosophy and Ideal. Peter Kropotkin. 5c.
A PHYSICIAN IN THE HOUSE. A New Family Medical Work, by Dr. J. H. Greer. This book is up-to-date in every particular. It will save you hundreds of dollars in doctors' bills. It tells you how to cure yourself by simple and harmless home remedies. It recommends no poisonous or dangerous drugs. It teaches how to save health and life by safe methods. It teaches prevention—that it is better to know how to live and avoid disease than to take any medicine as a cure. It is not an advertisement and has no medicine to sell. It has hundreds of excellent recipes for the cure of the various diseases. It has 18 colored plates showing different parts of the human body. The chapter on Painless Midwifery is worth its weight in gold to women. The "Care of Children" is something every mother ought to read. It teaches the value of Air, Sunshine, and Water as medicines. It contains valuable information for the married. This book cannot fail to please you. If you are looking for health by the safest and easiest means, do not delay getting it. It has eight hundred pages, is neatly bound in cloth, with gold letters, and will be sent by mail or express, prepaid to any address, for $1.75.
A PLEA FOR THE NEW WOMAN. May L. Collins. With large new half-tone portrait. 10c.
A TALE OF THE STRASSBURG GEESE. R. B. Kerr. Together with The Brike of the Strassburg Geese (C. W. Coolridge), A Traveler's Tale (R. B. Kerr), The Cat's Story (Emile Zola) 5c.
AUTONOMY, SELF-LAW. A fragmentary dissertation on the right to non-invasive self-bood. 5c.
A WEEK ON THE CONCORD AND MERRIMAC RIVERS. Henry D. Thoreau. 25c.
BALZAC'S SERAPHITA: The Mystery of Sex. Mary Hanford Ford. Cloth. $1.
BIBLE TEMPERANCE. E. C. Walker. Proving that Liquor Drinking is Condemned, Defended and Enjoined by the Bible, and giving close reference to the chapters and verses. 10c.
BORNING BETTER BABIES—Through regulating reproduction by controlling conception. E. B. Foote, Jr., M. D. 25c.
CAUSES OF HARD TIMES, and the Money Question. Albert Chavannes. 5c.
CHICAGO CONFERENCE OF TRUSTS. Speeches, debates, etc.; 21 portraits of delegates, including Benj. R. Tucker, Laurence Gronlund, William Jennings Bryan, Samuel Gompers, Louis F. Post, and George Schilling. 528 pages. 50c.
CHILDREN OF THE ITALIAN POOR. Paola Lombroso. 25c.
DARWIN, THE. (A novel.) Elmina D. Slenker. 50c.
DAWN OF CIVILIZATION, The; or, England in the Nineteenth Century. J. C. Spence. 176 pages. 25c.
DAWN-THOUGHT ON THE RECONCILIATION. By J. Wm. Lloyd. An inspired treatise that, with insight and solution, touches all the questions of life, love, soul and society. A prose-poem, simple enough for a child to enjoy, deep enough to make a philosopher think. The largest creed, the most generous theory, the gladdest gospel. A book of life. A religion of growth and the overlook—freedom and optimism. Read it. Printed in old style antique type, rubricated with portrait of the author. In three editions, de luxe, plain and paper bound. Prices, $1.25, $1.00 and 50c.
DIGGING FOR BED-ROCK. Camp-meeting talks and sketches by Moses Harman. 5c.
ECONOMICS OF ANARCHY. A Study of the Industrial Type. Dyer D. Lum. 15c.

DR. FOOTE'S SOCIAL SCIENCE SERIES OF DIME PAMPHLETS—Wallock: Scientific Marriage; Heredity; A B C of Temperamentals; Powell and his Critics; Physiological Marriage; Physical Improvement of Humanity; Causes of Disease, Insanity, and Premature Death; A Step Backward. Any of the above books sent by mail on receipt of price.

DYNAMIC THEORY OF LIFE AND MIND. An attempt to show that all organic beings are both constructed and operated by the dynamic agencies of their respective environments. By James R. Alexander. Over 200 illustrations, 27 chapters, 1,067 pages and a 5-column index of 11 pages. Cloth, $3.75.

EAST TENNESSEE SKETCHES. A sad Cecile Chavannes. 25c.

EIGHT-HOUR MOVEMENT. John P. Altgeld, ex-Governor of Illinois. 5c.

EVOLUTION AND REVOLUTION. Elisee Reclus. 5c.

FALSE CLAIMS OF THE CHURCH. John E. Remsburg. Analyzing and confuting the claims made by churchmen that the Christian religion has promoted morality, learning, temperance, science, freedom, and shows how she has opposed progress. Paper, 10c.

FIELDS, FACTORIES, AND WORKSHOPS; or, Industry Combined with Agriculture and Brain Work with Manual Work. Peter Kropotkin. 280 pages, 8vo. Postage, 4c.

FREE PRESS. Arguments in support of demurrer to the indictment of M. Harman, E. C. Walker and Geo. Harman, under the Comstock law, G. C. Remsen and David Overmyer, 20c.

GIORDANO BRUNO. His Life, Teachings, and Martyrdom. Burned for heresy in Rome, Feb. 17, 1600. 5c.

GOD AND THE STATE. Bakounine. 25c.

GOVERNMENT ANALYZED. A remarkable work by a remarkable man, Col. John H. Kelso, the history of whose life reads more like romance than reality. This book is the last of a series—Deity Analyzed, Bible Analyzed, Universe Analyzed. By the author's death this work was left unfinished, but was completed by his wife, Etta Dunbar Kelso. 615 pages; cloth. Price reduced from $1.50 to $1.

HILDA'S HOME. Rose Graul. "An o'er true tale" of woman's wrongs and of one woman's struggles and final triumphs in her attempt to secure justice for herself and for her sisters. 428 pages. Cloth, $1; paper, 50c.

HUMAN RIGHTS. J. Madison Hook. 5c.

IMPORTANCE OF HONEST MONEY. A simple, scientific, invariable standard of price. James Adleman. 120 pages. Paper, 50c.

IN BRIGHTER CLIMES; or, Life in Socialand. Albert Chavannes. 5c.

INFIDEL DEATH-BEDS. "Idle Tales of Dying Horrors." G. W. Foote. Brief biographical sketches of 20 Freethinkers, including Bruno, Buckle, Byron, Count, Darwin, George Eliot, Gibbon, Goethe, Hugo, Harriet Martineau, Mill, Paine, Madame Roland, George Sand, Shelley, Volney, and Voltaire. 25c.

IN HELL AND THE WAY OUT. A plan of Social Democracy outlined. Henry E. Allen. 10c.

INSTITUTIONAL MARRIAGE. From the viewpoint of an exiled Mormon. M. Harman. 5c.

JOHN'S WAY. A domestic radical story. Elmina D. Slenker. 25c.

KAREZZA. Ethics of Marriage. A bold, brave book, teaching ideal marriage, rights of the unborn child, a designed and controlled maternity. Sample pages free. $1.

KORADINE. A story for young and old. Extra levant cloth. $1.

LIBERTY IN LITERATURE. Testimonial to Walt Whitman. "Let us put wreaths on the brows of the living." An address delivered in Philadelphia, Oct. 31, 1888, with portrait of Whitman. Containing also Col. Ingersoll's address at the funeral of Walt Whitman, Mar. 30, 1892. Cloth, 50c; paper, 25c.

LIBERTY. Political, Religious, Social, and Moral. A. F. Tindall. 5c.

LITTLE LESSONS FOR LITTLE FOLKS. Elmina D. Slenker. Boards, 40c.

LIZZIE MELTON. A story of a self-reliant girl. By Albert Chavannes. With portrait of author. 25c.

LUCIFER. Third Series, Vol. III. (1889). Cloth, $1.25. Postage, 25c.

MAGNETISM, and Its Relation to Health and Character. Albert Chavannes. 25c.

MARRIAGE. An address by Dr. Juliet H. Severance. 5c.

MARRIAGE IN FREE SOCIETY. Edward Carpenter. A dainty little gift book. 25c.

MARTYRDOM OF MAN. Winwood Reade. This is a very interestingly pictured synopsis of universal history, showing what the race has undergone—its martyrdom—in its rise to its present plane. It shows how war and religion have been oppressive factors in man's struggle for liberty; and the last chapter, of some 150 pages, describes his intellectual struggle from the animal period of the earth to the present, adding an outline of what the author conceives would be a religion of reason and love. Winwood Reade's reputation as a writer of fine English, of deep study and careful reasoning, needs no word of praise. Cloth, $1.

MEN, WOMEN AND CHANCE. William Platt. Containing two tales: The Ascent to the Heights, and Blind Men and Seeing. Well printed on heavy paper and artistically bound in cloth. Gilt top, rough edges. 25c.

MEN, WOMEN, AND GODS. Helen H. Gardener. With preface by Col. R. G. Ingersoll. Contents: Introduction by Col. Ingersoll; Men, Women, and Gods. Vicarious Atonement. Historical Facts and Theological Fictions. Appendix. Address to the Clergy and Others. Letter to Cleveland Congress of Freethinkers. The only authorized and correct edition. Large 12mo, heavy-toned paper. Portrait. This volume is by far the best writing this famous author ever did. It is very fine. Cloth, $1; paper, 50c.

MISSING LINK IN MODERN SPIRITUALISM, THE. A. Leah (Fox) Underhill. With portraits of the Fox Sisters and others. 418 pages. Cloth. Reduced to $1.

MORIBUND SOCIETY AND ANARCHY. Jean Grave. Cloth, 40c; paper, 25c.

MOTHERHOOD IN FREEDOM. M. Harman. 5c.

MUTUAL BANKING. A simple plan to abolish interest on money. William B. Greene. 10c.

NORA, A DOLL'S HOUSE, and GHOSTS. Ibsen. Cloth, 75c.

OUR WORSHIP OF PRIMITIVE SOCIAL QUEERIES. E. C. Walker. Contents: Love and Law; The Moloch of the Monogamic Ideal; The Continuity of Race-Life, and Tyranny; Food and Sex Palladia, a Criticism; When Men and Women Are and When They Are Not Varieties; The New Woman: What is she? What will she be? The State Hiding Behind Its Own Mission; Is she an Honest Girl? Lloyd, Platt, and the Painful Facts; Social Versus Fear; Reflections upon Reading William Platt's "Women, Love, and Life." 15c.

PERSONAL EXPERIENCES of Two American Anti-Vivisectionists in Various Countries. Philip G. Peabody. With an Appendix by Col. R. G. Ingersoll. Reduced from 25c to 10c.

PERSONAL RIGHTS AND SEXUAL WRONGS. Oswald Dawson. 20c.

PRIESTLY CELIBACY. Prof. A. L. Rawson. Together with The Incoherence of Transition (E. C. Walker). Motherhood in Freedom (Moses Harman). The Greatest Sin (an allegory, R. B. Kerr), and Jealousy, the Vice of Freedom (Oscar Rotter). 25c.

RELIGION AND RATIONALISM. The relation of each to human liberty. The religionist, fancying that he has the whole truth, is logically opposed to new truths. What Rationalism is, and how many believe themselves Freethinkers who are only unbelieving or disgruntled religionists. The necessity for separate organizations and a division of labor among reformers. The Secular Union. Important facts and arguments in a compact form. E. C. Walker. 5c.

RIGHTS OF MAN. Thomas Paine. Answer to Burke's attack upon the French revolution. A political treatise of great general value, as advocating liberty and democracy. Contains the fundamental principles of true republicanism. Cloth, 50c; paper, 25c.

RUBAIYAT (Quatrains) OF OMAR KHAYYAM. Edward FitzGerald's interpretation: with original introduction; special cover; latest version. Paper, 10c.

RULED BY THE TOMB. A discussion of free thought and free love. Orford Northcote. 25c.

SCIENCE IN STORY; or, Sammy Tubbs, the Boy Doctor, and Sponsle, the Troublesome Monkey. For young folks. Dr. E. B. Foote. Five volumes in "red line," presentation edition. $5. Five volumes, plainer binding, $2.50; all in one volume, $2.

SEXUAL PHYSIOLOGY FOR THE YOUNG. Being the fifth volume of "Science in Story." 250 pages; cloth bound; illustrated. 50c.

SONGS OF THE UNBLIND CUPID. J. Wm. Lloyd. Edition de luxe. Verses printed from Kelmscott type upon deckle edged hand made paper of cerulean tint. Initial letters, ornaments and borders are in red; initial letter and sketch upon the opening page are hand painted in water colors. Covers brown, with choice of silver or gold lettering. Very handsome gift book. 25c.

STUDIES IN SOCIOLOGY. In four parts: I., The Law of Happiness; II., The Law of Individual Control; III., The Law of Harmony; IV., The Law of Environment. Albert Chavannes. 25c.

TALKS ON NATURE. Important information for both sexes. Dr. J. H. Greer. 185 pages. Reduced from 50 to 25c.

THE ABOLITION OF MARRIAGE. John Beverly Robinson. Together with Isabel's Intention (Starlet), Reminiscences of Berlin Heights (A. Warren), and The Sexes and Love in Freedom (Oscar Rotter). 25c.

THE BAR SINISTER AND LICIT LOVE. Including the first biennial proceedings of the Legitimation League, and a full account of the Lanchester case, with full-page half-tone pictures of Edith Lanchester, and Lillian Harman. Handsomely bound in green and gold covers. 207 pages. 25c.

THE BLUE LAWS OF CONNECTICUT. Taken from the Code of 1650 and the public records of the Colony of Connecticut previous to 1665. With an account of the persecution of Witches and Quakers in New England, and some extracts from the Blue Laws of Virginia. Copiously illustrated. 25c.

THE BRITISH BARBARIANS. Grant Allen, the greatest of the Hill-Top pioneers. Dedicated "to all who have heart enough, brain enough, and soul enough to understand it." Handsomely bound in cloth. 287 pages. $1.

THE WOMAN WHO DID. Grant Allen. A powerful story of a refined, educated and high-spirited woman who dared to defy the tyranny of church and state and ignore the institution of marriage. Handsomely bound in cloth. $1.

THE NEW HEDONISM. Grant Allen. The opening paragraph says: "The old asceticism said: 'Be virtuous and you will be happy.' The new hedonism says: 'Be happy and you will be virtuous.'" In another place the writer says: "In proportion as men have freed themselves from mediæval superstitions and from the fear of hell, so they have come to perceive that the useless and impure things are celibacy and asceticism; that the pure and beautiful and ennobling thing is the fit and worthy exercise of the reproductive function." Paper covers; 8 large pages; twelve copies, 25c. Single copy, 5c.

THE CHICAGO MARTYRS. The famous speeches of the eight condemned anarchists in Judge Gary's Court, and Altgeld's reasons for pardoning Fielden, Neebe and Schwab. 25c.

THE COMING WOMAN. Lillie D. White. 5c.

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM. Principles and platform of organized Freethought. 10c.

THE EVOLUTION OF MODESTY. Jonathan Mayo Crane. A consideration of the origin of clothes and the reasons why people wear clothing. Here are a few questions it answers: What is modesty? What is the cause of it? What is the use of it? What is the cause of the feeling of shame? Is bodily immodest? What is the cause of the notion that it is shameful to expose some parts of the body? Why do not all peoples agree as to what parts of the body should be concealed? 5c.

THE FOUNTAIN OF LIFE; or, The Threefold Power of Sex. Lois Waisbrooker. 50c.

THE FUTURE OF SECULARISM. When will the Cause of Justice triumph? 5c.

THE PRODIGAL DAUGHTER; or, The Price of Virtue. Rachel Campbell. Together with Legal Witchcraft (Lucinda B. Chandler). Life's Gifts (Olive Schreiner), and Marriage—What It Was and Is; Will the Coming Woman Marry? 25c.

THE REVIVAL OF PURITANISM. E. C. Walker. 10c.

THE RIGHTS OF CHILDREN. R. B. Kerr. Together with What Are Women Here For? (E. B. Foote, Jr., M. D.), The New Martyrdom (Lillian Harman), and The Will, from the French of Guy de Maupassant. 25c.

THE SANCTITY OF MARRIAGE. As viewed from a moral and sanitary standpoint. A solemn protest against the present demoralizing management of that institution, its effects upon offspring and its influence upon education. By Dr. Robert A. Greer. A valuable "opening wedge" in missionary work. Price reduced from 25c to 10c.

THE SECRET INSTRUCTIONS OF THE JESUITS. A reprint from an edition published in 1761, found by the highest authorities as authentic. The work is redolent of Jesuit craft and is a plain forecast of the underhand working of that order against the welfare of individuals and society. 15c.

THE STATE: ITS HISTORIC ROLE. Prince Peter Kropotkin. 10c.

THE TROUBADOURS AND COURTS OF LOVE. J. F. Rowbotham. Cloth, 300 pages. $1.25. Postage, 12c.

THE UNWOMANLY WOMAN. Lizzie M. Holmes. Together with That Great Fraud, Telepathy (Moses Hull), Virgin Soil (George Exerton), and Normal Sexual Action (Ernest Wilson). 25c.

THE WORM TURNS. Revolutionary Poems. Voltairine de Cleyre. 10c.

THOMAS JEFFERSON. His Political, Social and Religious Philosophy. Gen. M. M. Trumbull. 5c.

TOKOLOGY. A book for every woman. By Alice B. Stockham, M. D. Illustrated. Tokology teaches possible painless pregnancy and parturition, giving full, plain directions for the care of a woman before and after confinement. The ailments of pregnancy can be prevented as well as the pains and dangers of childbirth avoided and women need not go down to death giving birth to children. English, German or Swedish. $2.25.

TRAVELS IN FAITH. By Capt. Robert C. Adams. His mental experience from superstition to rationalism. Cloth, 75c; paper, 50c.

VACCINATION A GIGANTIC CRIME. Samuel Darling. 15c.

VINDICATION OF THOMAS PAINE. Col. R. G. Ingersoll. Dealing with all the slanders brought against the name and fame of Paine. A little pamphlet which every admirer of Thomas Paine should have by him for reference. Paper, 15c.

VITAL FORCE. Magnetic Exchange and Magnetation. Albert Chavannes. 25c.

WHAT THE YOUNG NEED TO KNOW; a Primer of Sexual Rationalism. Edwin C. Walker. "Let us cease to be ashamed of the truth, of what makes us men, of the circling arms of Nature." Paper covers; 6 large pages. 10c.

WHAT IS RELIGION? Ingersoll's last public address, delivered at the meeting of the Free Religious Association in Boston on June 3, 1899. To which is appended the poem, "Declaration of the Free," the last verse written by the great Freethinker. Paper, 5c.

WHEN LOVE IS LIBERTY AND NATURE LAW. John Badcock, Jr. 10c.

WHY THE UNDERTOOK? An open letter to Judge Gary. Sarah E. Amos. 10c.

WOMAN, CHURCH, AND STATE. Matilda Joslyn Gage. "This is Mrs. Gage's best and crowning work. Every woman ought to read it. Every thinking woman and man will want it. A burning protest against the tremendous wrong done to woman by the church, which controlled the state. It ought to be widely read for the good it will do. Cloth, $1.50; paper, 75c.

WOMAN: Four Centuries of Progress. Susan H. Wixon. 5c.

WOMAN IN THE PAST, PRESENT AND FUTURE. Woman was the first human being that tasted bondage. Woman was a slave before the slave existed. The basis of all oppression is economic dependence on the oppressor. This has been the condition of woman in the past and is so still. She is now a slave of the slave. This work is August Bebel's masterpiece. 300 pages. 50c.

Address M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

Price 2 Cents.

LUCIFER.

THE LIGHT-BEARER.

THIRD SERIES, VOL. VI., No. 10. CHICAGO, ILLINOIS, MAR. 20, E. M. 302. [C. E. 1902.] WHOLE No. 909

WANTED—ASSASSINS!

Twenty-five thousand assassins more
Wanted by English Ed,
To shoot and stab in the land of the Boer
For the price of beer and bread!
To murder the mother and child!
To burn the home to the ground!
And hunt like wild beasts through the wild,
The father—and hang him when found!

Apply to England's king,
For the job of a royal assassin!
A ration of food at your feet he'll fling,
And on you a ribbon may fasten!
He will arm you under a spire!
He will pray for you under a steeple!
That you may be able to earn your hire,
And pillage and murder a people!

And teachers will tell of your worth
When foulest in blood you revel,
Till God for loathing sees not the earth,
And man has the meaning of devil!
Oh, the power of tinsel and cant
To awe and corrupt and bind,
Till we lack the wisdom of the ant,
And the love of the wolf for its kind!

—Wm. R. Fox.

[And a few thousand Imperial assassins wanted in the Philippines to uphold the Friars in oppression and loot and carry on American capitalistic "benevolent assimilation." Government price for cutthroats, $13 a month, and all they can steal. The more fiendish and bloodthirsty the better show for advancement. Get a move you, ye villains, England and America are in sore straits!—The People's Press.]

For the Day and the Hour.

Freedom mothers free thought, free speech, and free living.

* * *

The free press is the body of which free speech is the soul.

* * *

The truth outlives the lie finally because of its greater worth.

* * *

Repress if you will, but somewere, somehow, the truth will be heard.

* * *

Men will seek it from curiosity; then because of threats, from perversity; and finally they will seek it, even through martyrdom, for manhood's sake.

* * *

The history of past repression and persecution should teach the avatars of the new inquisition the folly of trying to make man satisfied with slavery by increasing the weight of his chains.

* * *

Every attempt to stifle the voice of truth has raised up ten thousand devotees willing to live and die in the effort to remove the choking gag. Again and again they have offered themselves, and if the sacrifice were to be demanded once more the headsman would find heads waiting for him, and the fires would not lack their voluntary human fuel.

* * *

How often, when at last Truth has raised her oracular head to speak, her lips have been seen to be stained with blood, the testimony of her endurance on the torture rack, or of the blows which she has suffered at the hands of her enemies, who were for the time the strong. But through the tears of thousands listening brave eyes have looked courage at her, and smiles have followed the looks in splendid assurance of love and faithfulness yet to be.

* * *

Men need not look into the far skies for gods; at their best, in their noblest endeavors, men themselves are greater and nobler than any of the gods whom they have dreamed. And in nothing is their nobility shown in fairer light than in those acts by which they refuse to be blind and ignorant, ignoble and enslaved. Wealth, honor, ease, the love of those of the same blood, everything—life itself has been given for the one boon—the right to seek, to speak the truth! What gods have stooped so far to rise so high?

* * *

Of the martyrs of old it may be said, this one died for his religion, this one for his irreligion; this one gave up his life for one science, that one for another. But truly, Socrates or Bruno, Pagan, Catholic, or Protestant, all died because they would rather die and fall into dust at once than stultify their manhood by denying and ceasing to utter what seemed to them the solemn truth. Their ideas, many of them were false: time has taught us this as freedom has helped; but the spirit in which they acted was the spirit of manhood at the far height of its noblest and most exalted achievement. The modern martyrs, the martyrs yet to be (for who that reads the signs of the hour aright can doubt that men will yet have to give up heart's blood for truth's sake) the modern martys have won the victory of defeat in the same spirit, and the martyrs yet to be, in holding up their heads in the face of death will heighten anew the hearts of those who look on, to the level of greatness; that singleness of soul which seeks its legitimate ends up to the very gates of ruin and death.

* * *

The search for truth cannot be brought to an end by force and interference, but only by the finding of truth or of what seems true; when will the servants of ignorance learn this thousand times exemplified lesson? Man is an individual; he cannot discern truth through the eyes and brain of another, he must learn for himself. Guns, poisons, prisons, all perils fail as teachers, when an argument, a demonstration from evidence would have convinced the mind or led it on the way to right thoughts and acts. If the demonstrations of arithmetic consisted in muzzling reason, in threatened reprisals for argument, in roaring cannon, the hangman's noose, torture, and the abrogation of free speech and free press, men would soon come to doubt that the rules of addition, multiplication, and division were correct. If persecution for investigation of these rules went on men would soon be found ready to die for the mere privilege of calling them in question. This kind of action might seem but folly to the thoughtless, or to a man like Montaigue in one of his moods, when he found it but a piece of "presumption" for a man to give up his life for an opinion; but the cause, the justification lies deeper than a superficial look can penetrate, and is bound up with the life of man in necessary relation. If he loses his love of opinion, if he loses his willingness to live and die for opinion he loses himself, as we shall presently see.

* * *

For the man lives as much in thought as he does in acts. His life lives upon his life's thoughts, and upon his utterance of those thoughts; as speech is but thinking aloud. To himself every man's thoughts are answered, and his speech the utterance from the sacred sanctuary of his soul's altar. Close the doors of his mind, he cannot wholly if he would; close the gates of his utterance of whatsoever is in him, he is loth to do because thought is life, and speech is the breath of life itself. Therefore when a man is bidden to be silent he ponders upon the command until he perceives that logically silence is death and that each subject upon which he is commanded to keep silent will if he obeys make for partial death. The strong man disobeys. Prudence he casts to the winds, for is not liberty even for a little while sweeter than death in life? Ordinary repression belaughs to scorn according to its degree and the spirit which he has. He cannot be silenced; what seemed trivial enough in the curriculum of thought and speech, becomes, if the censor condemns it, a vital matter, one to be heralded to the four winds. All because he cannot live another's thought life, because another cannot live his for him, he valiantly takes up the gauntlet cast down by repression and throws it in the monster's face. He owns himself, his message must be delivered; he must live. Every man believes in freedom of speech for himself if for no one else. What he claims as his own right he is slowly learning to see as the sacred right and necessity of all lives that have being.

* * *

There is no freedom where free speech and free press are not, and where the free press is not, neither is free speech there. Authority, which now again is trying the public mind to learn if it will endure the muzzling of the free press, is but purblind in thinking that its attempts at enslaving opinion may at this late day be successful. The exchange of opinion is only slightly less dear to man than free speech for himself; man wishes to know what all other minds are thinking. He knows that truth has nothing to fear from the light of publicity; he knows that falsehood loves the darkness rather than the light; and he will not tolerate for long any attempts to tie bands over the mouths of the humblest of men, but will rather say "hands off" in unmistakable tones wherever repressive measures have called into being public interest and discussion of the matter. Man loves freedom, and reason as you will, or let him reason against it to himself according to the dictates of fear or the lying logic of so-called "public good," shortly he will be for free speech and a free press again. Light, the hills, the birds of the air, the free winds of the fields even, thrill in his heart their message of freedom, and the thirst of his own soul for knowledge and wisdom will speak to him in one voice with the voice of the forest and the voice of the great free ocean, till he shout back with enthusiastic spirit his response in a pledge of faithfulness.

* * *

How do we come at the truth? By inquisitions, by repressions? By fearful waiting in the darkness of ignorance and superstition? No. We come at it by the travail of experience, both our own and that of others; we come at it by the travail of opinion in all its development and change, both in ourselves and in others; we come at the truth through the exchange of opinion universally free. Let our mistakes multiply, our knowledge of truth multiplies with them on the other hand. Nothing can be known to be truth until the voices of protest have all been heard and answered. The press is the most important modern agent for the exchange of opinion; an agent which if untrammeled will hasten surely rather than repress the acquisition of knowledge and wisdom. Who are these who would limit the freedom of the press; the poor? No, the rich. The friends of education? No, its enemies. Free thinkers, and those who believe in the sacredness of the individual? No, the superstitious, and those whose place and position would be endangered if the people did but raise and straighten the bent backs which have so long supported a privileged class; these are they who prate of the license of a free press and plead with usurping power for a censorship.

* * *

Soulless-ones, do not hope to gain your ends. Too well the world knows the worth of freedom of speech, paid for as it has been with the blood of so many martyrs. Man will never really give it up now; neither threats nor alarmist tales can make him believe that light is an enemy and that darkness is a friend. All has gone too far for that. A dark hour may see him repudiate his birthright, but he is not an Esau, he can reclaim it, and in the succeeding hour he will reclaim it. Threaten, punish, torture, make martyrs if you will in your vain struggle to make ignorance and yourselves supreme over life; but life is strong and its breath is freedom, and in an hour when you think not the words of man spoken and written will utter the things you would kill in the four corners of the world and all shall hear. In a day to come for your reward you and yours shall be mercifully forgotten and the dust in which you lie will pass for common earth; but on the graves of freedoms' martyrs shall lie the fresh wreaths of memory, made of the flowers of love and honor which do not die.

IRONICUS.

A Strange Custom.

BY R. B. KERR.

Spiritualists have collected much useful information about the planets and other heavenly bodies, from the reports of spirits who have been there. One of their most interesting discoveries relates to an extraordinary custom which exists in the asteroid Ceres, one of the small planets between Mars and Jupiter.

In walking along the streets of Barleyopolis, the fashionable capital of Ceres, one is struck by the difference in dress between the sexes. So far as the lower half of the body is concerned, both sexes are dressed alike, in a very rational attire of knickerbockers, stockings, and shoes. But while the upper half of the feminine body is clad in a costume which follows the shape of the body, and gives free play to the head, arms, and hands, the men have to wear a loose and shapeless bag which entirely covers their head, shoulders, and arms, and goes down to the middle of the fingers. This almost deprives the men of the use of half their bodies, and the inconvenience is made greater by the strict etiquette of the planet, which compels the men to keep their arms hanging plumb by their sides, as by lifting the hands or arms they might enable curious observers to see underneath the bag.

Extraordinary as this custom is, the explanation is stranger still. In Ceres the highest virtues of women are such as we all admire, truth, gentleness, sympathy, honesty. But in men these virtues are comparatively unimportant, and the one supreme and cardinal virtue of a Ceres man is that he should never have had the tip of his nose touched by a woman.

A man with an untouched nose may be proud, arrogant, and cruel, and yet be admired; but a man who is known to have had the tip of his nose touched by a woman is sent to associate with murderesses and burglaresses, and despised even by them. Not only is he ruined himself, but his family share in his disgrace.

It need hardly be said that this rule puts men at a disadvantage in every activity of life. In the first place, it deprives them of the free use of the upper half of the body, which is closely muffled in order that it may not make women think of noses. It is said to be impossible to look at a wrist without thinking of a nose, so the honor of a Ceres man demands the sacrifice of his arms. Then a man cannot go anywhere without a woman, or at least a little girl, to protect him. There is no serious danger of a woman actually touching the tip of a man's nose by force, but some little girl might shout out insulting remarks about noses to an unprotected man, and even such a humiliation as that is believed to sully the purity of a man's reputation. An unaccompanied man might even be affronted by some wicked woman offering to touch the tip of his nose. To avoid such calamities, a female escort is thought necessary especially after dark; and it is a common thing to see a giant of six feet high walking along under the protection of a little girl carrying a doll.

Of course the rule about noses greatly interferes with men in the work of earning a living. It is thought that their sphere is the home, where their noses and characters will be safe, and they can be kept under observation. The women earn and spend the money, while the men do the drudgery. Men are also kept as ignorant as possible, for fear they should hear too much about noses, and free intellectual discussion between the sexes is much discouraged, as it might lead to a laxity of nasal morals.

But the worst result of all is that the rule makes women despise men. They do not say so, in general; on the contrary they are always paying men fulsome compliments, and pretending to regard them as wonders of beauty and perfection. But go to a debate on equal suffrage between the sexes, and you hear a different story. On these occasions women talk freely, and assert that man's sphere is the home, especially as the home has made him so ignorant that he is not fit for any other sphere. But the real source of woman's contempt for man is the double standard of morality. A free man always despises a slave, and those who live without working despise those who do all the work. Likewise people who are subject to the ignominy of not being able to do whatever they like with their own bodies are secretly scorned by those who are not subject to so disgraceful a disability.

It may be supposed that men are in constant revolt against this enslaving rule. On the contrary, it is fanatically and hysterically supported by men, and a woman who favors its abolition is in danger of being cut by her men friends. Men are always watching each other to see that no nose touching goes on, and on the slightest suspicion a man will hasten to try and ruin the character of his fellowman. This utter want of esprite de corps increases the contempt with which women secretly regard men.

The modern spirit of unrest is felt in Ceres as elsewhere, and some advanced men are beginning to chafe against the restraints imposed on them. A dress reform movement has been started, and some very bold men wear bags which only come down to their elbows and leave their hands and wrists free. Women greatly disapprove of this, however, not because it suggests noses, but because it fails to do so. It is only when the wrists and arms are covered up that their partial uncovering suggests noses; and what women want is to have noses suggested to them as strongly as possible, so long as it is done decently, according to the dictates of religion and morality.

Even the two standards of morality now appear shocking to some men, and they are anxiously seeking a remedy. Hitherto, however, the only one that they can imagine is that women should also be ruined if they have the tips of their noses touched by men.

But women have rejected such proposals with utter contempt. They have seen too clearly what men have suffered from the rule to submit to it themselves. "In vain is the net spread in the sight of any bird."

Yet the spirit of Ceres remains agitated, and this is an inventive age; so it may be that even the men of Ceres may yet imagine some other way of becoming equal with women.

Danger of Suppressing Fever.

BY SANTIAGO WALKER, M. D.

The method stated in Lucifer last December, to abort a fever by putting the patient up to his neck in a hogshead of cold water and keeping him there twenty minutes, I do not doubt has been proved by experience. Let me say that however heterodox it was at first according to the standards of regular medical practice, the profession has been coming more and more of late years to the idea and practice stated in the article referred to. This fact is, however, only an additional reason for my writing the present caution. Some who would inquire carefully before venturing on the treatment if their doctor condemned it, will have learned that the heretofore unorthodox treatment is now sanctioned by regular physicians to a greater extent than ever, and will hence conclude that it is safe. Too fallacious!

I think no physician would treat all fever patients by an indiscriminate plan of suppressing the fever. And even if such a plan has worked to apparent satisfaction in ten successive cases, that fact will not prove it to be anything less than murderous in the eleventh.

What is fever? Generally speaking an effort of the system to remove an obstruction from the channels of circulation. This does not decide where the obstruction is or how far life is involved in the success of the effort. Another point in connection with any question of treatment is that where one practice is to administer medicine while suppressing the spontaneous effort, and thus open some channel, another practice is to administer no medicine, and in the latter case the policy of suppressing the spontaneous effort of nature is subject to a distinct question.

In many minor ailments it seems reasonable to suppose that if we suppress the first efforts of nature, the body can bear the effect. The ill may be cured in another way, or it may be borne, forced into dormancy, to recur later. In other cases the stage of development of the spontaneous cure being further advanced, suppression is dangerous, and doubly dangerous where no aid is given to open other channels for secretion and excretion of accumulations of waste matter. A brief application of cold, according to the strength of the patient, mostly produces a tonic reaction, but the continuous application of cold for the time necessary to fully suppress a fever is a different thing, and I venture to say that if the fever happens to be that of smallpox or other disease of that class, the probabilities are very great that the heroic treatment referred to will cause the death of the patient. This brings us to the main point. The fever is symptomatic, intimately connected with a process of cure. The physician's first care is to discover what is the trouble which causes the fever, and then according to his understanding he will endeavor to remove the cause and not blindly attack the fever.

Opinions may differ as to how far the work which the heart is doing can be done by auxiliary means and how far it may be necessary to quiet the fever, and I think few if any who are competent to speak will deny that the cause of illness and the stage arrived at in nature's attempted cure have to be taken into account.

Without desiring to go further into the subject, I would say this much because of the unqualified claims of the article alluded to and the plain danger illustrated in too many cases to be doubted. Patients have been iced to reduce their temperature and then have broken out feebly with an eruptive fever, with inevitable death as the result, and this under the direction of regular physicians who did not happen to know what kind of a malady was causing the "fever."

What shall it profit one to snuff out many slight fevers which he can bear to postpone or divert, and then lose life by suppressing that urgent fever which is an imperative process for the casting out of foul matter whose continuance in the body would be fatal? In the latter case the hot bath may rather be the first step to save life and most depends upon every possible case of elimination without wasting the patient's strength.

Brutal Nature of Government.

Every government of earth is a machine for the destruction of life and property. The cause of this is in the fact that government is but a reflex of social conditions. Society is organized upon the basis of private capitalism. The ruling class are the ones who own the means of existence. They are the exploiters of society. Governments are organized in the interest of the exploiters. Brute force is necessary to perpetuate legalized robbery. Hence every government is constantly increasing its armament and holding itself in readiness to shoot down the wage-earners if they strike for better wages. The machine gun is in readiness to destroy the wage-slave. It is never used against his economic masters—the legalized robbers in society. The ruling class are above law and danger of punishment.—Social Economist.

Lucifer, the Lightbearer

M. HARMAN, EDITOR AND PUBLISHER.

PUBLISHED EVERY WEEK AT 500 FULTON STREET, CHICAGO, ILL.

Terms: One year, $1; six months, 50 cents; three months, 25 cents.

Entered at the Chicago Postoffice as Second-Class Mail Matter.

Eastern Representative, E. C. Walker, 344 W. 143d street, New York.

Lucifer—Its Meaning and Purpose.

LUCIFER—The planet Venus; so called from its brightness.—Webster's Dictionary.

LUCIFEROUS—Giving Light; affording light or the means of discovery.—Same.

LUCIFIC—Producing Light.—Same.

LUCIFORM—Having the form of Light.—Same.

The name Lucifer means Light-Bringing or Light-Bearing, and the paper that has adopted this name stands for Light against Darkness—for Reason against Superstition—for Science against Tradition—for Investigation and Enlightenment against Credulity and Ignorance—for Liberty against Slavery—for Justice against Privilege.

Current Events.

DEATH OF EX-GOVERNOR ALTGELD.

Since our last issue went to press several events of more than usual interest to all our readers have occurred. Prominent among these is the death of John Peter Altgeld, ex-governor of Illinois.

As these lines are being penned the flags of the city are floating at half-mast, out of respect to the memory of one who, it is not too much to say, was, while living, its greatest citizen.

A man whose name will probably be remembered, lovingly, gratefully remembered, long after the names of his detractors shall have perished in oblivion; a man whose name will live perhaps after Chicago itself shall have been forgotten—except for the series of events that have justly doomed its name to an immortality of infamy!—the trial of the eight immortal champions of the rights of labor, as against the remorseless greed of Chicago's plutocratic oligarchy, followed as that trial was by the hanging of August Spies, Albert Parsons, Adolph Fisher and George Engel, the murder in prison of Louis Lingg and the imprisonment in the Joliet penitentiary of Fielden, Schwab and Neebe.

* * *

It is mainly because of his connection with the history of the men just mentioned that the name of John Peter Altgeld will live in the annals of the American continent, and of the Anglo-Saxon race.

It is because when, after reaching the pinnacle of political ambition as a citizen of the state of Illinois—one of the most populous, wealthy and influential of the galaxy of American states, he deliberately and knowingly sacrificed his prospects for re-election, also his prospects of advancement to positions of honor and responsibility in the national councils, sacrificed all these and much more for the sake of doing an act of tardy justice to three men confined in State's prison, and for the sake of vindicating the good name of the five men murdered in 1887 by the officials of his state and city.

* * *

If John P. Altgeld could have planned the circumstances, the occasion, of his departure from earth-life; if he had chosen the day and the hour, he could scarcely have chosen better for the perpetuity of his fame than actually befell him—than were the surroundings that witnessed his last acts and words. He had just closed, at Joliet, Ills., one of the greatest speeches of his life—a most powerful and unanswerable arraignment of the murderous policy of England's rulers in their treatment of the two South African republics, and of the complicity, the shameful, the cowardly, the criminal complicity of our own rulers in that work of murder and devastation—had just uttered a peroration that would have done honor to the greatest orators of human history, when death claimed him. He died of apoplexy, suffering but little pain apparently, during the few hours that intervened between the collapse and final close. He was unconscious most of this time, but few lucid intervals.

In our next issue will probably appear a synopsis of the last great speech of ex-Governor Altgeld, together with some account of his eventful career, and of the civic and social honors paid to his memory.

* * *

THE SOUTH AFRICAN WAR.

The foregoing allusion to the British-Boer war naturally calls for a few words in regard to the capture of Methuen, the second officer in command of the British forces operating in the Transvaal; his release without ransom or exchange by Delarey; the departure of Wolseley, the old commander-in-chief of the British armies, for the scene of conflict; the strengthening of the anti-war feeling both in England and in the United States—all these things would seem to claim more than a passing notice from us. But the smallness of our space, the press of other business and the fact that Lucifer deals with the CAUSES THAT PRODUCE WARS, rather than with their effects, their management or mismanagement, all suggest the propriety of brevity when dealing with newspaper reports; which reports are always more or less unreliable and especially so when coming from the seat of war.

However, it is reasonably safe to say that the news from South Africa is not apt to be strained to favor the Boers, or their reasons for continuing to fight against such tremendous odds. This being admitted, the meed of praise, of honor, from liberty-loving and justice-loving people everywhere seems due to the Boers, for valor in arms, for dauntless courage under circumstances the most disheartening, and for magnanimity to prisoners who certainly deserve no such treatment at their hands—as that accorded by Delarey to Methuen. In the language of the synopsis of Altgeld's speech at Joliet we may say that "if every Boer in South Africa were shot down, the glory of their heroism would live through the eternities and be forever an inspiration to mankind."

* * *

FUNSTON IN CHICAGO.

Two weeks ago Chicago lionized old-world royalty. Last week the sensation was Fred Funston, the most noted representative, perhaps, of the present policy of imperialism in the United States. In one of his speeches here he compared the anti-imperialists with the "copperheads" of the civil war, and said that instead of hanging the two negro deserters from the American army in the Philippines it would be better to hang those who oppose the war of subjugation, and who by so doing encourage the "rebels"—or words to that effect.

The "gem of the speech" of this new-fledged brigadier general, according to Editor Post, of the Chicago "Public," who it is presumed was an ear witness thereto, is the following:

> Let us keep our differences to ourselves until the sovereignty of the United States has been established. Then, if we must, let us pull hair among ourselves as to how we shall dispose of our possessions.

Commenting thereon the editor of "The Public" says:

> "There is the idea exactly. Let us keep quiet until the theft is complete, and then quarrel all we please over the division of the loot! And that is modern patriotism! Where do its ethics and tactics differ, except in magnitude, from those of a midnight expedition of "benevolent assimilation" to a water melon patch or a hen coop?"

Having lived many years in the "Sunflower State" I can well understand why and how it is that young Funston takes so readily to the policies and methods of the American imperialists. The men and the women who have shaped the political destinies of Kansas for more than thirty years have acted upon the principle that individual self-government is a delusion and a fraud. That it is the business of church and state to take parental care of the personal habits of the individual citizen and compel him "to be good."

Why then should any one express surprise that this young Republican from "Sunny Kansas" should take to imperialist methods in national affairs as naturally and readily as a duckling takes to water?

* * *

Among the signs of healthy reaction against the imperialistic tendencies of the men who have for some years directed the destinies of our government and people, is the utterance of William M. Salter, the eminent head of the Society for Ethical Culture in Chicago. In his lecture at Steinway Hall, this city, Sunday March 16, Mr. Salter seems to have created something of a sensation by devoting a large share of his discourse to a scathing rebuke of General Funston's Marquette Club speech, saying in part that "it argues demoralization in our city when such rubbish as General Funston uttered in advocating the hanging of American lovers of peace and liberty was suffered to pass without protest in a company of Chicago representative men."

Mr. Salter called the capture of Aguinaldo by Funston "a contemptible trick," and ridiculed Funston by calling him this "little brave from Kansas."

Here are some of the paragraphs of the distinguished lecturer as given by the "Chicago Tribune:"

> The General made much of Filipino assassination, but what of the assassination of liberty? What about putting the gag on Senator Hoar, on President Schurman, or the shade of Abraham Lincoln, who said: "Those who deny freedom to others deserve it not for themselves." . . . .
>
> We might have avoided the war with the Filipinos altogether. We might have said that we did not propose to enforce our title against their will and that should they establish a government capable of performing governmental functions we would surrender our sovereignty to it. This would have been only in keeping with our action in Cuba. It is not too late to take this attitude now.
>
> The trouble is that the nation does not know its own mind. It is high time that it did, when we realize the extreme measures to which the war is leading us.
>
> We are establishing concentration camps essentially similar to those of Weyler in Cuba. We have suppressed free speech and a free press in the islands. The effect of such a measure is felt even here, at home.

It is sincerely to be hoped that this address of Mr. Salter will find echoes in thousands of influential minds and that the reaction against the robber spirit that now controls the American government will receive the condemnation and repudiation it so richly deserves. M. HARMAN.

The labor uprising in Spain borders on revolution, and Premier Sagasta is preparing a decree establishing martial law throughout the kingdom. Riots have been numerous, and much blood has been shed. Reconcentrado Weyler, who is Minister of War, has ordered the troops to kill all the "Anarchists without mercy. It is just possible that they may kill him. Unhappy Spain!—"The Star."

Wanted---For the Spring Campaign.

All progress comes from change of ideals.

As we think so are we.

In order that Lucifer may do its part in changing the world's ideals it needs new readers.

Here is a proposition that should bring at the very least one thousand new readers:

For the paltry sum of TEN CENTS, in postage stamps of any denomination, we will send Lucifer five weeks and one copy of a neatly gotten up booklet of forty-five pages called "INSTITUTIONAL MARRIAGE as Seen from the View-point of an Exiled Marsian"—a lecture by M. Harman at the Masonic Temple, Chicago.

How many of our old subscribers and helpers will send TEN new names each for this offer? How many five? How many four? Three? two? one?

Without effort nothing can be done.

Without combined and concerted effort but little can be done.

With combined and concerted effort the wheels of progress will move as they never have moved before.

News From "Home."

Just as we are closing the forms for this issue we receive the following letter from O. A. Verity, of Home, Washington:

"I send you clipping from last Friday's Tacoma "News," giving action of Grand Jury in Home cases. Today we succeeded in throwing out of court the Adams second indictment and clearing J. E. Larkin and J. W. Adams of the charge that has been hanging over them, the case against Govan having been dropped by the prosecution. The judge was fairly unbiased in his decision, instructing the jury to bring in a verdict of not guilty as there was no trace of obscenity in the article, the evident intention upon the part of the writer being to denounce the injustice of judging the action of men and women by a double standard.

"Lois Waisbrooker and Mattie Penhallow gave bonds to the amount of $300 to appear for trial at the July term of court.

"The persecution still continues, as they have recommended the abolishing of our postoffice, but we hope to beat them on that."

OLIVER A. VERITY.

For further particulars address "Discontent," Home, Wash.

Thoreau on Laws and Customs.

Will the government never be so well administered, inquired one, that we private men shall hear nothing about it?

"The king answered: 'At all events, I require a prudent and able man, who is capable of managing the state affairs of my kingdom.' The ex-minister said, 'The criterion, O Sire! of a wise and competent man, is, that he will not meddle with such like matters." Alas, that the ex-minister should have been so nearly right.

In my short experience of human life, the outward obstacles, if there were any such, have not been living men, but the institutions of the dead. . . . .

I have not so surely forseen that any Cossack or Chippeway would come to disturb the honest and simple commonwealth, as that some monster institution would at length embrace and crush its free members in its scaly folds; for it is not to be forgotten, that while the law holds fast the thief and murderer, it lets itself go loose.

When I have not paid the tax which the State demanded for that protection which I did not want, itself has robbed me; when I have asserted the liberty it presumed to declare, itself has imprisoned me. . . . .

I do not wish, it happens, to be associated with Massachusetts, either in holding slaves or in conquering Mexico. I am a little better than herself in these respects. As for Massachusetts, that huge she Briareus, Argus, and Colchian Dragon conjoined, set to watch the Heifer of the Constitution and the Golden Fleece, we would not warrant our respect for her, like some compositions, to preserve its qualities through all weathers.

Thus it has happened, that not the Arch Fiend himself has been in my way, but these toils which tradition says was originally spun to obstruct him.

They are cobwebs and trifling obstacles in an earnest man's path, it is true, and at length one even becomes attached to his unswept and undusted garret.

I love man—kind, but I hate the institutions of the dead unkind. Men execute nothing so faithfully as the wills of the dead, to the last codicil and letter. They rule this world, and the living are but their executors. Such foundation, too, have our lectures and our sermons commonly. They are all Dudleian; and piety derives its origin still from that exploit of pius Æneas, who bore his father, Anchises, on his shoulders from the ruins of Troy. Or rather, like some Indian tribes, we bear about with us the mouldering relics of our ancestors on our shoulders. If, for instance, a man asserts the value of individual liberty over the merely political common weal, his neighbor still tolerates him, that is he who is living near him, sometimes even sustains him, but never the State.

Its officer as a living man, may have human virtues and a thought in his brain, but as the tool of an institution, a jailor or constable it may be, he is not a whit superior to his prison key or his staff.

Herein is the tragedy; that men doing outrage to their proper natures, even those called wise and good, lend themselves to perform the office of inferior and brutal ones.

Hence came war and slavery in; and what else may not come in by this opening? But certainly there are modes by which a man may put bread into his mouth which will not prejudice him as a companion and neighbor.

Now turn again, turn again, said the pinder,
For a wrong way you have gone,
For you have forsaken the king's highway,
And made a path over the corn

Undoubtedly, countless reforms are called for, because society is not animated, or instinct enough with life, but in the condition of some snakes which I have seen in early spring, with alternate portions of their bodies torpid and flexible, so that they could wriggle neither way.

All men are partially buried in the grave of custom, and of some we see only the crown of the head above ground. Better are the physically dead, for they more lively rot.

Even virtue is no longer such if it be stagnant. A man's life should be constantly as fresh as this river. It should be the same channel, but a new water every instant.

Virtues as rivers pass,—
But still remain that virtuous man there was.

—From A Week on the Concord and Merrimac Rivers, by Henry D. Thoreau.

Renounces Wife to Make Her Happy.

DES MOINES, Iowa, March 9.—The romance, strange as any ever told in fiction, in the life of A. L. Steel, Republican candidate for county attorney, and one of Des Moines' most brilliant young attorneys, has just been revealed since his candidacy became generally known. Steele is living in a little cottage in East Des Moines with his young wife, who secured a divorce from her former husband, Frank G. Lockwood, to marry Steele.

According to an agreement with Lockwood under which Mrs. Lockwood secured a divorce and Steele a wife, Lockwood occupies a room in the Steele house and the same roof will shelter all three as long as they live or Lockwood so desires.

FALLS IN LOVE WITH ANOTHER.

Steele was a struggling young attorney when Lockwood, a wealthy business man, employed him as counsel and started him on the road to success. Lockwood is today superintendent of the Chemical Fire Engine company. He made a confidant of Steele and frequently invited him to his home. They became fast friends, and a warm attachment sprang up between the young attorney and the wife of the attorney's client. They were both horrified when they discovered into what a maelstrom of passion they had drifted. After weeks of hesitation they decided to confess to Lockwood the state of their feelings, to beg his forgiveness for their mutual unfaithfulness to him, and to leave in his hands the deciding of the future of all three. Lockwood betrayed no anger toward the wife and friend. He thanked them for their honesty of purpose, and retired to his room to think out the tragic problem presented to him.

GIVES UP HIS WIFE.

When he emerged days after he called Steele to his home and in the presence of Mrs. Lockwood told Steele that he would resign his wife, whom he loved better than his life, and permit her to secure a divorce in order that she might marry Steele and be happy, but on one condition. That condition was that he, Lockwood, should be allowed to live under the same roof with his then wife as long as he might desire. He told Steele frankly that he did not believe he could live if deprived of the sight of his wife, and that while he had no desire to live with her as man and wife since he knew she loved another man, yet he wanted to be near her and see her regularly. The agreement was made and has been faithfully kept.—The Chicago "Inter Ocean" March 10.

VARIOUS VOICES.

Dr. D. M. Dunn, Minneapolis, Kas.:—I like the way Lucifer speaks out. I wish to be and expect to be a regular subscriber to it.

Daniel Leatherman, Goshen, Ind.:—As my Lucifer trial trip expires with No. 908 I here with send one dollar to pay for one year. Although it is quite radical, yet no one who observes closely the affairs of the world, can fail to conclude that radical ideas are in demand. May Lucifer's editors live many years yet.

T. S., Charleston, W. Va.:—Lucifer No. 908 received. Am interested in it and am glad of the chance to get Dr. Foote's Home Cyclopedia at such a marvelous price, as I had been intending to buy it at the regular price. I have selected a few pamphlets from your list, and enclose my check for $2 25.

E. B., N. Y.:—Mrs. Craddock was arrested again Tuesday (Mch. 4) on warrant issued two days before last arrest. State court this time. Tony is making business and statistics for himself and history for all. Bail this time $500—furnished one day late. So she was in one night. Charge, selling her pamphlets. Case comes up Monday—Court of Sessions—three judges decide. Pentecost pleads.

J. D., Colo.:—For the enclosed $3.25 I wish you to send Tokology and Karezza to the accompanying address. They (Mr. and Mrs. C.) are young married people and I think will appreciate and gain needed information from these books. Neither have had a mother since early childhood and are ignorant of the vital questions pertaining to married life. They are very orthodox in religion and I would prefer that you do not send any radical tracts with the books, as the lady might, in her delicate health and condition receive a prejudice against the help I wish to give them. You know we have to be careful and educate gradually. After these books have been read I hope to put others into their hands.

M. Cornelia Forward, Manton, Cal.:—In reply to R. Swinburne Clymer's letter to Lucifer asking for the ideas of those who would like to form a society for the help of our fallen sisters, I cannot say that I can at present offer any that would be of practical help. But as a sympathizer and friend of those who are greatly in need of charity I heartily commend the movement. It is one of the great opportunities that has long been open for the work of our own sex. But so far none have seen fit to work on that line, either for lack of means or fear of public censure, it being a very unpopular idea to do anything for the help or redemption of a woman who has borne a child without first having been united according to law. No matter how great was the love of that woman for the father of her child, or great may be her devotion to the offspring of their union, she will wear the brand of shame and be forever lost. While hundreds of men who are much more guilty than she are made much of in society, and by most women it is thought quite the proper thing to rescue them from evil ways. But for our sisters the world has little kindness and charity to offer, though it is often the case that woman yields to such temptation through a divine love for her seducer. True it is that some women have become prostitutes through preference but such cases are rare. If the records of such lives could be brought to light I doubt if it were the choice of one in five hundred. Taking all into consideration I think Dr. Clymer has struck a note to which all true minded men and women will answer in one grand accord. Success to the new Institute, and Mr. Clymer in this great and good undertaking; has man conceived a nobler idea than to build a refuge for the fatherless and outcasts?

The Bride's Dilemma.

"Do you take this man to be your wedded husband?" asked the Justice of the Peace.

"I don't know whether to do it or not, 'Squire," said the young woman, wiping her eyes. "He's got the money from me to pay for the license. I don't like to marry a man of that kind, and yet I hate to see $2 wasted.—Chicago Tribune.

AT HALF-PRICE

100 COPIES
OF
DR. FOOTE'S HOME CYCLOPEDIA.

While they last, a copy will be sent for only $1 to any subscriber to Lucifer whose subscription is paid one year in advance.

A FAMILY GUIDE-BOOK OF THE TWENTIETH CENTURY.

1248 PAGES. 500,000 WORDS. 400 PICTURES. 250 RECIPES.
80 CHROMOS ON 18 COLOR PLATES.

A few among the many subjects treated:

PART I.—Disease: Cause, Prevention, Cure.—Common Sense Remedies.
PART II.—Chronic Diseases of the Breathing Organs.—Diseases of the Heart and Blood Vessels.—Diseases of Liver, Stomach, Bowels.—Chronic Affections of the Urinary Organs.—Private Words for Men and Women.—Hints to the Children."—Constitutional Diseases.—Affections of the Eyes and Ears.—The Treatment of Disease, Containing 250 Prescriptions for Common Ailments and Complete Table of Antidotes for Poisons.
PART III.—Plain Home Talks About the Sexual Organs.—The Natural Relation of the Sexes.—Civilization and Marriage.—History of Marriage.—Defects in Marriage Systems.—Social Immorality. (Part III. takes a view of marriage and the sexual relations from a physiological standpoint. It is searching, interesting, original and startling.
PART IV.—Improving Monogamic Marriage.—Adaptation in Marriage.—Restricted Marriage and Parentage.—Three Phases of Monogamic Marriage.—Intermarria of relatives.—Essays for Married People.—What Determines Sex.—Philosophy of Child-Marking.—Essays for the Future.

Is your subscription paid to No. 957? If so, the Home Cyclopedia will be sent to you for $1 net. Postage 18 cts.

909.

If these figures correspond with the number printed on the wrapper of your Lucifer, your subscription expires with this number.

If a copy of Lucifer fails to reach you, please order by number or date.

Lucifer will not be sent "by return mail" unless stamps for postage are enclosed with order.

TO NEW SUBSCRIBERS: Your subscription is paid to No. If you have not ordered Lucifer, a friend has subscribed for you. If you do not wish to receive it, please notify us by card or through your postmaster. If you wish to become a regular subscriber you will confer a favor by renewing before the expiration of your trial subscription.

VICE: ITS FRIENDS AND ITS FOES

BY EDWIN C. WALKER.

CONTENTS.—Brotherhood of Man; The Recognition of Facts; Folly of "For Men Only." Definition of Vice; Horrors of Prostitution; Abominable Sexuality; Errors of Fathers, Mothers and Teachers; Persecution Does Not Reform; Prostitution and the Crusaders; The "Spoiling of the Heathen;" What are the Effects of Raids and Crusades; The Economic Side of the Problem; Party Politics in Vice Crusading; In What Does Prostitution Consist; Some Causes of Prostitution; Two Kinds of Prostitution Compared; The Opponents of Divorce; "Purifying" the Tenements; Action for Advanced Women.

WITH APPENDIX.—The Wanderings of a Spirit; Our Fair Civilization; The Folly and Cruelty of It All. Price 10c.

Address M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

Notice! I would be glad to hear from Liberals who would like to correspond with other Liberals. Address (with stamp) Snowville, Va. ELMINA DRAKE SLENKER

RADICAL LITERATURE.

For Sale by M. Harman, 500 Fulton St., Chicago.

A CHAMBERMAID'S DIARY. By Octave Mirbeau. Translated from the French by Benj. R. Tucker. 400 pages. Handsomely bound in cloth. $1.50.
ADVANCEMENT OF SCIENCE. Prof. John Tyndall's famous Inaugural Address before the British Association for the Advancement of Science, with the articles on Prayer which so stirred the religious world. Cloth, 50c; paper, 25c.
AGE OF REASON (The). Presentation edition. Part I reprinted from the first English edition. Part II corrected by M. D. Conway's edition. With Paine's own account of his arrest in Paris. Photogravure portrait from the Romney painting exhibited in London. Containing also portrait from the Jarvis painting; from the Peale painting, known as the Homeville portrait, representing Paine as a member of the French Assembly, and a half-tone of the Peale painting. Large half-tones of the house presented to Paine, in which he lived in New Rochelle, and of the monument and surroundings. Yorktown, Pa., scenes; also eight half-tone views of buildings, etc., associated with Paine's life in Paris, and other illustrations. With Preface, Chronological Table, Notes, Index, etc. Printed on antique wove paper, large octavo, wide margins, gilt edges. Special cover design in colors. The finest and most accurate of all editions. Boxed. Postpaid. $2.
AGE OF REASON. Thomas Paine. Cloth, with steel plate portrait, 75c; paper 15c.
ANARCHISM: Its Philosophy and Ideal. Peter Kropotkin. 5c.
A PHYSICIAN IN THE HOUSE. A New Family Medical Work, by Dr. J. H. Greer. This book is up-to-date in every particular. It will save you hundreds of dollars in doctors' bills. It tells you how to cure yourself by simple and harmless home remedies. It recommends no poisonous or dangerous drugs. It teaches how to save health and life by safe methods. It teaches prevention—that it is better to know how to live and avoid disease than to take any medicine as a cure. It is not an advertisement and has no medicine to sell. It has hundreds of excellent recipes for the cure of the various diseases. It has 16 colored plates showing different parts of the human body. The chapter on Painless Midwifery is worth its weight in gold to women. The "Care of Children" is something every mother ought to read. It teaches the value of Air, Sunshine, and Water as medicines. It contains valuable information for the married. This book cannot fail to please you. If you are looking for health by the safest and easiest means, do not delay getting it. It has eight hundred pages, is neatly bound in cloth, with gold letters, and will be sent by mail or express, prepaid to any address, for $2.75. Portrait, 10c.
A TALE OF THE STRASSBURG GEESE. B. B. Kerr. Together with The Strike of the Strassburg Geese (C. W. Coolridge). A Traveler's Tale (B. B. Kerr). The Cat's Story (Emile Zola). 5c.
AUTONOMY, SELF-LAW. A fragmentary dissertation on the right to non-invasive self-hood. 5c.
A WEEK ON THE CONCORD AND MERRIMAC RIVERS. Henry D. Thoreau. 25c.
BALZAC'S SERAPHITA: The Mystery of Sex. Mary Hanford Ford. Cloth. $1.
BIBLE TEMPERANCE. E. C. Walker. Proving that Liquor Drinking is Commended, Deferded and Enjoined by the Bible, and giving close reference to the chapters and verses. 10c.
BORNING BETTER BABIES—Through regulating reproduction by controlling conception. E. B. Foote, Jr., M. D. 25c.
CAUSES OF HARD TIMES, and the Money Question. Albert Chavannes. 5c.
CHICAGO CONFERENCE OF TRUSTS. Speeches, debates, etc.; 31 portraits of delegates, including Benj. R. Tucker, Laurence Gronlund, William Jennings Bryan, Samuel Gompers, Louis F. Post, and George Schilling. 626 pages. 50c.
CHILDREN OF THE ITALIAN POOR. Paola Lombroso. 5c.
DARWIN, THE. (A novel.) Elmina D. Slenker. 25c.
DAWN OF CIVILIZATION, The; or, England in the Nineteenth Century. J. C. Spence. 176 pages. 25c.
DAWN-THOUGHT ON THE RECONCILIATION. By J. Wm. Lloyd. An inspired treatise that, with insight and solution, touches all the questions of life, love, soul and society. A prose-poem, simple enough for a child to enjoy, deep enough to make a philosopher think. The largest creed, the most generous theory, the gladdest gospel. A book of life. A religion of growth and type, rubricated with portrait of the author. In three editions, de luxe, plain and paper bound. Prices, $1.25, $1.00 and 50c.
DIGGING FOR BED-ROCK. Camp-meeting talks and sketches by Moses Harman. 5c.
ECONOMICS OF ANARCHY. A Study of the Industrial Type. Dyer D. Lum. 10c.

DR. FOOTE'S SOCIAL SCIENCE SERIES OF DIME PAMPHLETS—Wedlock; Scientific Marriage; Heredity; A B C of Temperaments; Powell and his Scientific Marriage; Physiological Marriage; Physical Improvement of Humanity; Critics; Physiological Marriage; Physical Improvement of Humanity; Causes of Disease, Insanity, and Premature Death; A Step Backward. Any of the above books sent by mail on receipt of price.

DYNAMIC THEORY OF LIFE AND MIND. An attempt to show that all organic beings are both constructed and operated by the dynamic agencies of their respective environments. By James H. Alexander. Over 400 illustrations, 87 chapters, 1,067 pages and a 3-column index of 11 pages. Cloth, $3.75.

EAST TENNESSEE SKETCHES. A and Cecile Chavannes. 25c.

EIGHT-HOUR MOVEMENT. John P. Altgeld, ex-Governor of Illinois. 5c.

EVOLUTION AND REVOLUTION. Elisee Reclus. 5c.

FALSE CLAIMS OF THE CHURCH. John E. Remsburg. Analyzing and confuting the claims made by churchmen that the Christian religion has promoted morality, learning, temperance, science, freedom, and shown how she has opposed progress. Paper, 10c.

FIELDS, FACTORIES, AND WORKSHOPS; or, Industry Combined with Agriculture and Brain Work with Manual Work. Peter Kropotkin. 320 pages. 40c. Postage, 5c.

FREE PRESS. Arguments in support of demurrer to the indictment of M. Tarman, E. C. Walker and Geo. Harman, under the Comstock law. G. C. Siemens and David Overmyer. 10c.

GIORDANO BRUNO. His Life, Teachings, and Martyrdom. Burned for heresy in Rome, Feb. 17, 1600. 5c.

GOD AND THE STATE. Bakounine. 25c.

GOVERNMENT ANALYZED. A remarkable work by a remarkable man, Col. John B. Kelso, the history of whose life reads more like romance than reality. This book is the last of a series—Deity Analyzed, Bible Analyzed, Universe Analyzed. By the author's death this work was left unfinished, but was completed by his wife, Etta Dunbar Kelso. 419 pages; cloth. Price reduced from $1.50 to $1.

HILDA'S HOME. Rose Graul. "An o'er true tale" of woman's wrongs and of one woman's struggles and final triumphs in her attempt to secure justice for herself and for her sisters. 428 pages. Cloth, $1; paper, 50c.

HUMAN RIGHTS. J. Madison Hook. 5c.

IMPORTANCE OF HONEST MONEY. A simple, scientific, invariable standard of price. James Adleman. 320 pages. Paper, 50c.

IN BRIGHTER CLIMES; or, Life in Scotsland. Albert Chavannes. 25c.

INFIDEL DEATH-BEDS. "Idle Tales of Dying Horrors." G. W. Foote. Brief biographical sketches of 37 Freethinkers, including Bruno, Buckle, Byron, Comte, Darwin, George Eliot, Gibbon, Goethe, Hugo, Harriet Martineau, Mill, Paine, Madame Roland, George Sand, Shelley, Volney, and Voltaire. 25c.

IN HELL AND THE WAY OUT. A plan of Social Democracy outlined. Henry E. Allen. 10c.

INSTITUTIONAL MARRIAGE. From the viewpoint of an exiled Marxian. M. Harman. 5c.

JOHN'S WAY. A domestic radical story. Elmina D. Slenker. 25c.

KAREEZA. Ethics of Marriage. A bold, brave book, teaching ideal marriage, rights of the unborn child, a designed and controlled maternity. Sample pages free. $1.

KORADINE. A story for young and old. Extra levant cloth. $1.

LIBERTY IN LITERATURE. Testimonial to Walt Whitman. "Let us put wreaths on the brows of the living." An address delivered in Philadelphia, Oct. 31, 1890, with portrait of Whitman. Containing also Col. Ingersoll's address at the funeral of Walt Whitman, Mar. 30, 1892. Cloth, 50c; paper, 25c.

LIBERTY. Political, Religious, Social, and Moral. A. F. Tindall. 5c.

LITTLE LESSONS FOR LITTLE FOLKS. Elmina D. Slenker. Boards, 40c.

LIZZIE MELTON. A story of a self-reliant girl. By Albert Chavannes. With portrait of author. 25c.

LUCIFER. Third Series, Vol. III. (1890). Cloth, $1.25. Postage, 25c.

MAGNETATION, and Its Relation to Health and Character. Albert Chavannes. 25c.

MARRIAGE. An address by Dr. Juliet H. Severance. 5c.

MARRIAGE IN FREE SOCIETY. Edward Carpenter. A dainty little gift book. 25c.

MARTYRDOM OF MAN. Winwood Reade. This is a very interestingly pictured synopsis of universal history, showing what the race has undergone—its martyrdom—in its rise to its present plane. It shows how war and religion have been oppressive factors in man's struggle for liberty; and the last chapter, of some 100 pages, describes his intellectual struggle from the animal period of the earth to the present, adding an outline of what the author conceives would be a religion of reason and love. Winwood Reade's reputation as a writer of fine English, of deep study and careful reasoning, needs no word of praise. Cloth, $1.

MEN, WOMEN AND CHANCE. William Platt. Containing two tales: The Ascent to the Heights, and Blind Men and Seeing. Well printed on heavy paper and artistically bound in cloth. Gilt top, rough edges. 75c.

MEN, WOMEN, AND GODS. Helen H. Gardener. With preface by Col. R. G. Ingersoll. Contents: Introduction by Col. Ingersoll. Men, Women, and Gods. Vicarious Atonement. Historical Facts and Theological Fictions. Appendix. Address to the Clergy and Others. Letter to Cleveland Congress of Freethinkers. The only authorized and correct edition. Large 12mo, heavy-toned paper. Portrait. This volume is by far the best writing this famous author ever did. It is very fine. Cloth, $1; paper, 50c.

MISSING LINK IN MODERN SPIRITUALISM, THE. A. Leah (Fox) Underhill. With portraits of the Fox Sisters and others. 418 pages. Cloth. Reduced to $1.

MORIBUND SOCIETY AND ANARCHY. Jean Grave. Cloth, 40c; paper, 25c.

MOTHERHOOD IN FREEDOM. M. Harman. 5c.

MUTUAL BANKING. A simple plan to abolish interest on money. William B. Greene. 10c.

NORA, A DOLL'S HOUSE, and GHOSTS. Ibsen. Cloth. 75c.

OUR WORSHIP OF PRIMITIVE SOCIAL GUESSES. E. C. Walker. Contents: Love and Law; The Moloch of the Monogamic Ideal; The Conformity of Race-Life, and Tyranny; Food and Sex Fallacies, a Criticism; When Men and Women Are and When They Are Not Varieties; The New Woman: What is she? What will she be? The State Hiding Behind Its Own Mistakes; Bishop Potter's Opinion of Divorce; Love; Its Attraction and Expression; Is She an Honest Girl? Lloyd, Platt, and the Fruitful Facts; Social Radicals and Parentage; Anthropology and Monogamy; Love and Trust Versus Fear; Reflections upon Reading William Platt's "Women, Love, and Life." 15c.

PERSONAL EXPERIENCES of Two American Anti-Vivisectionists in Various Countries. Philip G. Peabody. With an Appendix by Col. R. G. Ingersoll. Reduced from 25c to 15c.

PERSONAL RIGHTS AND SEXUAL WRONGS. Oswald Dawson. 25c.

PRIESTLY CELIBACY. Prof. A. L. Rawson. Together with The Incoherence of Transition (E. C. Walker), Motherhood in Freedom (Moses Harman), The Greatest Sin (an allegory, R. B. Kerr), and Jealousy, the Foe of Freedom (Oscar Rotter). 25c.

RELIGION AND RATIONALISM. The relation of each to human liberty. The religionist, fancying that he has the whole truth, is logically opposed to investigation, and he appeals to physical force to arrest the discovery of new truths. What Rationalism is, and how many believe themselves Free-thinkers who are only unbelieving or disgruntled religionists. The necessity for separate organizations and a division of labor among reformers. The Secular Union. Important facts and arguments in a compact form. E. C. Walker. 5c.

RIGHTS OF MAN. Thomas Paine. Answer to Burke's attack upon the French revolution. A political treatise of great general value, as advocating liberty and democracy. Contains the fundamental principles of true republicanism. Cloth, 50c; paper, 25c.

RUBAIYAT (Quatrains) OF OMAR KHAYYAM. Edward FitzGerald's Interpretation; with original introduction; special cover; latest version. Paper, 25c.

RULED BY THE TOMB. A discussion of free thought and free love. Orbert Northcote. 10c.

SCIENCE IN STORY; or, Sammy Tubbs, the Boy Doctor, and Sponge, the Troublesome Monkey. For young folks. Dr. E. B. Foote. Five volumes in "red line," presentation edition. $1. Five volumes, plainer binding, $1.25; all in one volume, $1.

SEXUAL PHYSIOLOGY FOR THE YOUNG. Being the fifth volume of "Science in Story." 250 pages; cloth bound; illustrated. 50c.

SONGS OF THE UNBLIND CUPID. J. Wm. Lloyd. Edition de luxe. Verses printed from Kelmscott type upon deckle edged hand made paper of ornate effect. Initial letters, ornaments and borders are in red; initial letter and sketch upon the opening page are hand painted in water colors. Covers in browns, with choice of silver or gold lettering. Very handsome gift book. 50c.

STUDIES IN SOCIOLOGY. In four parts: I., The Law of Happiness; II., The Law of Individual Control; III., The Law of Exchange; IV., The Law of Environment. Albert Chavannes. 25c.

TALKS ON NATURE. Important information for both sexes. Dr. J. H. Greer. 128 pages. Reduced from 50 to 25c.

THE ABOLITION OF MARRIAGE. John Beverly Robinson. Together with Isabel's Infection (Mariette), Reminiscences of Berlin Heights (A. Warren), and The Sexes and Love in Freedom (Oscar Rotter). 25c.

THE BAR SINISTER AND LICIT LOVE, including the first biennial proceedings of the Legitimation League, and a full account of the Lanchester case, with full-page half-tone pictures of Edith Lanchester and Lillian Harman. Handsomely bound in green and gold covers. 327 pages. 25c.

THE BLUE LAWS OF CONNECTICUT. Taken from the Code of 1650 and the public records of the Colony of Connecticut previous to 1665. With an account of the persecution of Witches and Quakers in New England, and some extracts from the Blue Laws of Virginia. Copiously Illustrated. 25c.

THE BRITISH BARBARIANS. Grant Allen, the greatest of the Hill-Top pioneers. Dedicated "to all who have heart enough, brain enough, and soul enough to understand it." Handsomely bound in cloth. 281 pages. $1.

THE WOMAN WHO DID. Grant Allen. A powerful story of a refined, educated and high-spirited woman who dared to defy the tyranny of church and state and ignore the institution of marriage. Handsomely bound in cloth. $1.

THE NEW HEDONISM. Grant Allen. The opening paragraph says: "The old ascetism said: 'Be virtuous and you will be happy.' The new hedonism says: 'Be happy and you will be virtuous.'" In another place the writer says: "In proportion as men have freed themselves from mediæval superstitions have they begun to perceive that the unclean and impure things are celibacy and asceticism; that the pure and beautiful and ennobling thing is the fit and worthy exercise of the reproductive function." Paper covers; 8 large pages; twelve copies, 50c. Single copy, 5c.

THE CHICAGO MARTYRS. The famous speeches of the eight condemned anarchists in Judge Gary's Court, and Altgeld's reasons for pardoning Fielden, Neebe and Schwab. 25c.

THE COMING WOMAN. Lillie D. White. 5c.

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM. Principles and platform of organized Freethought. 10c.

THE EVOLUTION OF MODESTY. Jonathan Mayo Crane. A consideration of the origin of clothes and the reasons why people wear clothing. Here are a few questions it answers: What is modesty? What is the cause of it? What is the use of it? What is the cause of the feeling of shame? Is nudity immodest? What is the cause of the notion that it is shameful to expose some parts of the body? Why do not all peoples agree as to what parts of the body should be concealed? 5c.

THE FOUNTAIN OF LIFE; or, The Threefold Power of Sex. Lois Waisbrooker. 25c.

THE FUTURE OF SECULARISM. When will the Cause of Justice triumph? 5c.

THE PRODIGAL DAUGHTER; or, The Price of Virtue. Rachel Campbell. Together with Legal Wifehood (Lucinda B. Chandler), Life's Gifts (Olive Schreiner), and Marriage—What It Was and Is; Will the Coming Woman Marry? 25c.

THE REVIVAL OF PURITANISM. E. C. Walker. 25c.

THE RIGHTS OF CHILDREN. R. B. Kerr. Together with What Are Women Here For? (E. B. Foote, Jr., M. D.), The New Martyrdom (Lillian Harman), and The Will, from the French of Guy de Maupassant. 25c.

THE SANCTITY OF MARRIAGE. As viewed from a moral and sanitary standpoint. A solemn protest against the present demoralizing management of that institution, and a plea for its purification upon rational principles upon education. By Dr. Robert A. Greer. A valuable "opening wedge" in missionary work. Price reduced from 25c to 10c.

THE SECRET INSTRUCTIONS OF THE JESUITS. A reprint from an edition published in 1820, quoted by the highest authorities as authentic. The work is redolent of Jesuit craft and is a plain Index to the underhand working of that order against the welfare of individuals and society. 25c.

THE STATE: ITS HISTORIC ROLE. Prince Peter Kropotkin. 10c.

THE TROUBADOURS AND COURTS OF LOVE. J. F. Rowbotham. Cloth. 350 pages. $1.50. Postage, 12c.

THE UNWOMANLY WOMAN. Lizzie M. Holmes. Together with That Great Fraud, Telepathy Society (Moses Hull), Virgin Soil (George Egerton), and Normal Sexual Instinct (Ernest Winne). 25c.

THE WORM TURNS. Revolutionary Poems. Voltairine de Cleyre. 25c.

THOMAS JEFFERSON. His Political, Social and Religious Philosophy. Gen. M. M. Trumbull. 5c.

TOKOLOGY. A book for every woman. By Alice B. Stockham, M. D. Illustrated. Tokology teaches possible painless pregnancy and parturition, giving full, plain directions for the care of a woman before and after confinement. The ailments of pregnancy can be prevented as well as the pains and dangers of childbirth avoided and women need not go down to death giving birth to children. English, German or Swedish. $2.25.

TRAVELS IN FAITH. By Capt. Robert C. Adams. His mental experience from superstition to rationalism. Cloth, 75c; paper, 25c.

VACCINATION A GIGANTIC CRIME. Samuel Darling. 15c.

VINDICATION OF THOMAS PAINE. Col. R. G. Ingersoll. Dealing with all the slanders brought against the name and fame of Paine. A little pamphlet which every admirer of Thomas Paine should have by him for reference. Paper, 15c.

VITAL FORCE. Magnetic Exchange and Magnetation. Albert Chavannes. 25c.

WHAT THE YOUNG NEED TO KNOW: a Primer of Sexual Rationalism. Edwin C. Walker. "Let us cease to be ashamed of what makes us men, of what makes us women, of what gives us the kisses of lovers and the encircling arms of babes." Paper covers; 42 large pages. 15c.

WHAT IS RELIGION? Ingersoll's last public address, delivered at the meeting of the Free Religious Association in Boston on June 2, 1899. To which is appended the poem, "Declaration of the Free," the last verse written by the great Freethinker. 5c.

WHY THE UNDERTONE? An open letter to Judge Gary. Sarah E. Amos. 5c.

WOMAN, CHURCH, AND STATE. Matilda Joslyn Gage. [illegible] is Mrs. Gage's last and crowning work. Every woman ought to read it. Every liberal should own it. 450 pages. Cloth, $1.50; postage, 12c.

WHEN LOVE IS LIBERTY AND NATURE LAW. John Badcock, Jr. 10c.

WOMAN AND MAN will want it. A burning protest against the tremendous wrong done woman by the church, which controlled the state. It ought to be widely read for the good it will do. Cloth, $1.50; paper, 75c.

WOMAN: Four Centuries of Progress. Susan H. Wixon. 5c.

WOMAN IN THE PAST, PRESENT AND FUTURE. Woman was the first human being that tasted bondage. Woman was a slave before the slave existed. The basis of all oppression is economic dependence on the oppressor. This has been the condition of woman in the past and is so still. She is now a slave of the slave. This work is August Bebel's masterpiece. 2vo, 72 pages. 25c.

Address M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

Price 2 Cents.

LUCIFER.

THE LIGHT-BEARER.

THIRD SERIES, VOL. VI., No. 11. CHICAGO, ILLINOIS, MAR. 27, E. M. 302. [C. E. 1902.] WHOLE No. 910

QUATRAINS.

TO AN ASCETIC READER OF VENUS AND ADONIS.

Is this wine o'erstrong for you?
Yet condemn not, Nose-of-Blue.
Mayhap 'twere wisdom far more fine
To judge your poor self by the wine.

SUSPICION.

Curse not, but pity him whose fate it is
To look distrustfully upon his kind;
A woe full great enough to bear is this,
With faith and love cast out of heart and mind.

THE CHANGELING.

A shape in clanking fetters paused to say
"I am not love; nay, love knows not these lands.
I took his place on that unhappy day
When bonds were locked upon his loyal hands."

THE PROSTITUTE.

She walks the street at dusk's dim hour
To serve those souls who 'neath a glove
Hide shame's soiled hand with careful power,
And cant of purity in love.

A CHOICE.

Chains are not other than chains though fashioned of gold, I cry;
Nor is liberty less than a boon, though thou hast but a cup and a crust.
Better a bed in the fields and a man's heart at dawn in the sky
Than a luxury great as a king's where a voice ever utters, "Thou must."

WILLIAM FRANCIS BARNARD.

For the Day and the Hour.

"Rite" does not spell "Right."

* * *

A lie disguised only flatters the truth.

* * *

Lust may sin, but love cannot even tell a lie.

* * *

It is hard to teach an old dogmatist new tricks.

* * *

Knowledge is power—when there is enough of it.

* * *

Prejudice has only one use for reason: to ab-use it.

* * *

Liberty keeps her place, and does not come until she is called.

* * *

There is but one power before which tyranny trembles: thought.

* * *

Wisdom can better afford to wait for men to come to her than men can afford to wait for wisdom to come to them.

* * *

Radicalism is a young gladiator who fights unclothed, with only his ideals for weapons, and who knows not caution; Conservatism clad in armor, parries and thrusts with extreme care, knowing his vulnerability.

* * *

Love in chains is like virtue commanded, another illustration, not only of superfluous care and coddling, but of the widespread delusion expressed by the belief in total depravity. To say that man would rather do wrong than right, and must therefore always be coerced, is, if the fools could see it, like saying that man would rather be miserable than happy, or foolish than wise. But the devil-worshipers must have their day.

* * *

The evils of partial State-ownership of men we see now, when the laws define, and commend or penalize so many acts and activities. The State has its evolution like all other phenomena of nature, a change from simplicity to complexity, or from partial control to universal and complete control. Whether the goal of evolution be an absolutism whose soul is one man or a condition of State Socialism, whether the evolution begins in a republic or a constitutional monarchy, the end is one and the same—complete State-ownership. The soul of the State is power; when the State's power is complete the evil of complete State control of man's life will be realized.

* * *

Divorce as a remedy for the evils of marriage is an expedient which like many others in this meddling world, only serves to make bad matters worse. Men and women may only love and unite by permission of the Government, that is the first evil; because, as love is a state of emotion, and emotions are neither created nor uncreated by acts of the will, to promise or to bind oneself to continue a relation resting upon such emotion is to stultify reality by stultifying truth and integrity in the individual; and the act is followed as we all often see by the realized misery of mismating. But this is where the second evil begins; a married man and woman may not be free unless one accuses the other of crimes. They may not part for the best of causes, that love between them is not; then the acts which are natural results of bondage, crimes or not, are done, and they part, soiled and scarred; with curses on their lips and hatred in their hearts. Thus are bad matters made worse.

* * *

The universal lie has received reinforcement of late in many ways; one most noticeable example being the right about of the daily-dirty-rags dignified with the name of newspapers, as shown in articles upon dead ex-Governor Altgeld. While this man lived there was no better hated man in the world; dead, there is no praise too bad for him. If it were only shame which actuated these paid prevaricators, leading them to eat their words at this late day! But the dictionary from which their vocabularies are drawn knows no such word as shame. No, it is not shame; the whining cant issuing from the lips of those mercenary liars, the editors, flows from the bottoms of hearts sewered and sodden with the filth of the universal lie, the result of paltering, pandering, and applauding. What the truth is, these men never ask; what are the people saying, or, what is authority saying, this they ask, for this only would they know. Lies, lies, lies; every day the stream flows forth; no sincerity anywhere. Only echoes of the moribund mob or of the stealthy speech of the vampyre powerful: these are all we hear. Ex-Governor Altgeld was what he was; but you, Livers and utterers of the lie, you are not the ones to show him to the world, either by praise or blame. You live for influence and not for truth. Out upon your fulsomeness, were this man living he would turn his back upon you. Your praise is an impertinence. You lie!

* * *

And now cometh one William M. Salter, and deposeth that, "We cannot pledge romantic love, but we can loyalty and service. It is the height of our moral being to make such pledges—there is no true marriage without them." Mr. Salter is a gardener who by "Ethical Culture" produces moral cabbage-heads, lecturing every Sunday in Chicago. But he is quite right in his statement "that there is no true marriage without" the "pledges" of "loyalty and service"; in fact it is "the pledges" of "loyalty and service" which make marriage true, and the evil thing which it is; though our supercilious worshiper of custom, and kow-tower to the family superstition did not mean this, but rather meant to praise a blameful thing. If it be "the height of our moral being" to "pledge loyalty and service," then to withdraw that loyalty and service from a man or woman must be the lowest depth of that "moral being." Well, well: who would have thought that the matter could be settled so easily! Just marry, and then stick it out through thick and thin; endure through all possible changes of character this side of devilishness, and then you will be doing the high, the noble thing. Why? Hear Mr. Salter again. "Because, the family is of such transcendent importance to the race." Ah, there we have it! Man was made for society and not society for man! This is the pestilence of "ethics" and "morality" that apart from a few precepts stolen from the stores of experience, they take little account of real things; that they rest upon appearances. What becomes of the integrity of a life, of a soul which can find no nobler office than thick and thin loyalty to a union which sacrifices and denies all the true feelings of two hearts? Can the welfare of society really rest upon the denial of real individuality? Marriage vows are promises to give up all that you might become in life if in any way you find it interfering with this sacredness of the family, would not a society better worth saving and honoring result from unions which were in their inception and continuation voluntary, providing that woman as well as man were free economically? Are chains in the nature of things better for man than liberty? So it would seem, if we are to listen to this moraler. But if, as many of us joyfully assert and believe, "Liberty is the mother and not the daughter of order," this Chicago reactionary, though Salter, could hardly in his most reversionary proposals be fresher than in those which he suggests in the name of "Marriage."

* * *

By all means, Whitelaw Reid should attend the Coronation Ceremonies and be accepted as the official representative of the Government of the United States; and the President's daughter ought to go too. The divine right of kings could not well find more strenuous exemplars unless the President himself went. What do the people want? The Coronation will express once more the sacredness of authority and will call England's boss to witness, that now, while Britian's murdering a people, nothing has been left undone which would teach Englishmen to be craven or strengthen the swollen might of the State. With the fraud memories of our triumphs in the Philippines, to say nothing of our glorious success in making those at home honor the State first and humanity and manhood last, we can make a splendid beginning at King Edward's Court in preparing for the next step—the creation of a bran new king for ourselves. Some people are never satisfied; let the good work go on.

IRONICUS.

There is a village in Austria, near the Adriatic, where the nudity cure is practised. The debilitated neurasthenics, the tired, etc., can go there, and in the costume of Adam, expose their persons to the air, the sun's rays, or the rain. Thickets are carefully arranged so as to cut off all view of the patients. A hat and short trunks only are allowed; the sexes are separated. Baths, massage, gymnastics and games are indulged in, and a strict vegetarian diet completes the treatment.—Medical World.

The Great Anglo-Saxon Partnership in Crime and Infamy.

[The following abstract of the last speech of ex-Governor John P. Altgeld was sent from Joliet to the Chicago "Public," and printed in its issue of March 15. M. H.]

At a great pro-Boer meeting held at the opera house here tonight, ex-Governor Altgeld declared that all friends of humanity owed a debt of gratitude to Gov. Yates for issuing a proclamation soliciting assistance for the Boer women and children who are perishing in foul concentration camps which the British are maintaining in South Africa.

He said that the kind people of America had raised a large sum of money with which to relieve the distress of the Boer women and children, and now we are unable to send it to them. And he then made the startling declaration that we, the most powerful people of the world, could not even perform an errand of charity, because Lord Pauncefote, the British ambassador at Washington, objected to it; that while we were boasting of our power and of our prestige, and claiming to be a world power, we could not even send a chest of medicine, or a basket of bread, to perishing women and children, because the English ambassador was opposed to it.

Gov. Altgeld further charged that Lord Pauncefote has for several years meddled in American affairs, and that our state department and Secretary Hay were mere vest pocket conveniences for the British ambassador.

There were 18 counts and specific charges in Gov Altgeld's indictment.

1. That just before the beginning of the Spanish war Lord Pauncefote, representing the aristocracy of the old world, meddled in our affairs, and tried to unite the governments of Europe in making a joint protest against America's interference in behalf of Cuba.

2. That when the American people asserted themselves, and our government was compelled to go to the rescue of Cuba, then England issued a strong neutrality proclamation, forbidding all of her subjects everywhere from furnishing us aid, or doing anything that would in any way be a violation of the strictest neutrality.

3. That the treaties between England and the South African republics recognized the latter as independent nations, except only as to the right to make treaties with foreign countries; that Chamberlain had repeatedly declared in and out of parliament that they were independent nations, and that England had no right to interfere in any manner with their internal affairs; that Gladstone and Morley and Brice and that great body of English people who have made England great, were in favor of doing justice to the Boers, but that the aristocracy, to which Lord Pauncefote belonged, the stock speculators, the gamblers, the whiskey-drinking, cock-fighting, strutting, brutal element that was running the government, wanted the lands and the gold fields of the Boers, and brought on this war.

4. That had our government at that time been true to our traditions and intimated to England that we should regard the destruction of the two young republics of South Africa as an unfriendly act toward all republican governments, England would have stopped, she would have arbitrated, and the horrors that have since been enacted in South Africa would not have happened.

5. But that instead of being true to the sentiment of our people and republican institutions, our state department was so manipulated by Lord Pauncefote, the British ambassador, that it gave England positive assurances of our moral support in everything she might do; that these assurances were given with so much ostentation as to attract the attention of the world.

6. That Chamberlain publicly boasted that while there was no written alliance between the two governments, there was what he called an understanding between statesmen which he said was of far more importance than written treaties.

7. That in consequence of the stand taken by our government other countries were deterred from interfering, and from helping the Boers.

8. That consequently, through Lord Pauncefote's manipulation, our government has rendered Great Britain greater service than it could have rendered by sending armies and navies into the war.

9. That we have thus made ourselves moral partners in guilt, and morally responsible for the murders, the burnings and the infamies practiced in South Africa by the English aristocracy.

10. That through Lord Pauncefote's manipulation Secretary Hay's son was sent as consul to South Africa, and was ostentatiously sent by way of Lord Salisbury's office to get his instructions; that this was done on purpose to show the other nations that our country would stand by England.

11. That then the inter-oceanic canal treaty was negotiated by Secretary Hay with England, by virtue of which we were to furnish all the money, and do all the work, and get the right of way, but were not to fortify it, but were to leave it in such a condition that the English navy could at any time render our property worthless; and that this pusillanimous treaty was defeated by a republican senate.

12. That the British censor in South Africa has repeatedly stopped and opened our mails which the United States government sent to its own officers in South Africa; that in some cases the censor held these mails back for weeks, and then kindly wrote an endorsement on the envelope, permitting them to pass. Gov. Altgeld held up before his audience fac similes of the envelope with the English censor's endorsement on them, showing how the mails of the American government were thus tampered with, and he charged that no other government on earth would submit to such an insult; but that through the influence of Lord Pauncefote our state department was prevented from even making a protest.

13. That in 1898 the American people declared that concentration camps could not be tolerated on American soil; that now for nearly two years England is maintaining concentration camps in the Bermuda islands, which are a part of America, where she is imprisoning not only men, but eight and ten year old boys, and that no protest has been made by our government against this practice.

14. That instead of maintaining strict neutrality between England and the Boers, as England compelled her subjects to maintain between us and the Spaniards, we have allowed the English to maintain a regular supply camp at New Orleans for the purpose of supplying the English munitions of war, and have shipped over 150,000 head of horses and mules, beside other munitions of war, without which England could not possibly have continued the contest; that we have violated all the laws of neutrality, and that although many of our people have protested against this outrage, Lord Pauncefote's influence over the state department is so strong that not even a protest has been made against it.

15. That now after the humane people of America have raised funds with which to buy medicine and furnish other relief as a matter of charity to the women and children who are perishing in British concentration camps in South Africa, our Secretary of State Hay has refused to even apply for a passport for an American citizen to carry this charity fund to South Africa; that Lord Pauncefote's influence at the state department at Washington is more potent than that of 70,000,000 American people.

16. That through the influence of Lord Pauncefote, we are going to send a special embassy to the coronation of King Edward, so as to endorse the doctrine of the divine right of kings, and at least by our conduct apologize for the acts of the fathers in establishing republican institutions in America founded on the rights of man.

17. Gov. Altgeld further declared that Gen. De Wet with his fighting farmers was a more important factor in the progress of the world than was King Edward VII.; that De Wet and his farmers represented the aspirations and the hopes of the toiling millions of the earth, in all lands, who do the world's work, and make civilization possible; while King Edward VII. represented simply the parasitic classes that eat the substance of other men's toil.

18. The governor further declared that England was on the downward grade, and will in time pass off of the maps of the world; and that if every Boer in South Africa were shot down, the glory of their heroism would live through the eternities and be forever an inspiration to mankind.

The American Press-Writers' Association.

The most important news of the week to the Press Writers who read Lucifer comes to hand this evening in a letter from Oliver A. Verity, announcing the action of the federal court at Tacoma, Washington, in instructing the jury to return a verdict of not guilty in the case of the three Home colonists, charged with sending obscene matter through the mails in the columns of "Discontent."

In the same letter came a clipping from the Tacoma "Evening News" of March 7, containing the report of the federal grand jury from which I quote one of the best targets ever given the Press-Writers. The "News" says: "Before presenting its final report the grand jury returned five indictments. Four of them were against Home colony Anarchists, Mattie D. Penhallow, J. E. Larkin, James W. Adams and Lois Waisbrooker. Bench warrants were ordered issued for their arrest. All four are indicted for alleged violations of the postal laws. Their offenses consisted in mailing obscene, lewd, lascivious and licentious matter." And from the final report as published in the "News" I select the following: "We find that at Home, Pierce County, Wash., there is a postoffice accommodating a settlement of avowed anarchists and free lovers, the members of which society on numerous instances, with the apparent sanction of the entire community, have abused the privileges of the postoffice establishment and department, by depositing for mailing and delivery at said postoffice, with the knowledge of the postoffice official there in charge, non-mailable matter and matter calculated to corrupt and injure the members of the body politic. This conduct has extended over a period of about two years, and though certain members of that society have been indicted for such conduct heretofore, they still assume and display a defiant attitude, and show no intention of ceasing such abuse of the postoffice privileges. We therefore recommend that the postoffice at Home be abolished, and the privilege which the members of this society have so long abused be taken from them." Judge Hanford ordered certified copies of the report of the grand jury be forwarded to the postmaster-general and to the attorney-general at Washington, D. C.

Five days after this extraordinary finding by the grand jury, on spotter or procured testimony, the cases against three of these alleged violators of the postoffice privilege is thrown out of court.

Any one interested in the subject of anti-vaccination should send for the March number of "Animals' Friend," price 5 cts. published by Press-Writer J. M. Greene, 1 Beacon St., Boston. It contains a condensed report of the fight before the Massachusetts Legislature for the repeal of the compulsory law. There are 18 pages of very interesting reading for every lover of personal liberty.

NEW MEMBERS.

247d. Corriher, J. C., China Grove, N. C.
248c. Cullar, M. J., East Bernstadt, Laurel Co., Ky.
249a. Fowler, Sada Bailey, 2325 Master St., Philadelphia, Pa.
250a. McReynolds, Robert, 1119 N St., Lincoln, Nebr.
251b. Bell, T. M., Box 102, Crete, Nebr.
252b. Bell, Mrs. V. A., Box 102, Crete, Nebr.
253b. Wilcox, Elsie Cole, New Whatcom, Wash.
254d. Brown, Charles Turner, Room 708, 69 Dearborn St., Chicago, Ill.
255d. Corey, James S., Fishers Island, N. Y.

CORRECTION.

173c. Wilson, J. A., Box 6, Frost's Corner, Amesbury, Mass.

A. C. ARMSTRONG, 17 Leroy St., Dorchester, Mass.

Lucifer, the Lightbearer

M. HARMAN, EDITOR AND PUBLISHER.

PUBLISHED EVERY WEEK AT 500 FULTON STREET, CHICAGO, ILL.

Terms: One year, $1; six months, 50 cents; three months, 25 cents.

Entered at the Chicago Postoffice as Second-Class Mail Matter.

Eastern Representative, E. C. Walker, 244 W. 143d street, New York.

Lucifer—Its Meaning and Purpose.

LUCIFER—The planet Venus; so called from its brightness.—Webster's Dictionary.

LUCIFEROUS—Giving Light; affording light or the means of discovery.—Same.

LUCIFIC—Producing Light.—Same.

LUCIFORM—Having the form of Light.—Same.

The name Lucifer means Light-Bringing or Light-Bearing, and the paper that has adopted this name stands for Light against Darkness—for Reason against Superstition—for Science against Tradition—for Investigation and Enlightenment against Credulity and Ignorance—for Liberty against Slavery—for Justice against Privilege.

"Let Us Be Honest; Let Us Be Just."

Near the close of an elaborate article on "Labor's Rights and Wrongs," by William S. Waudby of Washington D. C., in the March "Arena" (N. Y.) a paragraph in brackets—evidently editorial—reads, in part, as follows:

> The assassination of President McKinley should arouse the American people to a sense of their danger from unlimited and unrestricted immigration. Anarchists are always derived from these imports, and as the former are opposed to all forms of government—malcontents who would use violence to destroy the existing social and civil order—why should they be allowed to inflict their presence upon this Republic? Would it not be better to compel them to remain in their own countries?

Now, while I impugn no man's motives I would respectfully ask, in accord with the motto at the head of this article,

First, Is it honest, is it just, to say that the people called Anarchists are opposed to all forms of government?

While I belong to no Anarchist society or club, and while I do not call myself an Anarchist I know something of the principles taught by those called by that name, and I know that while they oppose despotisms of all sorts—including the despotisms that lurk under the forms of Democracy and Republicanism—these people believe in and practice SELF-GOVERNMENT; co-operative defense against invasion, in other words they advocate that form of government sometimes called the "Co-operative Commonwealth," in which there are no rulers and no ruled, no millionaire monopolists and no proletaires or paupers, no tyrants and no slaves.

Second, Is it honest, is it just to call all Anarchists "Malcontents who would use violence to destroy the existing social and civil order?"

The word malcontent is thus defined by Webster: "One who is discontented; especially, a discontented subject of government; one who expresses his discontent by words or overt acts."

I take the ground boldly and freely that whoever is not a malcontent under "existing social and civil order" is not HUMAN; at least he is not humane or sympathetic with those who suffer wrong and outrage from the working of the miscalled "social and civil order." All progress comes from discontent.

While it is probably true that some who call themselves Anarchists believe in opposing force by force, violence by violence, murder by murder, there is also a large proportion of these people, perhaps a majority, who prefer peaceful means; who would depend upon the cultivation of a public sentiment, a public conscience, that will, in time, rectify all social and civil evils without resort to the methods of rulers, that is, of war, of assassination, of robbery and murder—as now practiced by every so-called government on earth.

Count Leo Tolstoi, one of the most noted of the Anarchistic "malcontents," deprecates the use of force even in defense of his own life or that of his family and friends.

Third, Is it honest, is it just, to deny to the discontented, the oppressed, in foreign lands, the right to emigrate to this country where only a small portion of nature's opportunities are as yet occupied and used? If this policy of exclusion had been enforced in time past, how many of the writers and speakers who thus would close the doors of America against the discontented of Europe, would now be here?

The writer of the quoted paragraph seems unconscious of the fact that malcontents are born and bred here in this country, and hence that the closing of the gates against discontented foreigners will not stop the supply of malcontents—of those who "express their discontent by words and overt acts."

Query: Did the editor of the "Arena" ever hear of such men as George Washington, Patrick Henry, John Hancock and some others who, a little more than a century ago were denounced by the rulers of England because they dared to express their discontent in words, and even in "overt acts."

* * *

The responsibility resting upon the leaders of current thought—such as the editors of the great dailies, weeklies and monthlies of the country, is certainly very great. If these editors mislead the public mind, and either consciously or unconsciously prompt their readers to the commission of acts of injustice and of violence—by legal or illegal means—against innocent men and women, it were better for such leaders "that they never had been born"—to use the words of one of old.

* * *

That some of the leaders of current thought are earnestly trying to so direct that thought that all may see and appreciate the real causes of the evils that now afflict the masses of people in this and other countries, is shown by paragraphs such as the following, found in the article of Rev. Dr. Heber Newton in the February "Arena," entitled "Causes of Anarchism:"

> It may be that the martyrdom of our good President is to force open our blind eyes. The supreme lesson of the crime of September is that even our Republic must put its house in order, must make its government a real commonwealth, must make its industry humane, just and Christian. McKinley will not have died in vain if his death warns our nation of the rocks ahead from selfish commercialism, from our apostasy to the worship of Mammon. Perhaps by such horrors our people will be made ready to consider whether no other and higher industrial order is possible, no saner and more Christian civilization is attainable in the orderly way of evolution.

Throughout the article, and also throughout the previous article on the same subject, in the "Arena" for January, this same distinguished leader of current thought seems trying to convince his readers that revolutionary anarchism is not the real disease that afflicts this country but only a SYMPTOM of the real disease, which is the false economic, political and religious systems that now curse mankind, in the United States and in all lands called Christian—as when he says: "The burning wrongs entailed by this now out-grown system—unethical, immoral, irreligious—fire the revolt which we know as anarchism. Anarchism is at one with socialism in the belief that our present competition [rather our monopolistic system that defeats normal competition] is essentially and unescapably unjust and oppressive; that it imposes a new slavery on labor; that it wrests to the luxury of the few the provision of Nature for the support of the many; that it turns bread-winning into a strife more cruel than the struggle for existence among the lower lives around us; that it corrupts morality. . . . . that, in short, most of the ills our life is heir to, against which we vainly struggle, are the results of a system. . . . which dooms reform to impotence, government to failure, and religion to hypocrisy."

These be strong, brave and true words; words that would do honor to the head and heart of any leader of thought, be he Christian, Theist, Agnostic or Atheist. But while giving due honor to this learned and earnest "doctor of divinity," let us not forget the injunction that forms the caption of this article.

MARTYRDOM.

Webster says: "Martyr—a witness who testifies with his blood. Hence, one who sacrifices his life, his station, or what is of great value to him, for the sake of principle, or to sustain a cause."

With the facts before us, is it honest, is it just, to speak of the "martyrdom of our good president?" That is to say, is Dr. Newton honest with himself, is he just to himself and to the brave and true utterances which we have quoted from him, when he thus, by implication, SANCTIONS the system, the principles, the policies, the doctrines for which the man William McKinley stood sponsor during his whole life, as well as at the time of his tragical death?

In thus questioning I do not sit in judgment upon and condemn the man whose tragical death was mourned as the death of no man had ever been mourned in America before. William McKinley's heredity and environment made him what he was, and compelled him to do as he did. It is with systems, policies and doctrines we now have to deal, rather than with men, and hence the question is legitimate,

What were the policies, what the systems, what the doctrines in defence of which William McKinley gave up his life?

Will Rev. Newton say that William McKinley was not an honest, able and faithful champion of the system, the doctrines, the principles of government and ethics which he himself has so bravely and truly denounced in his "Arena" articles?

Hear what Chauncey M. Depew, a leading Republican politician, and always a great friend and admirer of William McKinley, has to say of him, in a recent speech, according to press reports:

> Though always a poor man he made possible the gigantic fortunes which have been amassed by master minds in the control, use and distribution of iron, coal oil, cotton and wool and their products. Though never an organizer or beneficiary of combinations or trusts, yet the constant aggregation of most industries in vast corporations of fabulous capital, while due to the tendencies of the age and common to all countries, received tremendous acceleration from his policies. The dominant idea which governed his public life was that measures which brought out our national resources and increased our national wealth added to the security, comfort and happiness of every citizen.

* * *

What were these "policies" that so "tremendously accelerated" the great aggregations in the hands of the few?

First, A robber tariff—in the interest of the already rich.

Second, The single, gold standard of currency—in the interest of the already rich.

Third, Imperialism, conquest of the Philippines—in the interest of the wealth-loving, the power-loving, the office-seeking classes.

Whatever may be the merits or demerits of Mr. Depew, as a man or politician, he certainly deserves the thanks of all truth-lovers for this clear statement of the basic principles of the dominant elements in both the Republican and Democratic parties. Not often have we heard the Hamiltonian idea better expressed, namely, that the government should "protect the rich so that the rich could be able to protect the poor."

Depew takes more words to express this idea than did the father of the Federal "constitution," but the central thought is the same, and for the purposes of this present argument the important feature of the "Hon. Chauncey's" utterance is that the centralization of wealth and power in the hands of the few was the "dominant idea that governed the public life" of William McKinley, and if so then this idea, this policy or doctrine, is that for which our late President suffered "martyrdom"—if we accept the common and popular statement that the bullet of Czolgosz put the martyr's crown upon the head of his victim, in which opinion Dr. Newton evidently coincides.

* * *

"Always a poor man," says Depew of McKinley. This, from the standpoint of the plutocrat, is an "honest and just" statement. To be rich a man must be a millionaire, if not a multi-millionaire. McKinley died the possessor of a few hundred thousands only—besides certain stocks of uncertain value, also a paid-up insurance policy that would make his wife independent of want though she should live a few centuries longer—living on the interest alone.

While not immediately pertinent to the main purpose of this argument we may remark that McKinley was wise in not being himself "an organizer of combinations or trusts." He knew, or might have known, that the men who make it their business to organize these combinations would see that his wants would be well cared for, so long as his "policies" gave such "tremendous acceleration" to combinations and trusts.

The high priests of law and politics, like the high priests of the "gospel," do not need to engage in gainful occupations or enterprises. High salaries and big fees are much better—much less trouble, much less risk and worry, and even more "respectable."

* * *

From the foregoing it would appear that Rev. Dr. Newton and those who agree with him, are not intellectually honest, not morally just, to and with themselves, that is, to the principles of equity and humanity for which they seem to be contending, and those who are not honest and just to and with themselves are not apt to see clear enough to be honest and just to and with others. M. HARMAN.

Wanted---For the Spring Campaign.

All progress comes from change of ideals.

As we think so are we.

In order that Lucifer may do its part in changing the world's ideals it needs new readers.

Here is a proposition that should bring at the very least one thousand new readers:

For the paltry sum of TEN CENTS, in postage stamps of any denomination, we will send Lucifer five weeks and one copy of a neatly gotten-up booklet of forty-five pages called "INSTITUTIONAL MARRIAGE as Seen from the View-point of an Exiled Marsian"—a lecture by M. Harman at the Masonic Temple, Chicago.

How many of our old subscribers and helpers will send TEN new names each for this offer? How many five? How many four? Three? two? one?

Without effort nothing can be done.

Without combined and concerted effort but little can be done.

With combined and concerted effort the wheels of progress will move as they never have moved before.

Chicago Society of Anthropology

Meets every Sunday at 3:30 P. M., Hall 913, Masonic Temple. On March 30, "Members' Day," short papers or talks will be given, as follows:

Democracy of Art, Mrs. Florida M. Pratt; The Scope of History, A. R. Bowker; The Idol Breaker, Dr. Juliet Severance; The Press, Jonathan Mayo Crane; The Radical Press, Ross Winn; Man's Obligation to science, Adolf G. Vogeler; Woman, Moses Harman; Intermission; The Coming Democracy, Geo. A. Schilling; Man and the State, Morris Kaplan; The Sphere of Religion, Miss Mary Norton; Books, Frank L. Tolman; The Conflict of Modern Thought, Henry S. Wilcox; The Reign of Reason, Charles Turner Brown; The Anthropologic Society, Charles J. Lewis. Admission free.

Neo-Malthusianism Criticised.

BY ROBERT MOORESHOLME.

I must criticise Neo-Malthusianism, not alone because it says "marriage" where logically it means the reproductive relations of the sexes, but also because the truth or falsity of its first principle is irrelevant to the practical question for an individual or pair under the rule of institutions—especially for a woman contemplating the question whether or not she shall put herself in the way of having offspring. If in fact she must depend upon a man for support for herself and child, this proposition takes first place with her, and the abstract question of whether or not population tends to increase faster than the means of subsistence and even the nearer question of whether or not there is for generations to come plenty of land, seed, fuel and building materials, but monopolized so that labor is not admitted to enjoy them for the benefit of the laborer, and all such questions, are not to the precise point as regards herself, her independence and dignity, her ability to maintain these and rear a child or children as she would be content to rear them.

For illustration, at the time when coal was regarded as the only important fuel and source of power for manufactures, speculations were rife as to the exhaustion of the coal supply, especially of England, but good old John Weston of London wrote that the possible future exhaustion of the coal-beds was not the cause of the scarcity of coal in Bethnal Green fireplaces. The inability of individuals, it will strike every reflecting reader, or the inability and indisposition of the masses to take some of the immense stores of coal in the mines and consume it for their present comfort, is a more sensible explanation of their freezing in their homes while the question of the exhaustion of the supply could be postponed at least for a couple of centuries.

It is not my intention here to rehash arguments against the Malthusian doctrine—such as that given land, the power of increase of food is in excess of any need so long as the earth is not filled. It is my aim to direct attention to the really valid grounds for prudence and most for women, because it surely concerns them the most nearly and positively.

The rivers may go dry in time, but that is not why ten thousand people now pay tribute to one for water from a spring. The rivers may never go dry, but this makes no difference in the fact that water rights are sold; and the wife of the man who sells them can have all her children provided for so long as she is the wife of the owner.

So whether population further does or does not tend to increase faster than subsistence, if it be the fact that subsistence is not in sight for the coming child and not at the disposal of the mother in her own power, the immediate question for her is very distinct—independence for herself and subsistence for her child.

If she will be prudent neo-Malthusianism, though irrelevant, will not hurt her. The contrary belief, as optimism, would tend to confuse her into this imprudent thought: That there is plenty. Alas, it is not accessible to her.

I blame neo-Malthusianism merely because as a false reason for present prudence it disappears before argument— that there is plenty for a long time. Then comes the danger: If your argument has been upset you give up your position but your purpose was circumstantially correct. Let me restate neo-Malthusianism with qualifying words which will render it sure for present application in populous countries. Population tends to increase faster than the means of subsistence in the power of the masses where there is a lack of land or invasion of economic liberty. This is the actual condition.

I would not encourage women to shut their minds against theory but would like to see them hold clear, conscious views of the why of their action, which will thereby be the steadier. Thus I contend for correct reasons for what we believe and do. The Christain's faith does not rest upon a testimony by Josephus, though that is what he introduces in an argument and woman's sexual prudence cannot depend upon a theory which has not prevented some couples from having wealth enough to feed a thousand children while others do not succeed in feeding themselves, with or without children—a theory moreover, which has to explain the most abject poverty in some sparsely settled regions, which poverty is easily enough explained in the actual circumstances by the observed facts of lordship, prostitution, tribute and insecurity, with subjects accepting that sort of dominion in a spirit as submissive as the model orthodox wife's obedience to her husband.

These observations are called out by the circulation of a statement of neo-Malthusian principles. Arthur C. Everett is active in sending them out. I think he will not misunderstand me. We can agree that the only view of possibilities in actual conditions is what those conditions produce. The proletarian does not practically err in taking it that his world is what Malthus said, but that really depends upon the sort of animals the other proletarians are. A female Malthus could just as well write a treatise making every woman dependent for her support on a man. It is so while they think it must be so. Otherwise the limits are the habitable earth, or the force which keeps men and women off it and hinders them from inventing and using facilities of exchange.

Common-Law Marriage.

BY S. R. SHEPHERD.

Am sorry Tak Kak takes so lugubrious a view of that court decision. A thin slice, to say nothing of half a loaf, is better than no bread. Tak Kak wants the whole thing or nothing—now or never. He won't wait a minute. Progress is necessarily slow—step by step—but Tak Kak won't have it that way. He wants ultimate perfection at one jump. He is like the newly arrived Irishman who indignantly refused to pick up dollars in the streets saying "be gobs he'd wait till he found guineas."

Common-law marriage is only dangerous like fire or razors when bunglingly used. If a couple do not wish to be married let them preserve their names and not introduce each other or pass as husband and wife. That solves the problem. New York has just enacted a law providing that a man and woman may marry themselves by simply living as husband and wife. That is progress. Some people always look on the dark side. If presented with a farm they would spurn the gift because of a knothole in the fence.

"No person will rule over me with my consent. I will rule over no man."—Wm. Lloyd Garrison.

VARIOUS VOICES.

H. A., Fairbank, Ariz.:—I have come to long for my weekly Lucifer. It is growing better all the time. It is the kind of education most people need, and is surely an evangel. Enclosed find $2 for which send me "Hilda's Home" and "Chambermaid's Diary" to accompanying address.

J. B. Billard, North Topeka, Kan.:—Every thing you say about the entertainment of "Prince Henry" is right. You cannot criticize such actions too severely. I wish your editorial could be read by every person in our country. It is too true that we have scarcely anything left but the name of Republic. Every American citizen should be ashamed of this display of homage to Royalty, and this waste of money so much needed for many useful purposes.

W. W., New Haven, Conn.:—I am mailing you a copy of the "Evening Leader" of March 5 containing a letter by C. H. Wessels entitled "Marooning the Anarchists." This letter you will probably recognize as one that appeared in Lucifer No. 904 I thought it particularly good, so I cut it out and enclosed with it a brief request that it be reproduced in the "Evening Leader" and mailed it to that paper, with the result as you see. In this paper it will doubtless reach a great many people who would never see it in Lucifer. I am greatly pleased with the success of my effort to give it a wide circulation.

Wm. Halligan, Ephrata, Pa.:—Your editorial on the last seven days' wonder, Prince Henry of Germany, was a "corker." Be honest—do you expect things different? We are taught to see the clothes, decorations, etc., not the man. I think he was the most disgusted man in the crowd. You will find $1 enclosed for which credit my sub. to 955.

[The letters of Friends Billard and Halligan are samples of opinion expressed by our readers in regard to the visit of "Prince Henry" and the disgraceful exhibition of themselves made by the people of the United States. Truly, if a man of sense, he must have been the "most disgusted man in the crowd." M. H.]

S. R. S., Kas.:—Sincerely wish that Lucifer would devote more space to concrete affairs and less to abstract assumption and theory. I note with profound relief and gratitude that there was nothing about Anarchy in last issue. Shake! Give it a long rest.

[Theories are general deductions from "concrete affairs," or matters of fact, hence are right in their place. As to "assumptions:" When Archists cease their assumptions of right to invade their neighbors; when they cease to persecute and imprison those they call Anarchists, there will be less occasion to speak of Anarchy as a theory or philosophy of life. Until that time comes, all who do not want to be themselves invaded and robbed should join forces to defend the persecuted Anarchists. See article in this issue entitled "American Press-Writers Association." M. H.]

Mrs. Lena Selde, Davenport, Wash.:—Lucifer No. 908 is excellent, words cannot tell you how pleasing its articles were to me. I always thought your columns were closed to us Socialists, but I formed a different opinion when I saw Comrade Strout's article. He is the most active Socialist in our Local. I enclose 35 cents for Lucifer thirteen weeks, the "Prodigal Daughter," and extras of No. 908.

[Lucifer's columns have never been closed to Socialists. Many of our subscribers and contributors call themselves by that name. Though not agreeing with some who think the time is now ripe for political action I have constantly urged the necessity of co-operative effort looking towards the establishment of the "Co-operative Commonwealth." The words of Geo. D. Herron and others of similar views, have often been commended in our columns. We are always glad to supply back numbers to those who can and will judiciously use them. M. H.]

910.

If these figures correspond with the number printed on the wrapper of your Lucifer, your subscription expires with thi number.

If a copy of Lucifer fails to reach you, please order by number or date.

Lucifer will not be sent "by return mail" unless stamps for postage are enclosed with order.

TO NEW SUBSCRIBERS: Your subscription is paid to No. If you have not ordered Lucifer, a friend has subscribed for you. If you do not wish to receive it, please notify us by card or through your postmaster. If you wish to become a regular subscriber you will confer a favor by renewing before the expiration of your trial subscription.

VICE: ITS FRIENDS AND ITS FOES

BY EDWIN C. WALKER.

CONTENTS:—Brotherhood of Man; The Recognition of Facts; Folly of "For Men Only." Definition of Vice; Horrors of Prostitution; Abnormal Sexuality; Errors of Fathers, Mothers and Teachers; Persecution Does Not Reform; Prostitution and the Crusaders; The "Spoiling of the Heathen;" What are the Effects of Raids and Crusades? The Economic Side of the Problem Party Politics in Vice Crusading; In What Does Prostitution Consist? Some Causes of Prostitution; Two Kinds of Prostitution Compared; The Opponents of Divorce; "Purifying" the Tenements; Action for Advanced Women.

WITH APPENDIX:—The Wanderings of a Spirit; Our Fair Civilization The Folly and Cruelty of It All. Price 15c.

Address M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

Notice! I would be glad to hear from Liberals who would like to correspond with other Liberals. Address (with stamp.)
Snowville, Va. ELMINA DRAKE SLENKER.

RADICAL LITERATURE.

For Sale by M. Harman, 500 Fulton St., Chicago.

A CHAMBERMAID'S DIARY. By Octave Mirbeau. Translated from the French by Benj. R. Tucker. 466 pages. Handsomely bound in cloth. $1.50.

ADVANCEMENT OF SCIENCE. Prof. John Tyndall's famous Inaugural Address before the British Association for the Advancement of Science, with the articles on Prayer which so stirred the religious world. Cloth, 50c; paper, 25c.

AGE OF REASON (The). Presentation edition. Part I reprinted from the first English edition. Part II corrected by M. D. Conway's edition. With Paine's own account of his arrest in Paris. Photogravure portrait from the Mommey painting exhibited in London. Containing also portrait from the Jarvis painting; from the Peale painting, known as the Bonneville portrait, representing Paine as a member of the French Assembly, and a half-tone of the Peale painting. Large half-tones of the house presented to Paine, in which he lived in New Rochelle, and of the monument and surroundings. Yorktown, Pa., scenes; also eight half-tone views of buildings, etc., associated with Paine's life in Paris, and other illustrations. With Preface, Chronological Table, Notes, Index, etc. Printed on antique wove paper, large octavo, wide margins, gilt edge. Special cover design in colors. The finest and most accurate of all editions. Boxed. Postpaid, $2.

AGE OF REASON. Thomas Paine. Cloth, with steel plate portrait, 75c; paper 15c.

ANARCHISM: Its Philosophy and Ideal. Peter Kropotkin. 5c.

A PHYSICIAN IN THE HOUSE. A New Family Medical Work, by Dr. J. H. Greer. This book is up-to-date in every particular. It will save you hundreds of dollars in doctors' bills. It tells you how to cure yourself by simple and harmless home remedies. It recommends no poisonous or dangerous drugs. It teaches how to save health and life by safe methods. It teaches prevention—that it is better to know how to live and avoid disease than to take any medicine as a cure. It is not an advertisement and has no medicine to sell. It has hundreds of excellent recipes for the cure of the various diseases. It has 14 colored plates showing different parts of the human body. The chapter on Painless Midwifery is worth its weight in gold to women. The "Care of Children" is something every mother ought to read. It teaches the value of Air, Sunshine, and Water as medicines. It contains valuable information for the married. This book cannot fail to please you. If you are looking for health by the safest and easiest means, do not delay getting it. It has eight hundred pages, is neatly bound in cloth, with gold letters, and will be sent by mail or express, prepaid to any address, for $2.75.

A PLEA FOR THE NEW WOMAN. May L. Collins. With large new half-tone portrait. 10c.

A TALE OF THE STRASSBURG GEESE. R. B. Kerr. Together with The Strike of the Strassburg Geese (C. W. Coolridge), A Traveler's Tale (R. B. Kerr), The Cat's Story (Emile Zola) 5c.

AUTONOMY, SELF-LAW. A fragmentary dissertation on the right to non-invasive self-hood. 5c.

A WEEK ON THE CONCORD AND MERRIMAC RIVERS. Henry D. Thoreau. 25c.

BALZAC'S SERAPHITA: The Mystery of Sex. Mary Hanford Ford. Cloth. $1.

BIBLE TEMPERANCE. E. C. Walker. Proving that Liquor Drinking is Commended, Defended and Enjoined by the Bible, and giving close reference to the chapters and verses. 10c.

BORNING BETTER BABIES—Through regulating reproduction by controlling conception. E. B. Foote, Jr., M. D. 25c.

CAUSES OF HARD TIMES, and the Money Question. Albert Chavannes. 5c.

CHICAGO CONFERENCE OF TRUSTS. Speeches, debates, etc.; 31 portraits of delegates, including Benj. R. Tucker, Laurence Gronlund, William Jennings Bryan, Samuel Gompers, Louis F. Post, and George Schilling. 638 pages. 50c.

CHILDREN OF THE ITALIAN POOR. Paola Lombroso. 25c.

DARWIN, THE. (A novel.) Elmina D. Slenker. 50c.

DAWN OF CIVILIZATION, The; or, England in the Nineteenth Century. J. C. Spence. 176 pages. 25c.

DAWN-THOUGHT ON THE RECONCILIATION. By J. Wm. Lloyd. An inspired treatise that, with insight and solution, touches all the questions of life, love, soul and society. A prose-poem, simple enough for a child to enjoy, deep enough to make a philosopher think. The largest creed, the most generous theory, the gladdest gospel. A book of life. A religion of growth and the overlook—freedom and optimism. Read it. Printed in old style antique type, rubricated with portrait of the author. In three editions, de luxe, plain and paper bound. Prices, $1.25, $1.00 and 50c.

DIGGING FOR BED-ROCK. Camp-meeting talks and sketches by Moses Harman. 5c.

ECONOMICS OF ANARCHY. A Study of the Industrial Type. Dyer D. Lum 10c.

DR. FOOTE'S SOCIAL SCIENCE SERIES OF DIME PAMPHLETS—Wedlock: Scientific Marriage; Heredity; A B C of Temperaments; Powell and his Critics; Physiological Marriage; Physical Improvement of Humanity; Causes of Disease, Insanity, and Premature Death; A Step Backward. Any of the above books sent by mail on receipt of price.

DYNAMIC THEORY OF LIFE AND MIND. An attempt to show that all organic beings are both constructed and operated by the dynamic agencies of their respective environments. By James H. Alexander. Over 400 illustrations, 87 chapters, 1,561 pages and a 3-column index of 11 pages. Cloth, $3.75.

EAST TENNESSEE SKETCHES. A and Cecile Chavannes. 25c.

EIGHT-HOUR MOVEMENT. John P. Altgeld, ex-Governor of Illinois. 5c.

EVOLUTION AND REVOLUTION. Elisee Reclus. 5c.

FALSE CLAIMS OF THE CHURCH. John E. Remsburg. Analyzing and confuting the claims made by churchmen that the Christian religion has promoted morality, learning, temperance, science, freedom, and showing how she has opposed progress. Paper, 10c.

FIELDS, FACTORIES, AND WORKSHOPS; or, Industry Combined with Agriculture and Brain Work with Manual Work. Peter Kropotkin. 360 pages. 60c. Postage, 5c.

FREE PRESS. Arguments in support of demurrer to the indictment of M. Harman, E. C. Walker and Geo. Harman, under the Comstock law. G. C. Semens and David Overmyer. 20c.

GIORDANO BRUNO. His Life, Teachings, and Martyrdom. Burned for heresy in Rome, Feb. 17, 1600. 5c.

GOD AND THE STATE. Bakounine. 25c.

GOVERNMENT ANALYZED. A remarkable work by a remarkable man, Col. John R. Kelso, the history of whose life reads more like romance than reality. This book is the last of a series—Deity Analyzed, Bible Analyzed, Universe Analyzed. By the author's death this work was left unfinished, but was completed by his wife, Etta Dunbar Kelso. 519 pages; cloth. Price reduced from $1.50 to $1.

HILDA'S HOME. Rosa Graul. "An o'er true tale" of woman's wrongs and of one woman's struggles and final triumphs in her attempt to secure justice for herself and for her sisters. 436 pages. Cloth, $1; paper, 50c.

HUMAN RIGHTS. J. Madison Hook. 5c.

IMPORTANCE OF HONEST MONEY. A simple, scientific, invariable standard of price. James Adleman. 320 pages. Paper, 50c.

IN BRIGHTER CLIMES; or, Life in Scotsland. Albert Chavannes. 5c.

INFIDEL DEATH-BEDS. "Idle Tales of Dying Horrors." G. W. Foote. Brief biographical sketches of 37 Freethinkers, including Bruno, Buckle, Byron, Comte, Darwin, George Eliot, Gibbon, Goethe, Hugo, Harriet Martineau, Mill, Paine, Madame Roland, George Sand, Shelley, Voltey, and Voltaire. 25c.

IN HELL AND THE WAY OUT. A plan of Social Democracy outlined. Henry E. Allen. 10c.

INSTITUTIONAL MARRIAGE. From the viewpoint of an exiled Martian. M. Harman. 5c.

JOHN'S WAY. A domestic radical story. Elmina D. Slenker. 25c.

KAREEZA. Ethics of Marriage. A bold, brave book, touching ideal marriage, rights of the unborn child, a designed and controlled maternity. Sample pages free. $1.

KORADINE. A story for young and old. Extra levant cloth. $1.

LIBERTY IN LITERATURE. Testimonial to Walt Whitman. "Let us put wreaths on the brows of the living." An address delivered in Philadelphia, Oct. 31, 1892, with portrait of Whitman. Containing also Col. Ingersoll's address at the funeral of Walt Whitman, Mar. 30, 1892. Cloth, 50c; paper, 25c.

LIBERTY. Political, Religious, Social, and Moral. A. F. Tindall. 5c.

LITTLE LESSONS FOR LITTLE FOLKS. Elmina D. Slenker. Boards, 40c.

LIZZIE MELTON. A story of a self-reliant girl. By Albert Chavannes. With portrait of author. 25c.

LUCIFER. Third Series, Vol. III. (1889). Cloth, $1.25. Postage, 25c.

MAGNETATION, and Its Relation to Health and Character. Albert Chavannes. 25c.

MARRIAGE. An address by Dr. Juliet H. Severance. 5c.

MARRIAGE IN FREE SOCIETY. Edward Carpenter. A dainty little gift book. 25c.

MARTYRDOM OF MAN. Winwood Reade. This is a very interestingly pictured synopsis of universal history, showing what the race has undergone—its martyrdom—in its rise to its present plane. It shows how war and religion have been oppressive factors in man's struggle for liberty; and the last chapter, of some 150 pages, describes his intellectual struggle from the animal period of the earth to the present, adding an outline of what the author conceives would be a religion of reason and love. Winwood Reade's reputation as a writer of fine English, of deep study and careful reasoning, needs no word of praise. Cloth, $1.

MEN, WOMEN AND CHANCE. William Platt. Containing two tales: The Ascent to the Heights, and Blind Men and Seeing. Well printed on heavy paper and artistically bound in cloth. Gilt top, rough edges. 75c.

MEN, WOMEN, AND GODS. Helen H. Gardener. With preface by Col. R. G. Ingersoll. Contents: Introduction by Col. Ingersoll. Men, Women, and Gods. Vicarious Atonement. Historical Facts and Theological Fictions. Appendix. Address to the Clergy and Others. Letter to Cleveland Congress of Freethinkers. The only authorized and correct edition. Large 12mo, heavy-toned paper. Portrait. This volume is by far the best writing this famous author ever did. It is very fine. Cloth, $1; paper, 50c.

MISSING LINK IN MODERN SPIRITUALISM, THE. A. Leah (Fox) Underhill. With portraits of the Fox Sisters and others. 424 pages. Cloth. Reduced to $1.

MORIBUND SOCIETY AND ANARCHY. Jean Grave. Cloth, 60c; paper, 25c.

MOTHERHOOD IN FREEDOM. M. Harman. 5c.

MUTUAL BANKING. A simple plan to abolish interest on money. William B. Greene. 10c.

NORA; A DOLL'S HOUSE and GHOSTS. Ibsen. Cloth. 75c.

OUR WORSHIP OF PRIMITIVE SOCIAL GUESSES. E. C. Walker. Contents: Love and Law; The Moloch of the Monogamic Ideal; The Continuity of Race-Life, and Tyranny; Food and Sex Fallacies, a Criticism; When Men and Women Are and When They Are Not Variations; The New Woman: What is she? What will she be? The State Hiding Behind Its Own Mistakes; Bishop Potter's Opinion of Divorce; Love: Its Attraction and Expression; Is She an Honest Girl? Lloyd, Platt, and the Pitiful Facts; Social Radicals and Parentage; Anthropology and Monogamy; Love and Trust Versus Fear; Reflections upon Reading William Platt's "Women, Love, and Life." 15c.

PERSONAL EXPERIENCES of Two American Anti-Vivisectionists in Various Countries. Phillip G. Peabody. With an Appendix by Col. R. G. Ingersoll. Reduced from 25c to 15c.

PERSONAL RIGHTS AND SEXUAL WRONGS. Oswald Dawson. 20c.

PRIESTLY CELIBACY. Prof. A. L. Rawson. Together with The Incoherence of Transition (E. C. Walker), Motherhood in Freedom (Moses Harman), The Greatest Sin (an allegory, R. B. Kerr), and Jealousy, the Foe of Freedom (Oscar Rotter). 25c.

RELIGION AND RATIONALISM. The relation of each to human liberty. The religionist, fancying that he has the whole truth, is logically opposed to investigation, and he appeals to physical force to arrest the discovery of new truths. What Rationalism is, and how many believe themselves Freethinkers who are only unbelieving or disgruntled religionists. The necessity for separate organizations and a division of labor among reformers. The Secular Union. Important facts and arguments in a compact form. E. C. Walker. 5c.

RIGHTS OF MAN. Thomas Paine. Answer to Burke's attack upon the French revolution. A political treatise of great general value, as advocating liberty and democracy. Contains the fundamental principles of true republicanism. Cloth, 50c; paper, 25c.

RUBAIYAT (Quatrains) OF OMAR KHAYYAM. Edward FitzGerald's interpretation; with original introduction; special cover; latest version. Paper, 10c.

RULED BY THE TOMB. A discussion of free thought and free love. Orford Northcote. 20c.

SCIENCE IN STORY; or, Sammy Tubbs, the Boy Doctor, and Spoonie, the Troublesome Monkey. For young folks. Dr. E. B. Foote. Five volumes in "red line," presentation edition. $1. Five volumes, plainer binding, $1.50; all in one volume, $2.

SEXUAL PHYSIOLOGY FOR THE YOUNG. Being the fifth volume of "Science in Story." 250 pages; cloth bound; illustrated. 50c.

SONGS OF THE UNBLIND CUPID. J. Wm. Lloyd. Edition de luxe. Verses printed from Kelmscott type upon deckle edged hand made paper of cerulean tint. Initial letters, ornaments and borders are in red; initial letter and sketch upon the opening page are hand painted in water colors. Covers brown, with choice of silver or gold lettering. Very handsome gift book. 50c.

STUDIES IN SOCIOLOGY. In four parts: I., The Law of Happiness; II., The Law of Individual Control; III., The Law of Exchange; IV., The Law of Environment. Albert Chavannes. 25c.

TALKS ON NATURE. Important information for both sexes. Dr. J. H. Greer. 192 pages. Reduced from 50 to 25c.

THE ABOLITION OF MARRIAGE. John Beverly Robinson. Together with Isabel's Intention (Mariette), Reminiscences of Berlin Heights (A. Warren), and The Sexes and Love in Freedom (Oscar Rotter). 20c.

THE BAR SINISTER AND LICIT LOVE, including the first biennial proceedings of the Legitimation League, and a full account of the Lanchester case, with full-page half-tone pictures of Edith Lanchester, and Lillian Harman. Handsomely bound in green and gold covers. 207 pages. 25c.

THE BLUE LAWS OF CONNECTICUT. Taken from the Code of 1650 and the public records of the Colony of Connecticut previous to 1665. With an account of the persecution of Witches and Quakers in New England, and some extracts from the Blue Laws of Virginia. Copiously Illustrated. 25c.

THE BRITISH BARBARIANS. Grant Allen, the greatest of the Hill-Top pioneers. Dedicated "to all who have heart enough, brain enough, and soul enough to understand it." Handsomely bound in cloth. 291 pages. $1.

THE WOMAN WHO DID. Grant Allen. A powerful story of a refined, educated and high-spirited woman who dared to defy the tyranny of church and state and ignore the institution of marriage. Handsomely bound in cloth. $1.

THE NEW HEDONISM. Grant Allen. The opening paragraph says: "The old ascetism said: 'Be virtuous and you will be happy.' The new hedonism says: 'Be happy and you will be virtuous.'" In another place the writer says: "In proportion as men have freed themselves from mediæval superstitions have they begun to perceive that the unclean and impure things are ordinary and unmeaning; that the pure and beautiful and ennobling thing is the fit and worthy exercise of the reproductive function." Paper covers; 32 large pages; twelve copies, 25c. Single copy, 5c.

THE CHICAGO MARTYRS. The famous speeches of the eight condemned anarchists in Judge Gary's Court, and Altgeld's reasons for pardoning Fielden, Neebe and Schwab. 25c.

THE COMING WOMAN. Lillie D. White. 5c.

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM. Principles and platform of organized Freethought. 10c.

THE EVOLUTION OF MODESTY. Jonathan Mayo Crane. A consideration of the origin of clothes and the reasons why people wear clothing. Here are a few questions it answers: What is modesty? What is the cause of it? What is the use of it? What is the cause of the feeling of shame? Is nudity immodest? What is the cause of the notion that it is shameful to expose some parts of the body? Why do not all peoples agree as to what parts of the body should be concealed? 5c.

THE FOUNTAIN OF LIFE; or, The Threefold Power of Sex. Lois Waisbrooker. 50c.

THE FUTURE OF SECULARISM. When will the Cause of Justice triumph? 5c.

THE PRODIGAL DAUGHTER; or, The Price of Virtue. Rachel Campbell. Together with Legal Wifehood (Lucinda B. Chandler), Life's Gifts (Ellen Robinson), and Marriage—What It Was and Is; Will the Coming Woman Marry? 25c.

THE REVIVAL OF PURITANISM. E. C. Walker. 10c.

THE RIGHTS OF CHILDREN. R. B. Kerr. Together with What Are Women Here For? (E. B. Foote, Jr., M. D.), The New Martyrdom (Lillian Harman), and The Will, from the French of Guy de Maupassant. 25c.

THE SANCTITY OF MARRIAGE. As viewed from a moral and sanitary standpoint. A solemn protest against the present demoralizing management of that institution, its effects upon offspring and its influence upon education. By Dr. Robert A. Greer. A valuable "opening wedge" in missionary work. Price reduced from 25c to 10c.

THE SECRET INSTRUCTIONS OF THE JESUITS. A reprint from an edition published in 1725, quoted by the highest authorities as authentic. The work is redolent of Jesuit craft and is a plain index to the underhand working of that order against the welfare of individuals and society. 15c.

THE STATE: ITS HISTORIC ROLE. Prince Peter Kropotkin. 10c.

THE TROUBADOURS AND COURTS OF LOVE. J. F. Rowbotham. Cloth. 320 pages. $1.50. Postage, 10c.

THE UNWOMANLY WOMAN. Lizzie M. Holmes. Together with That Great Fraud, Velept Society (Moses Hull), Virgin Soil (George Egerton), and Normal Sexual Action (Ernest Winne). 25c.

THE WORM TURNS. Revolutionary Poems. Voltairine de Cleyre. 10c.

THOMAS JEFFERSON. His Political, Social and Religious Philosophy. Gen. M. M. Trumbull. 5c.

TOKOLOGY. A book for every woman. By Alice B. Stockham, M. D. Illustrated. Tokology teaches possible painless pregnancy and parturition, giving full, plain directions for the care of a woman before and after confinement. The ailments of pregnancy can be prevented as well as the pains and dangers of childbirth avoided and women need not go down to death giving birth to children. English, German or Swedish. $2.25.

TRAVELS IN FAITH. By Capt. Robert C. Adams. His mental experience from superstition to rationalism. Cloth, 75c; paper, 25c.

VACCINATION A GIGANTIC CRIME. Samuel Darling. 15c.

VINDICATION OF THOMAS PAINE. Col. R. G. Ingersoll. Dealing with all the slanders brought against the name and fame of Paine. A little pamphlet which every admirer of Thomas Paine should have by him for reference. Paper, 10c.

VITAL FORCE. Magnetic Exchange and Magnetation. Albert Chavannes. 25c.

WHAT THE YOUNG NEED TO KNOW; a Primer of Sexual Rationalism. Edwin C. Walker. "Let us cease to be ashamed of what makes us men, of what makes us women, of what gives us the kisses of lovers and the encircling arms of babes." Paper covers; 42 large pages. 10c.

WHAT IS RELIGION? Ingersoll's last public address, delivered at the meeting of the Free Religious Association in Boston on June 3, 1899. To which is appended the poem, "Declaration of the Free," the last verse written by the great Freethinker. 5c.

WHY THE UNDERSIGNED? An open letter to Judge Gary. Sarah E. Ames. 25c.

WOMAN, CHURCH, AND STATE. Matilda Joslyn Gage. This is Mrs. Gage's last and crowning work. Every woman ought to read it. Every liberal woman and man will want it. A burning protest against the tremendous wrong done woman by the church, which controlled the state. It ought to be widely read for the good it will do. Cloth, $1.50; paper, 75c.

WOMAN: Four Centuries of Progress. Susan H. Wixon. 5c.

WOMAN IN THE PAST, PRESENT AND FUTURE. Woman was the first human being that tasted bondage. Woman was a slave before the slave existed. The basis of all oppression is economic dependence on the oppressed. This has been the condition of women in the past and is so still. She is now a slave of the slave. This work is August Bebel's masterpiece. 8vo, 775 pages. 25c.

Address M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

Price 2 Cents.

LUCIFER.

THE LIGHT-BEARER.

THIRD SERIES, VOL. VI., No. 12. CHICAGO, ILLINOIS, APRIL 3, E. M. 302. [C. E. 1902.] WHOLE No. 911

CECIL RHODES.

Liar by false things which thou hast said;
Trickster by the snares that thou hast spun;
Thief by treasures vast which thou hast won;
Hypocrite by the mouths that thou hast fed;
Tyrant by the cause which thou hast led;
Murderer by the war thou hast begun;
Monster by all deeds which thou hast done;
Thou later Cæsar, thou art foiled and dead.
Now may the horde of tyrants learn and see
The due reward that falls to monstrous lust,
While yet the peoples struggle to be free.
Though hired swords in streams of blood should rust,
Defeat at last shall come to all like thee;
Whom death hath choked and flung into the dust!

WILLIAM FRANCIS BARNARD.

For the Day and the Hour.

"Knavery" and "Slavery" rhyme.

* * *

The road to truth is rough.

* * *

Love's wings cannot be clipped.

* * *

Hope deferred maketh a hard kick.

* * *

A little light leavens a deal of darkness.

* * *

Appearances are deceitful only to the uneducated eye.

* * *

Prison bars are strong, but they are not strong arguments.

* * *

A suppressed book has generally done its work before the suppression.

* * *

Threats of punishment make but poor shields against the shafts of criticism.

* * *

The double standard of morals is a declaration on the part of man that he has a right to do wrong.

* * *

Chastity is only the keeping up of appearances, it is not virtue; virtue is a condition of the mind.

* * *

All the world has heard of the temptation of St. Anthony; but of course the old saint was not so strong morally as our own St. Anthony Comstock.

* * *

An eye which sees obscenity in a picture of the nude may be a specially educated eye. Would a young child see obscenity there?

* * *

There is nothing shameful about sex except the shameful abuse which we heap upon it in our miseducated thoughts.

* * *

Free speech can be throttled, but free thought keeps up its silent work day by day, and in a favorable hour the word is spoken again.

* * *

The distinction made by timid minds between liberty and license is an equivocal distinction; there is no liberty without the liberty to do wrong. But a man must be prepared to take the consequences of his wrong doing.

* * *

Lower the flags to half mast. Drape the city streets with mourning emblems. Let grief rest in every heart and speak from every lip. A servant of justice, a friend of truth, one who cared only for the love of man has gone. Cecil Rhodes is dead.

* * *

Those who say that Leo Tolstoi is not living up to his beliefs, are of course living up to their beliefs, or they would not condemn the great humanitarian for his failures. Stay! Perhaps they are only trying to hide their own weaknesses by finding his to be as great as theirs.

* * *

"Vices are not crimes;" if they were, then any power if strong enough, Vegetarianism, Christian Science, Prohibition, Catholicism, Cannibalism, Atheism, or Mormonism, could justly enforce the acceptance of its tenets and demand a kind of conduct in keeping; for each of these teaches that its opposite is a vice.

* * *

Crimes are invasive acts; and an invasive act is one which directly affects another to his disadvantage. Stealing, assaulting, poisoning, are invasive acts, for example; but whatever we may think of whiskey-drinking, meat-eating, etc., they directly concern only those who indulge in them, though indirectly they affect others. They are vices or not according to one's geographical position, but they are not crimes. Obliterate this distinction and any act may be a crime.

* * *

Anti-Anarchist legislation will be opposed by all except those who have either lost their heads or have heretofore got along without them. Such legislation is not aimed at Anarchism merely, but at all who grow dissatisfied with betrayal and speak their minds. A criminal State must suppress its critics; the needed scare was obtained in "The Pest of Anarchism."

* * *

Ships are to be subsidized are they? Let the good work go on! Tariffs for robber infant industries have resulted in trusts, which strangle competition; ship subsidies are just another variety of blackmail levied upon a people who know nothing and seem glad of it. But in time poverty will pinch. When all has been taken there will be nothing left; and then,—and then?

* * *

India is starving. "Benevolence" has done it. The Boers are still fighting the same type of "benevolence." The Filipinos are already experiencing the effects of an American brand of the commodity; which, it is said they do not like. What are we coming to? Would it not be well to conduct a strict examination, (say the people carried it on,) into the character of "benevolence?" Somehow it does not seem to work as per expectation. The Spanish, the English, and the American brands all spoil alike.

* * *

A man who gave up his wife because she told him that she loved another is being greatly bepraised just now everywhere for his "magnanimity." It seems that he did not shoot her, nor kill "the destroyer of his home," but that he showed a measure of common sense larger than that possessed by the average featherless biped, and bade the lovers go and live in peace. Those who look upon this man as worthy of special praise forget, or rather are incapable of understanding that he did an act of simple justice, and nothing more. He did not own the woman. You cannot legitimately have property in a human being. Had this man done anything else he would have been a poltroon. And there are many poltroons.

* * *

In California recently a judge decided that staying out all night did not constitute ground for a divorce. The circumstances were these: the petitioner for the divorce was a husband whose wife often staid out all night without informing him as to where she had lodged. The judge in passing upon the petitioner's prayer observed that as a wife could not sue for divorce merely because her husband staid out all night, neither could a husband. The erstwhile lord and master was no doubt chagrined as he left the court room. To think that the double standard of morals, so necessary to the purity of homes and the integrity of society—to think that the sacred double standard of morals had been denied by a judge, who was also a man!

* * *

The eye-for-an-eye-and-tooth-for a-tooth-principle is believed in Iowa except in cases where a young man wantonly slaughters a girl who happens to love another than himself. One Harry Hortman, sentenced to death at Sioux City, has found a host of friends, and the case is being examined by the Supreme Court at Des Moines. Harry is said to be fine looking. His friends think that there were extenuating circumstances in the conditions which prevailed at the time of the murder. You really can't blame a young fellow for killing on sight the girl who dares to receive another's attentions in place of yours; it is more than human flesh can stand. By all means free this noble and spirited youth; or if he must die let him have a monument to commemorate his memory and his excusable passion. Seldom enough nowadays do we observe such intense feelings of honor or so highly developed a sense of chivalry.

* * *

The "God-in-the-Constitution" fiends are not too noisy now, and one who knew nothing of their pertinacity might conclude that they had put up the shutters and closed the shop for good; but it would be better to believe that they are lying in wait and are praying for darkness so that they can steal their god into the Constitution unobserved. But what if he refused to go? A self-respecting god would object to being for a single night in such a Constitution as we now have; a Constitution which can be stretched by a Supreme Court so that any villainy, even stealing or murder would find justification there. The Constitution follows the capitalist now, as of old Constitutions followed war lords, and then landlords, and if the Constitution does not justify the money lord, so much the worse for the Constitution. But charity or not, it will have to stretch till it covers a multitude of sins; and then at last the people will learn what a constitution is: firstly a thing to delude them, an affair of fine words; secondly, later, a thing to awe them into submission; lastly, if it be the good pleasure of power, a constitution will be the cover from which unscrupulous men can send death and destruction to thousands of innocent human beings who dare to question the right of a fellow man to enslave them. And yet, a constitution is only a piece of paper written upon!

IRONICUS.

THE "ARENA" FOR APRIL, contains "The Eternal Feminine," by Winifred Harper Cooley and Hon. Boyd Winchester; "Education in the Philippines" by Antonio R. Jurado, LL. D.; "The New Race Question in the South," by Samuel A. Hamilton; "Edwin Markham, A Prophet-Poet of the Fraternal State," by B. O. Flower; "How Cleveland Stamped out Small-pox," by B. O. Flower, and many other interesting and timely articles. Twenty-five cents per number. Address Alliance Pub. Co. New York City.

What Shall We Teach Our Children?

BY L. H. HARLE.

In Lucifer No. 907 I find a communication from W. D., with comments on it by Mr. Harman. The whole of W. D.'s letter is interesting, but I am particularly struck by that part of it relating to the perils of youth.

Ever since I began thinking for myself I have objected to punishment, my mental list of punishable offences becoming shorter with each new thought evolution; until the only one left was aggressions on the defenselessness of childhood; the worst of these being the corrupting of a child's mind. Now even this remnant of a code begins to totter; and I am wondering whether a child's mind needs the protection that its body certainly does.

Is there anything that should be kept from the knowledge of children? If there is, just where, and at what age is the line to be drawn? If knowledge is the only protection from harm, we can certainly withhold nothing without being criminal.

I lately heard a thoughtful man say that he would tell very young children all the facts of sex. There seems to be some question what "all the facts" are (especially in view of the general ignorance on questions of sex even among experienced persons) and there seems to me to be question also as to just what the advantage of complete instruction for children would be.

Everybody who has taught children must often have observed evidences of abuse of the body; it would almost seem as if nobody who has been a child could quite have escaped some personal experience (more or less slight) of the race-tendency ignorantly to try experiments with the physical faculties and powers.

But here is the question: Can you be sure that a full knowledge by young children of all the known facts of use and abuse of the sex function will keep them from these dangers of abuse?

If so, we would better hurry and learn a little more ourselves, so as to impart the truth. And, if so, where is our fountain-head of knowledge?

In most of the books professing to give such information which I have seen—and my investigation has been long-continued and painstaking—as soon as the author approaches a fact of vital importance, and we begin to think "Oh! now—he'll tell something," he shrouds himself, like great Jove in a cloud, with some such remark as this "All these things are known to physicians, but they will not tell them," or, "The prejudices of civilized society prevent our speaking plainly on these matters" and the reader is left planted just about where he was before he paid his money for the book.

Then again, the only teacher man gladly learns of is experience; and experience seems often to protect only after and by reason of injury. So that it is not plain to me that any amount of knowledge imparted at second hand would ever protect the young from the perils of personal experience.

I speak out of great ignorance, but also from great interest in the subject; and if my friend Lillian, or any of Lucifer's friends and contributors has time to give to it, I should be glad of more light.

It is certainly of the highest importance that ignorant children should be saved from mortgaging their chances of health and happiness in maturity, however it is done.

Ida C. Craddock Convicted.

In the court of special sessions, New York, on March 17, Mrs. Craddock was sentenced to jail for three months on a charge of disseminating obscene literature. In its report the New York "Sun" says:

"In her defense Mrs. Craddock simply protested that she was trying to advance the principles of truth and morality in some phases of life and that her arrest outraged these principles. The prosecution averred that the book of the 'Church of Yoga —'The Wedding Night'—was filthy and lewd beyond description. Mrs. Craddock, who is a handsome woman, smartly gowned, took her sentence in stoic silence and looked neither to the right nor left as she was led across the bridge to the tombs."

A letter from Dr. Rainsford, endorsing the book in part was offered in evidence by Mrs. Craddock's counsel, Hugh O. Pentecost, but was ruled out by the court. The "Sun" prints a letter of warm commendation of Mrs. Craddock from William T. Stead, editor of the "Review of Reviews," London. In that letter he sent her $50 toward her defense.

Mrs. Craddock's books contain valuable information, are well written, and I cannot understand how any but a filthy mind could see filth in them. The Judge said, "I have never before known of such indescribable filth. I cannot believe that this woman is in her right mind, no woman in her right mind, gentle born and well-educated as the literary style of this book shows, could conceive such filthy phrases." But what shall we say of a judge who will sentence to jail a woman whom he believes to be insane?

I do not know what steps are being taken in Mrs. Craddock's behalf, but her case is in good hands. Doubtless financial assistance is needed. Communications should be addressed to E. B. Foote, Jr., 120 Lexington Ave., New York.

Motive for the Study of Physiology.

BY SANTIAGO WALKER, M. D.

"The disadvantages the social worker has to overcome in diffusing scientific knowledge among the less enlightened are well illustrated by an incident which recently happened in one of the East Side settlements. After much difficulty and considerable explanation, a class in physiology had been started. The parents of the children who attended the settlement classes regarded the new class with considerable suspicion and doubt. But for some time, by skillful avoidance of dangerous ground, the class work was carried on successfully. At last the functions of the stomach were considered.

"The day after the first lesson on the stomach one of the little girls brought a letter to the teacher. This letter, which bore the marks of labored and strenuous composition, was as follows:

"'Dear Teacher: Please don't teach Lizer eny more about the stuffins of her stumick, it ain't necessary, besides its rude.'" New York "Tribune."

It is a good sign that the American Press Association has made a comic picture on the above. It represents a stout mother speaking to a young lady teacher and indicating the slim girl pupil, who doesn't like the teachings which are "rude."

It is not to be expected that the ordinary teacher would tell children anything of what, after all, is the most important to their individual welfare, because this the ordinary teacher also regards as rude and perhaps she has generally avoided such knowledge; I mean their sexual organization and its functions. But any instruction in physiology is of some use, for it awakens a desire in at least a few of the more intelligent pupils to know themselves, and leads to a systematic inquiry regarding that science.

The art of keeping well is not to be severed from the art of getting well. The latter, if possible, would be useless without the former, but the distinction is fallacious and imaginary. Some special action may be necessary to remove poisons or impurities, but the main reliance for health must always be in knowing how to care for the body with regard to nutrition, temperature and exertion.

Closely connected with the study of physiology is that of cooking. An understanding of the latter appears to be impossible without an adequate knowledge of the former as regards the whole process of digestion. The mystical saying: "God sent food and the devil sent cooks," has a kernel of exact truth, which is recognized as we learn to understand the digestive apparatus and observe the perverted art of cooking only to please the taste.

We have two stomachs. The upper stomach digests flour and the lower stomach digests fat. When the cook fries flour in fat, making a cake or doughnut, neither the upper nor the lower stomach can perfectly digest the small lumps which are swallowed even by those who have a full set of teeth and use them. How, then, must the case stand with those who have not good teeth and with those who fail to chew their food and who eat such baked or fried combinations? Indigestion and intestinal pains, loss of health and strength, are inevitable till they return to correct living. But they do not understand what is the matter and therefore they will not change to the correct way of living till they study and gain a knowledge of human physiology.

It would be fallacious to suppose, however, that the stomach, for example, can be perfectly understood separately from an understanding of other parts and functions. Especially when one organ is thought to be deranged, it is very needful to know the condition of other organs, and for this it is necessary to understand the normal condition and relations of each and all of the organs,—the functional parts of the body.

As with the stomach and food so with the skin and clothing, etc.; so with the sexual powers and the circumstances of their exercise. Depend upon it, every error is visited with disability. There is no pardon in nature for error, based on ignorance (or on anything else), we might say, were it not clear that all erroneous action springs from ignorant desire. Now, as Dr. Geo. Dutton says: "Man cannot love and hate the same thing at the same time. He always seeks his good. He needs only to know that a thing is injurious in order to avoid it.

It would not be too much to expect that people would lead reasonable sexual lives if they knew precisely how their health and longevity are involved. But, in order that rational motives may have their effect, it is necessary that the people should know themselves as they know a tree and see the operation of cause and effect in themselves as invariably as elsewhere in nature. Only by the force of such knowledge are they expected to outgrow such supposed social duties as are proved to be spurious by the test of science. To eat indigestible food, to lace the waist, to drink stimulants, to comply with sexual demands because of former compliance, but when the appetite is gone, are all errors for which society can give no remission of nature's penalties. The individual, to be saved from suffering, must come to a knowledge of his or her relation to nature. A real knowledge always has its effect. Very little of such knowledge on vital subjects exists today among the generality of people. Hence suffering is inevitable until the state of information is changed. Now, with regard to physiology and health, it is fortunately an individual possibility for those who think of the subject and who choose to be saved, to a very great extent. Broadly speaking, health is within the reach of all who will know; for all those who really know will surely practice that true living which will give them health. Let none despair.

This perpetual conflict between the existing conditions of the world and our secret convictions has a most tragic effect upon the inner life of the individual. We seem to ourselves like clowns who set others to laughing by jokes which, to themselves, are flat and stale. Ignorance is easily combined with an animal sense of comfort; and we can live happy and contented if we accept all our surroundings as necessary and right. . . . . But, as soon as we recognize the fact that the hitherto cherished institutions have lost their vitality and are out of date; that they are empty, foolish phantoms, partly scarecrows, partly theatre properties, we experience the horror and longing for escape, the discouragement and disgust which will fill the mind and heart of a living man locked in a vault with the dead, or of a sane man imprisoned with lunatics, compelled to humor their vagaries that he may escape physical violence.

This perpetual conflict between our ideas and all the forms of our civilization, this necessity for carrying on our existence in the midst of of institutions which we know to be lies—these are the causes of our pessimism and our misanthropy. This is the frightful rent that goes through the entire civilized world. In this insupportable contradiction we lose all enjoyment of life and all inclination for effort. It is the cause of that feverish sense of discomfort that disturbs people of culture in all conditions today. In it we find the solution of the problem of the dismal tone of modern thought.—"Conventional Lies of Our Civilization."—Nordau.

Lucifer, the Lightbearer

M. HARMAN, EDITOR AND PUBLISHER.

PUBLISHED EVERY WEEK AT 500 FULTON STREET, CHICAGO, ILL.

Terms: One year, $1; six months, 50 cents; three months, 25 cents.

Entered at the Chicago Postoffice as Second-Class Mail Matter.

Eastern Representative, E. C. Walker, 244 W. 143d street, New York.

Lucifer—Its Meaning and Purpose.

LUCIFER—The planet Venus; so called from its brightness.—Webster's Dictionary.

LUCIFEROUS—Giving Light; affording light or the means of discovery.—Same.

LUCIFIC—Producing Light.—Same.

LUCIFORM—Having the form of Light.—Same.

The name Lucifer means Light-Bringing or Light-Bearing, and the paper that has adopted this name stands for Light against Darkness—for Reason against Superstition—for Science against Tradition—for Investigation and Enlightenment against Credulity and Ignorance—for Liberty against Slavery—for Justice against Privilege.

Are We All the Slaves of Law?

Lucifer's purpose, Lucifer's mission, is not that of the news-monger, the news-gatherer. Neither is it the advocate or exponent of any creed, doctrine or propaganda, other than to find and utilize basic truths that concern the happiness, the welfare, of human beings in the here and the now.

In carrying out this idea, this plan of campaign, it becomes necessary to note what the leaders of thought and opinion in the great centers of human activity, are saying.

Prominent among such leaders at the present time is Lyman Abbott of New York, who holds the position of leader or pastor of the organization called Plymouth Church, the position held by Henry Ward Beecher—in his day one of the greatest leaders of thought and opinion, religious, political, ethical.

In an address delivered before the Nineteenth Century Club of New York, and published in "The Outlook," a weekly magazine of which he is the editor, Mr. Abbott—Rev. Dr. Abbott, as he is usually called—took for his theme the subject of "Law," in its relation to human conduct, and especially in its relation to the problem that seems to be giving more trouble to the leaders of modern thought and opinion than any other problem,—that known as "Anarchism."

—

Never, perhaps, since the great volcanic upheaval in America and especially in Europe a little more than a century ago, have the advocates and defenders of government-of-man-by-his-fellow-man been so TROUBLED, so hard pressed to find arguments to uphold their theories than at the present moment; and it is not at all strange that leading clergymen, lawyers, editors, college-presidents, etc., etc., should be found ranging themselves on the side of the old ideas, the conservative, the orthodox, the conventional, the "respectable" theories as to what is true, right, proper and necessary in the matter of rules, regulations, laws, for our every day associative human life, when we remember that all these leaders in the various walks or avocations of men are now in the enjoyment of privileges, special favors, perquisites and immunities that they would reasonably expect to lose if the old regime—based on the old ideas in regard to law, order, government and religion were overthrown.

Hence they are held, as by a "retaining fee," to the defence of the old, the established, the dominant in the various departments of human thought and activity, as aforesaid.

—

In treating his subject Mr. Abbott argues as a champion of the "New Thought," Rationalistic thought, rather than from the old Theistic view that makes man subject to the arbitrary will of a superhuman, a supernatural ruler, and like many who call themselves Freethinkers he makes a god of "law," and argues as though man were made for law and not law for man.

Defining law he says: "Law is the exercise of one will enforced upon another will. Government is a system of such laws enforced upon one will or aggregation of wills by another will or aggregation of wills. We are born into a world thus governed by law."

Then he proceeds without the slightest apology, to put social law upon precisely the same basis as the falsely called "laws of nature." After describing at length the operation of the physical forces of nature: "Fire burns, water buoys, gases explode, steam expands," etc., etc., "regardless of our suffrages. . . . Our will can determine whether we will obey them or not; but it cannot determine whether we shall be subject to them or not. . . . Similarly there are social laws—economic and political that inhere in the nature of society. . . . Man does not make them and cannot unmake them. He cannot modify them. . . . This law begins to operate just so soon as there is a social organism in which it can operate, as the stomach begins to digest and the lungs to breathe so soon as food is put into the stomach and air into the lungs."

—

That I have not misquoted or unfairly quoted this learned and influential teacher of law and gospel I leave to every candid reader who will take the pains to invest ten cents in "The Outlook," of Feb. 22, 1902.

And now, speaking for myself alone, I would ask, in all candor and conscience:

Is such reasoning HONEST? Is it sincere? Is it SANE? Or am I myself incapable of understanding a logical argument?

To my very limited power of thought the putting of "social laws, economic and political," in the same category with, and subject to the same inductions as are the physical forces of nature, is either intellectually insane or morally dishonest.

As I see it, human society is not an organism with head and hands, with stomach and lungs, as in the case of the individual human body. Social, economic and political laws are not self-acting forces as are heat, electricity, gravitation, etc., and to lump them all together and argue from them as do Mr. Abbott and those who agree with him, is dishonest JUGGLERY, else the irrationality of inherited superstition.

—

I can easily understand why theistic advocates of governments of force and authority—governments of man by his fellow man—should consider human society an organism, similar to the human body, and why they find it necessary to treat social and political laws as having a similar basis of authority as have the physical forces, just alluded to. All this is quite reconcilable to the view that "the powers that be are ordained of God, and they who resist the power shall receive to themselves damnation." According to theology "God" made and enforces the operation of "nature's laws," and the same lawgiver instituted certain social regulations such as that there must be some to rule and some to serve, but how and why it is that men who profess to be emancipated from theologic superstitions should speak of "laws of nature" and social laws as comparable with each other, passes my power of comprehension.

—

That this learned Reverend is still groping his way, guided only by the glamour of theologic superstitions, instead of walking in the clear sunshine of Rationality, as he seems to wish us to believe, is pretty clearly proved by this paragraph, which is a fair summary of his entire article:

> A man may disregard law, he may grumble at law, he may resist law; but he can by no possible means escape law. Law is the condition of life; physical law of physical life, bodily law of bodily life, social law of social life. We have absolutely nothing whatever to do with the question whether we shall be under law or not. We are under law, and we cannot help ourselves. Law comes neither from the divine right of kings nor from a divine right of democracies; it is eternal, immutable, divine; it proceeds, as Hooker has said, from the bosom of Almighty God.

—

"The Outlook" is a "Weekly Newspaper and Monthly Magazine in one—fifty-two issues a year," to quote its title page—an old journal of opinion, now in its seventieth volume. That it is and will be a powerful factor in directing current thought is to be inferred from the fact that its editor is the chosen successor of New York's most famous preacher of the more liberal and progressive school, Henry Ward Beecher, a man so great that, like Herbert Spencer, he is not spoken of as Reverend, Doctor, Professor or any other title. That this magazine will be the vehicle through which much good or much harm will be done is doubtless very true. The fact that though a weekly publication it is in shape to be bound and preserved gives it tremendous advantage over the average great city daily.

As said in our issue of last week, the responsibility resting upon the leaders of current thought is very great, and when crimes are committed as the result of the teaching of these leaders, not only the leaders themselves are guilty but all who have not protested against the doctrines that lead to the commission of crime.

—

In order to show more clearly the fallacy, the iniquity, the injustice of the now popular line of reasoning which makes the individual—man or woman—the victim and the slave of LAW, I herewith insert another and still longer paragraph from Mr. Abbott's address:

> The object of government is, or ought to be, to ascertain what are these inherent, essential, divine laws of the social order and conform society to them, exactly as the object of the individual is, or ought to be, to ascertain what are the laws of the body and conform his physical life to those laws. Governments are not organized to make laws; they are organized to ascertain what the laws are, and to supplement their self-enforcement by artificial coforcements. That we may know what are the laws of nature we employ scientists, explorers, discoverers. They do not make, they reveal. That we may know what the bodily laws are we employ doctors, physiologists, chemists. They do not make, they reveal. That we may know what are laws of the social organism we employ congresses, courts of justice, teachers, preachers, and journalists. They do not create, they reveal. They cannot, all combined, create one least little law. They cannot, all combined, modify in one least little particular any law. All they can do is first to discover the laws which already exist, and then to say for the State whether it will obey the law or disobey it. Society is an entity and must in all matters that concern the social order act together; it therefore compels the obedience of the reluctant and the recalcitrant to the laws of the social order, as the will compels the teasing palate to go without the sweet which would please the palate but disorder the stomach, or compels the excited brain to lay aside its work and seek the sleep which it needs but does not desire.

Again I ask, is such reasoning sane? Is it intellectually honest? It it morally just and humane?

Again I ask, is it true that "Society is an entity," as the individual human organism is an entity?

When we are told that "Governments are organized to ascertain what the laws are and to supplement their self-enforcement by artificial enforcements," what is this but the doctrine of the medieval Roman Catholic Inquisition which said to men and women, "You are not supposed to know what the will of God is. The CHURCH is organized to ascertain what the will of God is, and to supplement God's enforcement of his own will by artificial enforcements"—such as thumb-screws, prisons and burnings at the stake.

"We employ scientists that we may know the laws of nature." Some do, others do not, and some say there are no laws of nature, only "forces," which forces we are now learning to make our servants, but no man is imprisoned or hanged because he does not accept the conclusions of the "Scientists."

"We emply doctors, chemists, that we may know what the bodily laws are." Some do, and some do not. Some claim the right to reject the drugs,—including the "vaccine virus," of state-enforced doctordom. Some claim to be Anarchists in regard to their own bodily health, as most people now claim the right to be Anarchists in regard to matters pertaining to health of the soul.

"We employ congresses, courts of justice, preachers, teachers and journalists, that we may know the laws of the social organism," says Rev. Dr. Abbott.

A few years ago some of the people of Chicago employed preachers, journalists and a "court of justice" presided over by a man named Gary, to determine what the social laws were, and what should be done with some men called "Anarchists." The leading journalists and preachers demanded the death of the Anarchists, under an old barbaric social law that said, "whoso sheddeth man's blood, by man shall his blood be shed." Gary's court tried the men, and though there was no evidence that any one of them threw the bomb that killed a policeman, five of them were condemned to be hanged, two of them to imprisonment for life and one for fifteen years.

A few days ago in New York City, a woman of mature age—refined, well educated, well recommended by those who knew her, was sent to prison for trying to educate the ignorant in matters pertaining to bodily and mental health and purity—all because certain "preachers, journalists and a court of justice" pronounced her teaching "obscene." Under the same "social law," DISCOVERED as aforesaid, scores if not hundreds of innocent and reputable people have been arrested, imprisoned and robbed of their honest earnings within the past twenty-five years in this country.

Is it strange that some of us now think that governments so organized and so employed are a curse and not a blessing to mankind, and that such leaders of thought and opinion as the editor of "The Outlook" are simply "blind leaders of the blind."

That the utterances of Rev. Dr. Abbott concerning Anarchists and Anarchy are immensely more humane and rational than are those of the man who now disgraces the position of chief executive of the United States, I am very glad to note. Instead of calling all Anarchists criminals, and saying that "all mankind should band against the Anarchists," and that "no man or body of men preaching Anarchistic doctrines should be allowed at large any more than if preaching the murder of some private individual," as

Theodore Roosevelt did in his message to our national legislature, Mr. Abbott advises his readers to give Anarchy "a patient hearing," reminding them that "Anarchism is always a revolt against unjust and unequal laws," etc., etc.

Knowing that each issue of Lucifer is read by many who never before saw a copy of the paper, I wish to repeat that its editor speaks for no one but himself. That our Light-Bearer is the organ of no party, creed or ism, but simply a medium of communication between earnest seekers of Truth for Truth and Humanity's sake.

"Truth for Authority and not Authority for Truth," is one of its mottoes. "Try all things; prove all things, and hold fast that which is good," is another.

M. HARMAN.

Books Received.

THE CONSPIRACY AGAINST FREE SPEECH AND FREE PRESS.

The author reviews the events of the last few months with much vigor and clearness, scorching the preachers of the gospel, and the omnipresent newspaper reporters, and discusses at length the tendency of legislation to suppress free speech and free press, from a constitutional and libertarian standpoint. In short, it is an excellent pamphlet for distribution among all classes of people, and it is to be hoped that the comrades everywhere will bring it into circulation.

The booklet is written by Geo. Pyburn, M. D., and contains 32 pages and is published in neat type, with transparent cover, and can be put in any envelope. With a light envelope five copies can be sent for one cent postage. The price is 5 cents per copy or 2½ cents if 100 or more copies be ordered.

WOMAN AND HER RELATION TO THE CHURCH; OR CANON LAW FOR WOMEN.

This little work by Harriet M. Closz is a veritable bombshell in the camp of woman's oppressors—Church and State. Many extracts from standard authors, clerical and lay, are given, showing the history of the status of woman "from Adam's Fall" to the present time. Price, 10 cents; 12 for $1.

POVERTY'S FACTORY; OR THE CURSE, CAUSE AND CURE OF ABNORMAL WEALTH.

From the publisher's announcement we quote: "This vigorous little volume is full of telling points and striking statistics. It boldly seeks the bare, bold truth, and with fearless frankness discloses the hidden cause of female prostitution and immorality; lays open the secret depths of official dishonesty and fraud; reveals the cruel horror of child labor and the sweating system; points out the unsuspected poison-paralyzing patriotism; and is not afraid to call municipal, state and congressional sins by their right names." The author, Stanley L. Krebs, M. A., has not yet lost faith in the efficacy of legislation to remedy the evils he points out, as he says: "Medically I am a Homœopathist, a firm believer in the beneficence of the law of similars, similia similibus curantur. If, therefore, legislation has produced the disease legislation will remove it." The book is compact, well-written, and worth reading. Price, cloth 75 cents; paper 25 cents.

Any of the above books sent by mail from this office on receipt of price.

HOW TO BECOME IMMUNE AGAINST SMALL POX AND VACCINATION.

From the author, R. Swinburne Clymer, M. D., we have received leaflets under the above caption. Dr. Clymer claims that he therein gives "A positive preventive of small pox and a sure way of being protected against poisoning by vaccination." The following is from a letter written by Dr. Clymer:

"I herewith enclose a copy of my last work. Good physicians have examined it and say it is the best thing out. I intend to have it printed in tract form to distribute free among the people to teach them how to protect themselves. This, as you know, will cost money, and I hope all friends of liberty will help me to do it for the sake of humanity. I hope you will see fit to print a small notice in your valuable paper to this effect, asking all interested to send such amounts as they see fit, to help get the work in tract form and I will send them as many copies as they can distribute. I do not wish to make any money in this but instead, am willing to give; but if we want to teach the people to protect themselves it takes some money and alone I am unable to do it."

Dr. Clymer's address is Room 6, 247 Wash., St., Boston, Mass.

The American Press-Writers' Association.

The anti-vaccination propaganda is again interesting the Press-Writers, several of them being in evidence in the Boston "Traveler," the past week, and three new members on that line being enrolled. Frank C. Evans in the "Vampyre," Denver, Colo., for March, writes up Doctor Durgin of the Boston Board of Health and his unrelenting efforts to compel the people of this benighted burg to submit to compulsory blood-poisioning or go to prison where as a prisoner without power to longer resist the doctors get in their work and the protected public are no longer menaced with the presence of the unvaccinated. Several persons have been summoned into court in the East and South Boston sections of the city and fined five dollars each, and then as soon as the fine was paid they were re-arrested on the same charge and re-convicted next day, there being no limit to the number of times a person could be convicted and fined, so long as they remained un-vaccinated. One man not having the money was sent to prison for fifteen days, and as the rules enforced vaccination he had to submit to the operation in order to enter. A vigorous Anti-Vaccination Society has been organized through the efforts of Press-Writer J. M. Greene, which proposes to test the constitutionality of the law.

Maud Abbey got a radical letter on the divorce question into the Philadelphia "Bulletin" last week, which may make an opening for others. Our new list of members are being mailed from Philadelphia, and if you want extra copies or fail to receive them write me and I will send duplicates.

Death creates another vacancy in the ranks of the scribbling fraternity, No. 140, Charles B. Rouse of New York, being the victim.

NEW MEMBERS.

241af. Grigss, J. W., 190 & 192 E Third St., St. Paul, Minn.
142b. Little, Mrs. D. C., 1114 21 St., Minneapolis, Minn.
243c. Scott, W. G., 844 Clinton St., Cincinnati, Ohio.
244d. Fretz, William, 150 Ingham Ave., Trenton, N. J.
245b. Warren, Frank H., 111 Gratiot Ave., Detroit, Mich.
246b. Pinch, Earl, Kittrell, N. C.

A. C. ARMSTRONG, 17 Leroy St., Dorchester, Mass.

Government.

It is argued that there are certain men who are not fit for liberty. "They do not know enough to govern themselves," I am told, and they must be restrained by those who know more. They must be kept in check. And the folks who call themselves "the best people" usually assert that this is especially true of "workingmen." They speak and write of them as though they were a different class of beings from the people who do not work, and so they sometimes refer to them as the "lower classes," while they always speak of themselves as the "better classes." Now, I do not accept the class theory at all. I believe we are all people—just people—made of the same common destiny; and my observation leads me to the conclusion that there is a larger percentage of failures, more wasted life, among the people who do not work, who live in idleness upon the fruit of the toil of others, than there is among the people who work and of whom it is said they do not know enough to govern themselves. Holding these beliefs, one can easily see that the ideas of governing by force another man who I believe to be my equal in the sight of God, is repugnant to me. I do not want to do it. I cannot do it. I do not want anyone to govern me by any kind of force. I am a reasoning being, and I only need o b e shown what is best for me, when I will take that course or do that thing simply because it is best, and so will you. I do not believe that a soul was ever forced toward anything except toward ruin.

Liberty for the few is not liberty. Liberty for me and slavery for you means slavery for both. No man was ever born with a saddle on his back for another to ride, and no one was ever born with spurs on his heels to fit him to ride another. We are all created in the divine image, and it is our mission and privilege to stand erect as full equals; therefore, let no man of us call himself master of others; rather, let us all strive for mastery over self, for when self is conquered there are no more victories to be won.—Mayor Samuel M. Jones.

VARIOUS VOICES.

N. J. Jenks, Leadville, Colo.:—I received a copy of Lucifer of March 6, for which I thank you. I intend to subscribe for it as soon as I am paid, for I am more pleased with it than with any paper I ever read.

J. Muller, N. Y. City.:—I send you the names of five friends to each of whom please send Lucifer five weeks and a copy of "Institutional Marriage." After these books have been read I hope to put others in their hands.

Mrs. S. J. S., Chicago:—My subscription expires with this week's Lucifer. I would miss the weekly visit of Lucifer at my house as much as I would miss bread and butter. So please renew same and send one of Dr. Foote's "Home Cyclopedia" to me.

R. L., Bee, Wash.:—For the enclosed 30 cents please send two copies "Secret Instructions of the Jesuits." Those are the men who have some knowledge of the spiritual power of mind over body, and know how to take away a man's will-power, when you trust them too much, as I have experienced for the last four years.

J. V. Carter, Durant, I. T.:—I feel it it time for me to express my appreciation of "The Prodigal Daughter" and Lucifer, and my respect for the principles they inculcate. When I read them the question, which I have often before considered, arises in my mind—Why do women respect and obey the cruel masters who show her no sympathy and no mercy? And who are these masters—who but our present church-religion and our marriage laws?

W. W. Carter, Kalispell, Mont.:—Many years have gone by since I began to study and form conclusions as to what liberty really meant. In the early seventies I was pointed out as a lawless heretic. Later I met B. F. Underwood and E. C. Walker and had the pleasure of hearing them speak. I also had the pleasure of entertaining Mr. Walker at my home.

Lucifer grows better week by week and to me is the leader of the great caravan of progress toward liberty. I enclose $1.70 for which send me books named herein.

B. Goldensky, Phila., Pa.:—Enclosed find $2 in payment of subscription to your beautiful paper, Lucifer. I take the occasion to thank you for your courtesy in sending me Lucifer after I was so much in arrears.

[We are willing to send Lucifer after subscription has expired when it is not convenient for our friends to renew promptly; but would most earnestly request that they let us know when they wish us to do so. And those who do not wish to continue taking it would also confer a favor by notifying us of that fact, either by card or by refusal to accept the paper from postoffice.]

SELF-HYPNOTIC HEALING.—I have made a late discovery that enables all to induces the hypnotic sleep in themselves instantly, awaken at any desired time and thereby cure all known diseases and bad habits. Anyone can induce this sleep in themselves instantly at first trial; control their dreams, read the minds of friends and enemies, visit any part of the earth, solve hard questions and problems in this sleep and remember all when awake. This so-called Mental Vision lesson will be sent to anyone ABSOLUTELY FREE actually enabling him to do the above without further charge.
Prof. R. E. DUTTON, Lincoln, Neb., U. S. A.

911.

If these figures correspond with the number printed on the wrapper of your Lucifer, your subscription expires with this number.

If a copy of Lucifer fails to reach you, please order by number or date.

Lucifer will not be sent "by return mail" unless stamps for postage are enclosed with order.

TO NEW SUBSCRIBERS: Your subscription is paid to No. If you have not ordered Lucifer, a friend has subscribed for you. If you do not wish to receive it, please notify us by card or through your postmaster. If you wish to become a regular subscriber you will confer a favor by renewing before the expiration of your trial subscription.

VICE: ITS FRIENDS AND ITS FOES

BY EDWIN C. WALKER

CONTENTS:—Brotherhood of Man; The Recognition of Facts; Folly of "For Men Only," Definition of Vice; Horrors of Prostitution; Abnormal Sexuality; Errors of Fathers, Mothers and Teachers; Persecution Does Not Reform; Prostitution and the Crusaders; The "Spoiling of the Heathen;" What are the Effects of Raids and Crusades? The Economic Side of the Problem; Party Politics in Vice Crusading; In What Does Prostitution Consist? Some Causes of Prostitution; Two Kinds of Prostitution Compared; The Opponents of Divorce; "Purifying" the Tenements; Action for Advanced Women.

WITH APPENDIX:—The Wanderings of a Spirit; Our Fair Civilization; The Folly and Cruelty of It All. Price 10c.

Address M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

Notice! I would be glad to hear from Liberals who would like to correspond with other Liberals. Address (with stamp)
Snowville, Va. ELMINA DRAKE SLENKER.

RADICAL LITERATURE.

For Sale by M. Harman, 500 Fulton St., Chicago.

A CHAMBERMAID'S DIARY. By Octave Mirbeau. Translated from the French by Benj. R. Tucker. 400 pages. Handsomely bound in cloth. $1.50.
ADVANCEMENT OF SCIENCE. Prof. John Tyndall's famous Inaugural Address before the British Association for the Advancement of Science, with the articles on Prayer which so stirred the religious world. Cloth, 50c; paper, 25c.
AGE OF REASON (The). Presentation edition. Part I reprinted from the first English edition. Part II corrected by M. D. Conway's edition. With Paine's own account of his arrest in Paris. Photogravure portrait from the Romney painting exhibited in London. Containing also portrait from the Jarvis painting; from the Peale painting, known as the Bonneville portrait, representing Paine as a member of the French Assembly, and a half-tone of the Peale painting. Large half-tone of the house presented to Paine, in which he lived in New Rochelle, and of the monument and surroundings. Yorktown, Va., scenes; also eight half-tone views of buildings, etc., associated with Paine's life in Paris, and other illustrations. With Preface, Chronological Table, Notes, Index, etc. Printed on antique wove paper, large octavo, wide margins, gilt edge. Special cover design in colors. The finest and most accurate of all editions. Boxed. Postpaid, $2.
AGE OF REASON. Thomas Paine. Cloth, with steel plate portrait, 75c; paper 35c.
ANARCHISM: Its Philosophy and Ideal. Peter Kropotkin. 5c.
A PHYSICIAN IN THE HOUSE. A New Family Medical Work, by Dr. J. H. Greer. This book is up-to-date in every particular. It will save you hundreds of dollars in doctors' bills. It tells you how to cure yourself by simple and harmless home remedies. It recommends no poisonous or dangerous drugs. It teaches how to save health and life by safe methods. It teaches how to prevention—that it is better to know how to live and avoid disease than to take any medicine as a cure. It is not an advertisement and has no medicine to sell. It has hundreds of excellent recipes for the cure of the various diseases. It has 16 colored plates showing different parts of the various body. The chapter on Painless Midwifery is worth its weight in gold to women. The "Care of Children" is something every mother ought to read. It teaches the value of Air, Sunshine, and Water as medicines. It contains valuable information for the married. This book cannot fail to please you. If you are looking for health by the safest and easiest means, do not delay getting it. It has eight hundred pages, is neatly bound in cloth, with gold letters, and will be sent by mail or express, prepaid to any address, for $1.75.
A PLEA FOR THE NEW WOMAN. May L. Collins. With large new half-tone portrait. 10c.
A TALE OF THE STRASSBURG GEESE. R. B. Kerr. Together with The Strike of the Strassburg Geese (C. W. Coolridge), A Traveler's Tale (R. B. Kerr), The Cat's Story (Emile Zola) 5c.
AUTONOMY, SELF-LAW. A fragmentary dissertation on the right to non-invasive self-hood. 5c.
A WEEK ON THE CONCORD AND MERRIMAC RIVERS. Henry D. Thoreau. 25c.
BALZAC'S SERAPHITA: The Mystery of Sex. Mary Hanford Ford. Cloth. $1.
BIBLE TEMPERANCE. E. C. Walker. Proving that Liquor Drinking is Commended, Defended and Enjoined by the Bible, and giving close reference to the chapters and verses. 10c.
BORNING BETTER BABIES.—Through regulating reproduction by controlling conception. E. B. Foote, Jr., M. D. 25c.
CAUSES OF HARD TIMES, and the Money Question. Albert Chavannes. 5c.
CHICAGO CONFERENCE OF TRUSTS. Speeches, debates, etc.; 81 portraits of delegates, including Benj. R. Tucker, Laurence Gronlund, William Jennings Bryan, Samuel Gompers, Louis F. Post, and George Schilling. 428 pages. 50c.
CHILDREN OF THE ITALIAN POOR. Paola Lombroso. 5c.
DARWIN, THE. (A novel.) Elmina D. Slenker. 50c.
DAWN OF CIVILIZATION, The; or, England in the Nineteenth Century. J. C. Spence. 178 pages. 25c.
DAWN-THOUGHT ON THE RECONCILIATION. By J. Wm. Lloyd. An inspired treatise that, with insight and solution, touches all the questions of life, love, soul and society. A prose-poem, simple enough for a child to enjoy, deep enough to make a philosopher think. The largest creed, the most generous theory, the gladdest gospel. A book of life. A religion of growth and type, rubricated with portrait of the author. Printed in old style antique cloth and paper bound. Prices, $1.25, $1.00 and 50c.
DIGGING FOR BED-ROCK. Camp-meeting talks and sketches by Moses Harman. 5c.
ECONOMICS OF ANARCHY. A Study of the Industrial Type. Dyer D. Lum. 15c.

DR. FOOTE'S SOCIAL SCIENCE SERIES OF DIME PAMPHLETS—Wedlock; Scientific Marriage; Heredity; A B C of Temperaments; Powell and His Critics; Physiological Marriage; Physical Improvement of Humanity; Causes of Disease, Insanity, and Premature Death; A Step Backward. Any of the above books sent by mail on receipt of price.

DYNAMIC THEORY OF LIFE AND MIND. An attempt to show that all organic beings are both constructed and operated by the dynamic agencies of their respective environments. By James H. Alexander. Over 600 illustrations, 37 chapters, 1,067 pages and a 3-columns index of 11 pages. Cloth, $2.75.

EAST TENNESSEE SKETCHES. A and Cecile Chavannes. 25c.

EIGHT-HOUR MOVEMENT. John P. Altgeld, ex-Governor of Illinois. 5c.

EVOLUTION AND REVOLUTION. Elisee Reclus. 5c.

FALSE CLAIMS OF THE CHURCH. John E. Remsburg. Analyzing and confuting the claims made by churchmen that the Christian religion has promoted morality, learning, temperance, science, freedom, and showing how she has opposed progress. Paper, 50c.

FIELDS, FACTORIES, AND WORKSHOPS; or, Industry Combined with Agriculture and Brain Work with Manual Work. Peter Kropotkin. 260 pages. 40c. Postage, 5c.

FREE PRESS. Arguments in support of demurrer to the indictment of M. Harman, E. C. Walker and Geo. Harman, under the Comstock law. G. C. Remens and David Overmyer. 20c.

GIORDANO BRUNO. His Life, Teachings, and Martyrdom. Burned for heresy in Rome, Feb. 17, 1600. 5c.

GOD AND THE STATE. Bakounine. 25c.

GOVERNMENT ANALYZED. A remarkable work by a remarkable man, Col. John R. Kelso, the history of whose life reads more like romance than reality. This book is the last of a series—Deity Analyzed, Bible Analyzed, Universe Analyzed. By the author's death this work was left unfinished, but was completed by his wife, Elita Dunbar Kelso. 119 pages; cloth. Price reduced from $1.50 to $1.

HILDA'S HOME. Rosa Graul. "An o'er true tale" of woman's wrongs and of one woman's struggles and final triumphs in her attempt to secure justice for herself and for her sisters. 426 pages. Cloth, $1; paper, 60c.

HUMAN RIGHTS. J. Madison Hook. 5c.

IMPORTANCE OF HONEST MONEY. A simple, scientific, invariable standard of price. James Adleman. 250 pages. Paper, 25c.

IN BRIGHTER CLIMES; or, Life in Scotland. Albert Chavannes. 5c.

INFIDEL DEATH-BEDS. "Idle Tales of Dying Horrors." G. W. Foote. Brief biographical sketches of 27 Freethinkers, including Bruno, Buckle, Byron, Comte, Darwin, George Eliot, Gibbon, Goethe, Hugo, Harriet Martineau, Mill, Paine, Madame Roland, George Sand, Shelley, Volney, and Voltaire. 25c.

IN HELL AND THE WAY OUT. A plan of Social Democracy outlined. Henry E. Allen. 10c.

INSTITUTIONAL MARRIAGE. From the viewpoint of an exiled Mormon. M. Harman. 5c.

JOHN'S WAY. A domestic radical story. Elmina D. Slenker. 25c.

KAREZZA. Ethics of Marriage. A bold, brave book, teaching ideal marriage, rights of the unborn child, a designed and controlled maternity. Sample pages free. $1.

KORADINE. A story for young and old. Extra levant cloth. $1.

LIBERTY IN LITERATURE. Testimonial to Walt Whitman. "Let us put wreaths on the brows of the living." An address delivered in Philadelphia, Oct. 31, 1892, with portrait of Whitman. Containing also Col. Ingersoll's address at the funeral of Walt Whitman, Mar. 30, 1892. Cloth, 50c; paper, 25c.

LIBERTY. Political, Religious, Social, and Moral. A. F. Tindall. 5c.

LITTLE LESSONS FOR LITTLE FOLKS. Elmina D. Slenker. Boards, 40c.

LIZZIE MELTON. A story of a self-reliant girl. By Albert Chavannes. With portrait of author. 25c.

LUCIFER. Third Series, Vol. III. (1899). Cloth, $1.25. Postage, 25c.

MAGNETATION, and Its Relation to Health and Character. Albert Chavannes. 25c.

MARRIAGE. An address by Dr. Juliet H. Severance. 5c.

MARRIAGE IN FREE SOCIETY. Edward Carpenter. A dainty little gift book. 25c.

MARTYRDOM OF MAN. Winwood Reade. This is a very interestingly pictured synopsis of universal history, showing what the race has undergone—its martyrdom—in its rise to its present plane. It shows how war and religion have been oppressive factors in man's struggle for liberty; and the last chapter, of some 150 pages, describes his intellectual struggle from the animal period of the earth to the present, adding an outline of what the author conceives would be a religion of reason and love. Winwood Reade's reputation as a writer of fine English, of deep study and careful reasoning, needs no word of praise. Cloth, $1.

MEN, WOMEN AND CHANCE. William Platt. Containing two tales: The Ascent to the Heights, and Blind Men and Seeing. Well printed on heavy paper and artistically bound in cloth. Gilt top, rough edges. 50c.

MEN, WOMEN, AND GODS. Helen H. Gardener. With preface by Col. R. G. Ingersoll. Contents: Introduction by Col. Ingersoll. Men, Women, and Gods. Vicarious Atonement. Historical Facts and Theological Fictions. Appendix. Address to the Clergy and Others. Letter to Cleveland Congress of Freethinkers. The only authorized and correct edition. Large 12mo, heavy-toned paper. Portrait. This volume is by far the best writing this famous author ever did. It is very fine. Cloth, $1; paper, 50c.

MISSING LINK IN MODERN SPIRITUALISM, THE. A. Leah (Fox) Underhill. With portraits of the Fox Sisters and others. 478 pages. Cloth. Reduced to $1.

MORIBUND SOCIETY AND ANARCHY. Jean Grave. Cloth, 50c; paper, 25c.

MOTHERHOOD IN FREEDOM. M. Harman. 5c.

MUTUAL BANKING. A simple plan to abolish interest on money. William B. Greene. 10c.

NORA, A DOLL'S HOUSE, and GHOSTS. Ibsen. Cloth. 75c.

OUR WORSHIP OF PRIMITIVE SOCIAL GUESSES. E. C. Walker. Contents: Love and Law; The Moloch of the Monogamic Ideal; The Continuity of Haze-Life, and Tyranny; Food and Sex Fallacies, a Criticism; When Men and Women Are and When They Are Not Varieties; The New Woman: What is she? What will she be? The State Hiding Behind Its Own Mistakes; Bishop Potter's Opinion of Divorce; Love: Its Attraction and Expression; Radicals and Parentage; Anthropology and Monogamy; Love and Trust Versus Fear; Reflections upon Reading William Platt's "Women, Love, and Life." 15c.

PERSONAL EXPERIENCES of Two American Anti-Vivisectionists in Various Countries. Philip G. Peabody. With an Appendix by Col. R. G. Ingersoll. Reduced from 25c to 10c.

PERSONAL RIGHTS AND SEXUAL WRONGS. Oswald Duwson. 25c.

PRIESTLY CELIBACY. Prof. A. L. Rawson. Together with The Incoherence of Transition (E. C. Walker), Motherhood in Freedom (Moses Harman), The Greatest Sin (an allegory, R. B. Kerr), and Jealousy, the Foe of Freedom (Oscar Rotter). 25c.

RELIGION AND RATIONALISM. The relation of each to human liberty. The relationship, fancying that he has the whole truth, is logically opposed to investigation, and he appeals to physical force to arrest the discovery of new truths. What Rationalism is, and how many believe themselves Freethinkers who are only unbelieving or disgruntled rationalists. The necessity for separate organizations and a division of labor among reformers. The Secular Union. Important facts and arguments in a compact form. E. C. Walker. 5c.

RIGHTS OF MAN. Thomas Paine. Answer to Burke's attack upon the French revolution. A political treatise of great general value, as advocating liberty and democracy. Contains the fundamental principles of true republicanism. Cloth, 50c; paper, 25c.

RUBAIYAT (Quatrains) OF OMAR KHAYYAM. Edward FitzGerald's interpretation; with original introduction; special cover; latest version. Paper, 10c.

RULED BY THE TOMB. A discussion of free thought and free love. Orford Northcote. 10c.

SCIENCE IN STORY; or, Sammy Tubbs, the Boy Doctor, and Spensie, the Troublesome Monkey. For young folks. Dr. E. B. Foote. Five volumes in "red line," presentation edition. $5. Five volumes, plainer binding, $2.50; all in one volume, $2.

SEXUAL PHYSIOLOGY FOR THE YOUNG. Being the fifth volume of "Science in Story." 250 pages; cloth bound; illustrated. 50c.

SONGS OF THE UNBLIND CUPID. J. Wm. Lloyd. Edition de luxe. Verses printed from Kelmscott type upon Seekits edged hand made paper of cerulean tint. Initial letters, ornamente and borders are in red; initial letter and sketch upon the opening page are hand painted in water colors. Covers brown, with choice of silver or gold lettering. Very handsome gift book. 25c.

STUDIES IN SOCIOLOGY. In four parts: I., The Law of Happiness; II., The Law of Individual Control; III., The Law of Exchange; IV., The Law of Environment. Albert Chavannes. 25c.

TALKS ON NATURE. Important information for both sexes. Dr. J. H. Greer. 126 pages. Reduced from 50 to 25c.

THE ABOLITION OF MARRIAGE. John Beverly Robinson. Together with Isabel's Intention (Mariette), Reminiscences of Berlin Heights (A. Warren), and The Sexes and Love in Freedom (Oscar Rotter). 25c.

THE BAR SINISTER AND LICIT LOVE, including the first biennial proceedings of the Legitimation League, and a full account of the Lancheater case, with full-page half-tone pictures of Edith Lanchester, and Lillian Harman. Handsomely bound in green and gold covers. 307 pages. 25c.

THE BLUE LAWS OF CONNECTICUT. Taken from the Code of 1650 and the public records of the Colony of Connecticut previous to 1665. With an account of the persecution of Witches and Quakers in New England, and some extracts from the Blue Laws of Virginia. Copiously illustrated. 25c.

THE BRITISH BARBARIANS. Grant Allen, the greatest of the Hill-Top pioneers. Dedicated "to all who have heart enough, brain enough, and soul enough to understand it." Handsomely bound in cloth. 281 pages. $1.

THE WOMAN WHO DID. Grant Allen. A powerful story of a refined, educated and high-spirited woman who dared to defy the tyranny of church and state and ignore the institution of marriage. Handsomely bound in cloth. $1.

THE NEW HEDONISM. Grant Allen. The opening paragraph says: "The old ascetism said: 'Be virtuous and you will be happy.' The new hedonism says: 'Be happy and you will be virtuous.'" In another place the writer says: "In proportion as men have freed themselves from mediæval superstitions have they begun to perceive that the unclean and impure things are celibacy and asceticism; that the pure and beautiful and ennobling thing is the fit and worthy exercise of the reproductive function." Paper covers; 96 large pages; twelve copies, 50c. Single copy, 5c.

THE CHICAGO MARTYRS. The famous speeches of the eight condemned anarchists in Judge Gary's Court, and Altgeld's reasons for pardoning Fielden, Neebe and Schwab. 25c.

THE COMING WOMAN. Lillie D. White. 5c.

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM. Principles and platform of organized Freethought. 10c.

THE EVOLUTION OF MODESTY. Jonathan Mayo Crane. A consideration of the origin of clothes and the reasons why people wear clothing. Here are a few questions it answers: What is modesty? What is the cause of it? What is the use of it? What is the cause of the feeling of shame? Is nudity immodest? What is the cause of the notion that it is shameful to expose some parts of the body? Why do not all peoples agree as to what parts of the body should be concealed? 5c.

THE FOUNTAIN OF LIFE; or, The Threefold Power of Sex. Lois Waisbrooker. 50c.

THE FUTURE OF SECULARISM. When will the Cause of Justice triumph? 5c.

THE PRODIGAL DAUGHTER; or, The Price of Virtue. Rachel Campbell, Schreiner, and Marriage—What It Was and Is; Will the Coming Woman Marry? 25c.

THE REVIVAL OF PURITANISM. E. C. Walker. 10c.

THE RIGHTS OF CHILDREN. R. B. Kerr. Together with What Are Women Here For? (E. B. Foote, Jr., M. D.), The New Martyrdom (Lillian Harman), and The Will, from the the French of Guy de Maupassant. 25c.

THE SANCTITY OF MARRIAGE. As viewed from a moral and sanitary standpoint. A solemn protest against the present demoralizing management of that institution, its effects upon offspring and its influence upon education. By Dr. Robert A. Gunn. A valuable "opening wedge" in missionary work. Price reduced from 25c to 10c.

THE SECRET INSTRUCTIONS OF THE JESUITS. A reprint from an edition published in 1723, quoted by the highest authorities as authentic. The work is redolent of Jesuit craft and is a plain index to the underhand working of that order against the welfare of individuals and society. 15c.

THE STATE: ITS HISTORIC ROLE. Prince Peter Kropotkin. 10c.

THE TROUBADOURS AND COURTS OF LOVE. J. F. Rowbotham. Cloth. 250 pages. $1.50. Postage, 15c.

THE UNWOMANLY WOMAN. Lizzie M. Holmes. Together with That Great Fraud, Vulgar Society (Moses Hull), Virgin Soil (George Egerton), and Normal Sexual Action (Ernest Wilson). 25c.

THE WORM TURNS. Revolutionary Poems. Voltairine de Cleyre. 25c.

THOMAS JEFFERSON. His Political, Social and Religious Philosophy. Gen. M. M. Trumbull. 5c.

TOKOLOGY. A book for every woman. By Alice B. Stockham, M. D. Illustrated. Tokology teaches possible painless pregnancy and parturition, offering full, plain directions for the care of a woman before and after confinement. The ailments of pregnancy can be prevented as well as the pains and dangers of childbirth avoided and women need not go down to death giving birth to children. English, German or Swedish. $2.25.

TRAVELS IN FAITH. By Capt. Robert C. Adams. His mental experience from superstition to rationalism. Cloth, 50c; paper, 25c.

VACCINATION A GIGANTIC CRIME. Samuel Darling. 10c.

VINDICATION OF THOMAS PAINE. Col. R. G. Ingersoll. Dealing with all the slanders brought against the name and fame of Paine. A little pamphlet which every admirer of Thomas Paine should have by him for reference. Paper, 10c.

VITAL FORCE. Magnetic Exchange and Magnetation. Albert Chavannes. 25c.

WHAT THE YOUNG NEED TO KNOW: a Primer of Sexual Rationalism. Edwin C. Walker. "Let us cease to be ashamed of what makes us men, of what makes us women, of what gives us the kisses of lovers and the encircling arms of babes." Paper covers; 63 large pages. 15c.

WHAT IS RELIGION? Ingersoll's last public address, delivered at the meeting of the Free Religious Association in Boston on June 2, 1899. To which is appended the poem, "Proclamation of the Free," the last verse written by the great Freethinker. 5c.

WHY THE UNDERTONER? An open letter to Judge Gary. Sarah E. Ames. 10c.

WOMAN, CHURCH, AND STATE. Matilda Joslyn Gage. This is Mrs. Gage's last and crowning work. Every woman ought to read it. Every liberal woman and man will want it. A burning protest against the tremendous wrong done woman by the church, which controlled the state. It ought to be widely read for the good it will do. Cloth, $1.50; paper, 75c.

WOMAN: Four Centuries of Progress. Susan H. Wixon. 5c.

WOMAN IN THE PAST, PRESENT AND FUTURE. Woman was the first human being that tasted bondage. Woman was a slave before the slave existed. The basis of all oppression is economic dependence on the oppressor. This has been the condition of woman in the past and is so still. She is now a slave of the slave. This work is August Bebel's masterpiece. Pro. 125 pages. 25c.

Address M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

Price 2 Cents.

LUCIFER.

THE LIGHT-BEARER.

THIRD SERIES, VOL. VI., No. 13. CHICAGO, ILLINOIS, APRIL 10, E. M. 302. [C. E. 1902.] WHOLE No 912

THE PEOPLE.

The people is a beast of muddy brain
That knows not its own force and therefore stands
Loaded with wood and stone; the powerless hands
Of a mere child guide it with bit and rein;
One kick would be enough to break the chain;
But the beast fears, and what the child demands,
It does; nor its own terror understands,
Confused and stupefied by bugbears vain.
Most wonderful! with its own hand it ties
And gags itself—gives itself death and war
For pence doled out by kings from its own store.
Its own are all things between earth and heaven;
But this it knows not; and if one arise
To tell this truth, it kills him unforgiven.

—Campanella.

For the Day and the Hour.

Modesty goes masked.

Love is blind—in one eye.

Truth laughs at jawsmiths.

White paint makes the saint.

Be just—as others are—and fear not.

Jealousy is only the jaundice of love.

Love does not die young unless it is killed.

He who never doubts cannot hope to learn.

Castles in the air tumble with the first gale.

Intuition is the only scholar made without tuition.

Though men forget justice justice never forgets herself.

Special legislation aptly illustrates the lawlessness of law.

Truth and error, though not friends, are sometimes found together.

If you would know others look at yourself; if you would know yourself look at others.

Some day right will have grown strong enough to make might; then look out for changes.

Labor is not the enemy of Capital; the capitalist, or the thief of capital is the bete noir of Labor's aversion.

Truth is never far from home, but though her invitations to call are many, very few take advantage of her offers of hospitality.

What shall we think of those who clamor against "lawless anarchism" in one breath, and in the next shout hurrah for lynchers?

Liberty never fostered a crime, though many have been committed in her name; on the other hand, the acts of slavery are all criminal.

The educators have ever been the martyrs of the world; the apostles of ignorance have not only been enriched, but have won all the honors.

That a white man cannot wrong a dark skinned one is undoubtedly the opinion of those who justify all acts of the civilized against "savages."

Free thought, free speech, and free action are the three graces of progress; lacking one of them, man is hampered, lacking all of them he is dead.

The age of consent should be raised to fifty years for women, they are so incapable of caring for themselves. But what about the age of consent for men; why are they not protected?

Stealing is honorable when very large sums are taken, but if the theft fall below, say a hundred thousand dollars, the act is quite reprehensible. To steal fifty dollars is the greatest of crimes.

God is love, say some well-meaning souls; Love is God, is the per contra of poetic and sympathetic spirits. If Love is not God, whatever else may be said, it certainly is not his fault that he is not.

Virtue is its own reward; and that is perhaps the reason why so few appear to care for virtue. It is not current coin, and cannot be exchanged for other desirable commodities. Who started the demand?

Vice Societies are fitly named; by fostering ignorance of what is universal almost, vice, they at once excite curiosity, pruriency, fear of not being able to resist, and actual weakness of will. They foster vice.

We are promised that it will soon be a crime to kill a president. It is a crime to kill any man, except in self defense; but why it should be less a crime to kill a representative of the bone and sinew of the land than to kill a representative of wealth and power the oracles do not tell.

Mrs. Grundy is growing old; her age and general decrepitude have led her to announce that she desires to instruct several thousand more people in her arts at once, as the constantly increasing number of scandals in high life put too great a strain on those who are already assisting her. Only the virtuous need apply for lessons.

Rockefeller and religion; rapacity and righteousness; robbery and redemption; how strangely they read together. But we must remember that all things are possible with G—Rockefeller, and that smoothness enough to harmonize opposites ought to be numbered among the assets of one who controls so much oil. John D. Rockefeller is a "good" man.

While the Post Office was being used to suppress journals of certain kinds we did not hear so much from the stateists, miscalled socialists, about the transcendent beauty of Government control of mails. Good! Now the stateists have one thing more to learn, and that is, how they themselves would treat the advocates of ideas unlike their own if they controlled the Government. Selah. IRONICUS.

Snap Shots.

BY C. L. JAMES.

Since the middle of December I have been in no physical condition to write anything, or I should have attempted sooner a few observations on some articles in Lucifer.

R. B. Kerr thinks Proudhon's philosophy consists merely in giving old things new names—calling punishment "protection," criminals "lunatics," property "possession," fighting "restrainment," &c., &c. The criticism is perfectly just for that metaphysical individualism which would be easy to prove much older than Proudhon. But, even in daring to call his ideal "Anarchy," Proudhon surely did something much beyond rebaptizing those institutions he is commonly thought to have attacked. He expressed, in this one word, a very grave doubt of their utility; which must make all his followers not favor them under any name, but at the very least seek their reduction to a minimum. For example, do Anarchists hold that "criminals," under the name of "lunatics," must be "restrained," instead of "imprisoned" as at present? I trow not. I take it to be Anarchistic doctrine—I am sure it is my own opinion—that there is no advantage in "restraining" any but a very few criminals—the Born Criminals, like Jesse Pomeroy—who would not sensibly increase the population of insane asylums. I am quite prepared to maintain the surely practical, perhaps rather scartling, thesis that the pilferer, the professional thief, and the impulsive homicide, are made worse and more mischievous by being locked up. Again, it is not mere verbiage but an opinion decidedly about things that, if no man were enabled by government to hold land out of use, all the evils of "natural monopoly" would cure themselves. As to vigilance committees and the like, they have, in our time and country, however it may have been in mediæval Scotland, one decided recommendation as compared with "the right to use force as a monopoly in the hands of the representatives of the whole people." They are much more easily got rid of. That was proved in California, after they had outlived their usefulness there.

D. Webster Groh assures readers of Lucifer that plenty of water will "destroy," and "rout," and "slay" (see Lucifer 898) any disease whatever. Santiago Walker, M. D., evidently knows that ancient story about washing the negro white. He adds the water may first slay the patient. "That part of doctordom which holds the same relation to medical freedom that the Roman Catholic Church holds to Freethought" knows enough to see at once these advocates of opposing fads are "both right and both wrong."

Notwithstanding the editor's very pronounced encouragement and unequivocal promise of favor in the discussion, no advocates of other "doctordom" have answered what I sent to this number of Lucifer. I was wrong in comparing them to fishes who have no ears. They evidently have used those organs to some purpose. "He that hath ears to hear, let him hear."

But I must except the editor himself. He says I am a pronounced anachronism towards medical reform. I refer him to my second statement in the same number, 898; having there promised never to do more than refer again, until some one attempts refuting it.

If he looks at the fifth of my statements in the same number, he will find all that need be said about the reliability of statistics. "If any one refuses to believe in statistics, without attempting specific refutation, I am afraid he must be given up &c."

Those quotations from regular doctors so often made by others, surely prove the regular doctors' candor, and should silence slurs on that. Some of them, however, are not only candid but sloppy. Dr. Inman intimates that physicians must profit by prolonging sickness! He might just as well have said that a grocer or tinsmith must profit by charging more for his goods than his competitors charge.

The pith of Robert Mooresholme's criticism on Neo (and Paleo) Malthusianism is that "as a false reason for present prudence it disappears before the argument—that there is plenty for a long time." Like all refuters of Malthusianism, he misunderstands it. Through a considerable portion of the world, men are still eating each other habitually for want of something else to eat. There surely is not plenty for them; neither is exploitation by other men the cause of their hunger—rather the energetic exploitation of cannibalism is all which keeps any of them from starving. Throughout another large part of the world—this American continent e. g.—men do, or lately did, depend for food on the precarious results of the chase. Surely the Indians, with famine about once in three years, neither had plenty nor lacked it because their chiefs were tyrannical. In the vast region of nomadic shepherds, human food, truly, increases faster than men. But unfortunately it also increases faster than food for the sheep; and accordingly the Scythians, till subdued by Russia, were compelled, every generation or thereabouts, to risk their lives in a great war of emigration and plunder. In backward agricultural countries, like India, with its enormous population, famine is very frequent and destructive, not because of tyranny, though that may aggravate the evil, but because millions live on the produce of their own gardens, and a local failure of the crop leaves them no resource to fall back on. It is absurd, then, to say that but for exploitation by landlords &c. there would be plenty. Scarcity is at its worst where there are no landlords. In commercial and manufacturing countries, it may be true, that there would be plenty for the existing population under better economic conditions. But for an indefinite increase of population there would not. A very simple calculation will show that in thirteen centuries—less time than has passed since the fall of the Roman Empire—the progeny of one Adam and Eve would, but for premature deaths, stock the world beyond all possibility of finding food or even space. And those exploitations which supersede such other "positive checks" as cannibalism or famine, are, equally with them, effects, not causes, of this dilemma. The Malthusian doctrine that if "preventive checks" do not restrain population then "positive" will, is no novelty, as Henry George ridiculously said it was. Ages before Malthus—ever since thought was taken for the morrow—every one who took any knew that to have children without considering how to provide for them is imprudent. Malthus only reduced this truth to mathematical formula. It is because men foresee that the increase of population is likely to crowd their children that they engage in war, like the Tartars, or in that new method of conquest which is called speculation. The fundamental exploitation, from which all others proceed, is the exploitation of women by men. The only way to get rid of war, speculation, landlordism, &c. is to get rid of undesired maternity.

REPLY.

Silence is sometimes a sufficient answer to an irrepressible disputant, especially when the demands upon one's time are far in excess of supply. But lest silence be understood as confession of truth of charges, I will briefly notice a few points in the above.

1. If by "unequivocal promise of favor in the discussion" Mr. James means that I promised special favor to the "advocates of 'other doctordom'"—thereby giving unfair advantage to the opponents of himself, I respectfully but firmly deny the charge. If he means to say that I refused to grant to himself as much space in the paper as to ALL of his opponents put together the charge is a true indictment. I am a firm believer in "equal rights for all and special privileges to none," and therefore decline to grant to him the space that in fairness belongs to others.

2. While majorities do not always stand for truth the almost unanimous verdict of Lucifer's readers, so far as heard from, is that C. L. James is a very pronounced "anachronism" in his attitude "towards medical reform," so much so that they think it an unwarrantable waste of Lucifer's space to continue to give him hospitality in his favorite role of special pleader for the fossilized and monopolistic M. Ds.

3. As to the question of "statistics:" It is not by any means necessary always to take up valuable space in giving "specific refutations." General statements are quite sufficient. Like every other department of "history," statistics are notoriously unreliable, as everybody knows, when the pecuniary or other selfish interests of persons, parties or classes, are at stake. Take, for instance, the number of signers to petitions to put "God in the Constitution," or the statistics of political parties before election, or even the sworn statistics of officials after elections. Take the census statistics of rival cities, when old "directories" and even the names on monuments in graveyards are made to swell the grand total! "Figures won't lie," but it is notoriously true that fingers as well as tongues will LIE, when selfish interests, especially class interests, can be promoted thereby.

4. Yes, to their honor be it said, many "regular doctors" have shown their "candor" by exposing the frauds practised, knowingly or ignorantly, by their brethren. Dr. Inman's statement is unvarnished truth—not "sloppy," as C. L. J. says. To compare the work of the physician to that of the "tinsmith or grocer" is an argument worthy a pettifogger before a petty jury, or demagogue before an unreasoning mob, but scarcely creditable to a sincere enquirer after truth. Not even a "shyster" lawyer has so good opportunities to prolong a case to his own advantage, with perfect safety to himself, as has the medical doctor, and to say that the average practitioner of medicine is proof against temptations of this kind is to assume that human nature is rendered "immune" to sordid influences by a medical diploma. Frauds by the tinner and grocer are comparatively easy of detection. That there are M. Ds. who are above sordid influences of the grosser kind, I readily admit, but O. W. Holmes was eminently in the right when he said there never was a "guild of craftsmen that did not need sharp looking after."

As usual, there is much in Friend James' article that I freely and gladly endorse. The last two sentences of his "Snap Shots" embody a basic truth that cannot be too constantly kept before the public mind and conscience. Upon the general subject, however, of Malthusianism, also of Proudhonic philosophy, I cannot now enter—for reasons stated in recent issues of Lucifer, and having taken more space in this reply than at first intended I shall probably not revert to these matters again for some weeks,—perhaps months. M. HARMAN.

Criticism of Neo-Malthusian Principles. II.

BY ROBERT MOORESHOLME.

Following are the Neo-Malthusian principles as published by the League:

"1. That population has a constant tendency to increase beyond the means of subsistence.

"2. That the checks which counteract this tendency are resolvable into positive or life destroying and prudential or birth restricting.

"3. That the positive or life destroying checks comprehend the premature death of children and adults by disease, starvation, war and infanticide.

"4. That the prudential or birth restricting check consists in the limitation of offspring by abstention from marriage or by prudence after marriage.

"5. That prolonged abstention from marriage—as advocated by Malthus—is productive of many diseases and of much sexual vice; early marriage, on the contrary, tends to ensure sexual purity, domestic comfort, social happiness and individual health; but it is a grave social offense for men and women to bring into the world more children than they can adequately house, feed, clothe and educate.

"6. That over-population is the most fruitful source of pauperism, ignorance, crime and disease.

"7. That the full and open discussion of the Population Question is a matter of vital moment to Society and such discussion should be absolutely unfettered by fear of legal penalties."

Comment on Principle 1: The tendency of population to increase is pretty constant; but as to the means of subsistence the most prominent fact is that outside of tropical countries and the primitive conditions of a hunter's life, the increase of subsistence is mainly affected by the hands of man applied with implements and skill to the raw materials of nature. Here, then, is need of assuming that the population has reached a certain point of crowding upon the land, so that there is not enough fairly good land for the two hands of every man to find employment at producing subsistence, or the principle is false, for up to a certain stage in density of population every pair of hands skillfully applied to the land can produce much more than the food to support their owner.

In earlier stages, agricultural population being itself the efficient cause of increase of the means of subsistence, the first principle is a sophism, and should be changed to read that population has a constant tendency to indefinite increase, wherewith the power of producing the means of subsistence has equally an indefinite increase, limited only by suitable land on which such productive power can be exercised.

Principles 2 and 3: The positive checks which counteract the increase of population, thereby destroy two useful hands, producers of food (so long as there is land) for every consuming mouth which they destroy. War destroys able bodied men and capital and thus reduces the productive power of the population even more than it reduces the enumeration.

Principle 5: Society, which shuts the individual out from land lying uncultivated, is not fairly entitled to declare procreation an offense against itself. Shame on the falsehood! Society does not make it an offence for the heirs of privilege to breed offspring whom others' labor will feed. The neo-Malthusian principles are silent on social parasitism and compulsory idleness in the presence of natural resources.

Principle 6: Over population is a fanciful notion. Manchuria, China, is comparatively lacking in population to till the soil. Insecurity for life and earnings or the certainty of being exploited to the verge of starvation is the salient fact in the case.

And now, look at the real reason for personal prudence. It affects woman naturally more than man, of which difference the Malthusians take no account. Whether or not it be true that a human being at twenty years of age can produce with his or her two hands and ordinary intelligence more or less than a comfortable maintenance, and omitting all question of stages of civilization and theories of ultimate applicability of neo-Malthusianism despite the mutual good will and science of mankind, the permanent salient fact is that for many years after its birth a child is dependent for sustenance. From this fact it follows that any individual dependence of adults through society or monopoly must become greatly intensified upon a mother during those years. Hence though it be no social offence to procreate, and though Malthusianism be a sophism, there is an effective individual reason why a thoughtful woman cannot and will not take upon herself burdens which she is not able to bear. Even though she knew that in twenty years her child could make fifty times its support, the argument of facts would be none the less effective now. If the state will not let her support the child and be independent, she has to become dependent and accept a precarious support or else renounce any maternal desire. This is where Malthusianism is a practically useless theory. If true, still it is not the real reason why people should everywhere be prudent. If false, its refutation does not destroy the force of the conclusions at which the neo-Malthusians have arrived for the conduct of individuals, so far as women are concerned.

The rearing of a child is a long expense and the parent's capital is generally limited. Marital exactions being the incidental bonus, the price woman must pay altogether is a sacrifice of personal freedom and dignity year after year quite beyond the reckoning of a cold-blooded and somewhat stupid theory of political economy.

In the above I do not discuss words, but take marriage in the general sense of cohabitation.

Lucifer, the Lightbearer

M. HARMAN, EDITOR AND PUBLISHER.

PUBLISHED EVERY WEEK AT 500 FULTON STREET, CHICAGO, ILL.

Terms: One year, $1; six months, 50 cents; three months, 25 cents.

Entered at the Chicago Postoffice as Second-Class Mail Matter.

Eastern Representative, E. C. Walker, 244 W. 143d street, New York.

Lucifer—Its Meaning and Purpose.

LUCIFER—The planet Venus; so called from its brightness.—Webster's Dictionary.

LUCIFEROUS—Giving Light; affording light or the means of discovery.—Same.

LUCIFIC—Producing Light.—Same.

LUCIFORM—Having the form of Light.—Same.

The name Lucifer means Light-Bringing or Light-Bearing, and the paper that has adopted this name stands for Light against Darkness—for Reason against Superstition—for Science against Tradition—for Investigation and Enlightenment against Credulity and Ignorance—for Liberty against Slavery—for Justice against Privilege.

Most Powerful of All the Passions.

A friend sends us a marked copy of a very odd-looking little pamphlet called "The Erudite," published at Concord Mass., edited by Albert Lane. The appearance of this magazine and style of the editor remind us of Elbert Hubbard, the "Roycrofter," and his "Philistine." The main article of the March "Erudite" is an editorial entitled, "Plain Tales from Concord, with Something of Criticism."

The purpose of these "Plain Tales" is to give answers to the question, "What will a woman do for love?" and the central thought running through the whole essay is outlined in this paragraph:

> Another phase of the question is Woman's Love for her child—the Mother's Love—beautiful in its strength, enduring, faithful to the last, courageous enough to baffle all else, deep enough to suffer for its sake, hardships, sacrifice, want. This to me is the love that is greatest, and for its sake the woman is limitless in her willingness and eagerness to do whatever may be necessary for the preservation, comfort and happiness of those who are dearer to her than life itself. It is the love that passeth all understanding, and in its possession the woman towers above the man as Mount Olympus above an ant hill.

The longest "Tale" introduced by Mr. Lane to show what a woman will do for love is given in his own language, as follows:

> A Mrs. Elliott, wife of a prosperous farmer in Cadiz, Ohio, found, in the family coachman, an attraction that so appealed to her as to make her forget duty, honor, motherhood and all that should keep her true to those for whom she was supposed to live. She looked upon him as a man who would fill a certain gap in her life: whose love would warm the chill that had come to her. So she left all for him, but to awaken shortly after to her error. Deserted by the man who had led her astray; divorced and despised by the man she had deserted, her mother-love surmounted all else and humbly, penitently she sought the forgiveness of those she had wronged but to find all hearts steeled against her. Her appeal, however, that she might be a member of her former husband's household, was granted, a servant's place being given her, and so this story has come to light.
>
> Mrs. Elliott had thrown herself on her husband's mercy. She told him that he ought to take care of her for the sake of her children. She was ashamed to go anywhere else. She promised to do anything he liked—to work for him, to black his boots, to scrub the floor.
>
> Elliott was still bitter. He thought slowly over her appeal and finally said that he would take her back to his home as a servant.
>
> In return for this treatment she was to agree always to work faithfully as a servant and never to seek to be anything but a servant. She was to be absolutely obedient to him and the children and never to attempt familiarities with any of them. She was to be prepared to obey orders at any time in the twenty-four hours and never to ask for any evenings off. She was to have no visitors of any kind whatever and never to go away from the farm.
>
> All these hard conditions the poor woman accepted readily. She signed an agreement in which they were embodied and immediately entered upon her new duties.
>
> Her former husband and the children address her as "Mary," while she always says "Sir" to Elliott. The children have been told that they must never speak to her or of her as their mother.
>
> "Mary!" yells Master John, "bring me some more meat at once!"
>
> "Yes, sir," says his mother.
>
> "Mary," cries Miss Margaret, "I want some more pie. You're very slow."
>
> "Yes, Miss Margaret," says the mother. This sort of thing goes on all day long at the Elliott household. The family drudge does all the work that an ordinary mother would do, and all the work than an ordinary servant would do, and yet she does not receive any of the considerations that either mother or servant would. She is expiating her terrible folly.
>
> She gets up at 5 o'clock in the morning and cleans her master's and her children's shoes. Then she lights the fires and does some of the other rough work. She waits on the table at breakfast time and then sees that the children have their rubbers on and their clothes in good condition when they start for school. She is never allowed to say anything unless she is spoken to.
>
> On Sunday Elliott drives the children to church five miles away. The "servant," by special permission, is allowed to go there on foot.
>
> When an old friend of the family calls, one who knew Mrs. Elliott in happier days, the former wife must still act as a servant. She must not show in any way that she recognizes the visitor. This is part of the agreement.
>
> Mrs. Elliott feels that she must submit to every humiliation and sacrifice to atone for the crime she committed. She stands in profound awe of her former husband, a man of cold, silent and inflexible character.
>
> When he was asked how he was able to carry out such a strange arrangement he replied:
>
> "It works very well. I have nothing to complain of. The children are glad to have her round the house. She does more for them than most servants would and then her wages are very little."

* * *

A terrible object lesson truly, of what a woman will do for love. Analyzing the lesson, however, in the light of racial experience, I take the ground that Mrs. Elliott was none the less dominated by mother-love when she ran away with the coachman than when she returned to the old home and willingly became a bond slave to husband and children.

Mother-love includes, embraces, embodies, ALL OTHER love.

When she deserted the husband and children that did did not love her it was because the blind mother-love within her heart told her to seek companionship, mateship, that would enable her to become a real mother. Her womanly instinct told her the life she was then living made it impossible that she could become the mother of loving and lovable children—children that would be an improvement upon herself and the man who might assist her to practicalize motherhood.

That she made a mistake when choosing the coachman was probably not so much the fault of her womanly intuitions as the fault of her wretched environment, and because no other man extended a hand to help her out of the hell of soul-starvation in which she then was living.

A drowning man catches at straws, and a woman drowning in a loveless element, will catch at a LOG—if in the shape of a man.

* * *

As I understand it Mrs. Elliott is not now working for love; at least not for love of her children because she gave them birth. If she loves them at all it is as she would love and work for any motherless child. She is now paying the debt exacted of her by her own falsely educated conscience—her own artificial, anti-natural, standard of purity and honor, as wife and mother. To the demands of this conventional Moloch she is willing to sacrifice the remaining years of her loveless life.

In summing up his criticism Mr. Lane says: "this poor woman must be judged guiltless because of her atonement." But would she be guilty if she had made no atonement?

Verily I think not.

"Love is of man's life a thing apart; 'tis woman's whole existence," says Byron. Then when love dies all that is womanly dies.

Why then should woman be blamed when, to save her life, she flies from a loveless home, and refuses to return?

WOMAN AND THE HOME.

Speaking of the husband in this case Mr. Lane says, "the man can be judged only by his attitude toward the penitent, forgiveness-pleading woman and in this judgment he appears so brutal and worthlessly inhuman that a warm-hearted loving woman would find life impossible with him."

But the popular standard of morality for woman compels her, in countless thousands of instances to live with just such a man. The home belongs to the man; the husband is the legal head of the family, and when a warm-hearted, loving woman finds she has made a mistake, finds that there is no real love between her husband and herself, the popular and legal code of morality will not permit her to demand an equitable division of the mutually earned property; will not allow a peaceful and mutually desired separation and reorganization of family ties. To mutually desire separation and reconstruction is regarded an offense against public morals, an offense against marital virtue that must be punished by compelling the unhappily mated to live on, to suffer on, and to bring into the world children deprived of their most important birth-right, namely, the right to be BORN OF LOVE!

To condemn a woman to live in unwelcome marital relations is to compel her to become the mother of imbeciles or criminals.

The crime of undesired maternity, of unloving and unloved motherhood, is perhaps the greatest of all crimes. To give life under such conditions is worse than to destroy life.

* * *

My central thought on reading the above pitiful story was that Mrs. Elliott is to be commended rather than blamed, for her desertion of a loveless home. Commended and helped instead of cursed, because in being true to the mother instinct (including of course the mating instinct without which motherhood is impossible) she showed herself a TRUE WOMAN.

Mother-love—the instinct of race-reproduction, knows nothing of PRUDENTIAL considerations. When this instinct asserts itself in full force, taking the form of what is called the "grand passion," every other consideration is forgotten. Even the instinct of personal safety, desire for good name, "fear of God and hope of heaven," all, all, are swept away as chaff before the wind, by this all-conquering racial instinct or impulse.

Ella Wheeler—than whom there was never, perhaps, a better interpreter of normal nature—struck it right when she made her heroine to say, "Let me drop down to SWEET HELL, if only in the arms of him I love."

This is the voice of motherhood in its enlarged, its truest, its racial sense, and the woman who has never felt thus has not yet known the FLOWERING stage of perfect womanhood—is not yet fit for the crowning glory of womanhood, the creation of a new human being.

"Every great soul," says Ella Wheeler, "is the product of a great passion, and the reason there are so few great souls is that there are so few great passions. All not thus begotten are illegitimates, bastards!" or words to that effect.

* * *

Again says this world-famous "poet of passion"—of normal nature: "Whoever is begotten of pure love is of immaculate conception, and is a 'child of God'"—which word is a contraction of GOOD!

That is to say, no child can be well-born except when mutual love brings the parents together in the most tremendously important act of their lives—the giving life and character to a new human being.

That there may be "infatuations," attractions that do not deserve the name of love, is doubtless true. There are many women and still more men to whose natures true love is impossible; that is, the love that includes and blends the physical, the intellectual and the psychic—simply because there was no such love between their own parents, and hence the necessity for freedom to correct mistakes in choosing companionships when and where the creation of new human beings is a possibility.

* * *

Tragedies similar, in all important particulars, to that of the Elliott family are being enacted daily all around us. Every observing woman and man knows of many such. It is only when some unusual or sensational features bring them into public notice, such as the case of the jailer's wife at Pittsburg who liberated a prisoner and escaped with him, a few week's ago, or when a conspicuous example of the stereotyped "Wife-Murder and Suicide" occurs, that such tragedies get an airing in the public prints. As in the matter of abuses under the chattel slave system in the South, a few years ago, it is against "public policy" to say much about the inner working of our conventional marriage system.

In most cases these tragedies are silently endured, silently lived, until death releases the victim; reminding us of Joaquin Miller's poem, "The Bravest Battle that Ever Was Fought"—fought in a "Walled-up Woman's Heart—the woman that would not yield"—would not cry out and let her heart-hunger be known to the unsympathetic public which would, in most cases, only laugh at her folly for letting it be known that she was dying from want of love—the love that is her "whole existence"—the love that is her natural right as much as air and sunshine are her natural right—quite as necessary to the life of the womanly woman.

M. HARMAN.

Bound Volumes of Lucifer.

We are now prepared to supply volumes of Lucifer well bound in cloth, for the years 1899, 1900, and 1901.

THIRD SERIES, VOL. V. (1901).

Among the noteworthy articles contained in this volume are Free Love, Free Maternity, by Paul Robin; Nature and the Law, by May Huntley; The Question of Illegitimacy; Illegitimate, by William Platt; What Woman Will Wrest from the New Century, by Laura H. Earle: The Gardener's Story, by Octave Mirbeau; Pre-Natal Culture, by Tennie C. Claflin; Will You Lie or Tell the Truth? [to children] by Ada L. Vreeland; The Rights of Children, by R. B. Kerr; Thou Shalt Not Kill, by Count Tolstoi; Crime and Criminals; or, The Problems Presented by Anti-Social Acts, by E. C. Walker.

The most important editorials are those following the Buffalo tragedy, among them being: The Lesson of the Hour; Sentenced to Die; The Ultimate of Anarchy; Archism vs. Anarchism, The Social Side of Anarchism. Free Unions and Parental Responsibility; Cowardly Murder—McKinley and Czolgosz; The Nation's Crime, Anarchy in the Family; and Socialism and Anarchism. This volume also contains the Anniversary double number of Lucifer.

THIRD SERIES, VOL. IV., (1900.)

A few of the many articles contained in this volume are: The Quintessence of Harmanism, by R. B. Kerr; The Ethics of Parentage, by Victor B. Southworth; Monogamy and Polygamy, by Jonathan Mayo Crane; Free Women and Marriage, by James F. Morton, Jr.; Why Novels Stop at the Marriage; Anthropology and Monogamy, by Orford Northcote; The Cats' Paradise, by Emile Zola; The Guardianship of Children, by R. B. Kerr; Equality, not Identity of Women and Men; The Rights of the Individual in the Family, by Mrs. Oscar Beringer; Women in Greece, by C. L. James; Marriage in Mexico, by Santiago Walker; Marriage in France, by R. B. Kerr; Importance of Womanhood and Motherhood, by Eliza Burt Gamble; The Poet Shelley on Marriage, by Jay Chaapel; and Love Laughs at Locksmiths, by Ethelyn Leslie Huston.

Among the editorials are: Trusts, Big and Little; Robber Nations in a Trust—The British-Boer War; Imperialism's Logic; Marriage by Compulsion; Rights of Husbands and Fathers; A Religious Trust; What Lucifer is Here For; New Cure for Criminality; Epidemic of Military Measles; Freedom vs. Marriage; Is War Man's Normal Condition? The Chinese Problem; The Story of Tolstoi; Ethics and Hygiene of Sex; Our Missionaries in China; Still Looking for Causes; Church and State—Twin Evils; and Chicago's Crusade Against Vice.

THIRD SERIES, VOL. III., (1899.)

Of the articles in this volume, as in the others, it is hard to choose which are most worthy of mention; but a few are: Is Woman Man's Superior? by Kate Austin; The Logic of Chivalry, by R. B. Kerr; Wife and Prostitute, by James F. Morton, Jr.; A Pen-Picture—The Good Young "Old Man" Meets a Wicked "New Woman," by Lillian Harman; Parnell—The Victim of England's Hypocrisy, by D. N. Swift; Darwin, Weisman, and Harman, by R. B. Kerr; The Wine-Press, by Olive Schreiner; Medical Ethics as Related to Abortion and Prevention, by E. C. Walker; Great Women of the Past, by Dora F. Kerr; The Minister and the Women, by Dora F. Kerr; Men, Women, and Love, by M. Florence Johnson; Catherine the Great, by C. L. James; Some Trials Incident to Transition, by Giotto; Mary Shelley, by C. L. James; The Regeneration of Society, by Lillian Harman; Ayesha, by C. L. James; The Race Question, by Lillian Harman; Theodora, by C. L. James; Irene of Constantinople, by C. L. James; Woman and Home in Freedom, by Lillian Harman; What Sometimes Becomes of the Children, by M. Florence Johnson; A Traveler's Tale, by R. B. Kerr; Margaret of Navarre, by C. L. James; Catherine de'Medici, by C. L. James; and The Couvade, by J. M. Crane.

Price, bound in cloth, $1.75 a volume; unbound $1 a volume.

The Slave of a Slave.

One December evening the Tomboy was "punging" home after dark. It had been snowing all day long—one of those gentle clinging storms; lampposts and houses, the old church steeple—each common object, all touched with snow, loomed beautifully unfamiliar; but now, only a few last flakes glinted in the lamplight, and the white quiet streets were growing lively again. Boys and men were out with shovels, eager for the job of clearing a sidewalk, and sleighs ran easily along.

The Tomboy jumped off the back of a pung with a good-night to the obliging driver, and plunged down a side street which led to a poor quarter of the town. She made deep tracks with her new rubber boots and scooped up the snow for balls. Away they flew, hitting fence and lamppost, cross old gentleman's neck, anything for a target, till suddenly she stopped with a half-made ball in her hand; for there before her on the sidewalk was a woman shoveling—a woman in a calico dress, trying to keep a thin shawl about her shoulders while she scraped the snow into the gutter. The light from a street lamp fell on one of those quenched young faces, not uncommon in that part of the town. The Tomboy had seen it often at the window. "What are you doing that for?" she asked.

"I want to get it done before my man comes home," answered the woman dully.

"Well, you go into the house and get warm, and I'll do it," said the child, impulsively seizing the shovel.

After a feeble resistance the woman let go the handle and went indoors, looking back doubtfully; but the sturdy little girl, with the compelling dark eyes, began to cut the snow in neat blocks and toss them far into the street as she had seen men do. Her cheeks grew warm and rosy as her red tam o' shanter, and so did her strong little hands, until she was obliged to stop a minute and pull off her wet mittens. Just then she felt someone looking at her, and turning quickly, saw a man near the doorstep—a big red-faced man in woolen sweater and warm overcoat, carrying a dinner pail and smelling of whiskey. He was eying her curiously, but as soon as she saw him he went into the house without a word.

Presently the woman appeared, distressed and flurried. She put a nickel in the Tomboy's hand, saying: "My man told me to give you this."

"You keep it," returned the child. 'But don't let him know," she cautioned.

The woman's cold fingers shut greedily over the bit of money; she and the Tomboy were very close together now, and the child questioned passionately: "Why don't you run away from him? I would."

"I can't," the woman faltered. "There's the baby; he's ailin'—and I ain't very strong yet. Besides, I can't find work. And he says he'd take the baby." Then, as if afraid of what she had uttered, the woman shrank within; and as the door closed upon her the Tomboy heard the baby screaming.

Ah, the incomprehensible weakness and the shame! She had never seen anything quite so bad as this; but she had heard women beg and plead—and lie; she had heard the drunken curse, she had watched her own mother's tears while her little heart was throbbing fiercely. As the Tomboy shoveled on in one of those wild revolts that rent her childhood, the blocks of snow weighed heavy and heavier, but she did not care; she did not care if her arms broke with aching; she would clear that sidewalk to the end, which she did scrupulously; then rang the door bell, and the woman answered.

"Don't be afraid!" the child insisted, as she handed back the shovel and asked for a broom; but the woman hastily shut the door in her face. She had said too much already, and she was afraid her man might hear.

So the Tomboy trudged wearily home, late to supper, thinking she was glad she wasn't a woman; but then she had made up her mind long ago that she would "never be a woman!" And she thrust her little hands into her pockets with a sudden satisfaction, for she had earned a five-cent piece.—Amy Wellington, in "The Comrade."

The American Press-Writers' Association.

"Boston Traveler," March 28, prints a fine letter from T. J. Small on the case of Mrs. Craddock, under the caption "Another of Comstock's Victims." March 29, the following appears in the "Traveler."

VICTORY FOR LIBERTY.

"Attention has been called several times in this column to the manner in which the colouists at Home, Washington, were being persecuted by the United States postal authorities, and I am sure that all the readers of this department of 'The Traveler' will be interested to learn that on March 11 the Comstockites met with a crushing defeat in Judge Hanford's Court, Tacoma, Washington, when this honorable, upright judge, in the case of the government vs. three of the Home colonists, indicted by the grand jury for writing and mailing obscene literature, directed the jury to bring in a verdict of not guilty.

"All lovers of freedom will breathe easier on account of the stinging rebuke that has been administered to Comstock and his satellites, whose infernal work of hounding poor men and women for the past thirty years has earned them the undying hatred of all people who love honesty and square dealing. Nothing can be more destructive to a free press than to enact laws that compel the people to have all their letters and papers handled by one huge monopoly, and then appoint such a character as Comstock to say what kind of matter shall be circulated. It is to be hoped that the decision of Judge Hanford will have a tendency to arouse all who understand that 'eternal vigilance is the price of liberty' to renewed efforts to have the obnoxious Comstock law swept from the statute book of the nation."

J. T. SMALL.

Dr. R. S. Clymer has returned to Souderton, Pa. for a few weeks rest and will stop off en route at Philadelphia, to arrange with printer Cullingford for the publication of his latest work on "How to Become Immune Against Small-Pox and Vaccination." This article presents the anti-vaccination issue in a new manner and any one interested should subscribe for some for distribution.

NEW MEMBERS.

256b. Phelps, William Denton, West Sutton, Mass.
257f. Johnson, C. J., Box 25, Pocatello, Idaho.
258d. Jobes, A. L., 70 Washington St., Leominster, Mass.
259d. Higbe, J. M., Manson, Iowa.
260b. Smith, I. Ira, Clearfield, Pa.
561f. Dawbarn, Charles, San Leandro, Cal.
262d. Ingalls, Mary A., 165 John St., Toronto, Canada.

CORRECTION.

108f. McArdle, John, 914 South 40 St., Omaha, Nebr.
A. C. Armstrong, 17 Leroy St., Dorchester, Mass.

VARIOUS VOICES.

A. S., Frankfort, Kas.:—I have read Lucifer for a great many years; almost from its beginning. I owe much to it, I have always been its champion, and always will be. We have raised five nice children, a la Lucifer.

"Daily Times," Bayonne, N. J.:—In its own special sphere we know of no paper that is doing a more useful work than Lucifer, the Light-Bearer, published by M. Harman, assisted by his accomplished daughter, Lillian, at 500 Fulton St., Chicago, Ill. The price is $1 a year. For the sum of ten cents Lucifer will be sent for five weeks to new subscribers, each of whom will be presented with a newly gotten up booklet of forty-five pages called Institutional Marriage, As Seen From the Viewpoint of an Exiled Marsian, a lecture by M. Harman.

H. E. Dewey, Farlinville, Kas.:—I often wonder that you remain so firm when there is so much to discourage you. The work of reform is slow, and yet if we compare the present with twenty-five years ago we find quite an advance in public sentiment. In the "Ladies' Home Journal" for April there is a story that could not have appeared in that journal even ten years ago; and the subjects we used to discuss privately in Parkhurst's Ever-Circulators are now discussed openly. And although you are perhaps a century in the van the great army is coming our way.

S. R. S., Kan.:—As you printed and criticised a casual remark in a "private" note some explanation becomes necessary. I meant that Anarchy being the assumption of abstract liberty and quite as impossible of realization as a rail-road to the moon, its advocacy was a waste of time and space. If one man inhabited the earth alone he could enjoy abstract liberty. Hence the consistent anarchist is the one who tries to kill 'em all off but himself. To spare even one, his wife for instance, would be to come short of the glory of God. Crude men need crude institutions. No other would fit. As men grow their institutions grow. When all men become "sanctified," absolutely perfect, love others as themselves, couldn't be hired to tell a fib or steal a pin, then they will dispense with jails and external rules of order, a consummation devoutly to be wished, sure's you're a foot high, but too far off to talk about.

912.

If these figures correspond with the number printed on the wrapper of your Lucifer, your subscription expires with thi number.

If a copy of Lucifer fails to reach you, please order by number or date.

Lucifer will not be sent "by return mail" unless stamps for postage are enclosed with order.

To New Subscribers: Your subscription is paid to No. If you have not ordered Lucifer, a friend has subscribed for you. If you do not wish to receive it, please notify us by card or through your postmaster. If you wish to become a regular subscriber you will confer a favor by renewing before the expiration of your trial subscription.

LOVE'S COMING OF AGE.

This is a book with which few will wholly agree, but which nearly every one can read with profit and enjoyment. The subject is the relation of the sexes in the past, present and future, and it is treated with absolute frankness and fearlessness by a writer who unites a broad outlook, a strong grasp of his subject and a charming literary style. The following table of contents will indicate the line of thought followed by the author.

The Sex Passion.
Man, the Ungrown.
Woman, the Serf.
Woman in Freedom
Marriage: a Retrospect
Marriage: a Forecast.
The Free Society.
Some remarks on the early star and sex worships.
Notes—On the Primitive Group Marriage; Jealousy; The Family; Preventive Checks to Population.

The book will be printed on extra book paper and handsomely bound in cloth. The price, including postage to any address will be one dollar. Copies will be ready about April 20.

Address M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

RADICAL LITERATURE.

For Sale by M. Harman, 500 Fulton St., Chicago.

A CHAMBERMAID'S DIARY. By Octave Mirbeau. Translated from the French by Benj. R. Tucker. 462 pages. Handsomely bound in cloth. $1.50.

ADVANCEMENT OF SCIENCE. Prof. John Tyndall's famous Inaugural Address before the British Association for the Advancement of Science, with the articles on Prayer which so stirred the religious world. Cloth, 50c; paper, 25c.

AGE OF REASON (The). Presentation edition. Part I reprinted from the first English edition. Part II corrected by M. D. Conway's edition. With Paine's own account of his arrest in Paris. Photogravure portrait from the Romney painting exhibited in London. Containing also portrait from the Jarvis painting; from the Peale painting, known as the Bonneville portrait, representing Paine as a member of the French Assembly, and a half-tone of the Peale painting. Large half-tones of the house presented to Paine, in which he lived in New Rochelle, and of the monument and surroundings, Yorktown, Pa., scenes; also eight half-tone views of buildings, etc., associated with Paine's life in Paris, and other illustrations. With Preface, Chronological Table, Notes, Index, etc. Printed on antique wove paper, large octavo, wide margins, gilt edge. Special cover design in colors. The finest and most accurate of all editions. Boxed. Postpaid, $2.

AGE OF REASON. Thomas Paine. Cloth, with steel plate portrait, 50c; paper 15c.

ANARCHISM: Its Philosophy and Ideal. Peter Kropotkin. 5c.

A PHYSICIAN IN THE HOUSE. A New Family Medical Work, by Dr. J. H. Greer. This book is up-to-date in every particular. It will save you hundreds of dollars in doctors' bills. It tells you how to cure yourself by simple and harmless home remedies. It recommends no poisonous or dangerous drugs. It teaches how to treat and how to prevent disease. It teaches how to save health and life by safe methods. It teaches prevention—that it is better to know how to live and avoid disease than to take any medicine as a cure. It is not an advertisement and has no medicine to sell. It has hundreds of excellent recipes for the cure of the various diseases. It has 16 colored plates showing different parts of the human body. The chapter on Painless Midwifery is worth its weight in gold to women. The "Care of Children" is something every mother ought to read. It teaches the value of Air, Sunshine, and Water as medicines. It contains valuable information for the married. This book cannot fail to please you. If you are looking for health by the safest and easiest means, do not delay getting it. It has eight hundred pages, is neatly bound in cloth, with gold letters, and will be sent by mail or express, prepaid to any address, for $3.75.

A PLEA FOR THE NEW WOMAN. May L. Collins. With large new half-tone portrait. 10c.

A TALE OF THE STRASSBURG GEESE. R. B. Kerr. Together with The Strike of the Strassburg Geese (C. W. Coolridge), A Traveler's Tale (R. B. Kerr), The Cat's Story (Emile Zola) 5c.

AUTONOMY, SELF-LAW. A fragmentary dissertation on the right to non-invasive self-hood. 5c.

A WEEK ON THE CONCORD AND MERRIMAC RIVERS. Henry D. Thoreau. 25c.

BALZAC'S SERAPHITA: The Mystery of Sex. Mary Hanford Ford. Cloth. $1.

BIBLE TEMPERANCE. E. C. Walker. Proving that Liquor Drinking is Commended, Defended and Enjoined by the Bible, and giving close reference to the chapters and verses. 10c.

BORNING BETTER BABIES—Through regulating reproduction by controlling conception. E. B. Foote, Jr., M. D. 25c.

CAUSES OF HARD TIMES, and the Money Question. Albert Chavannes. 5c.

CHICAGO CONFERENCE OF TRUSTS. Speeches, debates, etc.; 81 portraits of delegates, including Benj. R. Tucker, Laurence Gronlund, William Jennings Bryan, Samuel Gompers, Louis F. Post, and George Schilling. 626 pages. 50c.

CHILDREN OF THE ITALIAN POOR. Paola Lombroso. 5c.

DARWIN'S, THE. (A novel.) Elmina D. Slenker. 50c.

DAWN OF CIVILIZATION, The; or, England in the Nineteenth Century. J. C. Spence. 178 pages. 25c.

DAWN-THOUGHT ON THE RECONCILIATION. By J. Wm. Lloyd. An inspired treatise that, with insight and solution, touches all the questions of life, love, soul and society. A prose-poem, simple enough for a child to enjoy, deep enough to make a philosopher think. The largest creed, the most generous theory, the gladdest gospel. A book of life. A religion of growth and the overlook—freedom and optimism. Read it. Printed in old style antique type, rubricated with portrait of the author. In three editions, de luxe, plain and paper bound. Prices, $1.25, $1.50 and 50c.

DIGGING FOR RED-ROCK. Camp-meeting talks and sketches by Moses Harman. 5c.

ECONOMICS OF ANARCHY. A Study of the Industrial Type. Dyer D. Lum 15c.

DR. FOOTE'S SOCIAL SCIENCE SERIES OF DIME PAMPHLETS—Wedlock; Scientific Marriage; Heredity; A B C of Temperaments; Powell and his Critics; Physiological Marriage; Physical Improvement of Humanity; Causes of Disease, Insanity, and Premature Death; A Step Backward. Any of the above books sent by mail on receipt of price.

DYNAMIC THEORY OF LIFE AND MIND. An attempt to show that all organic beings are both constructed and operated by the dynamic agencies of their respective environments. By James H. Alexander. Over 400 illustrations, 37 chapters, 1,067 pages and a 3-column index of 11 pages. Cloth, $3.75.

EAST TENNESSEE SKETCHES. A and Cecile Chavannes. 25c.

EIGHT-HOUR MOVEMENT. John P. Altgeld, ex-Governor of Illinois. 5c.

EVOLUTION AND REVOLUTION. Elisee Reclus. 5c.

FALSE CLAIMS OF THE CHURCH. John E. Remsberg. Analyzing and confuting the claims made by churchmen that the Christian religion has promoted morality, learning, temperance, science, freedom, and showing how she has opposed progress. Paper, 10c.

FIELDS, FACTORIES, AND WORKSHOPS; or, Industry Combined with Agriculture and Brain Work with Manual Work. Peter Kropotkin. 360 pages. 40c. Postage, 5c.

FREE PRESS. Arguments in support of demurrer to the indictment of M. Harman, E. C. Walker and Geo. Harman, under the Comstock law. G. C. Remens and David Overmyer. 25c.

GIORDANO BRUNO. His Life, Teachings, and Martyrdom. Burned for heresy in Rome, Feb. 17, 1600. 5c.

GOD AND THE STATE. Bakounine. 25c.

GOVERNMENT ANALYZED. A remarkable work by a remarkable man, Col. John R. Kelso, the history of whose life reads more like romance than reality. This book is the last of a series—Deity Analyzed, Bible Analyzed, Universe Analyzed. By the author's death this work was left unfinished, but was completed by his wife, Etta Dunbar Kelso. 419 pages; cloth. Price reduced from $1.50 to $1.

HILDA'S HOME. Rosa Grasl. "An o'er true tale" of woman's wrongs and of one woman's struggles and final triumphs in her attempt to secure justice for herself and for her sisters. 426 pages. Cloth, $1; paper, 50c.

HUMAN RIGHTS. J. Madison Hook. 5c.

IMPORTANCE OF HONEST MONEY. A simple, scientific, invariable standard of price. James Adleman. 250 pages. Paper, 50c.

IN BRIGHTER CLIMES; or, Life in Socialand. Albert Chavannes. 5c.

INFIDEL DEATH-BEDS. "Idle Tales of Dying Horrors." G. W. Foote. Brief biographical sketches of 97 Freethinkers, including Bruno, Buckle, Byron, Comte, Darwin, George Eliot, Gibbon, Goethe, Hugo, Harriet Martineau, Mill, Paine, Madame Roland, George Sand, Shelley, Volney, and Voltaire. 25c.

IN HELL AND THE WAY OUT. A plan of Social Democracy outlined. Henry E. Allen. 10c.

INSTITUTIONAL MARRIAGE. From the viewpoint of an exiled Mavsian. M. Harman. 5c.

JOHN'S WAY. A domestic radical story. Elmina D. Slenker. 25c.

KAREEZA. Ethics of Marriage. A bold, brave book, teaching ideal marriage, rights of the unborn child, a designed and controlled maternity. Sample pages free. $1.

KORADINE. A story for young and old. Extra levant cloth. $1.

LIBERTY IN LITERATURE. Testimonial to Walt Whitman. "Let us put wreaths on the brows of the living." An address delivered in Philadelphia, Oct. 31, 1886, with portrait of Whitman. Containing also Col. Ingersoll's address at the funeral of Walt Whitman, Mar. 30, 1892. Cloth, 50c; paper, 25c.

LIBERTY. Political, Religious, Social, and Moral. A. F. Tindall. 5c.

LITTLE LESSONS FOR LITTLE FOLKS. Elmina D. Slenker. Boards, 40c.

LIZZIE MELTON. A story of a self-reliant girl. By Albert Chavannes. With portrait of author. 25c.

LUCIFER. Third Series, Vol. III. (1889). Cloth, $1.25. Postage, 25c.

MAGNETATION, and Its Relation to Health and Character. Albert Chavannes. 25c.

MARRIAGE. An address by Dr. Juliet H. Severance. 5c.

MARRIAGE IN FREE SOCIETY. Edward Carpenter. A dainty little gift book. 25c.

MARTYRDOM OF MAN. Winwood Reade. This is a very interestingly pictured synopsis of universal history, showing what the race has undergone—its martyrdom—in its rise to its present plane. It shows how war and religion have been oppressive factors in man's struggle for liberty; and the last chapter, of some 150 pages, describes his intellectual struggle from the animal period of the earth to the present, adding an outline of what the author conceives would be a religion of reason and love. Winwood Reade's reputation as a writer of fine English, of deep study and careful reasoning, needs no word of praise. Cloth, $1.

MEN, WOMEN AND CHANCE. William Platt. Containing two tales: The Ascent to the Heights, and Blind Men and Seeing. Well printed on heavy paper and artistically bound in cloth. Gilt top, rough edges, 75c.

MEN, WOMEN, AND GODS. Helen H. Gardener. With preface by Col. R. G. Ingersoll. Contents: Introduction by Col. Ingersoll. Men, Women, and Gods. Vicarious Atonement. Historical Facts and Theological Fictions. Appendix. Address to the Clergy and Others. Letter to Cleveland Congress of Freethinkers. The only authentic and correct edition. Large 12mo, heavy-toned paper. Portrait. This volume is by far the best writing this famous author ever did. It is very fine. Cloth, $1; paper, 50c.

MISSING LINK IN MODERN SPIRITUALISM. THE. A. Leah (Fox) Underhill. With portraits of the Fox Sisters and others. 418 pages. Cloth. Reduced to $1.

MORIBUND SOCIETY AND ANARCHY. Jean Grave. Cloth, 40c; paper, 25c.

MOTHERHOOD IN FREEDOM. M. Harman. 5c.

MUTUAL BANKING. A simple plan to abolish interest on money. William B. Greene. 10c.

NORA, A DOLL'S HOUSE, and GHOSTS. Ibsen. Cloth. 75c.

OUR WORSHIP OF PRIMITIVE SOCIAL GUESSES. E. C. Walker. Contents: Love and Law; The Moloch of the Monogamic Ideal; The Continuity of Race-Life, and Tyranny; Food and Sex Fallacies, a Criticism; When Men and Women Are and When They Are Not Varieties; The New Woman: What is she? What will she be? The Stain Hiding Behind Its Own Mistakes; Bishop Potter's Opinion of Divorce; Love: Its Attraction and Expression; Is She an Honest Girl? Lloyd, Platt, and the Pitiful Facts; Social Radicals and Parentage; Anchrogogy and Monogamy; Love and Trust Versus Fear; Reflections upon Reading William Platt's "Women, Love, and Life." 15c.

PERSONAL EXPERIENCES of Two American Anti-Vivisectionists in Various Countries. Philip G. Peabody. With an Appendix by Col. R. G. Ingersoll. Reduced from 25c to 15c.

PERSONAL RIGHTS AND SEXUAL WRONGS. Oswald Dawson. 25c.

PRIESTLY CELIBACY. Prof. A. L. Rawson. Together with The Incoherence of Translation (E. C. Walker), Motherhood in Freedom (Moses Harman), The Greatest Sin (an allegory, H. B. Kerr), and Jealousy, the Foe of Freedom (Oscar Rotter). 25c.

RELIGION AND RATIONALISM. The relation of each to human liberty. The religionist, fancying that he has the whole truth, is logically opposed to investigation, and he appeals to physical force to arrest the discovery of new truths. What Rationalism is, and how many believe themselves Freethinkers who are only unbelieving or disgruntled religionists. The necessity for separate organizations and a division of labor among reformers. The Secular Union. Important facts and arguments in a compact form. E. C. Walker. 5c.

RIGHTS OF MAN. Thomas Paine. Answer to Burke's attack upon the French revolution. A political treatise of great general value, as advocating liberty and democracy. Contains the fundamental principles of true republicanism. Cloth, 50c; paper, 25c.

RUBAIYAT (Quatrains) OF OMAR KHAYYAM. Edward FitsGerald's interpretation; with original introduction; special cover; latest version. Paper, 10c.

RULED BY THE TOMB. A discussion of free thought and free love. Orford Northcote. 10c.

SCIENCE IN STORY; or, Sammy Tubbs, the Boy Doctor, and Sponsia, the Troublesome Monkey. For young folks. Dr. E. B. Foote. Five volumes in "red line," presentation edition. $5. Five volumes, plainer binding, $2.50; all in one volume, $1.

SEXUAL PHYSIOLOGY FOR THE YOUNG. Being the fifth volume of "Science in Story." 250 pages; cloth bound; illustrated. 50c.

SONGS OF THE UNBLIND CUPID. J. Wm. Lloyd. Edition de luxe. Verses printed from Kelmscott type upon deckle edged hand made paper of cerulean tint. Initial letters, ornaments and borders are in red; initial letter and first. Initial letters, ornaments and borders are in red; initial letter and first. Initial letters, ornaments and borders are hand painted in water colors. Covers sketch upon the opening page are hand painted in water colors. Covers brown, with choice of silver or gold lettering. Very handsome gift book. 25c.

STUDIES IN SOCIOLOGY. In four parts: I., The Law of Happiness; II., The Law of Individual Control; III., The Law of Exchange; IV., The Law of Environment. Albert Chavannes. 25c.

TALKS ON NATURE. Important information for both sexes. Dr. J. H. Greer. 192 pages. Reduced from 50 to 25c.

THE ABOLITION OF MARRIAGE. John Beverly Robinson. Together with Isabel's Intention (Mariette), Reminiscences of Berlin Heights (A. Warren), and The Sexes and Love in Freedom (Oscar Rotter). 25c.

THE BAR SINISTER AND LICIT LOVE, including the first biennial proceedings of the Legitimation League, and a full account of the Lanchester case, with full-page half-tone pictures of Edith Lanchester, and Lillian Harman. Handsomely bound in green and gold covers. 207 pages. 25c.

THE BLUE LAWS OF CONNECTICUT. Taken from the Code of 1650 and the public records of the Colony of Connecticut previous to 1665. With an appendix containing an account of the persecution of Witches and Quakers in New England, and some extracts from the Blue Laws of Virginia. Copiously illustrated. 25c.

THE BRITISH BARBARIANS. Grant Allen, the greatest of the Hill-Top pioneers. Dedicated "to all who have heart enough, brain enough, and soul enough to understand it." Handsomely bound in cloth. 281 pages. $1.

THE WOMAN WHO DID. Grant Allen. A powerful story of a refined, educated and high-spirited woman who dared to defy the tyranny of church and state and ignore the institution of marriage. Handsomely bound in cloth. $1.

THE NEW HEDONISM. Grant Allen. The opening paragraph says: "The old axiomism said: 'Be virtuous and you will be happy.' The new hedonism says: 'Be happy and you will be virtuous.'" In another place the writer says: "In proportion as men have freed themselves from mediæval superstitions have they begun to perceive that the unclean and impure things are callings and accidents; that the pure and beautiful and ennobling thing is the fit and worthy exercise of the reproductive function." Paper covers; 32 large pages; twelve copies, 25c. Single copy, 5c.

THE CHICAGO MARTYRS. The famous speeches of the eight condemned anarchists in Judge Gary's Court, and Altgeld's reasons for pardoning Fielden, Neebe and Schwab. 25c.

THE COMING WOMAN. Lillie D. White. 5c.

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM. Principles and platform of organized Freethought. 10c.

THE EVOLUTION OF MODESTY. Jonathan Mayo Crane. A consideration of the origin of clothes and the reasons why people wear clothing. Here are a few questions it answers: What is modesty? What is the cause of it? What is the use of it? What is the cause of the feeling of shame? Is nudity immodest? What is the cause of the notion that it is shameful to expose some parts of the body? Why do not all peoples agree as to what parts of the body should be concealed? 5c.

THE FOUNTAIN OF LIFE; or, The Threefold Power of Sex. Lois Waisbrooker. 50c.

THE FUTURE OF SECULARISM. When will the Cause of Justice triumph? 5c.

THE PRODIGAL DAUGHTER; or, The Price of Virtue. Rachel Campbell. Together with Legal Wifehood (Lucinda B. Chandler), Life's Gifts (Olive Schreiner), and Marriage—What It Was and Is; Will the Coming Woman Marry? 25c.

THE REVIVAL OF PURITANISM. E. C. Walker. 10c.

THE RIGHTS OF CHILDREN. R. B. Kerr. Together with What Are Women Here For? (E. B. Foote, Jr., M. D.), The New Martyrdom (Lillian Harman), and The Will, from the French of Guy de Maupassant. 25c.

THE SANCTITY OF MARRIAGE. As viewed from a moral and sanitary standpoint. A solemn protest against the present demoralizing management of that institution. Its effects upon offspring and its influence upon education. By Dr. Robert A. Greer. A valuable "opening wedge" in missionary work. Price reduced from 25c to 10c.

THE SECRET INSTRUCTIONS OF THE JESUITS. A reprint from an edition published in 1723, quoted by the highest authorities as authentic. The work is redolent of Jesuit craft and is a plain index to the understanding and working of that order against the welfare of individuals and society. 15c.

THE STATE: ITS HISTORIC ROLE. Prince Peter Kropotkin. 10c.

THE TROUBADOURS AND COURTS OF LOVE. J. F. Rowbotham. Cloth. 350 pages. $1.25. Postage, 10c.

THE UNWOMANLY WOMAN. Lizzie M. Holman. Together with That Great Fraud, Telepi Society (Moses Hull), Virgin Soil (George Egerton), and Normal Sexual Action (Ernest Winne). 25c.

THE WORM TURNS. Revolutionary Poems. Voltairine de Cleyre. 10c.

THOMAS JEFFERSON. His Political, Social and Religious Philosophy. Gen. M. M. Trumbull. 5c.

TOKOLOGY. A book for every woman. By Alice B. Stockham, M. D. Illustrated. Tokology teaches possible painless pregnancy and parturition, giving full, plain directions for the care of a woman before and after confinement. The ailments of pregnancy can be prevented as well as the pains and dangers of childbirth avoided and women need not go down to death giving birth to children. English, German or Swedish. $2.25.

TRAVELS IN FAITH. By Capt. Robert C. Adams. His mental experience from superstition to rationalism. Cloth, 75c; paper, 25c.

VACCINATION A GIGANTIC CRIME. Samuel Darling. 15c.

VINDICATION OF THOMAS PAINE. Col. R. G. Ingersoll. Dealing with all the slanders brought against the name and fame of Paine. A little pamphlet which every admirer of Thomas Paine should have by him for reference. Paper, 15c.

VITAL FORCE. Magnetic Exchange and Magnetation. Albert Chavannes. 25c.

WHAT THE YOUNG NEED TO KNOW: a Primer of Sexual Rationalism. Edwin C. Walker. "Let us cease to be ashamed of what makes us men, of what makes us women, of what gives us the kisses of lovers and the encircling arms of babes." Paper covers; 42 large pages. 10c.

WHAT IS RELIGION? Ingersoll's last public address, delivered at the meeting of the Free Religious Association in Boston on June 1, 1899. To which is appended the poem, "Declaration of the Free," the last verse written by the great Freethinker. 5c.

WHY THE UNDERTONE? An open letter to Judge Gary. Sarah E. Ames. 10c.

WOMAN, CHURCH, AND STATE. Matilda Joslyn Gage. This is Mrs. Gage's last and crowning work. Every woman ought to read it. Every liberal will want it. 10c.

WHEN LOVE IS LIBERTY AND NATURE LAW. John Badcock, Jr. 10c.

WOMAN: Four Centuries of Progress. Susan H. Wixon. 5c.

WOMAN IN THE PAST, PRESENT AND FUTURE. Woman was the first human being that tasted bondage. Woman was a slave before the slave existed. The basis of all oppression is economic dependence on the oppressor. This has been the condition of woman in the past and is so still. She is now a slave of the slave. This work is August Bebel's masterpiece. 8vo. 378 pages. 25c.

Address M. HARMAN, 50 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

Price 2 Cents.

LUCIFER.

THE LIGHT-BEARER.

THIRD SERIES, VOL. VI., No. 14. CHICAGO, ILLINOIS, APRIL 17, E. M. 302. [C. E. 1902.] WHOLE NO. 913

INEXHAUSTIBLE.

She pours her love out as a draught
My heart's thirst to appease;
And I the glorious drink have quaffed
To drain it to the lees.

But ever as I yield the cup
And doubt there can be more,
From her soul's fountain filling up,
It brims and bubbles o'er.

WILLIAM FRANCIS BARNARD.

The True Meaning of the Simile of the Ivy and the Oak.

The difference in physical strength between the sexes, together with woman's disability during the period of child-birth and rearing, gave man from early times an advantage, which complicating itself during the historical period has ultimated (though not of course in the present day only) in what may be called the slavery of woman, her subordination to man, and dependence on him for the means of subsistence; the result being that, till a comparatively few years ago, the woman was condemned to the most special and indeed narrow sphere of life and action; her education, as for this sphere, was most limited, and quite different from that of the man; and her interests were wholly diverse from and often quite opposed to his. Under these circumstances there was naturally little common ground for Marriage, except sex. And the same remains largely true even down to today. The sex-needs once satisfied, and the emotional charm weakened or undone, man and wife not unfrequently wake up with something like dismay to find how little they have left in common; to find that they have nothing in which they can take interest together; that they cannot work at the same things, that they cannot read the same books, that they cannot keep up half-an-hour's conversation together on any topic, and that secretly they are cherishing their own thoughts and projects quite apart from each other.

It must suffice too to remind the reader quite briefly that this divergence has crept down into the moral and intellectual natures of the two sexes, exaggerating the naturally complementary relation of the male and female into a painful caricature of strength on the one hand and dependence on the other. This is well seen in the ordinary marriage-relation of the common-prayer-book type. The frail and delicate female is supposed to cling round the sturdy husband's form, or to depend from his arm in graceful incapacity; and the spectator is called upon to admire the charming effect of the union—as of the ivy with the oak—forgetful of the terrible moral, namely, that (in the case of the trees at any rate) it is really a death-struggle which is going on, in which either the oak must perish suffocated in the embraces of its partner, or in order to free the former into anything like healthy development the ivy must be sacrificed.

Too often of course of such marriages the egoism, lordship and physical satisfaction of the man are the chief motive causes. The woman is practically sacrificed to the part of the maintenance of these male virtues. It is for her to spend her days in little forgotten details of labor and anxiety for the sake of the man's superior comfort and importance, to give up her needs to his whims, to 'humor' him in all ways she can; it is for her to wipe her mind clear of all opinions in order that she may hold it up as a kind of mirror in which he may behold reflected his lordly self; and it is for her to sacrifice even her physical health and natural instincts in deference to what is called her 'duty' to her husband.

How bitterly alone many such a woman feels! She has dreamed of being folded in the arms of a strong man, and surrendering herself, her life, her mind, her all, to his service. Of course it is an unhealthy dream, an illusion, a mere luxury of love; and it is destined to be dashed. She has to learn that self-surrender may be just as great a crime as self-assertion. She finds that her very willingness to be sacrificed only fosters in the man, perhaps for his own self defence, the egotism and coldness that so cruelly wound her.

For how often does he with keen prevision see that if he gives way from his coldness the clinging dependent creature will infallibly overgrow and smother him!—that she will cut her woman-friends, will throw aside all her own interests and pursuits in order to devote herself to him, and, affording no sturdy character of her own in which he can take any interest, will hang the festoons of her affection on every ramification of his wretched life—nor leave him a corner free—till he perishes from all manhood and social or heroic uses into a mere matrimonial clothespeg, a warning and a wonderment to passers by!

However, as a third alternative, it sometimes happens that the Woman, too wise to sacrifice her own life indiscriminately to the egoism of her husband, and not caring for the festoon method, adopts the middle course of appearing to minister to him while really pursuing her own purposes. She cultivates the gentle science of indirectness. While holding up a mirror for the Man to admire himself in, behind that mirror she goes her own way and carries out her own designs, separate from him; and while sacrificing her body to his wants, she does so quite deliberately and for a definite reason, namely, because she has found out that she can so get a shelter for herself and her children, and can solve the problem of that maintenance which society has hitherto denied to her in her own right. For indeed by a cruel fate women have been placed in exactly that position where the sacrifice of their self-respect for base motives has easily passed beyond a temptation into being a necessity. They have had to live, and have too often only been able to do so by selling themselves into bondage to the man. Willing or unwilling, overworked or dying, they have had to bear children to the caprice of their lords; and in this serf-life their very natures have been blunted; they have lost—what indeed should be the very glory and crown of woman's being—the perfect freedom and the purity of their love.

At this whole spectacle of woman's degradation the human male has looked on with stupid and open-mouthed indifference—as an ox might look on at a drowning ox-herd—not even dimly divining that his own fate was somehow involved. He has calmly and obviously watched the woman drift farther and farther away from him, till at last, with the loss of an intelligent and mutual understanding between the sexes, love with unequal wings has fallen lamed to the ground. Yet it would be idle to deny that even in such a state of affairs as that depicted, men and women have in the past and do often even now find some degree of satisfaction—simply indeed because their types of character are such as belong to, and have been evolved in accordance with, this relation.

Today, however, there are thousands of women—and every-day more thousands—to whom such a lopsided alliance is detestable; who are determined that they will no longer endure the arrogant lordship and egoism of men, nor countenance in themselves or other women the craft and servility which are the necessary complements of the relation; who see too clearly in the oak-and-ivy marriage its parasitism on the one hand and strangulation on the other to be sensible of any picturesqueness; who feel too that they have capacities and powers of their own which need space and liberty, and some degree of sympathy and help, for their unfolding; and who believe that they have work to do in the world, as important in its own way as any that men do in theirs. Such women have broken into open warfare—not against marriage, but against a marriage which makes true and equal love an impossibility. They feel that as long as women are economically dependent they cannot stand up for themselves and insist on those rights which men from stupidity and selfishness will not voluntarily grant them.—From Edward Carpenter's "Marriage in Free Society."

Henderson on War.

My theme today is war, and I am against it. I wish I had the gift to speak all my abhorrence of war.

Art, poetry, romance and history have magnified and glorified the soldier, but the time is coming when these great instruments of power will desert their favorite theme and lead the great force of thought away from slaughter-house up to the higher fields of human action. The bull fights, the cock-pit, the prize-ring and the battle-field must all go down together.

It takes courage, I grant, to face death. The sufferings and the trials of the soldiers have not been exaggerated. But the courage needed to face danger and death ranks far below the courage that faces the superstitions, the prejudices, the wealth and the established customs to the world.

The great man reasons; small man fights. Grant's words of peace will survive his mightest war-cry.

The cost of war alone should make us stop to think.

The public debts of the world are twenty-nine billion, and it is safe to say that every dollar of this is the fruit of war. What strain upon earth, shops and fields!

In 100 years Great Britain has paid $4,792,206,010 for war.

During these 100 years 50 of them were devoted to human slaughter.

The cost of our civil war was $6,508,429,908.

Young as we are as a nation, we have spent eighteen long years in battle—four of them in deadly fratricidal strife. Today the genius of our country, indeed of the world, is bending all its powers to increase the capacity for destruction of all the terrible engines of death. Is it not high time that each citizen became a Nazarene to proclaim peace among the people? Let every martyr's grave be a sermon and every widow's wail a hymn for peace. Let us cut down our army bill and save our earnings for the schoolhouse, the library and the home.

Europe is expending on her armies $814,000,000 annually.

No wonder the children of the Old World have been seeking new homes!

Should humanity weep in order that tyrants may laugh?

Should the homes of the people be loaded down with billions of debts in order that some heartless murderer may wear a diadem?

The wretches that have wrought this desolation are the panthers, the hyenas and the ghouls of humanity.

I appeal to you brave men of many battles, who have seen and felt and comprehended! I cry out to you to throw your influence into the scales and urge the world to seek some forum where the arbitrator shall not be the dripping sword.

War is demoralizing.

War is desolating.

War consumes the toil and comfort of our people.

War is the world's terrible, relentless, remorseless inquisition.

War is the weapon of tyrants, the prop of thrones.

War, the black pathway to hell, has been the pretended passage to heaven.

War has been justifiable perhaps, and may be again, as sometimes is the surgeon's knife, but only to save life or something better and dearer than life.—Gen. D. B. Henderson, at a soldiers' gathering in Chicago, 1893.

New York's New Statute Law on Marriage.

I can be excused from noticing the witty personalities of any writer. My aim is to aid in the correct use of such freedom of press as we have, and waste no space of Lucifer.

When S. R. Shepherd says that "Common-law marriage is only dangerous like fire or razors when bunglingly used," it may be that he has some meaning for "common-law marriage" which, to him, places it, like fire, in the class of things necessary. But I take my understanding of "common-law marriage" from common-law evidence, which shows us that it is such living together as makes a couple husband and wife in the eye of the law. Now, though there is in that relation a natural element, the same natural element exists in cohabitation which the law does not regard as marriage; hence that natural element is not the essence of common-law marriage, but its essence is status. Fire, on the other hand, is a purely natural phenomenon, proper to be compared with other natural forces, and not with merely legal status.

Mr. Shepherd proceeds to tell how a couple should act if they do not wish to be married. He puts it briefly. He could have put it: "Don't marry." But if they do not pass as husband and wife and no evidence exists of a legal marriage, it is certain that there will never be any common law marriage established in their case, hence in them it will be as little dangerous as a fire that never was lighted, whatever effects there are from their natural relation, which is not known to the law, either common or statute, as "marriage." Mr. Shepherd proceeds (Lucifer No. 910) to state that "New York has just enacted a law providing that a man and woman may marry themselves by simply living as husband and wife." Have a care. Fortunately it is not so "simply" or involuntarily done. Many will have read of the marriage of Lawyer Patrick and will gather from the story that the main difference made by this new law in New York is to allow friends or bystanders to act instead of a justice of the peace or preacher; but a return in writing has to be made to and recorded by the public officer who keeps the records of statutory marriages. Simply a petty variation in statute law.

I take some pains to "look" on the dark side, all in the rational way of not living there. It does not hurt so much to look as to leap without looking. A credulous woman reading Mr. Shepherd's statement above quoted might believe that simply living with a man in New York would give her some claim under the law "just enacted." She would be deceived, and I think her after-view would be "logubrious."

TAK KAK.

A Fable.

A man had plundered a bee-hive, carried home the dripping combs and was just engaged in getting on the outside of some of the honey—when a hungry little bee came buzzing around to eat a little of it. "The idea!" indignantly roared the infuriated man, "Stealing my honey"—and struck it dead.—From the German of Reinhart Volker, "The Whim."

Shall We Be Happy by Being Deceived?

BY LILLIE D. WHITE.

In a discussion I have had with a very dear friend (who gives me permission to submit a few pages to Lucifer) she says, "The women here are narrow-minded, old-fashioned 'slave wives and mothers' but they seem far happier, kinder and sweeter than any of the do-as-I-please or free love women I have known."

It is true that the dutiful, conventional, God-and-Grundy-taught, please-your-husband woman acquires a reputation for sweetness and kindness that the self-assertive rebel against authority and marriage seldom enjoys. But in my opinion she deserves no credit for it. I do not admire self-sacrifice or submission to the will of others, but women have so long been taught that these are the highest of feminine virtues they seem to enjoy the situation and thrive in it.

For my part I know no better rule of conduct than for every one to do as he or she pleases, with of course a due consideration of consequences to oneself as well as to the rights and feelings of others. The only one I would prevent from doing as he pleases is the one who is invading the personal rights of another. And in the case we have been discussing this was what the husband did for a good many years. Is not he the one to be condemned for doing as he pleases when it means a constant outrage of his wife's tastes, inclinations and desires instead of her who asks nothing of him "but to keep his hands off."

They had not one taste in common but she never objected to any way he chose to enjoy life away from her while he objected to everything she did that had not direct reference to his pleasure and comfort. This was the price of her peace—what she paid for a "respectable position" and a reputation for being "happy and kind and sweet." How much better it is to keep up appearances and be quiet than to tell the truth when it makes a disagreeable racket.

How this old world does like to be deceived! Barnum said people liked to be humbugged, but they are determined to be deceived. The stability and sanctity of our marriage institution is largely due to deception and hypocrisy. No one knows how much of our boasted happiness and peace depends upon the success with which we cover up our mistakes. The short life of David Copperfield's little Dora was blissfully happy because she was successfully deceived.

Maybe Mrs. McKinley's supremely happy married life had no better basis. A great many women and men also are made happy by that kind of deception and no one should object to anything that makes people happy. Our marriage institution depends upon it but each one must decide for him or herself just how much of that kind of happiness he or she can afford to give.

The only marriage that is worth suffering or sacrificing oneself for is the one that requires neither. The union of congenial "twin souls" where both are made happy by each doing as he pleases, may be possible even in this wicked world and the despised "do as-I-please" woman may be doing more to establish such a marriage than the "sweet and kind" ignoramus ("narrow-minded and old fogy") who contentedly makes the best of the present wretched hodge-podge and gets the credit of being the bulwark of our "grand" civilization.

No one knows better than I the likelihood of the "do-as-I-please woman" being crushed in the ruins of the altars and hearthstones she demolishes—how cold and bare and merciless is the alternative the world offers. She, indeed, is "following the path where her feet bleed," but no philosopher will censure her. With all her mistakes, blunders, suffering and failures she is an important factor in the coming of the new time.

I have no word of blame for her nor for the poor soul-starved, over-worked, over-burdened please-your-husband women that I see all around me, and no advice to give either. I see no soft, easy place in the world of social freedom for the rebellious slave who would loosen her bonds if she could. Millions of bodies must yet be thrown into the stream before the bridge is built over which the whole human race will pass to the Land of Freedom.

The Socialist Agitator.

The recognized principle which governs the Socialist Agitator in his propagandism is "the faith within him" that decrees there is no inherent antagonism of interest between the various races of man; "the faith" that decrees a management or administration based on temporal or material interest of an idle or nonproducing class, rather than on principles of equity and honor, and which bring on struggles between individuals and even nations, is the result of artificial politics, man-made institutions in the interest of a dominant class in society.

The Socialist Agitator is not exempt from error, on the contrary his faithful position, that he must hold, among the very ideas that he must combat, is conducive to an errorful environment. But his every thought is for the amelioration of human affairs; justice for man, the slave of institutions of his own making; and justice for woman the slave of the slave.

The economic system under which we are now living is a detriment to man's mental as well as his physical development. Neither is a Socialist exempt from its blighting influence. Our mental faculties are naturally dwarfed by the relations that this system forces us to sustain toward our fellow-sufferers. Of course a Socialist cannot remain passive, like a capitalist lackey or an unscrupulous demagogue when he sees wrong and injustice being perpetrated on every side, but his moral ideas and affections are badly stunted by our present environment.

So, when the Socialist Agitator pictures to you the permanent control of an artistic and durable residence, the inside furnished with all those modern contrivances that are necessary to health, comfort, and happiness, the outside surrounded by a nice tract of ground set out in beautiful shrubbery, with convenient walks and pleasant seats, where you may sit and listen to the falling water from the fountain, dean of your own park, as it were; do not discourage him by saying: "Such a home is only for the idle drone, not for the industrious."

ALBERT STROUT.

Her Married Name.

The practice of a woman changing her name on marriage originated from a Roman custom, and came into use after the Roman occupation, says a writer in the "Commercial Tribune." Thus, Julia and Octavia, married to Pompey and Cicero were called by the Romans Julia of Pompey, Octavia of Cicero, and in later times women in most European countries signed their names in the same way, but omitted the "of." On the other hand, at the beginniag of the seventeenth century, the usage seems doubtful, since we find Catherine Barr so signing herself after she had twice married, and we always hear of Lady Jane Grey, (not Dudley), Arabella Stuart (not Seymour), etc. Some persons think that the custom originated from the scriptural teaching that husband and wife are one. This was the rule of law so far back as Bracton, and it was decided in the case of Von vs. Smith, in the reign of Elizabeth, that a woman by marriage loses her former name and legally receives the name of her husband. The custom, however, is not universal. In Spain and Portugal married women do not take the names of their husbands, but continue to be known by their own. In many parts of the United States a woman never relinquishes her maiden name, and is called by it as often as by that of her husband. Even in the rural parts of England one often finds a married woman called by her maiden name, and in country districts of Scotland it is sometimes found that both names are used. In many parts of France and Belgium the husband's and wife's names are used together when either of them is mentioned.

A Sunday school examination was in progress, and the examiner put this question:

'What did Moses do for a living while he was with Jethro?"

Following a long silence, a little voice piped up from the back of the room:

"Please, sir, he married one of Jethro's daughters."—Youth's Companion.

Lucifer, the Lightbearer

M. HARMAN, EDITOR AND PUBLISHER.

PUBLISHED EVERY WEEK AT 500 FULTON STREET, CHICAGO, ILL.

Terms: One year, $1; six months, 50 cents; three months, 25 cents.

Entered at the Chicago Postoffice as Second-Class Mail Matter.

Eastern Representative, E. C. Walker, 244 W. 143d street, New York.

Lucifer—Its Meaning and Purpose.

LUCIFER—The planet Venus; so called from its brightness.—Webster's Dictionary.

LUCIFEROUS—Giving Light; affording light or the means of discovery.—Same.

LUCIFIC—Producing Light.—Same.

LUCIFORM—Having the form of Light.—Same.

The name Lucifer means Light-Bringing or Light-Bearing, and the paper that has adopted this name stands for Light against Darkness—for Reason against Superstition—for Science against Tradition—for Investigation and Enlightenment against Credulity and Ignorance—for Liberty against Slavery—for Justice against Privilege.

GENERAL D. B. HENDERSON'S prophecy—see "Henderson on War," in this issue—that "art, romance and history, ... will desert their favorite theme [war] and lead the great force of thought away from slaughter-house up to the higher fields of human action," seems no nearer fulfillment than when uttered in this city nine years ago. But if this same General Henderson would show his sincerity as an opponent of war by using his position, as chief officer of the American House of Representatives, in bringing to a close the two wars of conquest and extermination that now brutalize and demonize the English speaking peoples, he could and would do much toward changing his prophetic dream to plain matter of fact.

An Era of Transition.

A few days ago at Tuscumbia, Alabama—I think it was—a negro resisting arrest, killed a sheriff, killing or mortally wounding at the same time five or six other white men. Accuracy as to numbers of the killed and wounded is not claimed in this statement, for two or three reasons:

First, the well-known unreliability of newspaper reports.

Second, the little consequence that attaches, in the public mind, to mere numbers when reporting the slain or wounded in these feuds between the white and black races. Human life is a commodity so cheap, so worthless, that—unless the victim be a king, a president, a prince or lord, the average reader or hearer seems to regard the killing as a matter of course, something to be expected if not really welcomed.

* * *

And yet to some of us who knew by observation how docile, how easily controlled were the negroes in slavery—how submissive, how patient under outrageous wrongs, how forgiving and self-sacrificing their attitude towards their oppressors—to those of us who witnessed all this there seems something strange and inexplicable in the resistance now shown by this same black race, the courage with which they fight and kill those whom only a generation ago they regarded as belonging to a race so far above their own that to kill or mistreat one of them would be an act of sacrilege—unless, indeed, the person killed belonged to the class called "poor white trash."

* * *

Another instance illustrative of the apathy, the indifference of the public mind in regard to the killing of human beings, is given in the news columns of the Chicago "Chronicle" of April 9. The item reads as follows:

MANILA, April 8.—Major Littleton W. T. Waller of the marine corps at today's session of the court-martial, by which he is being tried on the charge of executing natives of Samar without trial, testified in rebuttal of the evidence given yesterday by General Jacob H. Smith, who commanded the American troops in the island of Samar. The Major said General Smith instructed him to kill and burn, said that the more he killed and burned the better pleased he would be, that it was no time to take prisoners and that he was to make Samar a howling wilderness.

Major Waller asked General Smith to define the age of killing and he replied "everything over 10." Captain David D. Porter, Captain Hiram I. Bearss and Lieutenant Frank Halford, all of the marine corps, testified in corroboration.

So many and so horrible have been the reports of atrocities committed by American soldiers in the Philippines that it seems an investigation has been ordered by some one, and in the course of that investigation the above facts—or statement of facts, came to light.

WHO BEGAN THE WAR.

Incidentally, as it were, the following statement from the San Francisco "Star" of April 5, is interesting reading:

If any doubt existed before as to the responsibility for the commencement of hostilities in the Philippines, that doubt has been forever set at rest by General Funston, who, in a speech at a banquet given to him by the Ohio Society of this city on Wednesday last, said:

"The private in the Nebraska regiment whose shot across the San Juan bridge, three miles from the city of Manila, started the war with the Filipinos would have been acquitted by a court-martial the next day if he had killed the President of the United States under the same circumstances. He acted under orders."

The fact that an American soldier fired the first shot has been repeatedly questioned and sometimes most emphatically denied; but now we have it upon the authority of Brigadier General Funston, that not only did an American fire the first shot, but that "he acted under orders," and that his shot "started the war with the Filipinos"! Even the most skeptical must now be convinced.

After making large allowance for partizan exaggeration, it seems reasonably certain that in line of brutality the American officers and soldiers have been quite equal to the Spaniards in their methods of conducting the war against the "insurgent" Filipinos.

* * *

Looking to the Transvaal we find the same state of things existing there. General "Lord" Kitchener was appointed to the chief command of the British forces in South Africa, mainly, as we were told, because of his record as a professional soldier who believes that "war is hell," and that the way to bring war to a close is to make it as HELLISH as possible, and yet even Kitchener has been compelled by public sentiment to order a court martial to investigate charges against his own men for the wholesale killing of prisoners and non-combatants, which investigation resulted in conviction and public execution of two officers belonging to the British South African army of invasion, of murder, of pillage and devastation.

THEN AND NOW.

Comparing the record of these two nations, England and the United States—their present methods of carrying on war with what they were a century or more ago, the comparison is by no means encouraging to the philanthropist and social evolutionist. Such things as "concentration camps" wherein women and children are herded and left to perish of disease, hunger and cold, in order to compel the surrender of their husbands, fathers, sons and brothers; also the wholesale massacres, burnings of farm houses, barns, destruction of live stock and other means of subsistence for non-combatants, such things as these were nearly if not quite unknown in the American Revolutionary war, and in the British-American war of 1812, if we except an occasional massacre by the Indian allies of the combatants.

Then when we remember the friendly aid extended to the American Revolutionists by France, Germany and even by Russia and Spain, we are led to wonder why these European powers do not intervene in behalf of the Boers and Filipinos. Is there less of humanity, less of desire for fair play in the world now than there was a century or more ago?

* * *

These are a few of the discouraging signs of the times—discouraging to all who labor and hope and wait for the coming of universal peace and justice, amity and brotherhood, on earth. But these are not the only discouraging signs. Statistics are unreliable, as we all know, but statistics of crimes, such as burglaries, "hold-ups," highway robberies, murders, suicides etc., are not apt to be exaggerations of the truth, and statistics show that the increase in these classes of crimes for the past twenty-five years in this country far outstrips the increase in population.

* * *

LOOKING FOR CAUSES.

It is needless to say that the exact opposite of this pessimistic showing is what we have reason to expect. With the increase of knowledge, science, including science of political economy, of sociology, hygiene, sanitation, etc., together with the enormous increase of wealth beyond the immediate needs of consumption, to say nothing of increase of effort by voluntary religious and humanitarian associations,—with all these ameliorating agencies in full working order it is but reasonable to expect a rapid proportional DECREASE, instead of increase in the number and magnitude of crimes against person and property, as compared with more primitive times and more undeveloped conditions of human association.

* * *

The limits of this article will not permit elaborated arguments intended to lay bare the causes, the secondary and the primary causes of this very disappointing result of our modern civilization or culture. Only a few of these will be attempted at this time and place.

As some of us see it, we are now living in an age or era of transition—transition from slavery to freedom, an age in which struggle, antagonism, war—political, social, economic war, is inevitable, in the very nature of things.

The race-war in the South, touched upon in my opening paragraphs, is a fair illustration of what I mean. The seeds of this war were sown during the ages of brutalizing submission on the one hand and of equally brutalizing despotism on the other. Now that the erstwhile slave has had a taste of liberty, liberty that came to him before the lesson of self-control had been learned, what wonder that the freedom to be his own master, and to go and come when he pleases, is often abused.

In much the same way the white man, spoiled by ages of servility on the part of the African, cannot reasonably be expected to forget the former social and industrial relation of the two races, nor to cease thinking, as I have often heard him say,

"O yes! a nigger is all right in his place—just as a mule is all right in his place." Meaning, of course, that a negro's place is not the same as that of the white man.

M. HARMAN.

P. S. A death in our home, that of James P. Galvin, personally known to many of our readers, also an epidemic of "la grippe" in our family, including myself, compelled the abrupt and inconsequential closing of the above article.

M. H.

Royalties in Open or in Masks.

That Republicans and Democrats should make a great stir over the crushing out of the South-African republics is natural, but that Anarchists should do so, raises the question whether they are habituated to the logic of their opinions. If it be true that a republican president is a monarch, Kruger was a monarch, as Diaz is, even as Balmaceda was, and so Castro of Venezuela. In the Transvaal the judiciary was directly under the control of the president. Except in limit of area ruled over, Kruger was more of a monarch than Queen Victoria. In England, Holland, Scandinavia and a few other countries, public opinion governs in the main and preserves the common-law rights of the subjects in a great measure, and considerably better, I infer, than it it did in the Transvaal.

"As a nation we admire royalty," says the editor. Why not add that this is natural to a nation, for "nation" implies the fact of royalty. The presidency is royalty and always was. It is necessary that the mask come off, that people should come to understand that calling officials by other names and limiting their tenure of office individually to a certain time, does not make any difference in the nature of the institution of government or in the powers assumed by the political parties or majorities and conferred on the substitutes for royalty in name, who are in fact royal in power.

Nor can such powers be exercised at all without the fact of royalty or imperialism, for they are the essence of it. It exists in what is called ordinary majority government, is inherent in every form of and attempt at government. There being nothing to choose as regards names, for that is not worth while and the republican names are indeed misleading, as "self-government" and the like, what is worth while looking to is the question how about the freedom of the press and approximations toward economic freedom—as it will be after the war is over.

TAK KAK.

Cecil Rhodes' Hobby.

At the funeral ceremonies of Cecil Rhodes—whose body was buried on Thursday—the Archbishop, in eulogizing him, said that before the Chartered Company was contemplated Mr. Rhodes said to him: "Some men's hobbies are to collect butterflies and old china. Mine is 'to open South and Central Africa to British enterprise." And he did not care how or by what means he accomplished his purpose. "British enterprise"—self-seeking—was more important to him than the native peasants' peace and prosperity, or than England's honor and Englishmen's lives. Better far for the world and himself would it have been had Cecil Rhodes' hobby been to "collect butterflies and old china."—'Star," San Francisco.

Congressman Littlefield, of Maine, gave a striking illustration the other day of the advantages which the steel trust reaps under protection. He cited ship building firms in Maine that are forced to buy American-made steel billets in Europe because the price is so prohibitive here. The billets for which $32 a ton is charged here can be bought in the European market for $18. It is protection for the trusts and with a vengeance.—"Star.

The Revolutionary war ended 118 years ago, but the last widow of a revolutionary soldier has not disappeared from the pension roll. Eighty-six years after the war of 1812 we have a survivor and 1500 widows of that war in receipt of aid from the nation.—William H. Glasson.

Whatever freedom for ourselves we claim,
We wish all others to enjoy the same,
In simple womanhood's and manhood's name!
Freedom within one law of sacred might:
"Trench not on any other's equal right."
—James Thompson.

Bound Volumes of Lucifer.

We are now prepared to supply volumes of Lucifer well bound in cloth, for the years 1899, 1900, and 1901.

THIRD SERIES, VOL. V. (1901).

Among the noteworthy articles contained in this volume are Free Love, Free Maternity, by Paul Robin; Nature and the Law, by May Huntley; The Question of Illegitimacy; Illegitimate, by William Platt; What Woman Will Wrest from the New Century, by Laura H. Earle; The Gardener's Story, by Octave Mirbeau; Pre-Natal Culture, by Tennie C. Claflin; Will You Lie or Tell the Truth? [to children] by Ada L. Vreeland; The Rights of Children, by R. B. Kerr; Thou Shalt Not Kill, by Count Tolstoi; Crime and Criminals; or, The Problems Presented by Anti-Social Acts, by E. C. Walker.

The most important editorials are those following the Buffalo tragedy, among them being: The Lesson of the Hour; Sentenced to Die; The Ultimate of Anarchy; Archism vs. Anarchism, The Social Side of Anarchism. Free Unions and Parental Responsibility; Cowardly Murder—McKinley and Czolgosz; The Nation's Crime, Anarchy in the Family; and Socialism and Anarchism. This volume also contains the Anniversary double number of Lucifer.

THIRD SERIES, VOL. IV., (1900.)

A few of the many articles contained in this volume are: The Quintessence of Harmanism, by R. B. Kerr; The Ethics of Parentage, by Victor E. Southworth; Monogamy and Polygamy, by Jonathan Mayo Crane; Free Women and Marriage, by James F. Morton, Jr.; Why Novels Stop at the Marriage; Anthropology and Monogamy, by Orford Northcote; The Cats' Paradise, by Emile Zola; The Guardianship of Children, by R. B. Kerr; Equality, not Identity of Women and Men; The Rights of the Individual in the Family, by Mrs. Oscar Beringer; Women in Greece, by C. L. James; Marriage in Mexico, by Santiago Walker; Marriage in France, by R. B. Kerr; Importance of Womanhood and Motherhood, by Eliza Burt Gamble; The Poet Shelley on Marriage, by Jay Chaapel; and Love Laughs at Locksmiths, by Ethelyn Leslie Huston.

Among the editorials are: Trusts, Big and Little; Robber Nations in a Trust—The British-Boer War; Imperialism's Logic; Marriage by Compulsion; Rights of Husbands and Fathers; A Religious Trust; What Lucifer is Here For; New Cure for Criminality; Epidemic of Military Measles; Freedom vs. Marriage; Is War Man's Normal Condition? The Chinese Problem; The Story of Tolstoi; Ethics and Hygiene of Sex; Our Missionaries in China; Still Looking for Causes; Church and State—Twin Evils; and Chicago's Crusade Against Vice.

THIRD SERIES, VOL. III., (1899.)

Of the articles in this volume, as in the others, it is hard to choose which are most worthy of mention; but a few are: Is Woman Man's Superior? by Kate Austin; The Logic of Chivalry, by R. B. Kerr; Wife and Prostitute, by James F. Morton, Jr.; A Pen-Picture—The Good Young "Old Man" Meets a Wicked "New Woman," by Lillian Harman; Parnell—The Victim of England's Hypocrisy, by D. N. Swift; Darwin, Weisman, and Harman, by R. B. Kerr; The Wine-Press, by Olive Schreiner; Medical Ethics as Related to Abortion and Prevention, by E. C. Walker; Great Women of the Past, by Dora F. Kerr; The Minister and the Women, by Dora F. Kerr; Men, Women, and Love, by M. Florence Johnson; Catherine the Great, by C. L. James; Some Trials Incident to Transition, by Giotto; Mary Shelley, by C. L. James; The Regeneration of Society, by Lillian Harman; Ayesha, by C. L. James; The Race Question, by Lillian Harman; Theodora, by C. L. James; Irene of Constantinople, by C. L. James; Woman and Home in Freedom, by Lillian Harman; What Sometimes Becomes of the Children, by M. Florence Johnson; A Traveler's Tale, by R. B. Kerr; Margaret of Navarre, by C. L. James; Catherine de'Medici, by C. L. James; and The Couvade, by J. M. Crane.

Price, bound in cloth, $1.75 a volume; unbound $1 a volume.

VARIOUS VOICES.

Mrs. Rose, Los Angeles, Cal.:—I have read Lucifer for a year and always found it interesting. For the enclosed please send me the Home Cyclopedia, Lucifer one year, and "Vice: Its Friends and Its Foes."

E. C. W., Westminster Depot, Mass.:—Find enclosed $1, for which send me Lucifer a year. Accept thanks for the pink slip with the laws regarding woman. I hope Lucifer will continue to live and expose such monstrous laws to the light.

W. A. Wotherspoon, Denver, Colo.:—Enclosed find $2 to apply on my subscription. I note I am behind, and I thank you for your courtesy in sending the paper. I should miss its rays very much if they were shut off. Will try to be more prompt in future.

A. Walker, Windsor, Cal.:—Please continue sending Lucifer. It is an up-to-date paper, free from bigotry and intolerance. I will pay for subscription this summer sometime and also send for some six or seven books I want, but I have to wait for my fruit to be sold before I can do so.

M. Cole, Phila., Pa.:—For the enclosed money order please send me the "Home Cyclopedia" and credit my subscription to Lucifer one year in advance, and send me the accompanying list of pamphlets. I will try to get some yearly subscribers for you. I am sure it would be good propaganda work for each subscriber to get at least one and thus double your subscription list.

Ralph C. Clyde, Portland, Oregon.:—Here is a dollar. Shed your light upon these benighted mortals for five weeks each and to give them a finishing touch send them that book you advertise. I can see their finish now. How many more of the enlightened will make a quiet hunt and collect ten cents each from their friends for a five week's trial subscription and forty-five page book, "Institutional Marriage." Come brethren be up and doing. We want to make this spring campaign a warm number.

X., New Orleans:—A friend gave me a copy of Lucifer No. 910. I have been a revolutionary Socialist for the last ten years and I have read a great deal of literature, but I must acknowledge that your paper fills a long-felt want in its fearless exposition of the rottenness of both Republican and Democratic parties. I take advantage of your offer and enclose 20 cents for five weeks subscription to your paper and two copies of "Institutional Marriage." One is for myself and the other for my next door neighbor. Do not publish my name in your paper as it might affect my job. I will scatter your papers wherever I go.

Helene Violet Wray, Dayton, Ohio:—We have read of the ass that kicked the lion—when the lion was dead. Ex-Governor Altgeld is dead, now, but it is consoling to note (page 80, Lucifer,) that "Ironicus" still lives and is brave enough to give asininity its just due when it "damns with faint praise." The "18 counts" made by Altgeld are sweeping and scathing; but are not pachyderms bullet-proof against such facts? Fine satire, that on p. 73, by R. B. Kerr. But he should have told whether a Cerean man with a touched nose is ever compelled to sell some more touches to keep from starving to death.

Paul L. Sautter, Phila., Pa.:—I see that my subscription to Lucifer has expired. I cannot do without your breezy and instructive little paper which comes as a breath of pure air in an arid desert, and therefore renew my subscription for another year, and hope Lucifer will continue its weekly journey to my home and illumine the minds of all who peruse it. I will send you some names and addresses for trial subscriptions in the near future. Canvassing for reform journals is difficult in these times of universal imperialism and central authority. I am glad that the comrades at Home, Washington, have triumphed in their battle for free press and free mails. I am awaiting with eagerness the advent of your autobiography and hope you will enjoy health and strength to complete it.

Martin Nortvedt, Laurium, Mich.:—I take pleasure in sending you two new subscriptions for six months each, for which find enclosed $1. I admire the good work you are doing for the liberty of man, woman, and child. Many still misunderstand the noble work you are doing, for there are so many otherwise liberal-minded people who are frightened by the words free love. Why, dear friends, love is always free. Like friendship, it comes and goes of its own accord. Can two friends of the same sex retain their friendship for life by signing contracts or taking solemn vows? So with love. Not being able to control the future we can promise nothing in regard to it, except to try to treat each other justly. The system must be changed, and woman be free, and not only free but able to own her home and children. Thus will Ingersoll's prophecy, made in his last lecture, be fulfilled.

Every good thought ever spoken, every grand deed ever done,
Is a fresh sword, making surer that our conquest will be won—
Conquest over superstition that hath ruled and ruined long,
Conquest of the captive peoples over mailed and mitred wrong
In its palaces of splendor and its forts and bulwarks strong!
—Will H. Kernan.

A "BARGAIN COUNTER" LOT OF LITERATURE AT HALF-PRICE OR LESS.

The following is a partial list of books and pamphlets which have accumulated on our shelves, time worn and dusty. In order to get them out of our way we have marked the price down. Never more than half price, and in many instances less than a quarter of publisher's prices.

Some of these works are out of print, and perhaps you may here find just the pamphlet you have been fruitlessly looking for. Some are clean, but the covers of most are shelf-worn; the inside leaves, however, clean and complete.

In ordering, please state if you wish your money returned in case we are out of the book ordered, or if you will take something else in its place.

A History of Religions. Elizabeth E. Evans. 10c.
An Old Subject in a New Light: Crime, What Shall We Do About It? Charles Houghton. 5c.
Cellular Cosmogony; or the Earth a Concave Sphere. Cyrus R. Teed. 15c.
Catechism on the Science of a Universal Religion. Gabriel Z. Wacht. 10c.
Dictionary of Dreams. Dr. R Greer. 25 pages. 10c.
Essays on Deaths and Funerals. A collection of facts and ideas, selected and original, referring to deaths and funerals. Joseph Henry. 10c.
Eureka. How to prevent colds, hay fever, etc., without drugs. 5c.
Everybody Made Happy. C. Orchardson. 4c.
Ethanism: or the Wise Men Reviewed. 200 p. 20c.
Fallacies of Faith. As Promulgated by two Methodist preachers. Perseus. 10c.
Free Trade. E. H. Heywood. 12c
From Pandemonium to Elysium. James Thierry. 10c.
Government Analyzed. Col. J. R. Kelso. 40c.
Hints About the Teaching of Natural History. 4c.
How the Devil—Satan—Beat the Salvation Army. 5c.
Law and Gospel. G. W. Foote. 3c.
Liberty, Political, Religious, Social and Sexual. A. F. Tindall, 2c.
Practical Co-operation. E. C. Walker. 3c.
Social Ethics. E. H. Heywood. 12c.
Silver Songs, Words by H. W. Taylor. Music by J. B. Herbert. 5c.
Some Little Rhymes Composed at Odd Times. Wallace E. Nevill. 5c.
The Folly of Prayer. G. W. Foote. 2c.
The Sabbath. M. Farrington. 5c.
Tobacco: Its Effects on the Human System, by Dr. William A. Alcott, with notes and additions by Nelson Sizer. 140 pages. 15c.
The Book of the Hour. Illustrated. Albion Sivell. 264 p. 12c.
The Haggard Circular. The Pirate's Plot and the Road to Ruin. B. S. Heath. 5c.
The Last Song of Jeremiah Hacker. 5c.
The Infidelity of Ecclesiasticism a Menace to Civilization, Prof. W. M. Lockwood. 10c.
The Living Temple, or the House We Live In. (Astrological). C. T. H. Benton. 10c.
The Railway Problem; with many illustrations and diagrams. A. B. Stickney. 20c.
The Christian Amendment. Francis E. Abbott, 3c.
What Diana Teaches. Count Tolstoi. 1c.
Who Was the Hebrew Jehovah? Was He the Creator of the Universe and Did He Have a Son? W. D. Reichner. 5c.
What Constitutes a Freethinker, H. L. Green. 1c.
What Is America's Relation to England? Eveleen Laura Mason. 5c.

Address M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

THE COMRADE Is a Socialist Magazine of Life, Labor and Literature. Every issue contains a great number of highly interesting and very beautiful illustrations and a wealth of original reading matter. A trial subscription—20c. for three months—will make you acquainted with all the excellent features of this Socialist Family Magazine, which is not only a good "Comrade" to men, but to women as well. Subscription per year $1. Send for one of our free illustrated leaflets. Comrade Pub. Co. 11 Cooper Square, New York.

913.

If these figures correspond with the number printed on the wrapper of your Lucifer, your subscription expires with this number.

If a copy of Lucifer fails to reach you, please order by number or date.

Lucifer will not be sent "by return mail" unless stamps for postage are enclosed with order.

To New Subscribers: Your subscription is paid to No. If you have not ordered Lucifer, a friend has subscribed for you. If you do not wish to receive it, please notify us by card or through your postmaster. If you wish to become a regular subscriber you will confer a favor by renewing before the expiration of your trial subscription.

LOVE'S COMING OF AGE.

This is a book with which few will wholly agree, but which nearly every one can read with profit and enjoyment. The subject is the relation of the sexes in the past, present and future, and it is treated with absolute frankness and fearlessness by a writer who unites a broad outlook, a strong grasp of his subject and a charming literary style. The following table of contents will indicate the line of thought followed by the author.

The Sex Passion.
Man, the Ungrown.
Woman, the Serf.
Woman in Freedom
Marriage: a Retrospect
Marriage: a Forecast.
The Free Society.
Some remarks on the early star and sex worships.
Notes—On the Primitive Group Marriage; Jealousy; The Family; Preventive Checks to Population.

The book will be printed on extra book paper and handsomely bound in cloth. The price, including postage to any address will be one dollar. Copies will be ready about April 20.

Address M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

RADICAL LITERATURE.

For Sale by M. Harman, 500 Fulton St., Chicago.

A CHAMBERMAID'S DIARY. By Octave Mirbeau. Translated from the French by Benj. R. Tucker. 400 pages. Handsomely bound in cloth. $1.50.
ADVANCEMENT OF SCIENCE. Prof. John Tyndall's famous Inaugural Address before the British Association for the Advancement of Science, with the Articles on Prayer which so stirred the religious world. Cloth, 50c; paper, 25c.
AGE OF REASON (The). Presentation edition. Part I reprinted from the first English edition. Part II corrected by M. D. Conway's edition. With Paine's own account of his arrest in Paris. Photogravure portrait from the Romney painting exhibited in London. Containing also portrait from the Jarvis painting; from the Peale painting, known as the Bonneville portrait, representing Paine as a member of the French Assembly, and a half-tone of the Peale painting. Large half-tones of the house presented to Paine, in which he lived in New Rochelle, and of the monument and surroundings, Yorktown, Pa., scenes; also eight half-tone views of buildings, etc., associated with Paine's life in Paris, and other illustrations. With Preface, Chronological Table, Notes, Index, etc. Printed on antique wove paper, large octavo, wide margins, gilt edge. Special cover design in colors. The finest and most accurate of all editions. Boxed. Postpaid, $2.
AGE OF REASON. Thomas Paine. Cloth, with steel plate portrait, 50c; paper 15c.
ANARCHISM: Its Philosophy and Ideal. Peter Kropotkin. 5c.
A PHYSICIAN IN THE HOUSE. A New Family Medical Work, by Dr. J. H. Greer. This book is up-to-date in every particular. It will save you hundreds of dollars in doctors' bills. It tells you how to cure yourself by simple and harmless home remedies. It recommends no poisonous or dangerous drugs. It teaches how to avoid ill health and life by safe methods. It teaches prevention—that it is better to know how to live and avoid disease than to take any medicine as a cure. It is not an advertisement and has no medicine to sell. It has hundreds of excellent recipes for the cure of the various diseases. It has 16 colored plates showing different parts of the human body. The chapter on Painless Midwifery is worth its weight in gold to women. The "Care of Children" is something every mother ought to read. It teaches the value of Air, Sunshine, and Water as medicines. It contains valuable information for the married. This book cannot fail to please you. If you are looking for health by the safest and easiest means, do not delay getting it. It has eight hundred pages, is neatly bound in cloth, with gold letters, and will be sent by mail or express, prepaid to any address, for $2.75.
A PLEA FOR THE NEW WOMAN. May L. Collins. With large new half-tone portrait. 10c.
A TALE OF THE STRASSBURG GEESE. R. B. Kerr. Together with The Strike of the Strassburg Geese (C. W. Coolridge), A Traveler's Tale (R. B. Kerr), The Cat's Story (Emile Zola) 5c.
AUTONOMY, SELF-LAW. A fragmentary dissertation on the right to non-invasive self-hood. 5c.
A WEEK ON THE CONCORD AND MERRIMAC RIVERS. Henry D. Thoreau. 25c.
BALZAC'S SERAPHITA: The Mystery of Sex. Mary Hanford Ford. Cloth. $1.
BIBLE TEMPERANCE. E. C. Walker. Proving that Liquor Drinking is Commended, Defended and Enjoined by the Bible, and giving close reference to the chapters and verses. 10c.
BORNING BETTER BABIES—Through regulating reproduction by controlling conception. E. B. Foote, Jr., M. D. 25c.
CAUSES OF HARD TIMES, and the Money Question. Albert Chavannes. 5c.
CHICAGO CONFERENCE OF TRUSTS. Speeches, debates, etc.; 81 portraits of delegates, including Benj. R. Tucker, Laurence Gronlund, William Jennings Bryan, Samuel Gompers, Louis F. Post, and George Schilling. 526 pages. 50c.
CHILDREN OF THE ITALIAN POOR. Paola Lombroso. 3c.
DARWIN, THE. (A novel.) Elmina D. Slenker. 40c.
DAWN OF CIVILIZATION, The; or, England in the Nineteenth Century. J. C. Spence. 176 pages. 25c.
DAWN-THOUGHT ON THE RECONCILIATION. By J. Wm. Lloyd. An inspired treatise that, with insight and solution, touches all the questions of life, love, soul and society. A prose-poem, simple enough for a child to enjoy, deep enough to make a philosopher think. The largest creed, the most generous theory, the gladdest gospel. A book of life. A religion of growth and the overlook—freedom and optimism. Read it. Printed in old style antique type, rubricated with portrait of the author. In three editions, de luxe, plain and paper bound. Prices, $1.25, $1.00 and 50c.
DIGGING FOR BED-ROCK. Camp-meeting talks and sketches by Moses Harman. 5c.
ECONOMICS OF ANARCHY. A Study of the Industrial Type. Dyer D. Lum 15c.

DR. FOOTE'S SOCIAL SCIENCE SERIES OF DIME PAMPHLETS—Wedlock; Scientific Marriage; Heredity; A B C of Temperaments; Powell and his Critics; Physiological Marriage; Physical Improvement of Humanity; Causes of Disease, Insanity, and Premature Death; A Step Backward. Any of the above books sent by mail on receipt of price.

DYNAMIC THEORY OF LIFE AND MIND. An attempt to show that all organic beings are both constructed and operated by the dynamic agencies of their respective environments. By James B. Alexander. Over 400 illustrations, 27 chapters, 1,067 pages and a 2-column index of 11 pages. Cloth, $2.75.

EAST TENNESSEE SKETCHES. A and Cecile Chavannes. 25c.

EIGHT-HOUR MOVEMENT. John P. Altgeld, ex-Governor of Illinois. 5c.

EVOLUTION AND REVOLUTION. Elisee Reclus. 5c.

FALSE CLAIMS OF THE CHURCH. John E. Remsburg. Analyzing and confuting the claims made by churchmen that the Christian religion has promoted morality, learning, temperance, science, freedom, and showing how she has opposed progress. Paper, 10c.

FIELDS, FACTORIES, AND WORKSHOPS; or, Industry Combined with Agriculture and Brain Work with Manual Work. Peter Kropotkin. 260 pages. 40c. Postage, 5c.

FREE FRESH. Arguments in support of demurrer to the indictment of M. Tarman, E. C. Walker and Geo. Harman, under the Comstock law. G. C. Semens and David Overmyer. 20c.

GIORDANO BRUNO. His Life, Teachings, and Martyrdom. Burned for heresy in Rome, Feb. 17, 1600. 5c.

GOD AND THE STATE. Bakounine. 25c.

GOVERNMENT ANALYZED. A remarkable work by a remarkable man, Col. John H. Kelso, the history of whose life reads more like romance than reality. This book is the last of a series—Deity Analyzed, Bible Analyzed, Universe Analyzed. By the author's death this work was left unfinished, but was completed by his wife, Etta Dunbar Kelso. 319 pages; cloth. Price reduced from $1.50 to $1.

HILDA'S HOME. Rose Graul. "An o'er true tale" of woman's wrongs and of one woman's struggles and final triumphs in her attempt to secure justice for herself and for her sisters. 426 pages. Cloth, $1; paper, 50c.

HUMAN RIGHTS. J. Madison Hook. 5c.

IMPORTANCE OF HONEST MONEY. A simple, scientific, invariable standard of price. James Adleman. 120 pages. Paper, 50c.

IN BRIGHTER CLIMES; or, Life in Socialand. Albert Chavannes. 5c.

INFIDEL DEATH-BEDS. "Idle Tales of Dying Horrors." G. W. Foote. Brief biographical sketches of 27 Freethinkers, including Bruno, Buckle, Byron, Comte, Darwin, George Eliot, Gibbon, Goethe, Hugo, Harriet Martineau, Mill, Paine, Madame Roland, George Sand, Shelley, Volney, and Voltaire. 25c.

IN HELL AND THE WAY OUT. A plan of Social Democracy outlined. Henry E. Allen. 10c.

INSTITUTIONAL MARRIAGE. From the viewpoint of an exiled Mexican. M. Harman. 5c.

JOHN'S WAY. A domestic radical story. Elmina D. Slenker. 25c.

KAREEZA. Ethics of Marriage. A bold, brave book, teaching ideal marriage, rights of the unborn child, a designed and controlled maternity. Sample pages free. $1.

KORADINE. A story for young and old. Extra levant cloth. $1.

LIBERTY IN LITERATURE. Testimonial to Walt Whitman. "Let us put wreaths on the brows of the living." An address delivered in Philadelphia, Oct. 31, 1886, with portrait of Whitman. Containing also Col. Ingersoll's address at the funeral of Walt Whitman, Mar. 30, 1892. Cloth, 50c; paper, 25c.

LIBERTY. Political, Religious, Social, and Moral. A. F. Tinsall. 5c.

LITTLE LESSONS FOR LITTLE FOLKS. Elmina D. Slenker. Boards, 40c.

LIZZIE MELTON. A story of a self-reliant girl. By Albert Chavannes. With portrait of author. 25c.

LUCIFER. Third Series, Vol. III, (1899). Cloth, $1.25. Postage, 25c.

MAGNETATION, and Its Relation to Health and Character. Albert Chavannes. 25c.

MARRIAGE. An address by Dr. Juliet H. Severance. 5c.

MARRIAGE IN FREE SOCIETY. Edward Carpenter. A dainty little gift book. 25c.

MARTYRDOM OF MAN. Winwood Reade. This is a very interestingly pictured synopsis of universal history, showing what the race has undergone—its martyrdom—in its rise to its present plane. It shows how war and religion have been oppressive factors in man's struggle for liberty; and the last chapter, of some 150 pages, describes his intellectual struggle from the animal period of the earth to the present, adding an outline of what the author conceives would be a religion of reason and love. Winwood Reade's reputation as a writer of fine English, of deep study and careful reasoning, needs no word of praise. Cloth, $2.

MEN, WOMEN AND CHANCE. William Platt. Containing two tales: The Ascent to the Heights, and Blind Men and Seeing. Well printed on heavy paper and artistically bound in cloth. Gilt top, rough edges. 75c.

MEN, WOMEN, AND GODS. Helen H. Gardener. With preface by Col. R. G. Ingersoll. Contents: Introduction by Col. Ingersoll. Men, Women, and Gods. Vicarious Atonement. Historical Facts and Theological Fictions. Appendix. Address to the Clergy and Others. Letter to Cleveland Congress of Freethinkers. The only authorized and correct edition. Large 12mo, heavy-toned paper. Portrait. This volume is by far the best writing this famous author ever did. It is very fine. Cloth, $1; paper, 50c.

MISSING LINK IN MODERN SPIRITUALISM, THE. A. Leah (Fox) Underhill. With portraits of the Fox Sisters and others. 412 pages. Cloth. Reduced to $1.

MORIBUND SOCIETY AND ANARCHY. Jean Grave. Cloth, 40c; paper, 15c.

MOTHERHOOD IN FREEDOM. M. Harman. 5c.

MUTUAL BANKING. A simple plan to abolish interest on money. William B. Greene. 10c.

NORA, A DOLL'S HOUSE, and GHOSTS. Ibsen. Cloth. 75c.

OUR WORSHIP OF PRIMITIVE SOCIAL GUESSES. E. C. Walker. Contents: Love and Law; The Moloch of the Monogamic Ideal; The Community of Race-Life, and Tyranny; Food and Sex Fallacies, a Criticism; When Men and Women Are and When They Are Not Varieties; The New Woman: What is she? What will she be? The State Hiding Behind Its Own Mistakes; Bishop Potter's Opinion of Divorce; Love: Its Attraction and Repression; Is She an Honest Girl? Lloyd, Platt, and the Pitiful Facts; Social Radicals and Parentage; Anthropology and Monogamy; Love and Trust Versus Fear; Reflections upon Reading William Platt's "Women, Love, and Life." 15c.

PERSONAL EXPERIENCES of Two American Anti-Vivisectionists in Various Countries. Philip G. Peabody. With an Appendix by Col. R. G. Ingersoll. Reduced from 25c to 15c.

PERSONAL RIGHTS AND SEXUAL WRONGS. Oswald Dawson. 25c.

PRIESTLY CELIBACY. Prof. A. L. Rawson. Together with The Incoherence of Transition (E. C. Walker), Motherhood in Freedom (Moses Harman), The Greatest Sin (an allegory, R. B. Kerr), and Jealousy, the Foe of Freedom (Oscar Rotter). 25c.

RELIGION AND NATIONALISM. The relation of each to human liberty. The religionist, fancying that he has the whole truth, is logically opposed to investigation, and he appeals to physical force to arrest the discovery of new truths. What Nationalism is, and how many believe themselves Freethinkers who are only unbelieving or disgruntled religionists. The necessity for separate organizations and a division of labor among reformers. The Secular Union. Important facts and arguments in a compact form. E. C. Walker. 5c.

RIGHTS OF MAN. Thomas Paine. Answer to Burke's attack upon the French revolution. A political treatise of great general value, as advocating liberty and democracy. Contains the fundamental principles of true republicanism. Cloth, 50c; paper, 25c.

RUBAIYAT (Quatrains) OF OMAR KHAYYAM. Edward FitzGerald's interpretation; with original introduction; special cover; latest version. Paper, 25c.

RULED BY THE TOMB. A discussion of free thought and free love. Orford Northcote. 10c.

SCIENCE IN STORY; or, Sammy Tubbs, the Boy Doctor, and Sponsla, the Troublesome Monkey. For young folks. Dr. E. B. Foote. Five volumes in "red line," presentation edition. $5. Five volumes, plainer binding, $2.50; all in one volume, $1.

SEXUAL PHYSIOLOGY FOR THE YOUNG. Being the fifth volume of "Science in Story." 250 pages; cloth bound; illustrated. 50c.

SONGS OF THE UNBLIND CUPID. J. Wm. Lloyd. Edition de luxe. Verses printed from Kelmscott type upon deckle edged hand made paper of cerulean tint. Initial letters, ornaments and borders are in red; initial letter and sketch upon the opening page are hand painted in water colors. Covers brown, with choice of silver or gold lettering. Very handsome gift book. 50c.

STUDIES IN SOCIOLOGY. In four parts: I., The Law of Happiness; II., The Law of Individual Control; III., The Law of Exchange; IV., The Law of Environment. Albert Chavannes. 25c.

TALKS ON NATURE. Important information for both sexes. Dr. J. H. Greer. 132 pages. Reduced from 50 to 25c.

THE ABOLITION OF MARRIAGE. John Beverly Robinson. Together with Isabel's Intention (Charlotte), Reminiscences of Berlin Heights (A. Warren), and The Sexes and Love in Freedom (Oscar Rotter). 25c.

THE BAR SINISTER AND LICIT LOVE, including the first biennial proceedings of the Legitimation League, and a full account of the Lanchester case, with full-page half-tone pictures of Edith Lanchester, and Lillian Harman. Handsomely bound in green and gold covers. 367 pages. 25c.

THE BLUE LAWS OF CONNECTICUT. Taken from the Code of 1650 and the public records of the Colony of Connecticut previous to 1665. With an account of the persecution of Witches and Quakers in New England, and some extracts from the Blue Laws of Virginia. Copiously illustrated. 25c.

THE BRITISH BARBARIANS. Grant Allen, the greatest of the Hill-Top pioneers. Dedicated "to all who have heart enough, brain enough, and soul enough to understand it." Handsomely bound in cloth. 281 pages. $1.

THE WOMAN WHO DID. Grant Allen. A powerful story of a refined, educated and high-spirited woman who dared to defy the tyranny of church and state and ignore the institution of marriage. Handsomely bound in cloth. $1.

THE NEW HEDONISM. Grant Allen. The opening paragraph says: "The old ascetism said: 'Be virtuous and you will be happy.' The new hedonism says: 'Be happy and you will be virtuous.'" In another place the writer says: "In proportion as men have freed themselves from mediæval superstitions have they begun to perceive that the luscious and impure things are celibacy and asceticism; that the pure and beautiful and ennobling thing is the fit and worthy exercise of the reproductive function." Paper covers; 96 large pages; twelve copies, 50c. Single copy, 5c.

THE CHICAGO MARTYRS. The famous speeches of the eight condemned anarchists in Judge Gary's Court, and Altgeld's reasons for pardoning Fielden, Neebe and Schwab. 25c.

THE COMING WOMAN. Lillie D. White. 5c.

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM. Principles and platform of organized Freethought. 10c.

THE EVOLUTION OF MODESTY. Jonathan Mayo Crane. A consideration of the origin of clothes and the reasons why people wear clothing. Here are a few questions it answers: What is modesty? What is the cause of it? What is the use of it? What is the cause of the feeling of shame? Is nudity immodest? What is the cause of the notion that it is shameful to expose some parts of the body? Why do not all peoples agree as to what parts of the body should be concealed? 5c.

THE FOUNTAIN OF LIFE; or, The Threefold Power of Sex. Lois Waisbrooker. 50c.

THE FUTURE OF SECULARISM. When will the Cause of Justice triumph? 5c.

THE PRODIGAL DAUGHTER; or, The Price of Virtue. Rachel Campbell. Together with Legal Wifehood (Lucinda B. Chandler), Life's Gifts (Olive Schreiner), and Marriage—What It Was and Is; Will the Coming Woman Marry? 25c.

THE REVIVAL OF PURITANISM. E. C. Walker. 10c.

THE RIGHTS OF CHILDREN. R. B. Kerr. Together with What Are Women Here For? (R. B. Foote, Jr., M. D.), The New Martyrdom (Lillian Harman), and The Will, from the French of Guy de Maupassant. 25c.

THE SANCTITY OF MARRIAGE. As viewed from a moral and sanitary standpoint. A solemn protest against the present demoralizing management of that institution, its effects upon offspring and its influence upon education. By Dr. Robert A. Greer. A valuable "opening wedge" in missionary work. Price reduced from 25c to 10c.

THE SECRET INSTRUCTIONS OF THE JESUITS. A reprint from an edition published in 1723, quoted by the highest authorities as authentic. The work is redolent of Jesuit craft and is a plain index to the underhand working of that order against the welfare of individuals and society. 15c.

THE STATE: ITS HISTORIC ROLE. Prince Peter Kropotkin. 10c.

THE TROUBADOURS AND COURTS OF LOVE. J. F. Rowbotham. Cloth. 359 pages. $1.50. Postage, 15c.

THE UNWOMANLY WOMAN. Lizzie M. Holmes. Together with That Great Fraud, Telepi Society (Moses Hull), Virgin Soil (George Egerton), and Normal Sexual Action (Ernest Wilmot). 25c.

THE WORM TURNS. Revolutionary Poems. Voltairine de Cleyre. 10c.

THOMAS JEFFERSON. His Political, Social and Religious Philosophy. Geo. M. M. Trumbull. 5c.

TOKOLOGY. A book for every woman. By Alice B. Stockham, M. D. Illustrated. Tokology teaches possible painless pregnancy and parturition, giving full, plain directions for the care of a woman before and after confinement. The ailments of pregnancy can be prevented as well as the pains and dangers of childbirth avoided and women need not go down to death giving birth to children. English, German or Swedish. $2.25.

TRAVELS IN FAITH. By Capt. Robert C. Adams. His mental experience from superstition to rationalism. Cloth, 75c; paper, 25c.

VACCINATION A GIGANTIC CRIME. Samuel Darling. 15c.

VINDICATION OF THOMAS PAINE. Col. R. G. Ingersoll. Dealing with all the slanders brought against the name and fame of Paine. A little pamphlet which every admirer of Thomas Paine should have by him for reference. Paper, 15c.

VITAL FORCE. Magnetic Exchange and Magnetation. Albert Chavannes. 25c.

WHAT THE YOUNG NEED TO KNOW; a Primer of Sexual Rationalism. Edwin C. Walker. "Let us cease to be ashamed of what makes us men, of what makes us women, of what gives us the kisses of lovers and the encircling arms of babes." Paper covers; 42 large pages. 10c.

WHAT IS RELIGION? Ingersoll's last public address, delivered at the meeting of the Free Religious Association in Boston on June 1, 1899. To which is appended the poem, "Declaration of the Free," the last verse written by the great Freethinker. 5c.

WHEN LOVE IS LIBERTY AND NATURE LAW. John Badcock, Jr. 10c.

WHY THE UNDERTONE? An open letter to Judge Gary. Sarah E. Ames. 10c.

WOMAN, CHURCH, AND STATE. Matilda Joslyn Gage. The late Mrs. Gage's last and crowning work. Every woman ought to read it. Every liberal woman and man will want it. A burning protest against the tremendous wrong done woman by the church, which controlled the state. It ought to be widely read for the good it will do. Cloth, $1.50; paper, 75c.

WOMAN: Four Centuries of Progress. Susan H. Wixon. 5c.

WOMAN IN THE PAST, PRESENT AND FUTURE. Woman was the first human being that tasted bondage. Woman was a slave before the slave existed. The basis of all oppression is economic dependence on the oppressor. This has been the condition of woman in the past and is so still. She is now a slave or the slave. This work is August Bebel's masterpiece. 500 to 575 pages. 50c.

Address M. HARMAN, 800 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

Price 2 Cents.

LUCIFER.

THE LIGHT-BEARER.

THIRD SERIES, VOL. VI., No. 15. CHICAGO, ILLINOIS, APRIL 24, E. M. 302. [C. E. 1902.] WHOLE No. 914

THE WEAVERS.

The weavers' lives are full of woe—
But what's the cause that makes them so?
'Tis but too evident to all,
On them alone the blame must fall.
Its truth the ancient proverb keeps,
That what a man has sown he reaps.
Instead of grumbling they should weave;
Less cause would then be their's to grieve.

The weavers' lives are full of woe—
But what's the cause that makes them so?
T'weir love of show we must condemn;
Fine clothes are not the thing for them.
What can they want with cloth? A smock
Is fittest for a weaver's frock.
Instead of swaggering they should weave;
Less cause would then be their's to grieve.

The weavers' lives are full of woe—
But what's the cause that makes them so?
Why must they beer and meat require?
They ought to curb such ill desire.
'Tis said that simply salt and bread
Will make the checks a healthy red.
Instead of guzzling they should weave;
Less cause would then be their's to grieve.

The weavers' lives are full of woe—
But what's the cause that makes them so?
Their Saturdays come all too soon,
When work is thrown aside at noon:
O'crjoyed at once they haste away
To spend their long half-holiday.
Instead of idling they should weave;
Less cause would then be their's to grieve.

The weavers' lives are full of woe—
But what's the cause that makes them so?
'Tis morning work that wins the wealth,
Men find in early rising health.
Much earlier, then, they ought to rise,
And ope at four a. m. their eyes.
Instead of snoring they should weave;
Less cause would then be their's to grieve.

The weavers' lives are full of woe—
But what's the cause that makes them so?
We'll make another slight request—
Four hours are quite enough for rest;
What mean the lazy rascals, then,
By sneaking off to bed at ten?
'Till twelve o'clock they ought to weave;
Less cause would then be their's to grieve.

From the German of Adolph Schults, by J. L. Joynes.

"I am convinced that those societies (as the Indians) which live without government, enjoy in the general mass an infinitely greater degree of happiness than those who live under governments. . . . That government is best which governs least."
—Thomas Jefferson.

The offer of Lucifer for five weeks and a copy of "Institutional Marriage" will probably be withdrawn in a few weeks. Take advantage of it now. Price 10 cents.

For the Day and the Hour.

Justice has a good memory.

Hope believes in the miraculous.

Trust your convictions, they are you.

Conventional purity pays tribute to pruriency.

You need not die for a cause; rather live for one.

The imperialist reads it thus. "Prey without ceasing."

Whosoever denies liberty denies you, and asserts himself.

That one who kills time may some day wish time back again.

A bad cause often suffers because of having too many friends.

To teach men that they are weak is one way to make them slaves.

Who has every man for his friend has indeed no true friends at all.

It is unreasonable to expect him to love right who lives by wrong.

He who would utter the very truth must learn to stand quite alone.

Governments are for the governors; the governed may take what comes.

Hypocrisy is always extremely particular about its reputation.

Things might be worse, it is true; but does that make bad things better?

To love the lovely with fervor one must also hate the hateful with all intensity.

Wrong waits but for an opportunity; right waits for a call from the heart of mankind.

Believe as I do, shout ten thousand fanatics; weigh the matter well, and then decide, says a single quiet voice.

The Boers are praying, the English are praying; it is strange that God cannot make up his mind which nation to favor.

Divorces are on the increase, there must be something wrong with this blessed institution of marriage. Is nature too strong for it?

In the southwest they kill a man who outrages a woman; but how inconsistent they are: an outrage upon all humankind is most humbly endured.

Motherhood should be a blessing, but to millions of women whom the law gives "husbands" it is an almost unmitigated and perpetual curse.

Thought which may not flower in action is of little worth to the thinker. "Freethinkers" who oppose free action should think again, and think hard.

The water cure accomplishes wonders in the Philippines. Is it true then that America The Great can learn something from the Spanish, namely, effective torture? Let our inventors look to it.

Great Britain has many able verbal defenders of her course in South Africa. They do a lot better than those who have taken the field to defend her with force of arms. But perhaps these last have learned the truth.

The upheavals in Spain and Belgium are but symptomatic of a general realized rottenness in the "affairs" of states. Of course the military is to the fore, teaching the people that they have no rights which governments are bound to respect.

The Church is united in the cry that morality is being forgotten in the world, and that evil is rampant, threatening to overwhelm society. What have all God's shepherds been doing then? And is their master asleep? What an admission!

Andrew Carnegie says you can never amass wealth and remain an employe. Look out, Andrew; you are letting the cat out of the bag. The employer takes a lion's share of the wealth created by the employe, does he? Andrew, really, you talk too much.

The golden rule has become somewhat discredited of late, and "Do others or they will do you," has seemingly largely taken its place. As a compromise, how would, "Do unto thyself what thou would'st that others did unto thee, and then thou wilt get it done," answer?

The Rev. Chas. A. Eaton, Rockefeller's pastor, says, "The man who gets rich at the expense of the people is an anarchist of the worst kind." Right for once, Beetle! And an anarchist of the best kind is one who works to render impossible this anarchist of the "worst kind."

General Miles is a little behindhand in his fears respecting the future of the Army; a standing army is always a menace to the people, and the attempt now being made in Washington to centralize its control and make it the tool of Capital, is part of an army's necessary history.

The unspeakable Maj. Waller, who is in trouble in the Philippines because of murdering the natives in cold blood, has testified that he acted upon the commands of his superior, General Smith, and that he did not relish the work. This seems to be a case in which the inferior is really the superior; though there is little choice between the two monsters.

A British Army supply station exists in New Orleans in open violation of the treaty existing between the American and British governments, but this should occasion no surprise: there is "an understanding between statesmen" which renders nugatory any awkward provision of a treaty whenever it clashes with the interests of "friendly" states. What is a mere treaty!

IRONICUS.

Natural Law in the Social World.

BY R. B. KERR.

In No. 911 the editor does modern sociologists something less than justice in the following words: "I can easily understand why theistic advocates of governments of force and authority—governments of man by his fellow man—should consider human society an organism, similar to the human body."

Among the modern exponents of the doctrine that society is an organism I cannot remember the name of anyone who can be called theistic. By far the most energetic advocate of the theory is Herbert Spencer, who is always bringing the subject up in his writings.

The whole thing is a matter of definition. What is an organism? According to modern biology, it is a whole made up of mutually dependent parts. Is human society such a whole? Surely that is self-evident. Is not the miner dependent on the farmer for food, and the farmer on the miner for fuel? Do not both depend on the carpenter and the mason for shelter, and are not these in their turn dependent on the farmer? Does not the town depend entirely on the country, and the country in great measure on the town? To answer these questions is to decide whether or not society is what biologists call an organism.

But the fact that society is an organism does not make it essential to jump to the conclusion that every society must have something corresponding to the brain and nervous system. Plants have nothing of the kind, and neither have the simpler animals. Nor have simple societies of men, for that matter. The higher animals have, and this suggests the belief that the larger and more complex societies should have something of the kind; but we must consider the question on its merits, and avoid the great danger of overstraining an analogy.

As regards social, political, and economic laws, I can neither agree with the editor nor with Dr. Abbott. Everyone who is not an old-fashioned theologian now believes in the universality of natural law. Every motion of every human body, every thought of every human mind, every resolve of every human will, every feeling of every human heart, is the inevitable resultant of an endless chain of causes and effects stretching from eternity to eternity. Therefore all social relations, like all other relations, are inevitable from all eternity. Nay, more, social relations must necessarily have new laws of their own, over and above the ordinary laws of organic and inorganic matter. A new relation necessitates a new law of that relation. For instance, when inorganic matter becomes organic it remains subject to the Laws of Motion, the Law of Gravitation, and all the old laws; but it also comes within the scope of certain new laws of life and evolution, which do not apply to the merely inorganic. It is just the same when organic beings enter into social relations with one another. They remain subject to all inorganic and organic laws, but now they also come within the scope of sociologic laws. Of these laws there are numberless examples, disputed by nobody. There is Gresham's Law of Currency, which tells us that if base and pure coin are put in circulation together, the base must drive the pure out of circulation.

There is the law of prices, according to which the price of a commodity tends to gravitate to the cost of production, except where the element of scarcity comes in. There is Ricardo's law of economic rent. There seem to be laws affecting the birth-rate, and Leroy-Beaulieu has furnished considerable evidence that the birth rate always falls as education and comfort increase. These are only a few of the sociological laws already discovered or suggested, although sociology is the youngest of the sciences.

Of course, as the editor says, the word "law" as applied to nature is a figure of speech. There are really only what we call "forces," but these forces are found to act uniformly, the same antecedents always being followed by the same consequents. Accordingly, when we have found the way in which a given force uniformly acts, we speak of this uniformity as a "law."

Dr. Abbott takes a very inadequate view of the functions of legislators when he says their duty is simply to discover and enforce natural laws. As everything that ever happens in the world happens according to natural law, a legislature which merely re-enacted the laws of nature indiscriminately might as well stay at home. Their duty on the contrary is to direct natural and social forces in such a way as to promote the happiness of the people. To this end it will sometimes be their duty to suspend the operation of natural laws. Of course a universal law like that of gravitation cannot be suspended, but particular laws, depending on special conditions, can be suspended by removing the conditions. The struggle for existence, which is the foundation of Darwinian evolution, can be suspended by limiting the number of births. The law of economic rent can be suspended by making land collective property. The law of prices can be suspended by eliminating competition. Consequently the wisdom of legislators has a wider field than Dr. Abbott has perceived.

But should legislators have any functions at all? The editor says that the advocates of "government of man by his fellow man" are now hard pressed for arguments. Let me therefore respectfully suggest a few. I think that lepers and cholera patients should be isolated, to save other people from these diseases. I believe in sanitary regulations because they have lessened the death rate. I think it well to regulate the storing of dynamite, to establish fire limits within which only brick, stone, and metal buildings can be built, to take precautions that water pipes shall be thick enough to stand the pressure upon them. I believe in taking steps to keep the streets clear, for I have seen the tendency of individuals in unincorporated towns to encroach on the streets with buildings and other obstacles. I believe in the common control of street grades, street improvements, grade of side-walks, &c., because I have seen the annoyance caused in small places by individual action in such matters, and believe it would be a thousand times worse in large cities. To put the whole thing in one clean cut sentence, I believe that the interest or inclination of individuals often leads them to act in a way detrimental to the interests of others, and that collective action must therefore be taken to check individual selfishness and carelessness. This theory may be right or wrong; but it is so simple in itself, and has been expounded with such remarkable lucidity by every important political theorist from Aristotle downwards, that no opponent can have any excuse for misunderstanding what he attempts to confute. The question is one of pure science, and such questions can only be settled by sound reasoning expressed in lucid language, and above all by the careful application of observation and experiment.

That government has not always been used in the public interest does not affect the soundness of my theory. Fire has been used to burn heretics, and water to drown saints; yet I use both fire and water. In like manner I propose to keep government for its uses, and to discard its abuses.

Women Now Control Their Wages. They Will Control Their Children Some Day, Perhaps.

The Legislature of the State of New York has passed and the Governor has signed a bill which declares that a married woman has the right to the money which she earns. If the wages are withheld she can sue for them. Her husband cannot take the money earned by her labor.

It is almost impossible to believe, yet it is true, that until this law was passed in the year 1902 a woman in New York State so far as her work and wages were concerned was the slave of her husband. If she earned money it belonged to him, and she could only sue to get it with his consent. A New York city railroad company won a suit against a woman on the ground that a married woman is owned by her husband. She sued for loss of wages during the period of an injury caused by the street railroad. The court upheld the railroad company's statement that she had no right to sue, as her husband owned the wages and money if any were due.

The law just passed changes this state of affairs, and the woman who makes a dollar is entitled to that dollar in her own right.

Probably almost every reader will be amazed to learn that according to law a married woman was not entitled to the money that she made.

It is more strange, it seems to us, that under the law a married woman is not entitled to the children which she brings into the world. The husband controls these children. Under the law he can do what he likes with them, and the mother has nothing to say against his wishes.

Fortunately individual man is usually more decent than the letter of the law, and the mother who brings children into the world is allowed to direct them and to decide questions affecting them.

Certainly the wise men who make laws might well, some day, establish the fact that it is the mother of a child and no body else on earth that has the absolute and permanent right to the control of that child.—N. Y. Journal.

The American Press-Writers' Association.

About the best along Lucifer's line the past week was the following in the Boston "Traveler" April 11,

"For many bare false witness against him, but their witnes agreed not together." (Mark xiv., 56.)

"And he said unto him, Which? Jesus said: Thou shalt do no murder; thou shalt not commit adultery; thou shalt not steal; thou shalt not bear false witness." (Matthew xix. 18.)

"But those things which proceed out of the mouth come forth from the heart; and they defile the man" (Matthew xv. 18.)

Senator Hawley of Connecticut is reported to have said: "I have an utter abhorrence of an Anarchist. I would give a thousand dollars to get a good shot at an Anarchist about to commit his particular allotted murder."

I have no sympathy with any person who would commit murder. Senator Hawley seems to express a desire to see an "Anarchist" about to commit murder that he might "get a good shot" at him. "It comes forth from the heart and defiles the man."

It is not true (as Senator Hawley would have you think) that Anarchists select certain persons who entertain their views to commit the crime of murder; nor is it allotted to any person or persons to commit crime of any kind. Therefore he bears false witness against us. Since the authorities tried so hard to connect Anarchists with the crime of Czolgosz, and so signally failed, it would seem that all fair-minded persons would seek to know whereof they speak. Why, look at their logic! They say we seek to destroy compulsory government, and they say we counsel the assassination of rulers—which is compulsory government in its rudest sense.

We deplore the spirit in man that prompts him to welcome the opportunity to shoot his fellow. Therefore a murderer is not an Anarchist.

A. A. ORCUTT.

Mrs. Hulda L. Potter Loomis recently hit the same target pretty hard in a short communication to the Springfield, (Mass.) "Republican." It has been suggested to me, that I urge Press Writers to be more particular about watching for, and forwarding copies of newspapers containing comrades' letters, as usually they have no other means of knowing whether they appear or not. Press-Writers understand that it is their duty to look out for appearances at all times and in particular, when they have sent out targets; and I am sure more would be glad to perform this service if the writers would notify them by card when they send in a communication to a paper in their vicinity.

NEW MEMBERS.

263c. Nake, Mrs. L. G., Johnson, Neb.
264b. Davis, W. H., Buena Vista, Colo.
265a. Edwards, D. T., 1053 Orange St., Youngstown, O.
266c. Hersom, R. E., 69 Faneuil Hall Market, Boston, Mass.
267b. Tuthill, George Halsey, 163 St. Marks Ave., Brooklyn, New York.
268c. Meeks, Miss Carroll, 502 South Center St., Marshalltown, Iowa.
269b. Lauers, A. B., 18 Shute St , Everett, Mass.

WITHDRAWN.

161c. Weber, Oscar, F., Belleville, Ill.

CORRECTIONS.

242b. Little, Mrs. Lora C., 1114 21st Ave., N. Minneapolis, Minn.
247d. Corriher, J. A., China Grove, N. C.
253b. Wilcox, Elsie Cole, 1705 H. St., Whatcom, Wash.
254d. Brown, Charles Turner, Room 708, 79 Dearborn St., Chicago, Ill.

A. C. ARMSTRONG, 17 Leroy St., Dorchester, Mass.

The Cartoons which the New York "Truth Seeker" is printing each week add a great deal to the attractiveness and effectiveness of that able Freethought journal. They are sharp and forcible strokes at the superstitions and humbuggery of the times, and even the unthinking will pause to study them. They reinforce the arguments of "The Truth Seeker's" brilliant corps of contributors, and form one of the features which place that paper in the front rank of weeklies. Freethinkers can hardly get along without it, as it is not only highly instructive but vastly entertaining as well. A sample copy of it can be had by addressing The Truth Seeker Co., at 28 Lafayette Place, New York, N. Y. Subscription price only $3 per year.

Lucifer, the Lightbearer

M. HARMAN, EDITOR AND PUBLISHER.

PUBLISHED EVERY WEEK AT 500 FULTON STREET, CHICAGO, ILL.

Terms: One year, $1; six months, 50 cents; three months, 25 cents.

Entered at the Chicago Postoffice as Second-Class Mail Matter.

Eastern Representative, E. C. Walker, 244 W. 143d street, New York.

Lucifer—Its Meaning and Purpose.

LUCIFER—The planet Venus; so called from its brightness.—Webster's Dictionary.

LUCIFEROUS—Giving Light; affording light or the means of discovery.—Same.

LUCIFIC—Producing Light.—Same.

LUCIFORM—Having the form of Light.—Same.

The name Lucifer means Light-Bringing or Light-Bearing, and the paper that has adopted this name stands for Light against Darkness—for Reason against Superstition—for Science against Tradition—for Investigation and Enlightenment against Credulity and Ignorance—for Liberty against Slavery—for Justice against Privilege.

Explanatory.

Owing to the serious though not dangerous illness of the editor this issue of Lucifer must go to press without editorial matter. He would like to comment on some of the articles, notably that by R. B. Kerr, but is physically unable to do so. He has been confined to his bed for a week at this writing (April 19) and though on the up grade, the progress is slow. He has been in poor health for some weeks or months; unable to get sufficient sleep, and therefore losing strength, so that when he succumbed to the grip it took a severe form.

I, also, am just recovering from the grip, and my own illness, together with care of others, has interfered with prompt attention to business communications sent to this office during the last ten days, but have about caught up with the work now. We hope our friends will be as tolerant as they can be, and we will do our best to make the paper as interesting and useful as possible.

L. H.

Retribution for Marital Domination.

BY ROBERT MOORESHOLME.

Let no reader be startled, for really I am not about to advocate any sort of punishment. Impelled by a spirit of curiosity to inquire into the general relations of things, I have asked myself the questions: Will there not be found some tendency, some series of persistently recurring facts, some phase of public sentiment, which corresponds to marital rule, as a sort of instinctive revenge on the part of woman thrust into a position of inequality? and: Do not certain derogatory social judgments, which shall be referred to, identify themselves by this very correspondence, as an effort of feminine dignity invaded, to humiliate her oppressor where she finds him vulnerable? And of this, we shall soon see when he naturally must be so, by the consequences of his great assumption and the lapse of some years in his life.

The tendency to ridicule the idea of love in a man of forty and upward is pretty strong. "Father" at forty-five is the subject of derision among girls of nineteen, including his own daughter. That he has a daughter old enough to have a lover is of itself sufficient cause in modern society to treat as preposterous the thought that he can still love, and from this the same prejudice extends to the bachelor of the same age, in degree.

Just at this point there is one woman who could have done much to save "father" from that ridicule. That is "mother," but mother has led an exhausting life from twenty to forty, and so she naturally acquiesces in the idea that they are "old folks" (when they certainly have not lived one half their natural lives.)

The instinctive vengeance begins sooner. The young husband, in return for being the all-in-all, has night-exercise in stilling crying babies in an isolated household; and fifteen years of dyspeptic fare, domination and worry are likely to supply him with a typical bald crown, which of course renders his daughter's argument unanswerable, that father at forty-five is too absurd if he seems to think of love as a possibility of mature people. Should he become a widower and attempt to marry ten years later, he will have his sons and sons-in-law pursuing him with shot guns or getting out a warrant for his arrest on a charge of insanity in attempting to divert the family expectations, according to the customs of country or city respectively. He acquiesces, in a way, in the judgment which he has provoked, by the creatures he has reared. He has lived a mean life and he is a mean old man before he is old in years; and he has not the spirit to love a woman of any age; but he has propensities unhappily not extinct. This is the average masculine tyrant. How does the picture suit you? Is not the retribution earned, and is it not enough?

What Our Children are Learning.—Three Anecdotes.

BY L. H. EARLE.

A little boy of eight comes to me for music lessons. He belongs to one of the wealthiest and most distinguished families, in spite of which disadvantage he has good traits of mind and disposition. The other day he brought me a flower—a rather small and spindling hyacinth, saying "Auntie Jo sent this to you." This attention of course pleased me and I thanked him. After the lesson, as he was putting on his coat, I saw in his button-hole a remarkably large and handsome spike of the same kind of hyacinth. To my question of who gave it to him, he replied "Auntie Jo." And as he walked off proudly with his flower, it did not occur to him any more than it had to "Auntie Jo" that he might give away the large and fine one, and keep the smaller one for himself.

Tom's parents are people who live in a large way, almost luxuriously. This is Tom's first year at the Academy, and his teacher there is one who is a huge favorite with the little fellows. They delight to bring her the first of the spring flowers, and through the winter many of them give her roses from their parents' green-houses; and they tell her all their great experiences. So, one November day Tom was relating to her a chestnutting trip with his father. He told how they entered private grounds to hunt for the chestnuts, and that in one place, the owner came out and chased them off: "But" said Tom, "we got a lot of them." "And where are my chestnuts, Tom?" asked the teacher. "Oh! I saved the rotten ones for you;" was the quick answer.

Florence came in at supper-time one evening, with the sad news that she had lost her pocket-book near the barn. Next morning she was out, bright and early, at the barn, looking for her purse. Bye-and-bye she returned to the house, and called to her mother, in great joy, "Mamma, I've found it! It was just where I lost it. God took it up and kept it all night, and put it back again this morning; and, Mamma, he didn't touch a penny!"

God's providential propinquity to the purse is a touch of Young-American nature, even if his incorruptibility as to its contents rings false as to national ideals.

These three stories are of occurrences in my own personal knowledge. They are significant as showing pretty plainly what are the influences surrounding children of the middle and higher classes in their homes. This is the teaching that is moulding their characters, and this is the way that the institution of the family strengthens and encourages class distinctions and individual cupidity. I have never known of an instance where the family was used as an instigator to civic virtue even; much less to human feeling toward fellow humanity.

In its very nature, as at present constituted, the family seems to stand as a bulwark against all greatness of feeling; it is, like the corporations, altogether inhuman.

Sin of a Loveless Home.

Unelastic conventionality of view is a secret accomplice of crime and an open foe to the highest progress of humanity.

Both pulpit and press send forth their constant protest against divorce; decorous-minded and order-loving human beings declare against the dissolution of the marriage tie by any means save death, but the pulpit and the press are silent and the same decorous-minded individuals seem to consider it none of their business when a husband and wife live together in continual open warfare, and bring children conceived in hatred and reared in discord into existence.

When this harnessed hatred now and then results in murder the pulpit cries, "Shocking depravity!" and the conventional minded populace shakes its head disapprovingly, while it shuts its eyes to a score of cases within its circle where domestic life is made a criminal farce and a breeder of possible tragedies.

Not many moons ago four small children, the oldest thirteen, witnessed the stabbing of their father with a potato knife held in the hand of their goaded and infuriated mother, almost on the eve of her bringing a fifth child into loveless existence.

The story of the thirteen-year-old daughter, as told to the reporters, caused not one editorial to be written, not one sermon to be preached upon the awful crime—the most awful of all crimes—marital infelicity and child breeding.

Yet divorce, so constantly preached and written against, is a shining virtue and a blessing to humanity—set beside this black and hideous condition of two human beings living in bitter strife and harboring hatred and repulsion in their hearts, while they periodically give rein to mere animal impulses, and produce undesired offspring.

The little girl who saw her mother murder her father related in a stoical manner how "They were always scrapping. Father came in and began to scold, as he always did. Mother answered back, as she always did." And then the climax came—a more terrible one than usual—and the father was a corpse and the mother a murderess.

Quite as great in the eyes of God I believe are this woman's sins of motherhood under those awful conditions, which seem to have been perpetual, as is her final unpremeditated crime.

Dozens of married people in the higher walks of life are living together in similar discord. They are possessed of more education and culture, and their language is less coarse and brutal; but they find no pleasure in each other's society, and when under the same roof are constantly quarrelling.

Their quarrels may only be expressed in "polite" sarcasms, and cold glances, and unvarying disagreements upon every trivial question, and in a stubborn lack of concessions, but their children are nevertheless reared in an unwholesome and poisonous atmosphere of hatred, and the home is shadowed by a cloud tenfold darker than the shadow of divorce and reparation could produce.

All the laws passed by all legislatures of the world, and upheld by all the churches in the land, can never make children born under such conditions anything but illegitimate in God's sight—for love alone sanctions birth.

If you, madame, whose eyes follow these words, are living as the legal wife of a man with whom you are constantly quarrelling, and if you are the unwilling mother of his offspring, let me tell you that you have no right to look down upon the unfortunate fallen girl whose love led her astray.—Ella Wheeler Wilcox, in N. Y. Journal.

Can you not think of a few friends who would be glad to receive Lucifer five weeks and a copy of "Institutional Marriage?" Send along the names, with 10 cents for each, and thus increase Lucifer's circulation while at the same time benefitting your friends.

"Love's Coming of Age," by Edward Carpenter, is now in the hands of the binder, and we shall be able to fill orders in a few days. See adv. on page 118.

The Home Persecutions.

The following statement of the case of Lois Waisbrooker and Mattie D. Penhallow appears in "Discontent," Home, Wash. Persons desiring to contribute to the defense fund may send direct to O. A. Verity or Lois Waisbrooker, Home, Wash.

For the benefit of new or casual readers, it should be stated that the defense fund, whose progress is recorded in "Discontent," has for its purpose the raising of funds to meet the necessary legal expenses in connection with the prosecution of Lois Waisbrooker and Mattie D. Penhallow, on the false charge of sending obscene literature through the mails. The indicted article is entitled "The Awful Fate of Fallen Women," and appeared in Mrs. Waisbrooker's paper, "Clothed With the Sun." It is simply a burning protest against the wrongs inflicted by society on women, and was published with the noblest motives. Lois Waisbrooker is seventy-six years old, and had devoted her entire life to the benefit of humanity. Mattie D. Penhallow is postmistress at Home. She was led by a decoy letter to mail a single issue of the paper, in the belief that she was conferring a personal favor and performing an official duty. The whole trouble arises from the officiousness of a postal inspector, who has previously shown a disposition to indulge in petty persecution. The help of all friends of liberty is invoked against this supreme outrage. United action will bring certain victory.

Here Is a Judge Who Preaches Anarchy.

The Rockwood Manufacturing Company, of Indianapolis, appealed to Judge Baker, of the Federal Court, for protection against the efforts of strikers.

We don't propose to discuss here the merits of the strike. Assume, if you choose, that the strikers were in the wrong, that the company and the "scab" workmen whom they employed were in the right. We want to call the attention of all thinking men to the utterances of Judge Baker, of the United States Court, in this case.

He began by saying that the "scab" workmen should go to the works with shotguns strapped around them, revolvers, and, if they choose, "with rapid-firing guns." He added to the lawyer who appeared before him on behalf of the company:

"I want you to change your bill of complaint. I want you to include in it a prayer for damages. It does not matter whether these men have any property or not. I will appoint a special master to fix the damages, and if you secure judgment against these strikers, officers can, if the men are caught in bed, take away their clothing. They can have no property that will be exempt under the State laws. The judgment will keep them in insolvency as long as they live, or until the judgment is paid."

* * *

As we said before, we are willing to assume that the workmen were entirely in the wrong.

But, suppose the workmen had been right and the employer in the wrong. Suppose the workmen had gone to Judge Baker and had asked for redress.

Would this United States judge have advised the union workmen to carry revolvers or rapid-firing guns to frighten the employer?

Would he have offered eagerly to take away the employer's clothes, if caught in bed?

Would he have promised to keep the employer "in insolvency as long as he lived?"

Does not the tone of the judge show bitter bias and personal feeling? Does it not show intense class hatred? Does it not demonstrate a most dangerous tendency, and does not the danger threaten the very men and the very interests that this over zealous judge seeks to benefit?

We should be very glad to know from Judge Baker whether he ever spoke with such violence of any class of men save union labor men.—Chicago "American."

"The trade of governing has always been monopolized by the most ignorant and the most rascally individuals of mankind:"—Thomas Paine.

VARIOUS VOICES.

Mrs. Katherine Buck, Elkton, S. Dakota:—Enclosed find $2 for Dr. Foote's Cyclopedia. I think I shall like it very much indeed. It is the most intelligent medical work I have seen. It accords with all of the new thought and science I have read.

H. B., Ithaca, N. Y.:—Send me an extra copy each week of Lucifer. I often see something I want somebody to read, and yet I like to keep one copy for possible future reference. As an Englishman I especially enjoyed Barnard's sonnet on Rhodes.

James P. Morton, Jr., Home, Wash.:—There is a strong fight needed in the Waisbrooker and Penhallow cases. I hope you will do what you can to prod up the liberal public. Lois Waisbrooker has done too much good work in the past, to be neglected, now that the Comstock hounds are tracking her.

A. O. Anderson, Ames, Iowa:—Enclosed find ten cents for which send me Lucifer five weeks and your booklet "Institutional Marriage." I saw your offer in a sample copy received by me today. I have examined Lucifer thoroughly and find it to be an ideal paper for those who seek the truth. If your subsequent issues be equal to the one I have, I may continue to be a subscriber.

L. H. E., Phila., Pa.:—I am very glad to see the story of the Elliott woman who became a servant to her own husband and children commented on by Mr. Harman; even though I feel that he dismisses the Elliott man with excessive mildness of criticism. There is too, I think, a hint of blame of the woman, implied in Mr. Harman's remarks. I cannot see why. However, Mr. Harman is so generally just that I think it is safe to trust that he is so in this case, and that, if I could talk with him, I should find that we agree essentially.

D. B., Ithaca, N. Y.:—The first copy of Lucifer that ever fell under my eye was the one given me yesterday by a friend. I liked it immensely. I would suggest, from this specimen, that you change the name to Lucifer, the Hammer. "Patience, and shuffle the cards;" but, for the sake of our imperilled liberties, do not for one minute cease to hammer. I'm now taking more papers than I can afford, but I must get better acquainted with Lucifer, so enclose 25 cents for Lucifer thirteen weeks and a copy of "The Prodigal Daughter."

L. W., Ottawa, Ill.:—Enclosed find $1 in payment of the subscription of a new subscriber whose name is sent herewith. We all are greatly pleased with Lucifer and would not miss it for anything. The paper is getting better every week. We wish you success and a long list of subscribers, not only for your benefit but for theirs as well. Is your offer still open to give Dr. Foote's book for $1 with one year's subscription?

[The offer referred to was withdrawn several weeks ago; and we are now unable to supply Dr. Foote's great work at less than $2—which it is worth many times over.]

K. B., Canada:—I hope you are still sending Lucifer to Julia Dawson. She edits the Woman's Column in Robert Blatchford's paper, "The Clarion," and has lately made occasional complimentary refereences to Lucifer. The closer you stick to the sex question the better. As Capt. Adams says, "Never offend public opinion in more than one way." It is easier to overcome one prejudice than a number combined, and each different movement appeals to empresses equally with laundresses. So that Lucifer should be so written as to be as acceptable to an empress as a laundress. Whoever discusses the sex question should carefully avoid the class question, and vice versa.

Mrs. Scott Briggs, Los Angeles, Cal.:—In a recent number of Lucifer I see an article entitled "What Shall We Teach Our Children?" Mothers should see that their children's bodies are kept clean, as bad habits are formed through uncleanliness. It is time to teach children about sex when they begin to ask where they come from, etc. Tell the truth: that they grew below their mother's heart, etc. Parents should obtain all the knowledge they can and impart it to their children as the occasion offers. Dr. Foote's, Dr. Stockham's, and Mrs. Craddock's books should be read. I learned through this issue of Lucifer that Mrs. Craddock has been sentenced to the Tombs for three months for conscientiously trying to benefit humanity. What an outrage! I trust friends will do all possible for her comfort while there. It will create a greater demand for her books and it is to be hoped the liberals will see to it that they are not suppressed.

W. M. Ash, Delta, Colo.:—I am an active Socialist in the present stage of economic conditions and see no way to get around the inevitable development of Socialism in the near future. However I am not one of those Socialists who judge the ideals of the Anarchists by what the common capitalistic enemy says of them. I prefer to see through my own eye glasses whether there is anything in common between Anarchism and Socialism; and I see there is one thing at least—a common grievance against the existing capitalistic organization of society. But as to the program to be enacted on the stage of civilization? There is the rub! We cannot read the program backwards. Progression is the law. The higher ideals of absolute liberty cannot be enacted in the first act. All Anarchists may well be Socialists in the first act. But all Socialists cannot be Anarchists until the time for the final act in the program arrives. And that hour depends upon how soon we begin the first act. Society as now constituted armed with the mighty weapons of law and individual ownership of the means of life—is an insane association of criminals; and the first act must be disarmament. And the weapons must be taken care of, held in trust for the common good of all. When human nature is freed from the evils of this hoggish struggle for bread, then and not till then can absolute liberty be approached. The beauties of the doctrine of voluntaryism cannot be made manifest under conditions of economic slavery and ignorance.

It is strange to think that after eighteen centuries of progress, liberty of mind has been proclaimed, but not liberty of heart. Nevertheless, to love is not less the right of mankind than to think.

In the present condition of the laws of western civilization, marriage is a failure. It is generally based on interest, not love. It is usually a mere contract, not a mystery. It is a form of prostitution, not a celebration. It is slavery, not expansion (epanouissement); hence that revolt of love qualified as adultery . . . In many instances, what we call marriage is adultery, and what we call adultery is marriage.

The poem of woman abides through the history of mankind, now and then bursting forth into sublime songs, two of the most beautiful of which are Mary, Mere de Dieu, and Jeanne d'Arc, Mere du Peuple, two virgins who have given birth to children: One the Christ, the other France.—Victor Hugo.

The authorities of New York city could not afford to expend $5000 a year to keep the light burning in the Bartholdi Statue of Liberty, which was erected in New York harbor by patriotic Frenchmen and presented as a token of esteem to the city; but it easily raised $50,000 to expend in fawning and flunkeying over the young German prince, Henry. Is not this reason for believing that Liberty is fast becoming a back number in this country? Are the lessons of Bunker Hill and Cowpens forgotten? It seems so.—Southern Mercury.

Society everywhere is in conspiracy against the manhood of every one of its members. The virtue in most request is conformity. Self-reliance is its aversion. It loves not realities and creators, but names and customs. Whoso would be a man must be a non-conformist.—Emerson.

As We Were Saying.

When capitalists cry "peace," prepare for war.

Some Americans act as if they never would forgive their ancestors for being foreigners.

Isn't there something wrong when so many royalist weeds can flourish in a Republican garden?

The manufactured craze for historical fiction promotes distraction from the horror of existing facts.

It doesn't require a very large heaven to hold the soul that seeks salvation through the slot of a collection box.

The American people are so great and powerful that they can't get along without little children working to produce the necessities of life.

The worst thing that can be said about capitalism is that under it Love is reduced to a business transation—and merchandised affections are invariably shoddy.

—William Mailly, in Socialist Spirit.

Lucifer five weeks and a copy of "Institutional Marriage," by M. Harman, all for 10 cents. Don't forget it.

A "BARGAIN COUNTER" LOT OF LITERATURE AT HALF-PRICE OR LESS.

The following is a partial list of books and pamphlets which have accumulated on our shelves, time worn and dusty. In order to get them out of our way we have marked the price down. Never more than half price, and in many instances less than a quarter of publisher's prices.

Some of these works are out of print, and perhaps you may here find just the pamphlet you have been fruitlessly looking for. Some are clean, but the covers of most are shelf-worn; the inside leaves, however, clean and complete.

In ordering, please state if you wish your money returned in case we are out of the book ordered, or if you will take something else in its place.

A History of Religions. Elizabeth E. Evans. 10c.
An Old Subject in a New Light: Crime, What Shall We Do About It? Charles Houghton, 8c.
Cellular Cosmogony; or the Earth a Concave Sphere. Cyrus R. Teed. 15c.
Catechism on the Science of a Universal Religion. Gabriel Z. Wacht. 10c.
Dictionary of Dreams. Dr. R Greer. 25 pages. 10c.
Essays on Deaths and Funerals. A collection of facts and ideas, selected and original, referring to deaths and funerals. Joseph Henry. 10c.
Eureka. How to prevent colds, hay fever, etc., without drugs. 5c.
Everybody Made Happy. C. Orchardson, 5c.
Ethicism: or the Wise Men Reviewed. 2 9 p, 20c.
Fallacies of Faith. As Promulgated by two Methodist preachers. Perseus. 10c.
Free Trade. E. H. Heywood. 12c
From Pandemonium to Elysium. James Thierry. 10c.
Government Analyzed, Col. J. R. Kelso, 60c.
Hints About the Teaching of Natural History. 5c.
How the Devil—Satan—Beat the Salvation Army. 5c.
Law and Gospel. G. W. Foote. 5c.
Liberty, Political, Religious, Social and Sexual. A. F. Tindall, 2c.
Practical Co-operation, E. C. Walker. 3c.
Social Ethics. E. H. Heywood. 12c.
Silver Songs. Words by H. W. Taylor. Music by J. B. Herbert. 5c.
Some Little Rhymes Composed at Odd Times. Wallace E. Nevill. 5c.
The Folly of Prayer. G. W. Foote. 2c.
The Sabbath. M. Farrington. 5c.
Tobacco: its Effects on the Human System. by Dr. William A. Alcott, with notes and additions by Nelson Sizer. 149 pages. 15c.
The Book of the Hour. Illustrated. Albion Siwell. 264 p. 12c.
The Haggard Circular. The Pirate's Plot and the Road to Ruin. B. S. Heath. 5c.
The Last Song of Jeremiah Hacker. 5c.
The Infidelity of Ecclesiasticism a Menace to Civilization. Prof. W. M. Lockwood. 10c.
The Living Temple, or the House We Live in. (Astrological). C. T. H. Benton. 15c.
The Railway Problem; with many illustrations and diagrams. A. B. Stickney. 30c.
The Christian Amendment. Francis E. Abbott, 3c.
What Diana Teaches. Count Tolstoi. 1c.
Who Was the Hebrew Jehovah? Was He the Creator of the Calverse and Did He Have a Son? W. D. Ketchner. 5c.
What Constitutes a Freethinker. H. L. Green. 1c.
What Is America's Relation to England? Evaleen Laura Mason. 6c.

Address M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

THE COMRADE Is a Socialist Magazine of Life, Labor and Literature. Every issue contains a great number of highly interesting and very beautiful illustrations and a wealth of original reading matter. A trial subscription—30c. for three months—will make you acquainted with all the excellent features of this Socialist Family Magazine, which is not only a good "Comrade" to men, but to women as well. Subscription per year $1. Send for one of our free illustrated leaflets. Comrade Pub. Co. 11 Cooper Square, New York.

941.

If these figures correspond with the number printed on the wrapper of your Lucifer, your subscription expires with thi number.

If a copy of Lucifer fails to reach you, please order by number or date.

Lucifer will not be sent "by return mail" unless stamps for postage are enclosed with order.

To NEW SUBSCRIBERS: Your subscription is paid to No. If you have not ordered Lucifer, a friend has subscribed for you. If you do not wish to receive it, please notify us by card or through your postmaster. If you wish to become a regular subscriber you will confer a favor by renewing before the expiration of your trial subscription.

LOVE'S COMING OF AGE.

This is a book with which few will wholly agree, but which nearly every one can read with profit and enjoyment. The subject is the relation of the sexes in the past, present and future, and it is treated with absolute frankness and fearlessness by a writer who unites a broad outlook, a strong grasp of his subject and a charming literary style. The following table of contents will indicate the line of thought followed by the author.

The Sex Passion.
Man, the Ungrown.
Woman, the Serf.
Woman in Freedom
Marriage: a Retrospect.
Marriage: a Forecast.
The Free Society.
Some remarks on the early star and sex worships.
Notes—On the Primitive Group Marriage; Jealousy; The Family; Preventive Checks to Population.

The book will be printed on extra book paper and handsomely bound in cloth. The price, including postage to any address will be one dollar. Copies will be ready about April 20.

Address M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

RADICAL LITERATURE.

For Sale by M. Harman, 500 Fulton St., Chicago.

A CHAMBERMAID'S DIARY. By Octave Mirbeau. Translated from the French by Benj. R. Tucker. 466 pages. Handsomely bound in cloth. $1.50.
ADVANCEMENT OF SCIENCE. Prof. John Tyndall's famous Inaugural Address before the British Association for the Advancement of Science, with the articles on Prayer which so stirred the religious world. Cloth, 50c; paper, 25c.
AGE OF REASON (The). Presentation edition. Part I reprinted from the first English edition. Part II corrected by M. D. Conway's edition. With Paine's own account of his arrest in Paris. Photogravure portrait from the Romney painting exhibited in London. Containing also portrait from the Jarvis painting; from the Peale painting, known as the Bonneville portrait, representing Paine as a member of the French Assembly, and a half-tone of the Peale painting. Large half-tones of the house presented to Paine, in which he lived in New Rochelle, and of the monument and surroundings. Yorktown, Pa., scenes; also eight half-tone views of buildings, etc., associated with Paine's life in Paris, and other illustrations. With Preface, Chronological Table, Notes, Index, etc. Printed on antique wove paper, large octavo, wide margins, gilt edge. Special cover design in colors. The finest and most accurate of all editions. Boxed. Postpaid, $2.
AGE OF REASON. Thomas Paine. Cloth, with steel plate portrait, 50c; paper 25c.
ANARCHISM: Its Philosophy and Ideal. Peter Kropotkin. 5c.
A PHYSICIAN IN THE HOUSE. A New Family Medical Work, by Dr. J. H. Greer. This book is up-to-date in every particular. It will save you hundreds of dollars in doctors' bills. It tells you how to cure yourself by simple and harmless home remedies. It recommends no poisonous or dangerous drugs. It teaches how to save health and life by safe methods. It teaches prevention—that it is better to know how to live and avoid disease than to take any medicine as a cure. It is not an advertisement and has no medicine to sell. It has hundreds of excellent recipes for the cure of the various diseases. It has 16 colored plates showing different parts of the human body. The chapter on Painless Midwifery is worth its weight in gold to women. The "Care of Children" is something every mother ought to read. It teaches the value of Air, Sunshine, and Water as medicines. It contains valuable information for the married. This book cannot fail to please you. If you are looking for health by the safest and easiest means, do not delay getting it. It has eight hundred pages, is neatly bound in cloth, with gold letters, and will be sent by mail or express, prepaid to any address, for $2.75.
A PLEA FOR THE NEW WOMAN. May L. Collins. With large new half-tone portrait. 10c.
A TALE OF THE STRASSBURG GEESE. R. B. Kerr. Together with The Strike of the Strassburg Geese (C. W. Coolridge), A Traveler's Tale (R. B. Kerr), The Cat's Story (Emile Zola) 5c.
AUTONOMY, SELF-LAW. A fragmentary dissertation on the right to non-invasive self-hood. 3c.
A WEEK ON THE CONCORD AND MERRIMAC RIVERS. Henry D. Thoreau 25c.
BALZAC'S SERAPHITA: The Mystery of Sex. Mary Hanford Ford. Cloth. $1.
BIBLE TEMPERANCE. E. C. Walker. Proving that Liquor Drinking is Commended, Defended and Enjoined by the Bible, and giving close reference to the chapters and verses. 10c.
BORNING BETTER BABIES—Through regulating reproduction by controlling conception. E. B. Foote, Jr., M. D. 25c.
CAUSES OF HARD TIMES, and the Money Question. Albert Chavannes. 5c.
CHICAGO CONFERENCE OF TRUSTS. Speeches, debates, etc.; 81 portraits of delegates, including Benj. R. Tucker, Laurence Gronlund, William Jennings Bryan, Samuel Gompers, Louis F. Post, and George Schilling. 426 pages. 50c.
CHILDREN OF THE ITALIAN POOR. Paola Lombroso. 5c.
DARWINS, THE. (A novel.) Elmina D. Slenker. 50c.
DAWN OF CIVILIZATION, The; or, England in the Nineteenth Century. J. C. Spence. 176 pages. 25c.
DAWN-THOUGHT ON THE RECONCILIATION. By J. Wm. Lloyd. An inspired treatise that, with insight and solution, touches all the questions of life, love, soul and society. A prose-poem, simple enough for a child to enjoy, deep enough to make a philosopher think. The largest creed, the most generous theory, the gladdest gospel. A book of life. A religion of growth and the overlook—freedom and optimism. Read it. Printed in old style antique type, rubricated with portrait of the author. In three editions, de luxe, plain and paper bound. Prices, $1.25, $1.00 and 50c.
DIGGING FOR BED-ROCK. Camp-meeting talks and sketches by Moses Harman. 5c.
ECONOMICS OF ANARCHY. A Study of the Industrial Type. Dyer D. Lum 25c.

DR. FOOTE'S SOCIAL SCIENCE SERIES OF DIME PAMPHLETS—Wedlock; Scientific Marriage; Heredity; A B C of Temperaments; Powell and his Critics; Physiological Marriage; Physical Improvement of Humanity; Causes of Disease, Insanity, and Premature Death; A Step Backward. Any of the above books sent by mail on receipt of price.

DYNAMIC THEORY OF LIFE AND MIND. An attempt to show that all organic beings are both constructed and operated by the dynamic agencies of their respective environments. By James B. Alexander. Over 400 illustrations, 87 chapters, 1,067 pages and a 3-column index of 11 pages. Cloth, $2.75.

EAST TENNESSEE SKETCHES. A and Cecile Chavannes. 25c.

EIGHT-HOUR MOVEMENT. John P. Altgeld, ex-Governor of Illinois. 5c.

EVOLUTION AND REVOLUTION. Elisee Reclus. 5c.

FALSE CLAIMS OF THE CHURCH. John E. Remsburg. Analyzing and confuting the claims made by churchmen that the Christian religion has promoted morality, learning, temperance, science, freedom, and showing how she has opposed progress. Paper, 10c.

FIELDS, FACTORIES, AND WORKSHOPS; or, Industry Combined with Agriculture and Brain Work with Manual Work. Peter Kropotkin. 360 pages. 40c. Postage, 5c.

FREE PRESS. Arguments in support of demurrer to the indictment of M. Harman, E. C. Walker and Geo. Harman, under the Comstock law. G. C. Remens and David Overmyer. 20c.

GIORDANO BRUNO. His Life, Teachings, and Martyrdom. Burned for heresy in Rome, Feb. 17, 1600. 5c.

GOD AND THE STATE. Bakounine. 25c.

GOVERNMENT ANALYZED. A remarkable work by a remarkable man, Col. John H. Kelso, the history of whose life reads more like romance than reality. This book is the last of a series—Deity Analyzed, Bible Analyzed, Universe Analyzed. By the author's death this work was left unfinished, but was completed by his wife, Elita Dunbar Kelso. 459 pages; cloth. Price reduced from $1.50 to $1.

HILDA'S HOME. Rosa Graul. "An o'er true tale" of woman's wrongs and of one woman's struggles and final triumphs in her attempt to secure justice for herself and for her sisters. 426 pages. Cloth, $1; paper, 50c.

HUMAN RIGHTS. J. Madison Hook. 5c.

IMPORTANCE OF HONEST MONEY. A simple, scientific, invariable standard of price. James Adleman. 320 pages. Paper, 50c.

IN BRIGHTER CLIMES; or, Life in Scotland. Albert Chavannes. 5c.

INFIDEL DEATH-BEDS. "Idle Tales of Dying Horrors." G. W. Foote. Brief biographical sketches of 87 Freethinkers, including Bruno, Buckle, Byron, Comte, Darwin, George Eliot, Gibbon, Goethe, Hugo, Harriet Martineau, Mill, Paine, Madame Roland, George Sand, Shelley, Volney, and Voltaire. 25c.

IN HELL AND THE WAY OUT. A plan of Social Democracy outlined. Henry E. Allen. 10c.

INSTITUTIONAL MARRIAGE. From the viewpoint of an exiled Ma-nian. M. Harman. 5c.

JOHN'S WAY. A domestic radical story. Elmina D. Slenker. 25c.

KAREEZA. Ethics of Marriage. A bold, brave book, teaching ideal marriage, rights of the unborn child, a designed and controlled maternity. Sample pages free. $1.

KORADINE. A story for young and old. Extra levant cloth. $1.

LIBERTY IN LITERATURE. Testimonial to Walt Whitman. "Let us put wreaths on the brows of the living." An address delivered in Philadelphia, Oct. 21, 1876, with portrait of Whitman. Containing also Col. Ingersoll's address at the funeral of Walt Whitman, Mar. 30, 1892. Cloth, 60c; paper, 25c.

LIBERTY. Political, Religious, Social, and Moral. A. F. Tindall. 5c.

LITTLE LESSONS FOR LITTLE FOLKS. Elmina D. Slenker. Boards, 40c.

LIZZIE MELTON. A story of a self-reliant girl. By Albert Chavannes. With portrait of author. 25c.

LUCIFER. Third Series, Vol. III. (1899). Cloth, $1.25. Postage, 25c.

MAGNETATION, and Its Relation to Health and Character. Albert Chavannes. 25c.

MARRIAGE. An address by Dr. Juliet H. Severance. 5c.

MARRIAGE IN FREE SOCIETY. Edward Carpenter. A dainty little gift book. 25c.

MARTYRDOM OF MAN. Winwood Reade. This is a very interestingly pictured synopsis of universal history, showing what the race has undergone—its martyrdom—in its rise to its present plane. It shows how war and religion have been oppressive factors in man's struggle for liberty; and the last chapter, of some 150 pages, describes his intellectual struggle from the animal period of the earth to the present, adding an outline of what the author conceives would be a religion of reason and love. Winwood Reade's reputation as a writer of fine English, of deep study and careful reasoning, needs no word of praise. Cloth, $1.

MEN, WOMEN AND CHANCE. William Platt. Containing two tales: The Ascent to the Heights, and Blind Men and Seeing. Well printed on heavy paper and artistically bound in cloth. Gilt top, rough edges. 75c.

MEN, WOMEN, AND GODS. Helen H. Gardener. With preface by Col. R. G. Ingersoll. Contents: Introduction by Col. Ingersoll. Men, Women, and Gods. Vicarious Atonement. Historical Facts and Theological Fictions. Appendix. Address to the Clergy and Others. Letter to Cleveland Congress of Freethinkers. The only authorized and correct edition. Large 12mo, heavy-toned paper. Portrait. This volume is by far the best writing this famous author ever did. It is very fine. Cloth, $1; paper, 50c.

MISSING LINK IN MODERN SPIRITUALISM, THE. A. Leah (Fox) Underhill. With portraits of the Fox Sisters and others. 478 pages. Cloth. Reduced to $1.

MORIBUND SOCIETY AND ANARCHY. Jean Grave. Cloth, 80c; paper, 25c.

MOTHERHOOD IN FREEDOM. M. Harman. 5c.

MUTUAL BANKING. A simple plan to abolish interest on money. William B. Greene. 10c.

NORA, A DOLL'S HOUSE, and GHOSTS. Ibsen. Cloth. 75c.

OUR WORSHIP OF PRIMITIVE SOCIAL GUESSES. E. C. Walker. Contents: Love and Law; The Moloch of the Monogamic Ideal; The Continuity of Race-Life, and Tyranny; Food and Sex Fallacies, a Criticism; When Men and Women Are and When They Are Not Varieties; The New Woman: What is she? What will she be? The State Hiding Behind Its Own Mistakes; Bishop Potter's Opinion of Divorce; Love; Its Attraction and Expression; Is She an Honest Girl? Lloyd, Platt, and the Pitiful Facts; Social Radicals and Parentage; Anthropology and Monogamy; Love and Trust Versus Fear; Reflections upon Reading William Platt's "Women, Love, and Life." 15c.

PERSONAL EXPERIENCES of Two American Anti-Vivisectionists in Various Countries. Philip G. Peabody. With an Appendix by Col. R. G. Ingersoll. Reduced from 25c to 15c.

PERSONAL RIGHTS AND SEXUAL WRONGS. Oswald Dawson. 10c.

PRIESTLY CELIBACY. Prof. A. L. Rawson. Together with The Incoherence of Transition (E. C. Walker), Motherhood in Freedom (Moses Harman), The Greatest Sin (an allegory, R. B. Kerr), and Jealousy, the Foe of Freedom (Oscar Rotter). 25c.

RELIGION AND RATIONALISM. The relation of each to human liberty. The religionist, fancying that he has the whole truth, is logically opposed to investigation, and he appeals to physical force to arrest the discovery of new truths. What Rationalism is, and how many believe themselves Freethinkers who are only unbelieving or disgruntled religionists. The necessity for separate organizations and a division of labor among reformers. The Secular Union. Important facts and arguments in a compact form. E. C. Walker. 5c.

RIGHTS OF MAN. Thomas Paine. Answer to Burke's attack upon the French revolution. A political treatise of great general value, as advocating liberty and democracy. Contains the fundamental principles of true republicanism. Cloth, 60c; paper, 25c.

RUBAIYAT (Quatrains) OF OMAR KHAYYAM. Edward FitzGerald's interpretation; with original introduction; special cover; latest version. Paper, 10c.

RULED BY THE TOMB. A discussion of free thought and free love. Orford Northcote. 10c.

SCIENCE IN STORY; or, Sammy Tubbs, the Boy Doctor, and Sponsle, the Troublesome Monkey. For young folks. Dr. E. B. Foote. Five volumes in "red line," presentation edition. $5. Five volumes, plainer binding, $2.50; all in one volume, $1.

SEXUAL PHYSIOLOGY FOR THE YOUNG. Being the fifth volume of "Science in Story." 250 pages; cloth bound; illustrated. 50c.

SONGS OF THE UNBLIND CUPID. J. Wm. Lloyd. Edition de luxe. Verses printed from Kelmscott type upon deckle edged hand made paper of cerulean tint. Initial letters, ornaments and borders are in red; initial letter and sketch upon the opening page are hand painted in water colors. Covers brown, with choice of silver or gold lettering. Very handsome gift book. 50c.

STUDIES IN SOCIOLOGY. In four parts: I., The Law of Happiness; II., The Law of Individual Control; III., The Law of Exchange; IV., The Law of Environment. Albert Chavannes. 25c.

TALKS ON NATURE. Important information for both sexes. Dr. J. H. Greer. 192 pages. Reduced from 50 to 25c.

THE ABOLITION OF MARRIAGE. John Beverly Robinson. Together with Isabel's Intention (Marietta), Reminiscences of Berlin Heights (A. Warren), and The Sexes and Love in Freedom (Oscar Rotter). 25c.

THE BAR SINISTER AND LICIT LOVE, including the first biennial proceedings of the Legitimation League, and a full account of the Lanchester case, with full-page half-tone pictures of Edith Lanchester, and Lillian Harman. Handsomely bound in green and gold covers. 307 pages. 25c.

THE BLUE LAWS OF CONNECTICUT. Taken from the Code of 1650 and the public records of the Colony of Connecticut previous to 1665. With an account of the late persecution of Witches and Quakers in New England, and some extracts from the Blue Laws of Virginia. Copiously illustrated. 25c.

THE BRITISH BARBARIANS. Grant Allen, the greatest of the Hill-Top pioneers. Dedicated "to all who have heart enough, brain enough, and soul enough to understand it." Handsomely bound in cloth. 281 pages. $1.

THE WOMAN WHO DID. Grant Allen. A powerful story of a refined, educated and high-spirited woman who dared to defy the tyranny of church and state and ignore the institution of marriage. Handsomely bound in cloth. $1.

THE NEW HEDONISM. Grant Allen. The opening paragraph says: "The old ascetism said: 'Be virtuous and you will be happy.' The new hedonism says: 'Be happy and you will be virtuous.'" In another place the writer says: "In proportion as men have freed themselves from mediæval superstitions have they begun to perceive that the unclean and impure things are celibacy and asceticism; that the pure and beautiful and ennobling thing is the fit and worthy exercise of the reproductive function." Paper covers; 32 large pages; twelve copies, 50c. Single copy, 5c.

THE CHICAGO MARTYRS. The famous speeches of the eight condemned anarchists in Judge Gary's Court, and Altgeld's reasons for pardoning Fielden, Neebe and Schwab. 25c.

THE COMING WOMAN. Lillie D. White. 5c.

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM. Principles and platform of organized Freethought. 10c.

THE EVOLUTION OF MODESTY. Jonathan Mayo Crane. A consideration of the origin of clothes and the reasons why people wear clothing. Here are a few questions it answers: What is modesty? What is the cause of it? What is the use of it? What is the cause of the feeling of shame? Is nudity immodest? What is the cause of the notion that it is shameful to expose some parts of the body? Why do not all peoples agree as to what parts of the body should be concealed? 5c.

THE FOUNTAIN OF LIFE; or, The Threefold Power of Sex. Lois Waisbrooker. 50c.

THE FUTURE OF SECULARISM. When will the Cause of Justice triumph? 5c.

THE PRODIGAL DAUGHTER; or, The Price of Virtue. Rachel Campbell. Together with Legal Wifehood (Lucinda B. Chandler), Life's Gifts (Olive Schreiner), and Marriage—What It Was and Is; Will the Coming Woman Marry? 25c.

THE REVIVAL OF PURITANISM. E. C. Walker. 10c.

THE RIGHTS OF CHILDREN. R. B. Kerr. Together with What Are Women Here For? (H. B. Foote, Jr., M. D.), The New Martyrdom (Lillian Harman), and The Will, from the French of Guy de Maupassant. 25c.

THE SANCTITY OF MARRIAGE. As viewed from a moral and sanitary standpoint. A solemn protest against the present demoralizing management of that institution, its effects upon offspring and its influence upon education. By Dr. Robert A. Greer. A valuable "opening wedge" in missionary work. Price reduced from 25c to 10c.

THE SECRET INSTRUCTIONS OF THE JESUITS. A reprint from an edition published in 1723, quoted by the highest authorities as authentic. The work is redolent of Jesuit craft and is a plain index to the underhand working of that order against the welfare of individuals and society. 15c.

THE STATE: ITS HISTORIC ROLE. Prince Peter Kropotkin. 10c.

THE TROUBADOURS AND COURTS OF LOVE. J. F. Rowbotham. Cloth. 350 pages. $1.50. Postage, 12c.

THE UNWOMANLY WOMAN. Lizzie M. Holmes. Together with That Great Fraud, Vulgar Society (Moses Hull), Virgin Soil (George Egerton), and Normal Sexual Action (Ernest Winse). 25c.

THE WORM TURNS. Revolutionary Poems. Voltairine de Cleyre. 15c.

THOMAS JEFFERSON. His Political, Social and Religious Philosophy. Gen. M. M. Trumbull. 5c.

TOKOLOGY. A book for every woman. By Alice B. Stockham, M. D. Illustrated. Tokology teaches possible painless pregnancy and parturition, giving full, plain directions for the care of a woman before and after confinement. The ailments of pregnancy can be prevented as well as the pains and dangers of childbirth avoided and women need not go down to death giving birth to children. English, German or Swedish. $1.25.

TRAVELS IN FAITH. By Capt. Robert C. Adams. His mental experience from superstition to rationalism. Cloth, 75c; paper, 25c.

VACCINATION A GIGANTIC CRIME. Samuel Darling. 15c.

VINDICATION OF THOMAS PAINE. Col. R. G. Ingersoll. Dealing with all the slanders brought against the name and fame of Paine. A little pamphlet which every admirer of Thomas Paine should have by him for reference. Paper, 10c.

VITAL FORCE. Magnetic Exchange and Magnetation. Albert Chavannes. 25c.

WHAT THE YOUNG NEED TO KNOW: a Primer of Sexual Rationalism. Edwin C. Walker. "Let us cease to be ashamed of what makes us men, of dwelling arms of babes." Paper covers; 42 large pages. 10c.

WHAT IS RELIGION? Ingersoll's last public address, delivered at the meeting of the Free Religious Association in Boston on June 2, 1893. To which is appended as the poem, "Declaration of the Free," the last verse written by the great Freethinker. 5c.

WHEN LOVE IS LIBERTY AND NATURE LAW. John Badcock, Jr. 10c.

WHY THE UNDERTONE? An open letter to Judge Gary. Sarah E. Ames. 10c.

WOMAN, CHURCH, AND STATE. Matilda Joslyn Gage. This is Mrs. Gage's last and crowning work. Every woman ought to read it. Every liberal woman and man will want it. A burning protest against the tremendous wrong done woman by the church, which controlled the state. It ought to be widely read for the good it will do. Cloth, $1.50; paper, 75c.

WOMAN: Four Centuries of Progress. Susan H. Wixon. 5c.

WOMAN IN THE PAST, PRESENT AND FUTURE. Woman was the first human being that tasted bondage. Woman was a slave before the slave existed. The basis of all oppression is economic dependence on the oppressor. This has been the condition of woman in the past and is so still. She is now a slave of the slave. This work is August Bebel's masterpiece. 8vo, 177 pages. 25c.

Address M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

Price 2 Cents.

LUCIFER.

THE LIGHT-BEARER.

THIRD SERIES, VOL. VI., No. 16. CHICAGO, ILLINOIS, MAY 1, E. M. 302. [C. E. 1902.] WHOLE No. 915

THE GALLOWS.

Up and make ready, ye lovers of fun!
On with your holiday-dress and be gay;
Now that the sheriff has work to be done,
Business with pleasure be mingled today!
Some may go hunting with guns; and a few,
Rods in their hands, little fish may pursue:
Ours is the sport that is sanctioned by law—
We go for a hanging—a hanging! Hurrah!

Two months ago on a rare drunken bout
Bill his comrade, the criminal slew
Murder's a deed that is vile, without doubt,
Ergo, the law must turn murderer too.
As for the place the liquor he got—
Liquor which maddened him—yonder's the spot,
Sammy who keeps it approves of the law—
He goes for a hanging—for hanging! Hurrah!

Bright shines the sun on the place where you see
Yonder tall gallows, substantial and bare;
Wait a few hours, and a fellow will be
Dancing fandangoes of fun in the air!
Gathering in groups at the gallows, behold
Parents and children, maids, wives, young and old
Waiting the time when the halter shall draw;
They go for a hanging—for hanging! Hurrah!

Pickpockets plenty are—mark how they go
Slyly and cooly to work at their trade;
Business is business, and people must know
Too much attention to that can't be paid.
Swearing, and fighting, and kicking, the crowd
Utter their blasphemous curses aloud—
Righteous example is set by the law:
Good comes from hanging—for hanging! Hurrah!

Look at the criminal! Please ye to look?
Standing behind him the hangman you see;
There is the priest, with his gown and his book—
Galloping gaily, they go to the tree,
Thanks to the priests who the hangman befriend,
Choking such knaves as 'twere labor to mend,
Hanging they say is Levitical law—
Cheers for the clergy!—they're Christians! Hurrah!

Firmly and proudly the culprit looks round,
Holding his head with a satisfied air;
Murmurs applauding go over the ground;
Down drops the priest with the felon to prayer.
"How interesting his looks are!" says Ann.
"Yes!" answers Sall—"and he'll die like a man!"
Elegant talk for young maidens; but, pshaw!
Shout for the hanging—the hanging! Hurrah!

Prayers are all finished, and now for the fun!
Over his features the cap has been drawn;
Ketch and his comrade, the preacher, get down,
Crack! goes the whip, and the wagon moves on.
Wonderful sight for the Christian to see;
Merrily dancing on nothing is he.
Though there is no fiddle a hornpipe to saw,
Light are his steps—he's hanging! Hurrah!

After the rope has been severed in twain,
Home go the people and joyfully sing;
Heaven will receive whom the gallows has slain:
Does not the clergyman settle the thing?
Home go the people and talk of it all—
Children in nursery, servants in hall:
Bub hangs the cat in the manner he saw
Hang at the gallows God's image! Hurrah!!

Rouse ye good clergymen, servants of God—
Stand by my side while I fight for your fun!
Hanging preserves us from shedding of blood—
Remedy like it, there never was one,
Rally your forces, thump pulpits, and be
Clerical guards of the good gallows tree!
What if your Savior denounces the law!
You go for hanging—for hanging! Hurrah!!

—Thomas Dunn English, (1845)

The Persecution of Craddock.

BY ED. W. CHAMBERLAIN.

When good old D. M. Bennett was imprisoned under the false pretense that he had mailed an obscene book ("Cupids Yokes") Charles Bradlaugh wrote him expressing the hope that his conviction might be "the last of its kind in America." With a like hope I witnessed the pretended trial of Ida C. Craddock in the court of special sessions in New York before Judges Hinsdale, McKeon and Mayer.

For years this court has been a nuisance and a pestilence until during the administration of Mayor Strong it became so intolerable that the judges then incumbent were summarily legislated out of office. The court itself instead of being abolished, as it should have been, was reorganized. And the reorganization was no practical improvement. A change in the political complexion of the judges was the only result. There is really no justification for the existence of this court. It does nothing that could not be done more properly either by the magistrates or by the court of general sessions but its main purpose seems to be to defraud an accused out of a jury trial in cases where a jury trial is a matter of right.

While waiting for the Craddock case much of the time of the court was occupied listening to the rascally tales of a class of decoys who induce violations of the law for the express purpose of making cases for prosecution and bringing false and preposterous accusations. With no rebuke to the decoy who entices a publican to sell a ten cent glass of whiskey out of legal hours and with as much mock solemnity as if they were adjudicating controversies of the highest importance these trumpery judges sit day after day wasting the people's time and money and poisoning the sources of justice.

Resolutely refusing to know anything which might aid them in forming an intelligent conception of the case against Mrs. Craddock and in understanding her defense the court with obstinate determination ignobly followed a vicious precedent laid down years ago by a corrupt English judiciary in its effort to retaliate upon political opponents who were exposing its rottenness. It was a reminder of the time when the infamous

Lord Ellenborough got out of a sick bed to sit upon the bench that he might by his personal efforts insure the conviction of John Howe.

In rendering judgment one of these judges, evidently to show how religious he was, went so far out of the record as to characterize Mrs. Craddock's pamphlet as blasphemous, forgetting, if indeed he ever knew, that this was precisely the same accusation that was brought against Jesus Christ in a very similar trial in a very similar court. Evidently this judge's religion did not invest him with sufficient moral character to restrain him from the outrage he was committing though he seemed to be eagerly solicitous about Mrs. Craddock's morals.

Another of these judges twitted Mrs. Craddock with being mercenary and selling her books as a money making scheme though the fact is well known that with the most rigid economy she can barely make a meager living and would have had no counsel to defend her, had not her friends advanced the means. Close beside Mrs. Craddock at this point in the proceedings stood Anthony Comstock who is reputed to get four thousand dollars a year as salary for working his scheme, and I don't know how much more he gets, but this judge somehow or other failed to see Comstock at the moment when he was handing out accusations of mercenary motives so the whole effect of the judge's fulmination bore upon Mrs. Craddock alone. This was a great oversight on the part of the judge.

The sentence inflicted by this court upon this refined delicate sensitive woman for writing a book of superior merit and of the most beneficient purpose was three months confinement in the city prison. And having thus safeguarded society we can imagine these judges retailing bawdy jokes at their clubs in the evening.

Jimmie, the Weaver.

Fitchburg, Mass., March 28. The entire force of weavers in the Fitchburg worsted mills and the Booli mills of the American Woolen company struck today in sympathy with the Rhode Island employes of the combine in the struggle against the two-loom system in that state—Chicago "Daily News."

Jimmie, the weaver, isn't a weaver; he is a sweeper.

Jimmie used to be a weaver, but now he sweeps out the factory and does odd jobs around;—jobs an old man can do. That's what they call him; "the old man." He is forty-five years old. All men in factory towns in New England are "old" when they are forty-five. As soon as they lose their nimbleness they are cashiered; or the fining system drives them out. Men's fingers are less nimble than women's anyhow; particularly young girls'.

As Jimmie isn't under the strain of watching the looms for a break he is always ready to talk; particularly if he can get off in a corner with you, where the superintendent doesn't see him. Jimmie is faithful enough about the jobs he does; as faithful as you can expect an old man of forty-five to be; but he has been quaking at the thought of the superintendent for so many years; he has been afraid of losing his job for so long, that a furtive, hunted manner has become a sort of second nature to him, and he peers about between the looms as if he expected to be caught and kicked for something he knows he is perfectly innocent of.

You can't expect Jimmie to be a man when he has lived a cowering slave since he was thirteen.

That is not the way men are made.

"Look at that line," said Jimmie. He pointed over the high window ledge. It was nearly noon and a dozen men with "full dinner pails" were filing into the factory yard.

"Late, aren't they?" I said. He read my lips, and understood.

"Divil a bit," he screeched, above the roar of the looms. "On time! the whistle will blow in a minute."

The whistle blew and then he told me.

The men were bringing the dinners to their wives and daughters who worked at the looms. They were all old men all of them over forty;—too old to work.

In the New England factory towns the women earn the living and the men wash and cook and look after the neighbors' children. While they are both young enough the mothers and fathers work in the factories together.

This is a fine thing for conjugal felicity; this working together of husband and wife. Of course they get no chance to speak to one another at the factory; and there are so many things to do around "home" that they don't get much chance there either, until the supper dishes are washed up at eight or nine o'clock. Then,—if they are not tired, and the baby is asleep so they cannot get acquainted with it,—is when they have their conversations about art, and literature and the merits of the latest opera. As they are seldom tired, this is the pleasantest time of the day. The strain of watching the looms all day on their feet is removed and they thoroughly enjoy the relaxation.

Of course they cannot go about much. If they should be out two or three nights a week at the opera or concert it might impair their health.

Daylight comes quickly when you're out till twelve or one. Then, too there's no one to leave the baby with. It has been tended all day by some one else.

When both mother and father, all winter long, go into the factory at day break and don't come out of it till night fall there are a few things about "home" to be done, both before they go, and after they return.

For example, there is the washing. By getting up before five o'clock—two or three hours before daylight—and working together by the light of a kerosene lamp, they can get that done. Then comes the ironing; they handle that the same way. The baby makes washing and ironing before daylight a pretty steady job.

Then there is breakfast, scanty enough; they have to hustle so. Seven o'clock comes so soon in the winter, and they can't afford to be docked, they run that risk all day.

Then there is the baby. If the baby had any sense it wouldn't expect attention from a mother who worked all day in the factory and had to do the cooking and dishwashing and marketing and sewing and washing and ironing and before daylight and after dark. But babies haven't any sense. If they had they might blow up the universe, or refuse to be born; but they haven't.

The mothers who work all the week in the factories for six or seven dollars pay some young girl (under thirteen) or some old man (over forty) two or three dollars a week for looking after their babies.

The babies' idea of a mother is a man with a bottle of thin milk.

The mothers' net compensation for the week's work is three or four dollars and the pleasure of hearing their babies cry for someone else,—the one they are used to, and who feeds them. On Sunday, if the washing and sewing are caught up and the house doesn't need cleaning (No "nice" person can bear to see a workingman's house that is not clean!) perhaps the mother and father may have an hour or two to play with the baby, or get a breath of sun and air.

It is a great life, this life of a man and woman together sharing their common tasks. They haven't, of course, much to occupy them except work, but they have plenty of that, and that is the only thing the weavers are afraid of losing.

At least Jimmie says so.

Why they should be afraid of losing work is a mystery. The "nice" people surely don't want to do it. But Jimmie says when work is slack "the kids goes hungry."

Doubtless they cannot save very much on six or seven dollars a week and the rent to pay.

As soon as the babies grow up and look large enough not to make their "age thirteen" certificate a lie on its face, it will be easier; their wages will then eke out.

Jimmie says, "You always think good times is comin', but they always beat you somehow. When the kids grows up it don't seem to make no difference. The more comes in the more goes out, it seems ."

Now, the double-loom is the threatening monster.

Jimmie doesn't know much about capitalism, but you can't fool him about the double-loom. That is what the strike is about now. The man is fighting the machine.

The double-loom system was developed five years ago. It was born in the textile mills of Philadelphia; that's why people have been so slow in hearing about it.

In Philadelphia the double loom system is employed in the weaving of all woolens, except the heaviest fabrics and those most difficult to weave. In the light fabrics for summer wear one weaver frequently operates four looms. The Philadelphia weaver receives no greater pay now for the operation of four looms than was received five years ago for the operation of one. The pay of many weavers is less than $8 a week. Women are preferred as weavers in many mills, because of their expertness and "tractability." It is easier to bluff and brow-beat them.

Even if extra compensation were allowed, the double-loom system would be murderous.

"Look," said Jimmie, at the top of his voice after the nooning was over and the crashing had begun again, "You wouldn't think that they was doin' anything, would you?"

Here the girls had but one loom. They could look after their neighbor's for a few minutes if brief absence were necessary. They stood about, quiet, unmoved, reposeful, in the deafening din.

I looked at the nearest girl. Her face was pale and she was as reposeful as the others; but her repose, as that of the others, was the repose of nervous tension. Her eyes, apparently roving, were keenly alert, and her ears were acock for the slightest noise which would indicate a break, or a float or other fault in the swiftly running threads. Even as I looked, she sprang like a cat to her loom, her nimble fingers flew for an instant so rapidly my eyes could not follow them, and then she relapsed into the old attitude of repose.

"The nervous strain of this work is devilish!" I hissed into Jimmie's ear; and I thought of the "nice" people running about the city shops and buying the lives of these girls in their bargains of dimities, challies, batistes, mulles and organdies.

"I bet you," grinned Jimmie, roaring and screeching alternately, "but s'pose they were tendin' three or four o' 'em! That 'ud lay 'em out in a few years. Then they'd have to have their hands and eyes in several places at once. They gets docked if they spoils a piece;—it's took out 'o their wages. That's why I quit runnin' a loom. My fines was so big I owed the company money every pay day. If I'd a' bin runnin' more'n one loom I'd be owin' 'em money yet."

Jimmie laughed a loud, mirthless laugh above the crash of the machinery,—"the loud laugh that speaks the vacant mind."

The double-loom system originated with the weavers themselves. When a weaver was not at work, the one whose loom was next in line asked to be allowed to run the two looms. This request was frequently granted, and the operative made double wages. Mill owners, observing that one weaver could, in an emergency, do what until then was considered the work of two, made it a rule that two looms should be run, instead of one. This aroused a storm of protest at the time, but it has since been generally enforced in Philadelphia.

Now the American Woolen company wants the double-loom system in Rhode Island. A single-loom system cannot compete with a double-loom system.

When one factory grinds up more human life than another factory, competition does the rest.

"The rest o' 'em has got to come to it," says Jimmie.

Jimmie lives in one of the company's houses built all in a row. There are no fences and no gardens. The grass is trampled flat.

"Do they make you live there—in their houses?"

Jimmie cocked an eye and looked about; then he came close up to me. "No, they don't say nothin' about it; but when they has to let a feller go, it's generally the feller that lives in the houses the company don't own. I lives in a company house. I got one boy and two girls here in the factory and I don't take no chances."

"What a splendid encouragement for the workers to own their own homes!" I thought.

If a whole family, like Jimmie's, works and saves and buys a little hut for their own, it is used against them. They'll work cheaper before they'll leave it;—and workmen's houses are built by the company to rent for profit, not to stand empty at a loss.

Jimmie is a regular politician.

He does not wait for a house to fall on him before he catches on; that is certain.

He evidently hates to be everlastingly under the eye of the company;—he would at least like to shake off the incubus in his home life and have another landlord, but he has been crushed too long; his manhood has long since dwindled into mere transparent craft.

Jimmie is a product of the system.

Competition to make goods at a profit made Jimmie; and it is making his children on the same model. It is a wonderful system for preserving and dignifying human life. Jimmie's children's children are not yet in the mills; they look under "age: thirteen."

The dear, good people of the Consumers' League say at great length in the newspapers that "childhood shall be sacredly preserved for the play ground, the school-room, and the home."

"The home;" that is very touching!

A home which, instead of a mother and a father, has a tired man and woman who go away at daylight and return after dark; that is a home to "sacredly preserve," isn't it?

A life that is a funeral procession from the cradle to the grave; that's lovely, isn't it?

But they're making so much money; the greedy things!

In 1875 or thereabouts they made fifty or sixty dollars a month running one loom. Now they have to run three or four looms and drop out; nervous wrecks, at forty-five,—to earn thirty to thirty-five dollars.

These nasty strikers! Are they never satisfied! Do they expect to live as people live who have an "independent income?"

This is the greatest nation in the world. Last year "we" produced $2,000,000,000 worth of goods more than "we" could consume. Mr. Depew said so.

"Do you think you could consume an extra shirt, Jimmie, out of the $2,000,000,000, if you had wages enough to buy it?"

But Jimmie shook his head; he doesn't understand politics; and he has learned by a long and successful career that if you expect to keep your job there is only one way to vote.

Jimmie never takes any chances.—The Socialist Spirit.

A Call for Concerted Action.

The following resolutions were presented at the April business meeting of the Manhattan Liberal Club. We hope the able editor of the "Public" will accede to the request and that effective means will be adopted to put a stop to the attacks on free speech and free press.

Whereas: Official attacks upon the freedom of speech, press, assemblage, and transmission increase day by day and year by year under many, and more and more numerous pretexts, and

Whereas: The "Torch of Reason," of Silverton, Oregon, has called for concerted action in defense of thought and utterance and has suggested that Louis F. Post, editor of "The Public" of Chicago, be requested to name a committee whose duty it shall be to investigate the conditions which all free men and women lament, and devise ways and means for a united and an effective movement in defense of that which is fundamental to all progress,—liberty of investigation and expression, and

Whereas: "Discontent" of Home, Washington, has promptly, ably and earnestly seconded the suggestion of the "Torch of Reason," now, therefore, be it

RESOLVED: That the Manhattan Liberal Club, in regular session assembled, heartily approves of the suggestion made by the "Torch of Reason" and supported by "Discontent," and hereby joins in calling upon Louis F. Post, editor of "The Public" to select the members of such a committee, of which committee he should be the chairman.

RESOLVED: That copies of this document be sent to the editors named and to the editors of such other papers as the Secretary has reason to think would help in the struggle for unlicensed utterance, whether by pen, types, or voice.

Lucifer, the Lightbearer

M. HARMAN, EDITOR AND PUBLISHER.

PUBLISHED EVERY WEEK AT 500 FULTON STREET, CHICAGO, ILL.

Terms: One year, $1; six months, 50 cents; three months, 25 cents.

Entered at the Chicago Postoffice as Second-Class Mail Matter.

Eastern Representative, E. C. Walker, 244 W. 143d street, New York.

Lucifer—Its Meaning and Purpose.

LUCIFER—The planet Venus; so called from its brightness.—Webster's Dictionary.

LUCIFEROUS—Giving Light; affording light or the means of discovery.—Same.

LUCIFIC—Producing Light.—Same.

LUCIFORM—Having the form of Light.—Same.

The name Lucifer means Light-Bringing or Light-Bearing, and the paper that has adopted this name stands for Light against Darkness—for Reason against Superstition—for Science against Tradition—for Investigation and Enlightenment against Credulity and Ignorance—for Liberty against Slavery—for Justice against Privilege.

Life and "Law" Antagonistic Principles.

In his article, "Natural Law in the Social World," in No. 914, R. B. Kerr says:

"The whole thing is a matter of definition."

Well, then, here goes for a few definitions:

"Law" and Life are antagonistic principles, mutually destructive principles.

Where law reigns, unopposed, uncontrolled, life is not; when life begins law recedes, law yields, gives way to the stronger force.

Nature says to every organism she creates:

"There, I have given you a start; I have done my part, now do yours. Now fight; now kick; now struggle; now disobey; now rebel—and LIVE!

"Or, take the alternative: Submit; obey; conform—and DIE!

"To resist, to disobey, to rebel and to fight is the way of life; the necessary condition of life.

"To submit, to conform, to obey, to yield to authority, is the way of death."

* * *

Law—obedience to law—is stagnation, decay, disorganization, death.

Life is resistance to law, rebellion against law, disobedience to law, nonconformity to law.

Life means individualization; individualization means variation of type; means change, evolution, development, progress.

Law is the denial, the negation, of all these; law is the antithesis, the defeat, the absence of all these.

* * *

"The law of gravitation cannot be suspended," says Friend Kerr.

On the contrary I maintain that the "law" of gravitation is constantly suspended by the life principle in every living organism, and that it is only because of such suspension that organized life becomes possible.

The unopposed law of gravitation would arrest or prevent all life and all motion. Every heart-throb of the tiniest animal organism suspends the law of gravitation. The upright position and various motions of our own bodies during waking hours, are familiar illustrations of the suspension of the law of gravitation.

Even during sleep, when, for the sake of rest and recuperation, our bodies make an apparent surrender to the law of gravitation, the surrender is only partial. The movement of the blood in the veins, the regular though retarded actions of the heart, lungs, stomach, etc., attest the fact that effective revolt against the law of gravitation does not cease during normal sleep.

And when effective revolt seems to have ceased in the vital organism, the triumph of the law of gravitation is but momentary. Immediately the law of LEVITATION—which law is quite as powerful and quite as ubiquitous as that of gravitation—seizes the inanimate organism and scatters its elements to the "four winds," giving them no rest till again combined in other living organisms, and again engaged in their old work of suspending and defeating the law of gravitation through vital action.

This is saying nothing of the theory now quite common, that vital force—life—triumphs over the law of gravitation—law of death—by evolving a newer and more ethereal organism to take the place of the old worn-out body, and that this ethereal organism, utilizing the law of levitation, is far more successful in suspending and defeating the law of gravitation than was its grosser, its visible and tangible parent.

* * *

In the same way, though more limited in methods, the various vegetable organisms suspend and defeat the law of gravitation. When the vital force in the seed sends the stem upward into air and sunshine, and when the circulating sap carries nourishment to leaf and branch and flower, gravitation is suspended and life-force triumphant—temporarily at least.

LAW AS A HYPNOTIZER.

"From Aristotle downward every important political theorist" has helped, consciously or unconsciously, to fix upon mankind a "spell"—the most baleful of all the hypnotic spells, or mental delusions, that have ever afflicted the race, or any part thereof—the spell variously called Law, Government, Supreme Authority, Divine Will, Infinite Intelligence, etc., etc. The name Aristotle—from ARISTOS "the best"—is a good one to conjure by, for did not this greatest of Greek philosophers and logicians have the chief training of young Alexander of Macedon, afterwards known as Alexander the Great? Of course, every imperialist and every sympathizer with imperialism, whether he call himself a Democrat, a Republican, a Socialist, a Theist or simply a "believer in the universality of law," is very fond of quoting Aristotle, if for no other reason than that without Aristotle there would probably have been no Alexander, and hence imperialism would have lacked its most distinguished exemplar.

But why start with Aristotle, as Friend Kerr does? Why not go back just a little further in human history, say to the Egyptains from whom Aristotle very evidently borrowed many of his ideas? The kings and priests of Egypt well understood how to use the power now known as HYPNOSIS. Well they understood how to make the common people believe that the universe is an organism ruled by "law"—by a single will similar to that which governs the human body. Also that collective human society should conform to this cosmic ideal and be governed by a single head, or rather by two centers of nervous energy—the brain, representing civil government, and the heart (solar plexus) representing the religious, the emotional and moralistic government. Hence arose monarchy as the political ideal and hierarchy or theocracy as the religious ideal.

These two ideals, these two politico-religious concepts, have been used to hypnotize, rule and rob the masses of mankind in the interest of an elect, a governing few, ever since the time of the pyramid-builders, and that these ideals are omnipotent, or nearly so, as spells to hold the many in the toils of political and religious thralldom today, is most painfully apparent to everyone who will take time to give the subject a little serious thought.

* * *

The above paragraphs are not intended as a complete answer to the criticisms of R. B. Kerr and others upon my late article reviewing the magisterial dicta of Lyman Abbott upon the "Cause and Cure of Anarchism." Health and strength permitting I hope to show, in another article, wherein my critics agree with nature and reason, and wherein, from my standpoint, they are all in the wrong. I fully agree with Friend Kerr, that much depends upon right definition.

M. HARMAN.

By the Way.

We are glad to note that several of our exchanges showed their appreciation of William Francis Barnard's sonnet on Cecil Rhodes by republishing it; but our pleasure was somewhat dampened by their failure to give Lucifer due credit.

"A Healthy Comparison," for the publication of which Larkin, Govan and Adams were indicted, and which Judge Hanford pronounced "not obscene" when the case came up for trial, is republished in "Discontent," Home, Wash., April 2. About half of the article is a selection from "The Prodigal Daughter," published and sold by us.

Lois Waisbrooker and her friends recently celebrated the seventy-sixth anniversary of her birth. Our readers are aware of the fact that she is under the ban of the postoffice department—or, rather, an inspector thereof—for sending a copy of her paper, "Clothed With the Sun," through the mails. We hope friends of free speech will send a stamp for sample copy of her paper, or, better still, ten cents for a trial, or 50 cents for a year's subscription. Mrs. Waisbrooker is the author of a number of interesting books, among which are "Helen Harlow's Vow," 25 cents; "Perfect Motherhood," $1; "The Fountain of Life, or Threefold Power of Sex," 50 cents, and others. Order of Lois Waisbrooker, Home, Wash.

At a recent business meeting of the Manhattan Liberal Club, E. C. Walker was re-elected president, J. F. Rinn, Alexis C. Fern, and Mathilde Coffin Ford, vice-presidents; Cyrus W. Coolridge, librarian; Dr. Philip J. Reinle, Dr. E. B. Foote, Jr. and David Rousseau, trustees. This club was founded by Horace Greely nearly thirty-two years ago, and if I mistake not, has met weekly ever since. With its free platform it has been a power for good, and its present officers are a guarantee that it will continue its good work. The club meets at 8 o'clock every Friday evening in the German Masonic Temple, 220 East 15 St., New York. We hope our New York readers, and those visiting New York, will visit the club.

I agree with R. B. K.,—' Various Voices"—that Voltairine de Cleyre's work is worthy mention in Lucifer. The omission was unintentional. In making out the list, I hastily turned the pages of the three volumes giving the names of the most important articles that I saw, and my eye did not happen to rest on Miss de Cleyre's name. She has many admirers among Lucifer's readers. From a letter recently received I quote: "I hope Voltairine de Cleyre will, in the near future, give Lucifer an article on the poetry of Anarchism. Her article in 'Free Society,' on the literature of Anarchy, was very good. Her knowledge of poetry is extended, and selections from her large collections would be valuable." Miss de Cleyre is a very busy woman, but I hope she will find time to comply with this request.

J. Herbert Rowell, publisher of "Nichols' Monthly," a family paper recently deprived of second-class privileges by the assistant postmaster general, has issued a broadside statement of his case. Briefly stated, the paper had a subscription list of about 300,000, of whom about 200,000 had received premiums. Thinking it was the premium-giving feature to which objection was made by the department, the publisher made application for re-entry for 115,000 subscribers who had paid their money and received no premium. Application was refused on the ground that the paper was an advertising medium, and not, properly, a literary newspaper. This decision has crushed a flourishing business, and made the publishers bankrupt, besides cheating 300,000 people out of their unexpired subscriptions by rendering it impossible for the publishers to fulfill their contract. A copy of the statement will doubtless be sent on receipt of stamp, by J. Herbert Rowell, Austin, Ill.

This is simply a fresh illustration of the unbusiness-like methods of the postoffice department. The argument is that the one cent per pound rate of postage involves a loss to the government, therefore the government has the right to decide what papers it shall thus charitably assist. It does not seem to occur to our wise law-makers that the simple and just method of settling the matter is to charge a price for postage that will cover cost, whether it be two, four, or more cents a pound, and then attend to its own business—that of carrying the mails—and keep its meddlesome hands and eyes away from the business and editorial departments of the newspapers for whose transportation it is paid.

L. H.

Fables of Asses.

WAR.

Herds of asses were constantly meeting, and disagreeing about territorial rights, feeding privileges, the enslaving of weaker ass herds, universal supremacy, and many other things; and finally from words in too great abundance they came to blows, setting about each other right lustily; kicking individually and in bodies, and trying to do each other all the harm possible. In these contests many were killed, while countless numbers were maimed for life. After some hours of conflict the tribe which was striving most successfully, that is surrounding, hurting, or killing the greater number, was declared the victor, and the defeated tribe thereupon gave up the rights which happened to be in dispute. This manner of settling matters speedily became vastly popular, as it gave full outlet to certain "natural" propensities and helped amazingly to settle the population question. The cost was seldom or never counted, so indifferent were all concerned to anything that interfered with their love of strife. How could asses be expected to reason upon their action and perceive that slaughter did not determine truth, that many things which they were quarreling over were not worth a thought, and that the rest could be settled to stay settled only by consideration, attention to justice, and a sense of the dependence of each upon all and of all upon each? An ass is an ass.

VACCINATION.

A dread epidemic broke out in Assdom, and thousands of asses fell victims to its ravages. Panic reigned supreme. Some asses made double sacrifices to their god, others fled to far regions, many ate of varied strange herbs of reputed virtue in the cure of disease, while countless thousands gave themselves over to despair and inaction. Pestilence stalked through the land almost undisturbed. Authority moved at last, and professional curers of disease began to reconsider their methods of treating the pest. One thing after another was tried experimentally, and many succumbed under the tests, but it was of no avail, asses young and old continued to die, and hundreds of new cases were reported each morning. However, pestilences wear themselves out in time, and so it proved with this one; but just as the ravages of the disease were beginning to lessen, an ass wise in his own estimation announced that he had found a sure cure for it. He said that if he were permitted to introduce the poison of one disease into the blood the other epidemic disease would not take hold upon the person thus infected. On the principle of any port in a storm, many asses submitted to the operation; more of them survived than of those who were afflicted with the pestilence, and the man of wisdom was hailed as a new savior and given all honor. To this day asses are vaccinated; it would be unreasonable to expect asses to see that it was a doubtful advantage to exchange one disease for another and let a living death supersede a sudden one. And besides, how could asses know that pure water, pure food, sanitary living places, healthful habits, and general cleanliness were preventatives of disease, and would render cures superfluous? An ass is not an especially gifted being mentally.

LOVE.

Very early in the history of ass life the relations of the sexes became matters of doubt and troubled discussion. A certain aggressive propensity on the part of the males, complemented by a disposition to yield on the part of the females, threatened to plunge the entire community into a condition called love. Now the production of wealth as well as its distribution was carried on in such a way and under such limits that the few got most of it while the many, who did nearly all the work, got very little, and were in consequence poorly provided with provender in the shape of thistles. Young asses were all the time being born in large numbers, and each one had a mouth to be fed. It could not be denied that love was legitimate, but it was seen that in order to preserve the existing state of things restrictions and regulations would have to be placed upon its acts. Moral and religious asses also protested that without fit restriction love would lead the whole ass world to forget its sinful state and be far too happy. Stringent legislative action was determined upon, and love was to be permitted only under certain conditions and within certain rules. The result disappointed expectation; for though laws innumerable were made, love still went on in the same way as before, except that often it was secret, and that those who were ashamed of it substituted something else for it, the which was recognized as legitimate by law. But unnatural and forced relations went on day by day; loveless unions brought unloved offspring, and the whole tone of character was lowered by the consequent dissatisfaction and duplicity, as might have been expected. The official remedy for this new trouble was to shut the eyes. How would an ass know that the fault was not with love, but rather with the law? An ass could not be expected to handle so subtle a matter with credit to himself. An ass is long of ears, but short of brains.

FASHION.

The aristocracy of Assilonica, no sooner had it become differentiated from the common herd, by reason of its wealth and culture, began to wear its ears, mane, and tail in a manner unlike that followed by a vast majority of working asses, and which distinguished it in no unmistakable way from the rest. The common herd, prone to worship the "upper classes," made haste to imitate to the best of its ability the peculiar garb cultivated by the favored ones, and studied their postures, accent, and general manner in the hope of occasionally being mistaken for one of them by a less favored ass. But as fast as a given fashion was adopted by the common herd the leaders of society discarded it and devised a new and still more distinctive one to take its place. So asses in general were always a little behind the times, and only succeeded in making themselves ridiculous to those who knew because they were to the manner born. Nevertheless, fashion ruled in the minds of all asses; the males were constantly observing the latest effects shown in the fashionable feeding places, while the females were all absorbed in the modes affected by their privileged sisters. All surplus thistles were given up constantly in return for work done on ears, tail, or mane. A perfect fever of imitation took possession of the tribe and kept it. The asses could not see that fashions were often merely the result of effort to be distinguished from the "mob" and that they would change as often as they were imitated. But who could expect a living exponent of assininity to know himself for the fool that he is, and see that to give up his rights to wealth and happiness creates differences in the shape of classes whom his sole privilege is to imitate? The head of an ass is not shaped for thought. IRONICUS.

James Philip Galvin.

It is not our custom to say much in Lucifer on the occasion of the death—or transition—of our friends; but many of Lucifer's readers were friends of Mr. Galvin, and to them something more is due than the mere statement of his death.

He was born in England, 36 years ago, of Irish-Catholic parents. His mother died when he was seven years of age. In thirteen years she had borne seven children, of whom four survived her. Jamie, as his friends familiarly called him, was sensitive, delicate in health, and "mother's boy," her confidante, to a degree unusual for so young a child. His father was healthy, strong, careless. The family were poor, and in their limited quarters, in long and sleepless nights "Jamie" heard things that filled his childish soul with indignation, and started him on the road which led to a belief in the ownership by woman of her own person, and her equal rights with man in the home.

After the mother's death the children went to live with an aunt, already overburdened with a large family of her own, and from early childhood they earned their living in the cotton mills. From seven to ten or twelve years of age, "Jamie" worked half a day in the mill, and went to school half a day. Then he quit school and worked ten hours a day in the mill. At seventeen years of age he came to the United States, and the struggle for existence was not so hard. In spite of hardships he was always cheerful, hopeful and helpful.

Our real acquaintance with him began when he, with his sweetheart Etta, lived at our home for a few months five years ago. Hers was a loving, lovable nature, and we were deeply interested in her and in him. She was dying of consumption, and he cared for her devotedly. She died after a gradual decline of about two years. He was with her day and night anticipating her every wish. Whether he contracted the disease from her, or whether he carried the seeds from his delicate childhood, it would be difficult to say; at any rate after a heroic struggle of five years for life he succumbed and died at our home, quietly, painlessly, and unconsciously, on Sunday, April 13.

He wished to live, and believed he would live. To him continued existence was a fact.

Much of interest and value could be written of the lives of these truly mated lovers, but publicity might be painful to them, were they conscious of it. Whether they continue to live, or whether they have sunk into a dreamless sleep, I do not know, but I am glad that they lived and glad that they were my friends. L. H.

VARIOUS VOICES.

H. W. Hunt, Federalsburg, Md.:—I see by my wrapper that my subscription to Lucifer expired some weeks ago. Enclosed find one dollar to help keep the flag of freedom flying in the face of the foe. A crisis is on us, and we who believe in truth for each and justice for all must stand by our colors.

Anna J. Austin, Pa.:—A friend writes to me saying, "Send to Mr. Harman for 'Our Worship of Primitive Social Guesses' by E. C. Walker, and if it does not contain the best and truest ideas you ever saw, I will return you its cost and postage." Well, I have read some excellent things lately and if this is still better I certainly want it so I herewith enlcose 15 cents which my friend informs me is the price of the booklet.

J. F. Phar, Davenport, Wash.:—I have just read No. 913 of your valuable paper. I am much pleased with it and its contributors, especially Albert Strout who pictures true to life the Socialist agitator. I am taking more papers now than I can read, but I desire to help support all papers that open their columns to Socialist writers, therefore I enclose 25 cents for trial subscription. Will do better later on.

R. B. K., Phœnix, B. C.:—I am sorry that in your list of important contributions to Lucifer during the last three years, you never mention V. de Cleyre. Her recent article on "The Death of Love" was the most beautiful gem of English prose that has been produced for many years. Assuredly Voltairine is one of the immortals, and I only hope the world uses her better than it is in the habit of using such people during their lives. Sometimes she is a little slipshod, but when at her best she writes as one of Homer's goddesses might have done.

A. A. L., Newbury, Mass.:—I want one of Mrs. Craddock's books. As you say, they have cost her dear. Whatever they are, the point is that society tries to determine that teaching shall not pass the limit of its crass ignorance. I cannot, try as

I will, get the point of view of "people," or guess how they can look on simple things with such distorted vision. To mind one's own business and let other folks alone seems one of the simplest things in life. By the way, Dr. Foote's "Home Cyclopedia" surpasses anything I've ever seen in dealing with some vital questions—and the only one that seems to be written for the female as well as the male.

H. J., Abilene, Tex.:—Find enclosed 20 cents for which please send me literature from Bargain Counter as named herewith. If any or all are not in stock, send something of your own choosing instead. I find more and more to stimulate thought and sharpen the appetite for truth in the class of literature advertised in Lucifer, and I expect to keep ordering from time to time, as my limited means will permit. Am pained to read of death and sickness in the Lucifer family. How can I get photograph of the Harman family?

[Portraits of M. H. and L. H. appear in "Personal Rights and Sexual Wrongs;" that of L. H. in "Bar Sinister and Licit Love," (see adv. columns). We also have a few photographs of our home in which M. Harman, his daughter Lillian, and grand-daughter Virna appear. The cost of this is 35 cents.]

DO YOU EVER THINK

Of the fate of the Prodigal Daughter? The Prodigal Son is forgiven and received with rejoicing—why should different treatment be accorded to his sister? For a vivid, true picture of the conditions in homes and factories which produce thousands of so-called fallen women every year, read "The Prodigal Daughter; or, The Price of Virtue," by Rachel Campbell.

SPECIAL OFFER.

This valuable work sent free on receipt of twenty-five cents for a thirteen week's trial subscription to Lucifer the Light Bearer. M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton Street, Chicago, Ill.

A "BARGAIN COUNTER" LOT OF LITERATURE AT HALF-PRICE OR LESS.

The following is a partial list of books and pamphlets which have accumulated on our shelves, time worn and dusty. In order to get them out of our way we have marked the price down. Never more than half price, and in many instances less than a quarter of publisher's prices.

Some of these works are out of print, and perhaps you may here find just the pamphlet you have been fruitlessly looking for. Some are clean, but the covers of most are shelf-worn; the inside leaves, however, clean and complete.

In ordering, please state if you wish your money returned in case we are out of the book ordered, or if you will take something else in its place.

An Old Subject in a New Light. Crime, What Shall We Do About It? Charles Houghton, 5c.
Cellular Cosmogony; or the Earth a Concave Sphere. Cyrus R. Teed. 15c.
Catechism on the Science of a Universal Religion. Gabriel Z. Washt. 10c.
Dictionary of Dreams. Dr. R Greer. 21 pages. 10c.
Essays on Deaths and Funerals. A collection of facts and ideas, selected and original, referring to deaths and funerals. Joseph Henry. 10c.
Eureka. How to prevent colds, hay fever, etc., without drugs. 5c.
Everybody Made Happy. C Orchardson. 4c.
Ethanism: or the Wise Men Reviewed. 2 9 p. 20c.
Fallacies of Faith. As Promulgated by two Methodist preachers. Perseus. 10c.
Free Trade. E. H. Heywood. 15c
From Pandemonium to Elysium. James Thierry. 10c.
Government Analyzed, Col. J. R. Kelso 40c.
Hints About the Teaching of Natural History. 4c.
How the Devil—Satan—Beat the Salvation Army. 5c.
Law and Gospel. G. W. Foote. 3c.
Liberty, Political, Religious, Social and Sexual. A. F. Tindall, 5c.
Practical Co-operation. E C. Walker. 5c.
Social Ethics. E. H Heywood. 15c.
Silver songs. Words by H. V. Taylor. Music by J. B. Herbert. 5c.
Some Little Rhymes Composed at Odd Times, Wallace E. Nevill, 5c.
The Sabbath. M. Farrington. 5c.
Tobacco: Its Effects on the Human System, by Dr. William A. Alcott, with notes and additions by Nelson Sizer. 149 pages. 15c
The Book of the Hour. Illustrated. Albion Sivell. 264 p. 12c.
The Raggard Circular. The Pirate's Plot and the Road to Ruin. B. S. Heath. 5c.
The Last Song of Jeremiah Hacker. 5c
The Infidelity of Ecclesiasticism a Menace to Civilization. Prof. W. M. Lockwood. 10c.
The Living Temple, or the House We Live In. (Astrological). C. T. H. Benton. 15c.
The Railway Problem; with many illustrations and diagrams. A. B. Stickney. 20c.
What Diana Teaches. Count Tolstoi. 1c.
What Constitutes a Freethinker. H L Green. 1c.
What Is America's Relation to England? Evaleen Laura Mason. 5c.

Address M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

For Rent: Large, light, furnished room. Inquire of Lillian Harman 500 Fulton, St. Chicago.

915.

If these figures correspond with the number printed on the wrapper of your Lucifer, your subscription expires with this number.

If a copy of Lucifer fails to reach you, please order by number or date.

Lucifer will not be sent "by return mail" unless stamps for postage are enclosed with order.

TO NEW SUBSCRIBERS: Your subscription is paid to No. If you have not ordered Lucifer, a friend has subscribed for you. If you do not wish to receive it, please notify us by card or through your postmaster. If you wish to become a regular subscriber you will confer a favor by renewing before the expiration of your trial subscription.

LOVE'S COMING OF AGE.

This is a book with which few will wholly agree, but which nearly every one can read with profit and enjoyment. The subject is the relation of the sexes in the past, present and future, and it is treated with absolute frankness and fearlessness by a writer who unites a broad outlook, a strong grasp of his subject and a charming literary style. The following table of contents will indicate the line of thought followed by the author.

The Sex Passion.
Man, the Ungroom.
Woman, the Serf.
Woman in Freedom
Marriage: a Retrospect
Marriage: a Forecast.
The Free Society.
Some remarks on the early star and sex worships.
Notes—On the Primitive Group Marriage; Jealousy; The Family; Preventive Checks to Population.

The book will be printed on extra book paper and handsomely bound in cloth. The price, including postage to any address will be one dollar. Copies will be ready about April 20

Address M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

RADICAL LITERATURE.

For Sale by M. Harman, 500 Fulton St., Chicago.

A CHAMBERMAID'S DIARY. By Octave Mirbeau. Translated from the French by Benj. R. Tucker. 466 pages. Handsomely bound in cloth. $1.50.

ADVANCEMENT OF SCIENCE. Prof. John Tyndall's famous inaugural Address before the British Association for the Advancement of Science, with the articles on Prayer which so stirred the religious world. Cloth, 50c; paper, 25c.

AGE OF REASON (The). Presentation edition. Part I reprinted from the first English edition. Part II corrected by M. D. Conway's edition. With Paine's own account of his arrest in Paris. Photogravure portrait from the Romney painting exhibited in London. Containing also portrait from the Jarvis painting; from the Peale painting, known as the Bonneville portrait, representing Paine as a member of the French Assembly, and a half-tone of the Peale painting. Large half-tones of the house presented to Paine, in which he lived in New Rochelle, and of the monument and surroundings. Yorktown, Pa., scenes; also eight half-tone views of buildings, etc., associated with Paine's life in Paris, and other illustrations. With Preface, Chronological Table, Notes, Index, etc. Printed on antique wove paper, large octavo, wide margins, gilt edge. Special cover design in colors. The finest and most accurate of all editions. Boxed. Postpaid, $1.

AGE OF REASON. Thomas Paine. Cloth, with steel plate portrait, 75c; paper 15c.

ANARCHISM: Its Philosophy and Ideal. Peter Kropotkin. 5c.

A PHYSICIAN IN THE HOUSE. A New Family Medical Work, by Dr. J. H. Greer. This book is up-to-date in every particular. It will save you hundreds of dollars in doctors' bills. It tells you how to cure yourself by simple and harmless home remedies. It recommends no poisonous or dangerous drugs. It teaches how to regulate health and life by safe methods. It teaches prevention—that it is better to know how to live and avoid disease than to take any medicine as a cure. It is not an advertisement and has no medicine to sell. It has hundreds of excellent recipes for the cure of the various diseases. It has 16 colored plates showing different parts of the human body. The chapter on Painless Midwifery is worth its weight in gold to women. The "Care of Children" is something every mother ought to read. It teaches the value of Air, Sunshine, and Water as medicines. It contains valuable information for the married. This book cannot fail to please you. If you are looking for health by the safest and easiest means, do not delay getting it. It has eight hundred pages, is neatly bound in cloth, with gold letters, and will be sent by mail or express, prepaid to any address, for $2.75.

A PLEA FOR THE NEW WOMAN. May L. Collins. With large new half-tone portrait. 10c.

A TALE OF THE STRASSBURG GEESE. B. B. Kerr. Together with The Strike of the Strassburg Geese (C. W. Coolridge), A Traveler's Tale (B. B. Kerr), The Cat's Story (Emile Zola) 5c.

AUTONOMY, SELF-LAW. A fragmentary dissertation on the right to non-invasive self-hood. 5c.

A WEEK ON THE CONCORD AND MERRIMAC RIVERS. Henry D. Thoreau. 25c.

BALZAC'S SERAPHITA: The Mystery of Sex. Mary Hanford Ford. Cloth. $1.

BIBLE TEMPERANCE. E. C. Walker. Proving that Liquor Drinking is Commended, Defended and Enjoined by the Bible, and giving close reference to the chapters and verses. 10c.

BORNING BETTER BABIES—Through regulating reproduction by controlling conception. E. B. Foote, Jr., M. D. 25c.

CAUSES OF HARD TIMES, and the Money Question. Albert Chavannes. 5c.

CHICAGO CONFERENCE OF TRUSTS. Speeches, debates, etc.; 81 portraits of delegates, including Benj. R. Tucker, Laurence Gronlund, William Jennings Bryan, Samuel Gompers, Louis F. Post, and George Schilling. 428 pages. 50c.

CHILDREN OF THE ITALIAN POOR. Paola Lombroso. 5c.

DARWIN'S, THE. (A novel.) Elmina D. Slenker. 50c.

DAWN OF CIVILIZATION, The; or, England in the Nineteenth Century. J. C. Spence. 178 pages. 25c.

DAWN-THOUGHT ON THE RECONCILIATION. By J. Wm. Lloyd. An inspired treatise that, with insight and solution, touches all the questions of life, love, soul and society. A prose-poem, simple enough for a child to enjoy, deep enough to make a philosopher think. The largest creed, the most generous theory, the gladdest gospel. A book of life. A religion of growth and the overlook—freedom and optimism. Read it. Printed in old style antique type, rubricated with portrait of the author. In three editions, de luxe, plain and paper bound. Prices, $1.25, $1.00 and 50c.

DIGGING FOR BED-ROCK. Camp-meeting talks and sketches by Moses Harman. 5c.

ECONOMICS OF ANARCHY. A Study of the Industrial Type. Dyer D. Lum 15c.

DR. FOOTE'S SOCIAL SCIENCE SERIES OF DIME PAMPHLETS—Wedlock; Scientific Marriage; Heredity; A B C of Temperaments; Powell and his Critics; Physiological Marriage; Physical Improvement of Humanity; Causes of Disease, Insanity, and Premature Death; A Step Backward. Any of the above books sent by mail on receipt of price.

DYNAMIC THEORY OF LIFE AND MIND. An attempt to show that all organic beings are both constructed and operated by the dynamic agencies of their respective environments. By James H. Alexander. Over 400 Illustrations, 37 chapters, 1,067 pages and a 3-column index of 11 pages. Cloth, $2.75.

EAST TENNESSEE SKETCHES. A and Cecile Chavannes. 25c.

EIGHT-HOUR MOVEMENT. John P. Altgeld, ex-Governor of Illinois. 5c.

EVOLUTION AND REVOLUTION. Elisee Reclus. 5c.

FALSE CLAIMS OF THE CHURCH. John E. Remsburg. Analyzing and refuting the claims made by churchmen that the Christian religion has promoted morality, learning, temperance, science, freedom, and showing how she has opposed progress. Paper, 10c.

FIELDS, FACTORIES, AND WORKSHOPS; or, Industry Combined with Agriculture and Brain Work with Manual Work. Peter Kropotkin. 380 pages. 40c. Postage, 5c.

FREE PRESS. Arguments in support of demurrer to the indictment of M. Harman, E. C. Walker and Geo. Harman, under the Comstock law. G. C. Clemens and David Overmyer. 25c.

GIORDANO BRUNO. His Life, Teachings, and Martyrdom. Burned for heresy in Rome, Feb. 17, 1600. 5c.

GOD AND THE STATE. Bakounine. 25c.

GOVERNMENT ANALYZED. A remarkable work by a remarkable man, Col. John R. Kelso, the history of whose life reads more like romance than reality. This book is the last of a series—Deity Analyzed, Bible Analyzed, Universe Analyzed. By the author's death this work was left unfinished, but was completed by his wife, Etta Dunbar Kelso. 529 pages; cloth. Price reduced from $1.50 to $1.

HILDA'S HOME. Rosa Graul. "An o'er true tale" of woman's wrongs and of one woman's struggles and final triumphs in her attempt to secure justice for herself and for her sisters. 426 pages. Cloth, $1; paper, 50c.

HUMAN RIGHTS. J. Madison Hook. 5c.

IMPORTANCE OF HONEST MONEY. A simple, scientific, invariable standard of price. James Adleman. 250 pages. Paper, 50c.

IN BRIGHTER CLIMES; or, Life in Socioland. Albert Chavannes. 25c.

INFIDEL DEATH-BEDS. "Idle Tales of Dying Horrors." G. W. Foote. Brief biographical sketches of 97 Freethinkers, including Bruno, Buckle, Byron, Comte, Darwin, George Eliot, Gibbon, Goethe, Hegel, Harriet Martineau, Mill, Paine, Madame Roland, George Sand, Shelley, Voltaire, Zola. 25c.

IN HELL AND THE WAY OUT. A plan of Social Democracy outlined. Henry E. Allen. 10c.

INSTITUTIONAL MARRIAGE. From the viewpoint of an exiled Mormon. M. Harman. 5c.

JOHN'S WAY. A domestic radical story. Elmina D. Slenker. 25c.

KAREZZA. Ethics of Marriage. A bold, brave book, teaching ideal marriage, rights of the unborn child, a designed and controlled maternity. Sample pages free. $1.

KORADINE. A story for young and old. Extra levant cloth. $1.

LIBERTY IN LITERATURE. Testimonial to Walt Whitman. "Let us put wreaths on the brows of the living." An address delivered in Philadelphia, Oct. 21, 1892, with portrait of Whitman. Containing also Col. Ingersoll's address at the funeral of Walt Whitman, Mar. 30, 1892. Cloth, 50c; paper, 25c.

LIBERTY. Political, Religious, Social, and Moral. A. F. Tindall. 5c.

LITTLE LESSONS FOR LITTLE FOLKS. Elmina D. Slenker. Boards, 40c.

LIZZIE MELTON. A story of a self-reliant girl. By Albert Chavannes. With portrait of author. 25c.

LUCIFER. Third Series, Vol. III. (1889). Cloth, $1.25. Postage, 25c.

MAGNETATION, and Its Relation to Health and Character. Albert Chavannes. 25c.

MARRIAGE. An address by Dr. Juliet H. Severance. 5c.

MARRIAGE IN FREE SOCIETY. Edward Carpenter. A dainty little gift book. 25c.

MARTYRDOM OF MAN. Winwood Reade. This is a very interestingly pictured synopsis of universal history, showing what the race has undergone—its martyrdom—in its rise to its present place. It shows how arrogant religion have been oppressive factors in man's struggle for liberty; and the last chapter, of some 150 pages, describes his intellectual struggle from the animal period of the earth to the present, adding an outline of what the author conceives would be a religion of reason and love. Winwood Reade's reputation as a writer of fine English, of deep study and careful reasoning, needs no word of praise. Cloth, $1.

MEN, WOMEN AND CHANCE. William Platt. Containing two tales: The Ascent to the Heights, and Blind Men and Seeing. Well printed on heavy paper and artistically bound in cloth. Gilt top, rough edges. 75c.

MEN, WOMEN, AND GODS. Helen H. Gardener. With preface by Col. R. G. Ingersoll. Contents: Introduction by Col. Ingersoll. Men, Women, and Gods. Vicarious Atonement. Historical Facts and Theological Fictions. Appendix. Address to the Clergy and Others. Letter to Cleveland Congress of Freethinkers. The only authorized and correct edition. Large 12mo, heavy-toned paper. Portrait. This volume is by far the best writing this famous author ever did. It is very fine. Cloth, $1; paper, 50c.

MISSING LINK IN MODERN SPIRITUALISM, THE. A. Leah (Fox) Underhill. With portraits of the Fox Sisters and others. 478 pages. Cloth. Reduced to $1.

MORIBUND SOCIETY AND ANARCHY. Jean Grave. Cloth, 50c; paper, 25c.

MOTHERHOOD IN FREEDOM. M. Harman. 5c.

MUTUAL BANKING. A simple plan to abolish interest on money. William B. Greene. 10c.

NORA, A DOLL'S HOUSE, and GHOSTS. Ibsen. Cloth. 75c.

OUR WORSHIP OF PRIMITIVE SOCIAL GUESSES. E. C. Walker. Contents: Love and Law; The Moloch of the Monogamic Ideal; The Continuity of Race-Life, and Tyranny; Food and Sex Fallacies, a Criticism; When Men and Women Are and When They Are Not Varietists; The New Woman: What is she? What will she be? The Sex Hiding behind Its Own Mistakes; Bishop Potter's Opinion of Divorce; Love: Its Attraction and Expression: Is She an Honest Girl? Lloyd, Platt, and the Pitiful Facts; Social Radicals and Parentage; Anthropology and Monogamy; Love and Trust Versus Fear; Reflections upon Reading William Platt's "Women, Love, and Life." 15c.

PERSONAL EXPERIENCES of Two American Anti-Vivisectionists in Various Countries. Phillip G. Peabody. With an Appendix by Col. R. G. Ingersoll. Reduced from 25c to 15c.

PERSONAL RIGHTS AND SEXUAL WRONGS. Oswald Dawson. 25c.

PRIESTLY CELIBACY. Prof. A. L. Rawson. Together with The Incoherence of Transition (E. C. Walker), Motherhood in Freedom (Moses Harman), The Greatest Sin (an allegory, H. B. Kerr), and Jealousy, the Foe of Freedom (Oscar Rotter). 25c.

RELIGION AND RATIONALISM. The relation of each to human liberty. The religionist, fabricy that he has the whole truth, is logically opposed to investigation, and he appeals to physical force to arrest the discovery of new truths. What Rationalism is, and how many believe themselves Freethinkers who are only unbelieving or disgruntled religionists. The necessity for separate organizations and a division of labor among reformers. The Secular Union. Important facts and arguments in a compact form. E. C. Walker. 5c

RIGHTS OF MAN. Thomas Paine. Answer to Burke's attack upon the French revolution. A political treatise of great general value, as advocating liberty and democracy. Contains the fundamental principles of true republicanism. Cloth, 50c; paper, 25c.

RUBAIYAT (Quatrains) OF OMAR KHAYYAM. Edward FitzGerald's interpretation; with original introduction; special cover; latest version. Paper, 10c.

RULED BY THE TOMB. A discussion of free thought and free love. Orford Northcote. 10c.

SCIENCE IN STORY; or, Sammy Tubbs, the Boy Doctor, and Spondle, the Troublesome Monkey. For young folks. Dr. E. B. Foote. Five volumes in "red line," presentation edition. $5. Five volumes, plainer binding, $2.50; all in one volume, $2.

SEXUAL PHYSIOLOGY FOR THE YOUNG. Being the fifth volume of "Science in Story." 250 pages; cloth bound; illustrated. 50c.

SONGS OF THE UNBLIND CUPID. J. Wm. Lloyd. Edition de luxe. Verses printed from Kelmscott type upon deckle edged hand made paper of cerulean tint. Initial letters, ornaments and borders are in red; initial letter and sketch upon the opening page are hand painted in water colors. Covers brown, with choice of silver or gold lettering. Very handsome gift book. 50c.

STUDIES IN SOCIOLOGY. In four parts: I., The Law of Happiness; II., The Law of Individual Control; III., The Law of Exchange; IV., The Law of Environment. Albert Chavannes. 25c.

TALKS ON NATURE. Important information for both sexes. Dr. J. H. Greer. 192 pages. Reduced from 50 to 25c.

THE ABOLITION OF MARRIAGE. John Beverly Robinson. Together with Isabel's Intention (Mariette), Reminiscences of Berlin Heights (A. Warren), and The Sexes and Love in Freedom (Oscar Rotter). 25c.

THE BAR SINISTER AND LICIT LOVE, including the first biennial proceedings of the Legitimation League, and a full account of the Lanchester case, with full-page half-tone pictures of Edith Lanchester, and Lillian Harman. Handsomely bound in green and gold covers. 287 pages. 25c.

THE BLUE LAWS OF CONNECTICUT. Taken from the Code of 1650 and the public records of the Colony of Connecticut previous to 1665. With an account of the persecution of Witches and Quakers in New England, and some extracts from the Blue Laws of Virginia. Copiously illustrated. 25c.

THE BRITISH BARBARIANS. Grant Allen, the greatest of the Hill-Top pioneers. Dedicated "to all who have heart enough, brain enough, and soul enough to understand it." Handsomely bound in cloth. 281 pages. $1.

THE WOMAN WHO DID. Grant Allen. A powerful story of a refined, educated and high-spirited woman who dared to defy the tyranny of church and state and ignore the institution of marriage. Handsomely bound in cloth. $1.

THE NEW HEDONISM. Grant Allen. The opening paragraph says: "The old ascetism said: 'Be virtuous and you will be happy.' The new hedonism says: 'Be happy and you will be virtuous.'" In another place the writer says: "In proportion as men have divested themselves from mediæval superstitions have they begun to perceive that the unclean and impure things are celibacy and asceticism; that the pure and beautiful and ennobling thing is the fit and worthy exercise of the reproductive function." Paper covers; 96 large pages; twelve copies, 50c. Single copy, 5c.

THE CHICAGO MARTYRS. The famous speeches of the eight condemned anarchists in Judge Gary's Court, and Altgeld's reasons for pardoning Fielden, Neebe and Schwab. 25c.

THE COMING WOMAN. Lillie D. White. 5c.

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM. Principles and platform of organized Freethought. 10c.

THE EVOLUTION OF MODESTY. Jonathan Mayo Crane. A consideration of the origin of clothes and the reasons why people wear clothing. Here are a few questions it answers: What is modesty? What is the cause of it? What is the use of it? What is the cause of the feeling of shame? Is nudity immodest? What is the cause of the notion that it is shameful to expose some parts of the body? Why do not all peoples agree as to what parts of the body should be concealed? 5c.

THE FOUNTAIN OF LIFE; or, The Threefold Power of Sex. Lois Waisbrooker. 50c.

THE FUTURE OF SECULARISM. When will the Cause of Justice triumph? 5c.

THE PRODIGAL DAUGHTER; or, The Price of Virtue. Rachel Campbell. Together with Legal Wifehood (Lucinda B. Chandler), Life's Gifts (Olive Schreiner), and Marriage—What It Was and Is; Will the Coming Woman Marry? 25c.

THE REVIVAL OF PURITANISM. E. C. Walker. 10c.

THE RIGHTS OF CHILDREN. R. B. Kerr. Together with What Are Women Here For? (E. B. Foote, Jr., M. D.), The New Martyrdom (Lillian Harman), and The Will, from the French of Guy de Maupassant. 25c.

THE SANCTITY OF MARRIAGE. As viewed from a moral and sanitary standpoint. A protest against the present demoralizing management of that institution, its effects upon offspring and its influence upon educework. Price reduced from 25c to 10c.

THE SECRET INSTRUCTIONS OF THE JESUITS. A reprint from an edition published in 1626, quoted by the highest authorities as authentic. The work is redolent of Jesuit craft and is a plain index to the underhand working of that order against the welfare of individuals and society. 15c.

THE STATE: ITS HISTORIC ROLE. Prince Peter Kropotkin. 10c.

THE TROUBADOURS AND COURTS OF LOVE. J. F. Rowbotham. Cloth. 250 pages. $1.50. Postage, 15c.

THE UNWOMANLY WOMAN. Lizzie M. Holmes. Together with That Great Fraud, Yclept Society (Moses Hull), Virgin Soil (George Egerton), and Normal Sexual Action (Ernest Wilson). 25c.

THE WORM TURNS. Revolutionary Poems. Voltairine de Cleyre. 10c.

THOMAS JEFFERSON. His Political, Social and Religious Philosophy. Gen. M. M. Trumbull. 5c.

TOKOLOGY. A book for every woman. By Alice B. Stockham, M. D. Illustrated. Tokology teaches possible painless pregnancy and parturition, giving full, plain directions for the care of a woman before and after confinement. The ailments of pregnancy can be prevented as well as the pains and dangers of childbirth avoided and women need not go down to death giving birth to children. English, German or Swedish. $1.25.

TRAVELS IN FAITH. By Capt. Robert C. Adams. His mental experience from superstition to rationalism. Cloth, 75c; paper, 25c.

VACCINATION A GIGANTIC CRIME. Samuel Darling. 15c.

VINDICATION OF THOMAS PAINE. Col. R. G. Ingersoll. Dealing with all the slanders brought against the name and fame of Paine. A little pamphlet which every admirer of Thomas Paine should have by him for reference. Paper, 15c.

VITAL FORCE. Magnetic Exchange and Magnetation. Albert Chavannes. 25c.

WHAT THE YOUNG NEED TO KNOW: a Primer of Sexual Rationalism. Edwin C. Walker. "Let us cease to be ashamed of what makes us men, of what makes us women, of what gives us the kisses of lovers and the embracing arms of babes." Paper covers; 42 large pages. 10c.

WHAT IS RELIGION? Ingersoll's last public address, delivered at the meeting of the Free Religious Association in Boston on June 3, 1899. To which is appended the poem, "Proclamation of the Free," the last verse written by the great Freethinker. 5c.

WHEN LOVE IS LIBERTY AND NATURE LAW. John Badcock, Jr. 25c.

WHY THE UNDERTONE? An open letter to Judge Gary. Sarah E. Ames. 10c.

WOMAN, CHURCH, AND STATE. Matilda Joslyn Gage. This is Mrs. Gage's last and crowning work. Every woman ought to read it. Every liberal woman and man will want it. A burning protest against the tremendous wrong done woman by the church, which controlled the state. It ought to be widely read for the good it will do. Cloth, $1.50; paper, 75c.

WOMAN: Four Centuries of Progress. Susan H. Wixon. 5c.

WOMAN IN THE PAST, PRESENT AND FUTURE. Woman was the first human being that tasted bondage. Woman was a slave before the slave existed. The basis of all oppression is economic dependence on the oppressor. A slave of the slave. This work is August Bebel's masterpiece. 8vo. 379 pages. 50c.

Address M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

Price 2 Cents.

LUCIFER.

THE LIGHT-BEARER.

THIRD SERIES, VOL. VI., No. 17. CHICAGO, ILLINOIS, MAY 8 E. M. 302. [C. E. 1902.] WHOLE No. 916

THE WOLF AT THE DOOR.

There's a haunting horror near us
  That nothing drives away—
Fierce lamping eyes at nightfall,
  A crouching shade by day;
There's a whining at the threshold,
  There's a scratching at the floor—
To work! To work! In heaven's name!
  The wolf is at the door!

The day was long, the night was short,
  The bed was hard and cold,
Still weary are the little ones,
  Still weary are the old;
We are weary in our cradles
  From our mother's toil untold;
We are born to hoarded weariness
  As some to hoarded gold.

We will not rise! We will not work!
  Nothing the day can give
Is half so sweet as an hour of sleep;
  Better to sleep than live!
What power can stir these heavy limbs?
  What hope these dull hearts swell?
What fear more cold, what pain more sharp,
  Than the life we know so well?

To die like a man by lead or steel
  Is nothing that we should fear:
No human death would be worse to feel
  Than the life that holds us here:
But this is a fear no heart can face—
  A fate no man can dare—
To be run to earth and die by the teeth
  Of the gnawing monster there!

The slow relentless padding step
  That never goes astray—
The rustle in the underbrush—
  The shadow in the way—
The straining flight—the long pursuit—
  The steady gain behind—
Death-wearied man and tireless brute,
  And the struggle wild and blind!

There's a hot breath at the keyhole
  And a tearing as of teeth!
Well do I know the bloodshot eyes
  And the dripping jaws beneath!
There's a whining at the threshold—
  There's a scratching at the floor—
To work! To work! In heaven's name!
  The wolf is at the door!

—Charlotte Perkins Stetson.

Betrayed Themselves.

"They had been married a year before anybody knew it, and even then their secret was discovered only by accident."

"Indeed?"

"Yes; one evening at a card party they thoughtlessly played partners, and the way they quarreled let the whole thing out."
—Detroit Free Press.

An Infamous System.

Under the above heading the Cleveland Press denounces an outrage which is perpetrated in all cities, as follows:

A Cleveland police court officer goes to the police director and says: "Our police court fund is depleted. Be good enough to raid the Tenderloin, so that with the money assessed (by the honorable court) upon the women of shame, police court salaries can be paid."

The officer doesn't hesitate to admit that police court funds have been and are maintained by such means.

The meanest, vilest thing that struts in the streets by day and prowls in the alleys by night is the creature shaped like a man who lives on the shame of women. This beast is called a pander, and it is a title that covers more infamy than any other that usage has legitimatized for the expression of baseness and merited contempt. There may be sympathy and pity for the woman. There is nothing save loathing, hatred and contempt for the thing in male attire that leaves its slimy trail in her dark life and would befoul hell itself.

What better than such is the city that takes the Tenderloin woman's money simply to pay salaries of its officers of justice?

The judge upon the bench, the prosecutor and the clerk are paid through the returns from prostitution.

Here are a pretty hard question and a pretty bold statement. But they fit the case.

Think of it! The man upon the judicial bench, put there to decide upon the freedom or imprisonment of men, women and children, cannot get his salary until the clerk runs out and persuades the high police authorities to pull in the fallen women so the court can take, for his pay, part of the proceeds of their sin. The prosecutor and clerk, no matter how just and honorable men they may be, are in the same boat. Their pay is a matter of division of the spoils resulting from the "business" of shame.

How can judge and prosecutor be just, honorable, impartial, merciful, toward the woman arraigned, when they must look upon her and her business as the source of their own pay?

Does not the system tend toward making panders of the officers of justice? Pretty strong language, but it is the naked truth, and it is high time that the naked truth, armed with two-edged sword, unequivocal and merciless mowed a swath through police court affairs.

Now, while enough has been said therein concerning the process of filling police funds by squeezing the Tenderloin, there are other ways in which to help that fund, ways not tinted by the rouge of lust, but bearing the features of just plain, every-day, ordinary robbery.

Recently, an old man named Hagesfeld shot one Allen. After the shooting, Hagesfeld walked to the station house, where he found the officer in charge telephoning a description of the shootist to the different precincts. "Why, I am the man," said Hagesfeld, "and I came to give myself up."

Did you notice in the newspaper accounts that two patrolmen immediately "placed Hagesfeld under arrest" and did you wonder why it took two patrolmen to arrest a man who was standing in front of a third officer, asking to be locked up, after having walked a mile or so for the purpose of being locked up? Why? Why, you will find the "arrest" of that old man credited on the docket to two patrolmen. There'll be two patrolmen's witness fees in police court, in grand jury room and in criminal court room, when the trial comes off, and there'll be a corresponding boom in some police fund. And, Mr. Inquisitive Taxpayer, you're lucky that some "regular witness" wasn't around, too, when the law's hard hand, in the shape of three officers, was laid on that self-surrendered old man; that you don't have to pay fees toward some fund because some "good fellow" hanger-on at the station happened to witness that blood curdling "arrest."

The grand jury is at work on police court affairs. Let it smite not only the stealers, but the system which degrades the court and offers a premium to rascality of all sorts!

A Forgiveness.

"I want a forty-four calibre revolver."

Mechanically the clerk handed out several of the weapons, from which the young man, after scrutinising them all carefully, selected one, and then purchasing a box of cartridges also, left the store hurriedly.

"He looks rather excited," thought the clerk as he replaced the revolvers in their case.

That evening a young man paced up and down Broadway, his overcoat buttoned up tight to his throat and both hands thrust down deeply into his pockets. He scanned the faces of the passers by, earnestly, scrutinizingly; apparently eager to see every one. It was the young man who had bought the revolver.

He was seeking another young man to kill him. A young man, formerly a friend, who professing love had won the affection and confidence of his sister, and then had basely left her upon discovering that she was about to give birth to a child. He would shoot him on sight.

All the evening he had been walking up and down the street nursing his wrath; his pride too, was wounded to the quick. That anyone should win his dear sister's heart and then treat her so basely he had never before dreamed a possibility. The man who had done it was a beast! He should die like a dog wherever he was met. Without warning, without giving him a moment in which to speak he would fire, and kill him.

How his heart burned!

From time to time as he loitered near the known haunts of his enemy he nervously stepped into bars and ordered and drank large glasses of whiskey; hastening out then to look up and down the street, fearful that the monster had eluded him. He began to feel intoxication, and his feet grew weary with walking; his vigil had already lasted three hours. Yet he kept on.

After a while, when the hour was very late and his legs would hardly hold him, he turned into a side street and entered the wine room of a brilliantly lighted saloon. Throwing himself into a chair by a table he ordered a drink from the sleepy waiter.

A woman sitting opposite leaned toward him and said, "Pay for one for me too?"

"Yes, if you want; anything;" he said, looking at her compassionately.

The woman immediately arose and came and sat down near him. "What's the matter? You look tired," she ventured.

"Matter?" he said, desperately, "I am waiting to kill a man."

"Waiting to kill a man?"

"Yes," he reiterated.

"You're foolish; you are drunk. Don't do it."

The drinks were brought in and they both drank.

"He ruined my sister," the intoxicated man said in a wild whisper.

"Did he?"

They looked at each other, a long look.

Then the woman spoke; and it was a woman's torn though sympathetic heart that gave utterance to the words, not the ribald lips of a prostitute. She was not the thing that she had been a moment before. She was transfigured; a forgiving angel.

It was memory.

"Did you ever ruin a girl?" were her words.

The question burnt him like fire.

"Did you? Tell me."

It was like coming back to consciousness. He hung his head; he did not answer.

"I thought possibly you had; many men do. That is how I came here," she went on softly and sadly.

"Did you ever think that you loved a girl" she said after a little; "and did the girl return your affection, trusting you completely; tempting you perhaps by her very innocence? Did she meet all your desires for pleasure in her society open-heartedly and without care or doubt? Did you forget yourself again, and once again; not intending any evil; carried away by your passion? Did the woods and fields which you sought with her, with their birds, streams, and flowers, intoxicate you both; till all was forgotten in the mad desire of youth? It is all very common, it is all very wicked, and so sad! I have forgiven such things; I think I understand. Those who revenge are worse than the guilty. You must not kill. This man and you are brothers. You should seek him out, and say; 'I forgive you as I hope she forgives me whom I deserted after my madness.'"

The man was quite sober; he had changed. He sat looking at her in silence. There were tears in his eyes.

"I know it is hard" she said. "The dishonor, the shame, the suffering; the social code is cruel. Your sister will suffer, but she will forgive. She loved the man of course. But we all sin; and because we sin we must forgive. I am lost; I am sunk low indeed; perhaps it is easy for me to forgive, but I have forgiven."

"Will you walk with me as far as the ferry?" said her companion in a subdued voice; I will go home to Hoboken. Take this money, and walk with me as far as the ferry."

"I will walk with you" she said; but pushed the bill back toward his hand.

They went out into the street, and he offered her his arm. She took it; and silently they walked down toward the Barkley St. slip together.

The boat was waiting. The woman walked on to the deck with the young man, and together they stood at the side looking down into the water.

"Do you forgive him?" she asked again.

He did not answer, but turned away his head and then laid it down upon the rail and sobbed.

"Think of your own action" she continued. "You had no malice in your heart. It all happened before you knew; you tried to be strong, but you were weak. And she was weak. She loved you. If you only had really loved her! Ah, life is full of suffering!"

The man was weeping aloud.

"Where is your revolver?" the woman asked as the whistle hoarsely sounded for the departure of the boat for the Jersey side.

He took it from his pocket and handed it to her.

She dropped it into the water, and it sank at once.

"Thank you," he turned to say.

She who forgave had left the boat.

He was alone.

"I forgive," he whispered through his tears.

W. F. Barnard.

"Mr. Gumstick is one of the most self-sacrificing men I know of," said Miss Cayenne.

"In what way?"

"He takes chances on becoming utterly demoralized in order to find out what books he ought to prevent other people from reading."—Washington Star.

Who Are the Fallen?

BY KATE AUSTIN.

This morning while looking over several copies of Lucifer preparatory to sending them out, I came across Dr. Clymer's review of "The Prodigal Daughter," in which he makes a strong plea for a society to save "fallen women," asserting that there are "societies to prevent cruelty to animals, children etc., while this class of women are looked upon as worse than beasts," and that he thinks that "though a woman may have fallen, she is better than the best of beasts, therefore is worth saving." The good doctor then closes by saying, "If you think this is a work that an honest and noble man should help, do your part, as I am trying to form such a society, not to make money, but to help fallen humanity."

Now I do not question the sincere motive that actuates Dr. Clymer to attempt this movement. But he has advanced an idea that always arouses my bitterest antagonism, and that is, that there is a class of unfortunate beings known as fallen women whom another class in society who pass muster as immaculate creatures of a different mold, should stoop to lift out of their degradation. Let me say this, the only way to help a so-called fallen woman is to refuse point blank to recognize that she is fallen. Those people who ostracise and set apart a fellow being for an act which takes two of opposite sexes to consummate, who consider one fallen, while they tacitly absolve the other, are responsible for the fallen women. They are the ones who need missionaries, not our sisters. Why should we consider a woman "fallen" who sells her body and not consider the party who buys such merchandise as "fallen"? And for morality's sake why not start a society to save fallen men? Why not do a little missionary work among the males who create a market for prostitution? It is a law of the business world that "The demand regulates the supply," and in the world of sex prostitution there are two forces that create both the demand and the supply, one is the restriction of the sexual nature by law and custom, the other is economic slavery. In a free society man could not prostitute his sex nature, he would not have the opportunity any more than he would have the desire. It is as natural for the sexual passion to seek a mutual response as it is for water to run down an incline; any deviation from this law is caused by outside interference.

To force water by artificial means to flow in opposition to its natural law, is often a great help to man in various ways, but to force the sexual nature, to pervert it from following its original law leads to dire results always. Then let us spend all our energy in tearing down false ideas, and the institutions that support industrial slavery, and not build houses of refuge or societies to save "fallen women." There is no reason on earth why a female prostitute cannot be as good a citizen as a sexual prostitute of the male class, no reason on earth if we will treat her with the respect that we accord to her partner in prostitution. But we insult her when we talk of "homes of refuge," of "saving societies," we place her by these very acts on a lower level, separate her from ourselves and her fellow prostitute, brand her as a fallen being who needs uplifting by us "goody goody" people, and therefore degrade her in her own eyes and instill a secret hostility against her fellow creatures in her heart. The prostitute is no fool, she knows that frequently far worse characters than the despised woman of the street ornament our churches, our ethical societies, and compose that class of city fathers who regulate her business. She sees them honored by all, she sees the "good Samaritan" who condescends to talk of "uplifting" the "fallen woman" walking arm in arm with those who buy the merchandise of the scarlet woman, treating them as equals, often as superiors. Our sister sees all this and curses this false society and drowns her care in drink, and looks with contempt at a "saving society."

What wonder? Who among us will admit that we need a saving society? This outcast woman is as human and sensitive as we are in this respect. There is but one way for us to do, and that is to treat every prostitute as an equal, look neither above nor below, but direct in two eyes that mirror our reflection, talk of things that will interest her, whether it be of the flavor of beer, the colors she loves to wear, or of books or people. Never presume to preach to her, the victim, nor dare advise her to seek a new method of livelihood. If she should, it might throw a dear respectable woman friend of yours out of a job. This is not merely sarcasm, but the truth. The iron law of necessity forced her into this industry.

If you would preach, go to the class who are the real criminals, the mental prostitutes, the men and women of high intellect who sell the use of their brains for place and power and gold. Here is the source of that foul spring that burst forth, ages ago, in the swamps of ignorance to pollute humanity. The women or men who prostitute their sex natures, injure only themselves. The class who prostitute a noble intellect not only degrade themselves, but degrade and enslave the race through their false teachings. They alone are the truly "fallen," the arch murderers of natural gifts that would glorify and free the race if honestly used. There can be no refuge from vice under conditions that constantly create vice. The only help we can render our sisters who have fallen under the ban of society, is for each one of us, publicly by speech and action to refuse to ostracise them, treat them as equals, as we do the male prostitute, and without doubt, we will soon hear the last of "fallen women." But if we organize a saving society we openly place them in an inferior position and ally ourselves with that hypocritical society which has ever crucified woman and held her as responsible for man's vices as well as her own.

As for refuges for illegitimate mothers, the less said the better. I personally know a number that I would not dare insult with my pity, let alone offer them a refuge. They have proved themselves abundantly able to care for themselves and infants. In regard to a refuge for married women I am not so positive. Many of them are in such sore need of a refuge that I would not withhold assistance from such a project.

Neither Old Nor Young Master.

How often, when one lesson is sought to be conveyed, there is another marked. This thought has often recurred with reference to an excerpt once made in these columns from a London Freethought paper, which played on the sacrifice of young women in marriage to old roues. Mr. Foote of England was the writer or editor and the attempted moral of the article was that if the young woman had her due she would be married to an unspoilt man. But what a mixture that is of fact and fancy. According to the experience of many women marriage to a young and vigorous husband without more than average self-restraint is very apt to prove disastrous to the young wife, and therefore many of them would almost prefer the man of more advanced years even with a broken constitution,—as a choice of evils.

The fallacy is sufficiently obvious to a large number of Lucifer's readers when they read of marriage according to the ideal of the London Freethought paper. Love would indeed be a blessing, to be shared with an unspoilt man, but the loss of independence is never a blessing; the license to abuse is an evil which will soon come to be realized as being greater in proportion to the physical demands of the oppressor who enjoys the license.

While there are no good lovers among the men who have wasted their energies to an extreme, the incautious admission of current matrimonial fiction is very false teaching for young women. Neither the experienced roue nor the owner practically certain to employ the privilege of abusing and destroying love, but personal independence first and last is the cardinal truth for women capable of love. Tak Kak.

We should avoid whatever may display bad feeling, and attend with civility to what may be addressed to us; all hearts are conciliated by politeness and affability.—Socrates.

Lucifer, the Lightbearer

M. HARMAN, EDITOR AND PUBLISHER.

PUBLISHED EVERY WEEK AT 500 FULTON STREET, CHICAGO, ILL.

Terms: One year, $1; six months, 50 cents; three months, 25 cents.

Entered at the Chicago Postoffice as Second-Class Mail Matter.

Eastern Representative, E. C. Walker, 244 W. 143d street, New York.

Lucifer—Its Meaning and Purpose.

LUCIFER—The planet Venus; so called from its brightness.—Webster's Dictionary.

LUCIFEROUS—Giving Light; affording light or the means of discovery.—Same.

LUCIFIC—Producing Light.—Same.

LUCIFORM—Having the form of Light.—Same.

The name Lucifer means Light-Bringing or Light-Bearing, and the paper that has adopted this name stands for Light against Darkness—for Reason against Superstition—for Science against Tradition—for Investigation and Enlightenment against Credulity and Ignorance—for Liberty against Slavery—for Justice against Privilege.

Militarism, Nationalism, Imperialism.

A few years ago at Valley Falls, Kansas, I attended a "Fourth of July Celebration," at which the principal speaker was "General" W. W. Guthrie, somewhat famous at that time as a Republican orator. The usual preliminary reading of the "Declaration of Independence" had been omitted because of the fact that it was found, when too late, that no copy of said document had been brought for use on this occasion.

Mr. Guthrie's first remark was that he regarded this omission, or forgetfulness on the part of the management, as a good omen, a hopeful sign of the times. That the Declaration of Independence, as a political guide, was now obsolete, and should be laid on the shelf; that the principles advocated therein had been shown, by actual trial, to be visionary, unsound and impracticable, but that, on the other hand, the principles of government advocated by Alexander Hamilton had stood the test of trial, and were now being adopted more and more by wise and enlightened American statesmanship.

* * *

I have lately been reading one of the "Beacon Biographies," edited by M. A. DeWolfe Howe—a small but very compact and comprehensive as well as very impartial, just and fair history of the life, character and work of Alexander Hamilton, written by James Schouler, and find it one of the most interesting books I ever read. Not that Mr. Schouler has told us anything really new in regard to Hamilton, or the part he played in shaping the political destinies of the United States. All this had often been done before, and by historians quite as able as Mr. Schouler, but, as I see it, no one has so clearly shown the connection between Hamiltonism and the policies that for the past forty years have been dominant in this country, and that today are being practicalized, magnified and glorified to an extent that even Hamilton himself, with all his predilections and aspirations towards centralization, militarism and imperialism, would not have deemed possible with such material, such men, as those with whom he worked, struggled, schemed, fought and died.

A very few and brief quotations will show what is here meant. Mr. Schouler tells us, as all readers of history know, that Hamilton was a consistent, an ardent advocate of monarchy pure and simple; that he "avowed frankly the belief that mankind were vicious, except a few choice spirits, and should be ruled on that theory; that the ideal monarch of men was one hereditary, clothed with so much power that he would not be seeking more;" that "he admired such barriers as that of the British House of Lords, and praised the British Constitution as an ideal form of government—as one which, to be sure, we could not attain, but which supplied the model to which we should approach as nearly as possible—this proposed scheme of union and the speech which advocated it in convention [the convention that framed the unamended Constitution of the United States] disclose Hamilton's ideal philosophy of American government as cherished by him to the end of his life."

It has often been said that Hamilton exerted a controlling influence in the work of formulating the plan of Constitution proposed by the convention of 1787. But Hamilton's views were too frankly in favor of aristocracy and of hereditary monarchy to be generally popular with men who had so lately thrown off the yoke of British monarchy. As truly said by Schouler. "It was Madison who, most of all, had framed the scheme" proposed by that convention, but when it came to the more difficult task of securing the adoption of that plan by the thirteen colonies it was Hamilton's work through the "Federalist" and as a member of the New York convention of 1788, that did more than the work of any other man to overcome opposition and to secure the final adoption of the then unamended Constitution of the United States.

Then, as now, New York was the pivotal state in American politics, and the New York convention, including Governor Clinton himself, was opposed to the plan proposed by the Philadelphia convention of the previous year. In this New York convention Hamilton exerted a controlling influence, and did more than any one else to overcome the opposing majority and secure the adoption of the Federal Constitution.

Speaking of the series of essays called the "Federalist," originated and mainly written by Hamilton, Schouler says,

> During the momentous canvass into which the discussion was now projected, these essays did more to win the sober sense of America's whole community than all other documents of the brief campaign together. And even at this lapse of more than a century, despite the corrections of long experience in its argument, 'The Federalist,' as a literary masterpiece, written with warmth of coloring and in a tone singularly free from arrogance or party cant, stands as the best compact and popular commentary upon the unamended American Constitution ever written.

With clearer prevision than that possessed by Franklin, Washington and many older heads who signed the compromise document, Hamilton foresaw that this constitution could and would be made the shelter and shield behind which the forces of aristocracy, of monarchy, of militarism and imperialism could establish and entrench themselves, and thus would be gained by strategy the advantages that could not be achieved by frank and open avowal.

* * *

HAMILTON AS HE REALLY WAS.

That such of our readers who have had neither time nor opportunity to study the history of the compromise between liberty and despotism called the Constitution of the United States, may be made better acquainted with the real character of the man whose masterful genius did more than that of any other man to secure its adoption, I herewith insert a few more paragraphs from the admirable work of Mr. Schouler—pages 58, 64, 66 and 68:

"I am a warm advocate," he writes in 1774, "for limited monarchy, and an unfeigned well-wisher to the present royal family."

It was not the subjection of the old colonial sentiment that he aimed at, but to eradicate state autonomy altogether.

Hamilton had an innate passion for military prowess, which was nourished by his boyish studies and confirmed by his young experience as a Revolutionary officer. He cherished something of the Roman conception of governing by conquest. When toward the close of this eighteenth century, military authority, at a seeming crisis, was lodged presumptively in his hands, he was eager to make a strong use of it; and the fatalism of armed dictator and arbiter pervaded his vision to the end of life. He was not averse to managing with the aid of a regular soldiery to keep society in order. He even inclined to the use of that potent engine for promoting political changes deemed desirable, in defiance, if need be, of strict law. His letters of 1780 show him reproaching the old Congress for ruining its influence and credit with the Continental troops in making them dependent on each state individually rather than upon all the states as a whole. He avows his eager wish to secure the attachment of the army to congress and bind its officers to service by substantial ties, with "a solid Confederation and a permanent army," as his epigrammatic expression for Continental security.

Hamilton maintained, for America's possible emergencies and his own, the standards usual among military officers. The duel by which he died was not the only one in which he ever figured; for we see him in 1778 serving as second in an affair of the kind for a young Carolinian and fellow-officer, thus committing himself, just at majority, to that false code of honor by whose ordeal he finally perished. While still on Washington's staff, in 1779, he demanded satisfaction from a civilian for circulating a tale to his dishonor; but the wary elder whom he addressed sheered off in his written responses from a challenge, until Hamilton threw up the controversy in disgust.

Hamilton would have kept the common people from the direction of affairs. Many other leaders of his day distrusted democracy and a government "out of doors," but Hamilton's dislike in that respect was radical and inveterate. The friends he chose and consorted with were of the better sort. They were "good men," as he would express it—the rich, the intellectual, the socially powerful; and, while in practice he would have blended government interests strongly with those, besides, of a money-making middle class, he disdained more and more the populace, the majority of inhabitants, and avowed his contempt for the constraint of common opinion upon rulers.

In these brief paragraphs, the real Alexander Hamilton stands revealed, and the question naturally forces itself upon us,

Would a man of such mental characteristics, such desires and such aspirations, work as he worked to achieve the triumph of the Federal Constitution if he had not foreseen that under its banner the interests of militarism, of aristocracy, of imperialism, would be safeguarded and secure?

Well may the careful observer of current events say that Hamilton's favorite policies have been realized beyond all reasonable expectation.

As very forcefully put by Mr. Schouler—page 92—"The twentieth [century] now opens with Hamilton's ideas upheld by an administration and party in full possession of government, more eagerly and with more insistence upon a constitutional right than Hamilton himself would have dreamed of advocating."

If, for instance, Hamilton could have foreseen our preparation for taking part in a British coronation, also the policy of the present administration in the Philippines and could have fore-heard the speech of President Roosevelt delivered at a banquet in Washington, May 2, in regard to the army and navy, and the responses thereto, would he not have been moved to say—paraphrasing the words of one of old, "I have seen the travail of my soul, and am satisfied?"

* * *

WILL THERE BE A REACTION?

That Hamiltonism is now in the saddle in this country, and that Jeffersonism has been compelled to take a back seat, needs no demonstration. The doctrine that all men have the right to be self-governing is now one of the legends of the past with us, and government by conquest, by absorption, by "assimilation," by militarism, by imperialism, is openly avowed, defended and practicalized by the rulers of the land once consecrated to freedom and equal rights by the heroes of the American Revolution.

Will this policy be crystallized into permanence?

Will it increase in strength from year to year until the last vestige of civil and personal liberty is destroyed?

Or will there be a reaction?

Will the people of this country awake, as from a nightmare dream, and reassert and once more practicalize the principles of the Jeffersonian Declaration of Independence?

That the signs of such reaction, of such awakening, are not wholly wanting I for one am very glad to see. All over the land voices of earnest and eloquent protest are being heard. Conventions are being held in many places; in thousands of papers, daily, weekly and monthly, the pens of earnest writers, women as well as men, are getting in their work. Books by the score are being published and circulated by the million, asking their readers whether the craze of militarism has not lasted quite long enough.

Among these books I wish to call particular attention to one entitled "Captain Jinks Hero," by that well known reform writer, Ernest Crosby. Having read the book from cover to cover I can testify that the statement of the publishers, Funk and Wagnalls, N. Y., is not overdrawn when they say,

> This is a satirical novel upon the military history of the United States since the outbreak of the Spanish War. Sam Jinks, the hero, is no stuffed figure used for purposes of burlesque, but a real creation, with a personality that is even lovable. He is first shown as an innocent country lad whose taste for military affairs is planted by a chance Christmas gift of lead soldiers, cultivated by training in a boys' brigade, and firmly established by a career at "East" Point. "Hazing" at West Point is satirized in the most complete and clever fashion, and its incidents are furthermore made to serve a vital purpose in developing the motif of the entire story, viz., the similarity of militarism and savagery. A love romance beginning at East Point gives heart interest to the book. There is not a phase of militarism that is not satirized with the cleverest wit.

Much more with equal truth might be said in its praise, as for instance the force and clearness with which it is shown that the women of our country are largely responsible for the craze of militarism, and that so long as women worship "regimental shoulder straps," and so long as they go wild over the returning soldier, especially such soldiers as have been guilty of exceptionally fool-hardy exploits, just so long will war be popular, and just so long will men continue to seek occasions for achieving military distinction.

If the satirical novel called "Don Quixote" could break the spell, as is claimed, and destroy that form of military mania known as "knight errantry," may we not hope that "Captain Jinks Hero" will do much towards breaking the spell, the hypnotic delusion, without which wars like those in the Philippines and South Africa would be impossible?

Just now, "Captain Jinks Hero," our typical soldier in the Philippines and in China, and "Tommy Atkins" the typical British soldier in Africa and the Orient, seem drunk with human blood—as told by Rudyard Kipling in his satirical poem, the last two verses of which read as follows:

> When at 'ome he may content himself with whiskey,
> But if once he lands upon a foreign shore—
> On the Nile or Irrawady—
> He forgets his native toddy,
> And he takes his 'arf-and-'arf in blood and gore.
> Blood and gore.
> And he takes his 'arf-and-'arf in blood and gore.

He's a connoisseur of every foreign vintage,
From the claret of the fat and juicy Boer
To the thicker nigger brand
That he spills upon the sand,
When he draws his 'arf-and-'arf in blood and gore,
Blood and gore,
When he draws his 'arf-and-'arf in blood and gore.

M. HARMAN.

The Postoffice at Home, Washington, Threatened.

Again the people of Home are the victims of the usurpation of power vested in government officials. Our postoffice is summarily closed by an order to the postmistress to forward to Washington the office paraphernalia. This forces us to go to Lake Bay—an office that transacts less than one-half the business ours did. The fact that neither of the thirteen postoffices nearest us is a depository of a publication or distributes half as much mail as ours is ample proof of malice aforethought, or woful ignorance on the part of the manipulators of this outrage.

We fear it is a trick to exclude "Discontent" and "Clothed With the Sun" from the mails when application is made for entry. If denied it will be a severe blow to us; however, it will not discourage, but on the contrary stimulate us to further endurance and more vigorous action. Men actuated by honorable motives, loyal to truth and justice and endowed with energy enough to grapple with and overcome the huge stumps and logs of Washington are not dismayed by the petty malevolence of sectarian and partisan bigots who may so manipulate our social machinery as to confiscate our property and banish us to a desolate island; but Home is a beacon light for future generations while the systems that now oppress us will go down the ages as synonyms of hypocrisy, duplicity, rant, cant and sickly sentimentalism and be lost in unremembered nothingness.

The following lines are apropos to this occasion:

"Speak thy thought out bold and bravely, fear not old opinion's saws!
What thy soul in clearer vision sees revealed in nature's laws,
Speak out now and speak out ever though all men shall hate thy cause.

Speak thy thought out loud and clearly, if they're words of honest worth,
Though all hell excite men's passions, they will footing find on earth.
If they are but words of folly, 'tis as if they had not birth.

What we are has root in thinking; thought e'er flies in freedom's van.
Shackle, bind, restrain from action, despots cry since time began,
While from martyr's scaffold gory, thought's fruition comes to man.

Stake and fagot, rack and dungeon, have no terror for the brave,
Though the scaffold glooms before thee, words of truth are what we crave
For the truth lives on forever. Aye! while power is in the grave.

Heed no strumpet clothed in ermine speaking for the state its word
As against mankind's progression. Tell the boastful, purse-proud lord
That a vital word once spoken hath a life beyond his sword.

If the church put gyves on thinking, curse the church and break its spell:
If the state contract thy being, curse the state and ring its knell;
Speak thy thought out bold and bravely spite of all the fiends of hell."

Yours for that liberty which can only be born of intelligence.
Home, Wash. JAS. W. ADAMS.

A Protest.

C. L. James does me an injustice in No. 912 by coupling my name with that of D. W. Groh and describing us as "these advocates of opposing fads." I have not discussed Mr. Groh's fad, not by one word or allusion. Moreover, I have no fad in medicine. Permit me therefore to protest against a slander which might affect my professional reputation.

Monterey, Mexico, April 26. SANTIAGO WALKER, M. D.

The American Press-Writers' Association.

The "Boston Traveler" has priated several fine letters on Mrs. Craddock's case from J. T. Small Francis B. Livesey and M. Abbott Brigham, and the following appeared April 26.

THE CRADDOCK CASE.

In New York, on March 17th, Mrs. Ida C. Craddock was sentenced to three months' imprisonment on the charge of obscenity. The judge said: "I have never before known of such indescribable filth." What a pity the man cannot turn his gaze inward and view the nauseous slime and corruption of his own mind and heart! Mrs. Craddock simply sees the horrors of an iniquitous system and tries to point a remedy, to save men from the fatal results of their own lusts, and to teach a higher morality and the sacredness of human rights. She aims to teach a system whereby a young girl may not be so vilely outraged on the very threshold of matrimony that her love turns to disgust and hatred, and her whole nature cries out in rebellion against the institution. I dare venture to assert that Ida Craddock never wrote an obscene sentence in her life. I don't believe she ever entertained an impure thought. And any man, be he judge or juror, who can find filth in her honest expression of thought must be at least of soul kin to Anthony Comstock, who is said to bandage his eyes whenever he takes a bath for fear of contaminating his "purity" by a sight of his "impure" body! When will the public cease to elect men to rule over them who have such narrow conceptions of the true dignity of life and its source? "Unto the pure are all things pure." If the sex nature is so vile, how can honor and purity exist on earth as sex is the foundation of all life? It is not unreasonable to believe that such men as those who convicted Mrs. Craddock must be afraid that her teaching will interfere with the free indulgence of their own passions. Else why should they condemn her for counselling self-control and moderation? Something should be done immediately to secure her release. Her pen is needed in the work of education along the lines of sex reform.

ELSIE COLE WILCOX.

Whatcom, Washington.

NEW MEMBERS.

270af. Delano, L. L., Atlantic, Iowa.
271b. Rudman, Mrs. Lottie C., Galva, Ill.
272b. Jerauld, Nellie M., 525 Pulliam St., Atlanta, Ga.
273b. Kemp, W. P., 1134 O St., Lincoln, Neb.
274b. Hoover, Harry, Carnegie, Pa.
275a. Morton, James F. Jr., Home, Wash.
276b. Harter, Karl L., Box 44, Sparr, Fla.
277b. Harter, Maud J., Box 44, Sparr, Fla.

CORRECTIONS.

32a. Clymer, Dr. R. S., 832 Lexington Ave. New York, N. Y.
186b. Hymoolen, A., White, S. Dakota.
212a. Loomis, Mrs. Hulda L. Potter, 30 Vernon St., Springfield, Mass.
269b. Lavers, A. B., 18 Shute St. Everett, Mass.
A. C. ARMSTRONG, 17 Leroy St., Dorchester, Mass.

Imperialism.

The following is a copy of a letter I have just received from C. C Post:

LOIS WAISBROOKER, Home, Wash.

It is true that Helen's mail is still returned marked "fraudulent." It is also true that the postoffice officials assert that they have the authority to do the same with anybody's mail at their option, and that they do not need to have any evidence offered by the accused, and that a decision of the courts that the party has violated no law is not binding on the Department.

One of our United States Senators will shortly introduce a bill in the Senate to amend the act under which the department claims its authority, and a congressman will introduce it in the House, but no bill can come before the House for discussion even until reported from a committee, and the chairman of committee on postoffice and post roads says openly that the committee will not report a bill to amend the law. In the Senate we stand a little better chance, but it will be a hard fight. All the same, the fight has to be made, and some means must be found to bring an influence to bear on congressmen and senators to force them to action. Yours truly. C. C. POST.

Seabreeze, Florida.

VARIOUS VOICES.

Philip G. Peabody, Boston, Mass.:—It is just after midnight (of the 28,) and I have work before me that must keep me at my desk all night, having just arrived from an absence in Europe and Africa; but I must at once write to express my very deep regret at learning of the illness of your father and my hope that the world may be spared his loss for years to come. Please give him my very kindest wishes.

Laura J. Langston, Paonia, Colo.:—Enclosed find 10 cents for Lucifer for five weeks and "Institutional Marriage." Some good friend has sent me several copies of Lucifer—the first I have ever seen. I am trying to further promote the good work by loaning mine and requesting their return that I may loan them to others.

Amicus, Springfield, Mass.:—Find $2 enclosed, for which please send me Carpenter's "Marriage in Free Society," and "Sexual Physiology for the Young." Also send sample copies of Lucifer to enclosed addresses, and put the remaining $1 to credit of my subscription to Lucifer. I am quite in sympathy with most of Lucifer's teachings, yet I have long desired, if not out of place, to write you a letter much like that of K. B. (Canada), which you published on p 117 of No. 914. Concentrated effort in one direction, it seems to me, will accomplish most, and one sometimes wishes to send sample copies of Lucifer to persons who would be beneficially influenced by its discussion of the marriage question, but who are repelled by an equally liberal consideration of other questions.

I enclose, as usual, some clippings, from which possibly you may cull some thought or quotation of value or encouragement to readers of Lucifer. I am very sorry to hear of your illness, and close with wishes of immediate recovery.

So Miss Ellen M. Stone is to go on a lecture tour in this country and tell what she knows of brigands. Are those who subscribed so generously for her ransom to get any of their money back? Or will the lady missionary's gratitude take the shape of a lively sense of box-office receipts yet to come?—N. Y. Sun.

DO YOU EVER THINK

Of the fate of the Prodigal Daughter? The Prodigal Son is forgiven and received with rejoicing—why should different treatment be accorded to his sister? For a vivid, true picture of the conditions in homes and factories which produce thousands of so-called fallen women every year, read "The Prodigal Daughter; or, The Price of Virtue," by Rachel Campbell.

SPECIAL OFFER.

This valuable work sent free on receipt of twenty-five cents for a thirteen week's trial subscription to Lucifer the Light Bearer. M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton Street, Chicago, Ill.

VICE: ITS FRIENDS AND ITS FOES

BY EDWIN C. WALKER.

CONTENTS:—Brotherhood of Men; The Recognition of Facts; Folly of "For Men Only," Definition of Vice; Horrors of Prostitution; Abnormal sexuality; Errors of Fathers, Mothers and Teachers; Persecution Does Not Reform; Prostitution and the Crusaders; The "Spotting of the Heathen;" What are the Effects of Raids and Crusades? The Economic Side of the Problem, Party Politics in Vice Crusading; In What Does Prostitution Consist? Some Causes of Prostitution; Two Kinds of Prostitution Compared; The Opponents of Divorce; "Purifying" the Tenements; Action for Advanced Women.

WITH APPENDIX:—The Wanderings of a Spirit; Our Fair Civilization The Folly and Cruelty of It All. Price 15c.

Address M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

Evenings With Emerson, Whitman, Tolstoi, Ingersoll and Herbert Spencer. Critical and Conversational Readings. Fuller detail by personal interview. Scope and methods, if in conceived, are to a large extent, original. An entire evening each week to an author. JOHN M. CLARKE. 777 Walnut St. Chicago.

For Rent: Large, light, furnished room. Inquire of Lillian Harman 500 Fulton, St. Chicago.

916.

If these figures correspond with the number printed on the wrapper of your Lucifer, your subscription expires with this number.

If a copy of Lucifer fails to reach you, please order by number or date.

Lucifer will not be sent "by return mail" unless stamps for postage are enclosed with order.

TO NEW SUBSCRIBERS: Your subscription is paid to No. If you have not ordered Lucifer, a friend has subscribed for you. If you do not wish to receive it, please notify us by card or through your postmaster. If you wish to become a regular subscriber you will confer a favor by renewing before the expiration of your trial subscription.

LOVE'S COMING OF AGE.

This is a book with which few will wholly agree, but which nearly every one can read with profit and enjoyment. The subject is the relation of the sexes in the past, present and future, and it is treated with absolute frankness and fearlessness by a writer who unites a broad outlook, a strong grasp of his subject and a charming literary style. The following table of contents will indicate the line of thought followed by the author.

The Sex Passion.
Man, the Ungroven.
Woman, the Serf.
Woman in Freedom
Marriage: a Retrospect
Marriage: a Forecast.
The Free Society.
Some remarks on the early star and sex worships.
Notes—On the Primitive Group Marriage; Jealousy; The Family; Preventive Checks to Population.

The book will be printed on extra book paper and handsomely bound in cloth. The price, including postage to any address will be one dollar. Copies will be ready about April 20.

Address M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

RADICAL LITERATURE.

For Sale by M. Harman, 500 Fulton St., Chicago.

A CHAMBERMAID'S DIARY. By Octave Mirbeau. Translated from the French by Benj. R. Tucker. 466 pages. Handsomely bound in cloth. $1.50.

ADVANCEMENT OF SCIENCE. Prof. John Tyndall's famous Inaugural Address before the British Association for the Advancement of Science, with the articles on Prayer which so stirred the religious world. Cloth, 50c; paper, 25c.

AGE OF REASON (The). Presentation edition. Part I reprinted from the first English edition. Part II corrected by M. D. Conway's edition. With Paine's own account of his arrest in Paris. Photogravure portrait from the Romney painting exhibited in London. Containing also portrait from the Jarvis painting; from the Peale painting, known as the Bonnerville portrait, representing Paine as a member of the French Assembly, and a half-tone of the Peale painting. Large half-tones of the house presented to Paine, in which he lived in New Rochelle, and of the monument and surroundings, Yorktown, Pa., scenes; also eight half-tone views of buildings, etc., associated with Paine's life in Paris, and other illustrations. With Preface, Chronological Table, Notes, Index, etc. Printed on antique wove paper, large octavo, wide margins, gilt edge. Special cover design in colors. The finest and most accurate of all editions. Boxed. Postpaid, $2.

AGE OF REASON. Thomas Paine. Cloth, with steel plate portrait, 75c; paper 15c.

ANARCHISM: Its Philosophy and Ideal. Peter Kropotkin. 5c.

A PHYSICIAN IN THE HOUSE. A New Family Medical Work, by Dr. J. H. Greer. This book is up-to-date in every particular. It will save you hundreds of dollars in doctors' bills. It tells you how to cure yourself by simple and harmless home remedies. It recommends no poisonous or dangerous drugs. It teaches how to save health and life by safe methods. It teaches prevention—that it is better to know how to live and avoid disease than to take any medicine as a cure. It is not an advertisement and has no medicine to sell. It has hundreds of excellent recipes for the cure of the various diseases. It has 16 colored plates showing different parts of the human body. The chapter on Midwifery is worth its weight in gold to women. The "Care of Children" is something every mother ought to read. It teaches the value of Air, Sunshine, and Water as medicines. It contains valuable information for the married. This book cannot fail to please you. If you are looking for health by the safest and easiest means, do not delay getting it. It has eight hundred pages, is neatly bound in cloth, with gilt letters, and will be sent by mail or express, prepaid to any address, for $2.75.

A PLEA FOR THE NEW WOMAN. May L. Collins. With large new half-tone portrait. 10c.

A TALE OF THE STRASSBURG GEESE. B. R. Kerr. Together with The Strike of the Strassburg Geese (C. W. Coolridge), A Traveler's Tale (R. B. Kerr), The Cat's Story (Emile Zola) 5c.

AUTONOMY, SELF-LAW. A fragmentary dissertation on the right to non-invasive self-hood. 5c.

A WEEK ON THE CONCORD AND MERRIMAC RIVERS. Henry D. Thoreau. 25c.

BALZAC'S SERAPHITA: The Mystery of Sex. Mary Hanford Ford. Cloth, $1.

BIBLE TEMPERANCE. E. C. Walker. Proving that Liquor Drinking is Commended, Defended and Enjoined by the Bible, and giving close reference to the chapters and verses. 10c.

BORNING BETTER BABIES—Through regulating reproduction by controlling conception. E. B. Foote, Jr., M. D. 25c.

CAUSES OF HARD TIMES, and the Money Question. Albert Chavannes. 5c.

CHICAGO CONFERENCE OF TRUSTS. Speeches, debates, etc., of 61 portraits of delegates, including Benj. R. Tucker, Laurence Gronlund, William Jennings Bryan, Samuel Gompers, Louis F. Post, and George Schilling. 626 pages. 50c.

CHILDREN OF THE ITALIAN POOR. Paola Lombroso. 5c.

DARWIN'S, THE. (A novel.) Elmina D. Slenker. 50c.

DAWN OF CIVILIZATION, The; or, England in the Nineteenth Century. J. C. Spence. 178 pages. 25c.

DAWN-THOUGHT ON THE RECONCILIATION. By J. Wm. Lloyd. An inspired treatise that, with insight and solution, touches all the questions of life, love, soul and society. A prose-poem, simple enough for a child to enjoy, deep enough to make a philosopher think. The largest creed, the most generous theory, the gladdest gospel. A book of life. A religion of growth and the overlook—freedom and optimism. Read it. Printed in old style antique type, rubricated with portrait of the author. In three editions, de luxe, plain and paper bound. Prices, $1.25, $1.00 and 50c.

DIGGING FOR BED-ROCK. Camp-meeting talks and sketches by Moses Harman. 5c.

ECONOMICS OF ANARCHY. A Study of the Industrial Type. Dyer D. Lum 10c.

DR. FOOTE'S SOCIAL SCIENCE SERIES OF DIME PAMPHLETS—Wedlock; Scientific Marriage; Heredity; A B C of Temperamento; Powell and his Critics; Physiological Marriage; Physical Improvement of Humanity; Causes of Disease, Insanity, and Premature Death; A Step Backward. Any of the above books sent by mail on receipt of price.

DYNAMIC THEORY OF LIFE AND MIND. An attempt to show that all organic beings are both constructed and operated by the dynamic agencies of their respective environments. By James B. Alexander. Over 400 illustrations, 87 chapters, 1,067 pages and a 3-column index of 11 pages. Cloth, $2.75.

EAST TENNESSEE SKETCHES. A and Cecile Chavannes. 25c.

EIGHT-HOUR MOVEMENT. John P. Altgeld, ex-Governor of Illinois. 5c.

EVOLUTION AND REVOLUTION. Elisee Reclus. 5c.

FALSE CLAIMS OF THE CHURCH. John E. Remsburg. Analyzing and confuting the claims made by churchmen that the Christian religion has promoted morality, learning, temperance, science, freedom, and showing how she has opposed progress. Paper, 10c.

FIELDS, FACTORIES, AND WORKSHOPS; or, Industry Combined with Agriculture and Brain Work with Manual Work. Peter Kropotkin. 360 pages. 40c. Postage, 5c.

FREE PRESS. Arguments in support of demurrer to the indictment of M. Tarman, E. C. Walker and Geo. Harman, under the Comstock law. G. C. Semens and David Overmyer. 25c.

GIORDANO BRUNO. His Life, Teachings, and Martyrdom. Burned for heresy in Rome, Feb. 17, 1600. 5c.

GOD AND THE STATE. Bakounine. 25c.

GOVERNMENT ANALYZED. A remarkable work by a remarkable man, Col. John R. Kelso, the history of whose life reads more like romance than reality. This book is the last of a series—Deity Analyzed, Bible Analyzed, Universe Analyzed. By the author's death this work was left unfinished, but was completed by his wife, Etta Dunbar Kelso. 529 pages; cloth. Price reduced from $1.50 to $1.

HILDA'S HOME. Ross Graul. "An o'er true tale" of woman's wrongs and of one woman's struggles and final triumphs in her attempt to secure justice for herself and for her sisters. 426 pages. Cloth, $1; paper, 50c.

HUMAN RIGHTS. J. Madison Hook. 5c.

IMPORTANCE OF HONEST MONEY. A simple, scientific, invariable standard of price. James Adleman. 250 pages. Paper, 50c.

IN BRIGHTER CLIMES; or, Life in Socioland. Albert Chavannes. 5c.

INFIDEL DEATH-BEDS. "Idle Tales of Dying Horrors." G. W. Foote. Brief biographical sketches of 97 Freethinkers, including Bruno, Hecke, Byron, Comte, Darwin, George Eliot, Gibbon, Goethe, Hugo, Harriet Martineau, Mill, Paine, Madame Roland, George Sand, Shelley, Voltney, and Voltaire. 25c.

IN HELL AND THE WAY OUT. A plan of Social Democracy outlined. Henry E. Allen. 10c.

INSTITUTIONAL MARRIAGE. From the viewpoint of an exiled Mormon. M. Harman. 5c.

JOHN'S WAY. A domestic radical story. Elmina D. Slenker. 25c.

KAREZZA. Ethics of Marriage. A bold, brave book, teaching ideal marriage, rights of the unborn child, a designed and controlled maternity. Sample pages free. $1.

KORADINE. A story for young and old. Extra levant cloth. $1.

LIBERTY IN LITERATURE. Testimonial to Walt Whitman. "Let us put wreaths on the brows of the living." An address delivered in Philadelphia, Oct. 31, 1890, with portrait of Whitman. Containing also Col. Ingersoll's address at the funeral of Walt Whitman, Mar. 30, 1892. Cloth, 50c; paper, 25c.

LIBERTY, Political, Religious, Social, and Moral. A. F. Tindall. 5c.

LITTLE LESSONS FOR LITTLE FOLKS. Elmina D. Slenker. Boards, 40c.

LIZZIE MELTON. A story of a self-reliant girl. By Albert Chavannes. With portrait of author. 25c.

LUCIFER. Third Series, Vol. III. (1889). Cloth, $1.25. Postage, 25c.

MAGNETATION, and Its Relation to Health and Character. Albert Chavannes. 25c.

MARRIAGE. An address by Dr. Juliet H. Severance. 5c.

MARRIAGE IN FREE SOCIETY. Edward Carpenter. A dainty little gift book. 25c.

MARTYRDOM OF MAN. Winwood Reade. This is a very interestingly pictured synopsis of universal history, showing what the race has undergone—its martyrdom—in its rise to its present plane. It shows how war and religion have been oppressive factors in man's struggle for liberty; and the last chapter, of some 150 pages, describes his intellectual struggle from the animal period of the earth to the present, adding an outline of what the author conceives would be a religion of reason and love. Winwood Reade's reputation as a writer of fine English, of deep study and careful reasoning, needs no word of praise. Cloth, $1.

MEN, WOMEN AND CHANCE. William Platt. Containing two tales: The Ascent to the Heights, and Blind Men and Seeing. Well printed on heavy paper and artistically bound in cloth. Gilt top, rough edges. 75c.

MEN, WOMEN, AND GODS. Helen H. Gardener. With preface by Col. R. G. Ingersoll. Contents: Introduction by Col. Ingersoll. Men, Women, and Gods. Vicarious Atonement. Historical Facts and Theological Fictions. Appendix. Address to the Clergy and Others. Letter to Cleveland Conference of Freethinkers. The only authorized and correct edition. Large 12mo, heavy-toned paper. Portrait. This volume is by far the best writing this famous author ever did. It is very fine. Cloth, $1; paper, 50c.

MISSING LINK IN MODERN SPIRITUALISM, THE. A. Leah (Fox) Underhill. With portraits of the Fox Sisters and others. 472 pages. Cloth. Reduced to $1.

MORIBUND SOCIETY AND ANARCHY. Jean Grave. Cloth, 60c; paper, 25c.

MOTHERHOOD IN FREEDOM. M. Harman. 5c.

MUTUAL BANKING. A simple plan to abolish interest on money. William B. Greene. 10c.

NORA, A DOLL'S HOUSE, and GHOSTS. Ibsen. Cloth. 75c.

OUR WORSHIP OF PRIMITIVE SOCIAL GUESSES. E. C. Walker. Contents: Love and Law; The Moloch of the Monogamic Ideal; The Continuity of Race-Life, and Tyranny; Food and Sex Fallacies, a Criticism; When Men and Women Are and When They Are Not Varieties; The New Woman: What is she? What will she be? The Stale Hiding Behind Its Own Mistake; Bishop Potter's Opinion of Divorce; Love: Its Attraction and Expression; Is She an Honest Girl? Lloyd, Platt, and the Pitiful Parts; Social Radicals and Parentage; Anthropology and Monogamy; Love and Trust Versus Fear; Reflections upon Reading William Platt's "Women, Love, and Life." 10c.

PERSONAL EXPERIENCES of Two American Anti-Vivisectionists in Various Countries. Philip G. Peabody. With an Appendix by Col. R. G. Ingersoll. Reduced from 25c to 10c.

PERSONAL RIGHTS AND SEXUAL WRONGS. Oswald Dawson. 10c.

PRIESTLY CELIBACY. Prof. A. L. Rawson. Together with The Incoherence of Transition (E. C. Walker), Motherhood in Freedom (Moses Harman), The Greatest Sin (an allegory, R. B. Kerr), and Jealousy, the Foe of Freedom (Oscar Rotter). 25c.

RELIGION AND RATIONALISM. The relation of each to human liberty. The religionist, fancying that he has the whole truth, is logically opposed to investigation, and he appeals to physical force to arrest the discovery of new truths. What Rationalism is, and how many believe themselves Freethinkers who are only unbelieving or disgruntled religionists. The necessity for separate organizations and a division of labor among reformers. The Secular Union. Important facts and arguments in a compact form. E. C. Walker. 5c.

RIGHTS OF MAN. Thomas Paine. Answer to Burke's attack upon the French revolution. A political treatise of great general value, as advocating liberty and democracy. Contains the fundamental principles of true republicanism. Cloth, 50c; paper, 25c.

RUBAIYAT (Quatrains) OF OMAR KHAYYAM. Edward FitzGerald's interpretation; with original introduction; special cover; latest version. Paper, 10c.

RULED BY THE TOMB. A discussion of free thought and free love. Oxford Northcote. 10c.

SCIENCE IN STORY; or, Sammy Tubbs, the Boy Doctor, and Sponsle, the Troublesome Monkey. For young folks. Dr. E. B. Foote. Five volumes in "red line," presentation edition. $5. Five volumes, plainer binding, $2.50; all in one volume, $2.

SEXUAL PHYSIOLOGY FOR THE YOUNG. Being the fifth volume of "Science in Story." 250 pages; cloth bound; illustrated. 50c.

SONGS OF THE UNBLIND CUPID. J. Wm. Lloyd. Edition de luxe. Verses printed from Kelmscott type upon deckle edged hand made paper of cerulean tint. Initial letters, ornaments and borders are in red; initial letter and sketch upon the opening page are hand painted in water colors. Covers brown, with choice of silver or gold lettering. Very handsome gift book. 25c.

STUDIES IN SOCIOLOGY. In four parts: I., The Law of Happiness; II., The Law of Individual Control; III., The Law of Exchange; IV., The Law of Environment. Albert Chavannes. 25c.

TALKS ON NATURE. Important information for both sexes. Dr. J. H. Greer 192 pages. Reduced from 50 to 25c.

THE ABOLITION OF MARRIAGE. John Beverly Robinson. Together with Isabel's Intention (Mariette), Reminiscences of Berlin Heights (A. Warren), and The Sexes and Love in Freedom (Oscar Rotter). 25c.

THE BAR SINISTER AND LICIT LOVE, including the first biennial proceedings of the Legitimation League, and a full account of the Lanchester case, with full-page half-tone pictures of Edith Lanchester, and Lillian Harman. Handsomely bound in green and gold covers. 207 pages. 25c.

THE BLUE LAWS OF CONNECTICUT. Taken from the Code of 1650 and the public records of the Colony of Connecticut previous to 1665. With an account of the persecution of Witches and Quakers in New England, and some extracts from the Blue Laws of Virginia. Copiously illustrated. 25c.

THE BRITISH BARBARIANS. Grant Allen, the greatest of the Hill-Top pioneers. Dedicated "to all who have heart enough, brain enough, and soul enough to understand it." Handsomely bound in cloth. 281 pages. $1.

THE WOMAN WHO DID. Grant Allen. A powerful story of a refined, educated and high-spirited woman who dared to defy the tyranny of church and state and ignore the institution of marriage. Handsomely bound in cloth. $1.

THE NEW HEDONISM. Grant Allen. The opening paragraph says: "The old asceticism said: 'Be virtuous and you will be happy.' The new hedonism says: 'Be happy and you will be virtuous.'" In another place the writer continues: "In proportion as men have freed themselves from mediæval superstitions have they begun to perceive that the unclean and impure things are celibacy and asceticism; that the pure and beautiful and ennobling thing is the fit and worthy exercise of the reproductive function." Paper covers; 25c.

THE CHICAGO MARTYRS. The famous speeches of the eight condemned anarchists in Judge Gary's Court, and Altgeld's reasons for pardoning Fielden, Neebe and Schwab. 25c.

THE COMING WOMAN. Lillie D. White. 5c.

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM. Principles and platform of organized Freethought. 10c.

THE EVOLUTION OF MODESTY. Jonathan Mayo Crane. A consideration of the origin of clothes and the reasons why people wear clothing. Here are a few questions it answers: What is modesty? What is the cause of it? What is the use of it? What is the cause of the feeling of shame? Is nudity immodest? What is the cause of the notion that it is shameful to expose some parts of the body? Why do not all peoples agree as to what parts of the body should be concealed? 5c.

THE FOUNTAIN OF LIFE; or, The Threefold Power of Sex. Lois Waisbrooker. 50c.

THE FUTURE OF SECULARISM. When will the Cause of Justice triumph? 5c.

THE PRODIGAL DAUGHTER; or, The Price of Virtue. Rachel Campbell Schreiner, and Marriage—What It Was and Is; Will the Coming Woman Marry? 25c.

THE REVIVAL OF PURITANISM. E. C. Walker. 10c.

THE RIGHTS OF CHILDREN. R. B. Kerr. Together with What Are Women Here For? (E. B. Foote, Jr., M. D.), The New Marvellous (Lillian Harman), and The Will, from the French of Guy de Maupassant. 25c.

THE SANCTITY OF MARRIAGE. As viewed from a moral and sanitary standpoint. A solemn protest against the present demoralizing management of that institution, its effects upon offspring and its influence upon education. By Dr. Robert A. Greer. A valuable "opening wedge" in missionary work. Price reduced from 25c to 10c.

THE SECRET INSTRUCTIONS OF THE JESUITS. A reprint from an edition published in 1723, quoted by the highest authorities as authentic. The work is redolent of Jesuit craft and is a plain index to the underhand working of that body against the welfare of individuals and society. 15c.

THE STATE: ITS HISTORIC ROLE. Prince Peter Kropotkin. 10c.

THE TROUBADOURS AND COURTS OF LOVE. J. F. Rowbotham. Cloth. 350 pages. $1.25. Postage, 15c.

THE UNWOMANLY WOMAN. Lizzie M. Holmes. Together with That Great Fraud, Yclept Society (Moreau Hall), Virgin Soil (George Egerton), and Normal Sexual Action (Ernest Wilson). 25c.

THE WORM TURNS. Revolutionary Poems. Voltairine de Cleyre. 10c

THOMAS JEFFERSON. His Political, Social and Religious Philosophy. Gen M. M. Trumbull. 5c.

TOKOLOGY. A book for every woman. By Alice B. Stockham, M. D. Illustrated. Tokology teaches possible painless pregnancy and parturition, giving full, plain directions for the care of a woman before and after confinement. The ailments of pregnancy can be prevented as well as the pains and dangers of childbirth avoided and women need not go down to death giving birth to children. English, German or Swedish. $2.25.

TRAVELS IN FAITH. By Capt. Robert C. Adams. His mental experience from superstition to rationalism. Cloth, 75c; paper, 25c.

VACCINATION A GIGANTIC CRIME. Samuel Darling. 15c.

VINDICATION OF THOMAS PAINE. Col. R. G. Ingersoll. Dealing with all the slanders brought against the name and fame of Paine. A little pamphlet which every admirer of Thomas Paine should have by him for reference. Paper, 10c.

VITAL FORCE. Magnetic Exchange and Magnetation. Albert Chavannes. 25c

WHAT THE YOUNG NEED TO KNOW: a Primer of Sexual Rationalism. Edwin C. Walker. "Let us cease to be ashamed of what makes us women, of what makes us men, of what makes us babes." Paper covers; 42 close pages. 10c.

WHAT IS RELIGION? Ingersoll's last public address, delivered at the meeting of the Free Religious Association in Boston on June 3, 1899. To which is appended the poem, "Declaration of the Free," the last verse written by the great Freethinker. 5c.

WHEN LOVE IS LIBERTY AND NATURE LAW. John Badcock, Jr. 10c.

WHY THE UNDERTONE? An open letter to Judge Gary. Sarah E. Ames. 10c.

WOMAN, CHURCH, AND STATE. Matilda Joslyn Gage. This is Mrs. Gage's last and crowning work. Every woman ought to read it. Every liberal woman and man will want it. A burning protest against the tremendous wrong done woman by the Christian church, which controlled the state. It ought to be widely read for the good it will do. Cloth, $1.50; paper, 75c.

WOMAN: Four Centuries of Progress. Susan H. Wixon. 5c.

WOMAN IN THE PAST, PRESENT AND FUTURE. Woman was the first human being that tasted bondage. Woman was a slave before the slave existed. The basis of all oppression is economic dependence on the oppressor: a slave of the slave. This work is August Bebel's masterpiece. 8vo 173 pages. 25c.

Address M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

Price 2 Cents.

LUCIFER.

THE LIGHT-BEARER.

THIRD SERIES, VOL. VI., No. 18. CHICAGO, ILLINOIS, MAY 15, E. M. 302. [C. E. 1902.] WHOLE No. 917

INVIOLABLE.

Nay, Love will not be faithful unto thee
  Unless thou keepest faithful unto her
  As when, erstwhile, thou wast her worshiper,
And gav'st her votive wreaths, and offerings free.
When first Love sealed thee as her own to be
  'Twas that toward service all thy longings were;
  Forget'st thou this, thou can'st not then deter:
She yields thee to a colder mastery.
As flowers bloom not upon the desert waste,
  As birds sing not above mid-ocean's tides,
  As hearts within the grave are never moved,
So gifts fall not unto a soul debased,
  So darkness comes upon it and abides;
  And thou, unless thou lov'st, shalt not be loved.

WILLIAM FRANCIS BARNARD.

What Would You Do?

The following article appeared in the "Philistine" of February 1900. Though old, the question is ever new, and we would like to have an expression of opinion by our readers. What would you do if your husband, wife, or sweetheart loved another? We hope our readers will confine their answers to one hundred words when possible to do so.

Some months ago I published in these pages extracts from a MS. sent me by a Boston Woman. The MS. was in the nature of a personal confession, and was so sincere and earnest in its expression, and evidently so truthful, that I set it up in type with the intention of printing it entire for the benefit of Philistia. But afterward I concluded it was a little too advanced for my Baptist constituency, and so contented myself with a few quotations.

The extracts I gave, it will be remembered, explained that the writer was the wife of a prominent Boston Lawyer—a man of marked personality, wide experience, many interests and large income. His age was something over forty and his wife's age about the same. Their married life had been peaceful and the husband had always been gentle, generous and indulgent.

In the midst of this blissful Nirvana the wife and mother accidentally discovered that her husband was leading a double life—in fact, that in a cosy flat out on Beacon Street, in the Back Bay, he had another wife. Naturally, the discovery made a great agitation in the mind of the woman, and she ran over in her mind the entire gamut of possible procedure in the way of divorce, alimony, public scandal and vengeance.

After a week she decided on her course.

She broke the news to her husband very gently that she knew all, but she did not chide nor rebuke. She assured him that she recognized the fact that a man with as wide a mental scope as his needed the society of more than one woman, and that she was not the person to make trouble. She would be his friend and wife until death, and after, and if he chose to love one woman or two or three beside herself, she would not condemn him on that account.

The result of that interview was that the husband first turned pale with fright, and then as the wife went on he became speechless with amazement, and soon was on his knees crying it out with his head in her lap.

Time went on and the double arrangement continued. It still continues. The two wives exchange calls and rather like each other. Both are gentle women—educated and refined. Wife Number One explained to me in her manuscript that her husband now treats her with more deference and tenderness, such as she had never before known.

Everything she might wish for is laid at her feet, and absolute liberty is hers. She is quite content, and fully resolved on defending her husband and ministering to his well-being in every possible way.

Her husband's business partners know of his double life, and newspaperdom knows of it; yet she realizes that no one would ever raise a word of public reproach against him unless she first gives the sign. And this she will never do. She loves the man and will ever be loyal to his interests. So that's the story.

I wrote to a trusted correspondent in Boston, and he investigated the facts and found them substantially as stated.

I printed the main features of the Boston Woman's manuscript, and the result was quite a dust. In fact, sixty-nine different persons wrote me letters about it, and forty-three suggested that if the shoe had been on the other foot, that Boston Lawyer would have considered himself outraged, wronged, undone, and would have raised the roof in wild clamors for r'r're-venge. Possibly he would—I really do not know.

But now comes a belated letter from a Cleveland physician on this same subject, wherein the Boston Woman is highly commended for her course of action. This man declares that if the shoe were on the other foot, and the lawyer were as wise as his wife he would not interfere in the relation. This man declares that it is preposterous to suppose that a strong, earnest woman of mentality and spiritual resource is perfectly satisfied with the society of one man for a lifetime. And he adds,

"Any woman whose soul is centered in a single man for a score of years has lived a very narrow and restricted life, and her mentality has surely atrophied. And thus for obvious reasons the unmarried woman of forty far surpasses, in spiritual reach, her happily married sisters. We learn from the people with whom we associate. Men learn from women and women from men. Imagine the inspiration a woman gets, say, from one honest, busy grocer!"

This is very plain talk; but the writer does not stop there. He declares that every successful city doctor has from two to a dozen women on his visiting list whom he fondles and caresses, and who regard him in the light of a lover. He further adds that the clergyman who makes "pastoral calls" and has not several women on his route with whom he is on tender, affectionate terms, is the exception. And then he makes this astounding confession:

"One of my patients—a married woman—has for me a more than tender regard, which I fully reciprocate, and this with the full knowledge and consent of her husband."

This doctor visits his fair patient almost daily and has for three years, and between them are constantly passing personal letters and notes. This delicate, yet warm friendship, he regards as natural, right and holy, and the fact that the woman has a legal husband, really, he says, has no bearing on the case. He appeals to the Higher Law. The woman loves both men, but of course in a different way and for different reasons.

Usually, when a woman begins to love one man she hates another, for the reason that she fears him and dreads he will do violence to herself or her newly acquired friend. And from fear to hate is a short, easy step. Under more enlightened conditions she would love both; nothing in her nature prevents this; the fact that she hates her husband when she gets acquainted with a better or different man is because the husband makes himself unlovable. This shoe fits either foot. It is not a right or left.

In closing, my correspondent quotes Sir Richard Burton to the effect that in all his experience as a traveler and student, he had seen but one community that was free from sex jealousy, bickering and strife; and this was the city of El Medinah, Mecca, among whose inhabitants the right of polyandry was freely admitted.

His closing paragraph reads, "Monogamy has been a fetich and all of its so-called benefits can easily be attributed to a variety of causes. Because a thing goes with a thing is no reason that the thing is the cause of the thing. A thing often exists in spite of another thing. All ships have barnacles, but the claim that ships would sink without barnacles is held only by shallow people. And even though these people be in the majority, the fact remains the same.

"The insular and exclusive custom of condemning all close friendships between men and women that have not been sanctified by a Justice of the Peace, must pass away ere the race can advance. We grow in grace only when we love; all gentle, honorable friendships between good men and women should be allowed to run their natural course. You cannot thwart Nature and go unpunished. Through the interchange of thought and feeling, and the healthful play of the emotions, we add cubits to our stature and give wings to our spiritual natures."

I am not at liberty to publish the name of my correspondent, but should anyone wish to communicate with him personally, I am privileged to send his address. I am told that he ranks high in his profession, is a member of a prominent Book Club, and is an honorable and cultured gentleman. He certainly is frank.

Now, how common the condition just described really is, I cannot say. Living here in the woods, at a distance from the busy marts of trade and out of all personal touch with the social centers, my opportunities for observation are very slight. But in view of Mr. Howells' assertion that as a people we are imperfectly monogamous, and from what I gather from time to time from my correspondents and people who make little journeys hitherward, I am led to believe that a silent evolution in Esoterics is being worked out in America, and this with the tacit consent of the Unbounded—not to mention the clergy, press, and medical and legal professions.

Custom makes law: but it takes time for custom to ossify. Custom is now in the cartilage condition, so far as Platonism is concerned. But already, I see that the last edition of the Standard Dictionary has given a place to the term, Platonic Friendship, and defines it thus: "An ardent affection existing between a man who is married and a woman who is not, or vice versa, as the case may be." Whereas, it was only a few years ago that the late Samuel J. Tilden referred to it as "a barren and jejune hypothesis."

And now I boldly hazard the prophecy that members of the American Academy of Immortals, who avail themselves of the ninety-nine year limit, will witness planks introduced into all great party platforms endorsing Soul Gravitation and Psychic Communion. Not only this, but that church which has not in its creed a tenet advocating Cellular Correspondence will have nothing better to boast of than a beggarly array of empty pews.

I have spoken.

Love's Coming of Age.

"The subject of Sex is difficult to deal with. There is no doubt a natural reticence connected with it. There is also a great deal of prudery. The passion occupies, without being spoken of, a large part of human thought; and words on the subject being so few and inadequate, everything that is said is liable to be misunderstood. Violent inferences are made and equivocations surmised, from the simplest remarks; qualified admissions of liberty are interpreted into recommendations of unbridled license; and generally the perspective of literary question is turned upside down.

"In fact there is a great deal of fetichism in the current treatment of the question. Nor can one altogether be surprised at this when one sees how important Sex is in the scheme of things, and how deeply it has been associated since the earliest times not only with man's personal impulses but even as his religious sentiments and ceremonials.

"Next to hunger it is doubtless the most primitive of our needs. But in modern civilized life Sex enters probably even more into consciousness than hunger. For the hunger-needs of the human race are in the later societies fairly well satisfied, but the sex-desires are strongly restrained, both by law and custom, from satisfaction—and so assert themselves all the more in thought.

"To find the place of these desires, their utterance, their control, their personal import, their social import, is a tremendous problem to every youth and girl, man and woman."

These paragraphs fairly illustrate the plainness and sanеness of Edward Carpenter's discussion of the master passion in his intensely interesting little book entitled "Love's Coming of Age." Sanely, fearlessly and fairly he gives expression to ideas which are the result of thoughtful study of a problem which the human race has been dodging for century after century but which it must face squarely and solve intelligently before the race can rise out of the muck and vileness which it seeks to cover and hide with the tattered cloak of hypocrisy and prudery.

The paragraphs I have quoted are the very first four in the book. You can see he does not hem nor haw nor apologize nor beat about the bush, but goes directly at the subject as an honest, clear-minded and pure-minded man should in honestly discussing a subject of such intense importance to the human race.

Carpenter's literary style is simple and quite attractive. His statements are clear and his arguments are conclusive. The book contains an appendix which will furnish information of the subject of Sex that could not be found elsewhere without ransacking an extensive library and gaining access to books which are generally kept from the regular patrons of libraries. And he has handled the delicate question so wisely that it seems hardly possible that a person could be found who would take offence at any sentence in the book. The whole tone of the book speaks the purity of the mind of the author. Read this:

"That we should leave our children to pick up their information about the most sacred, the most profound and vital, of all human functions, from the mere gutter, and learn to know it first from the lips of ignorance and vice, seems almost incredible, and certainly indicates the deeply rooted unbelief and uncleanness of our own thoughts."

But get the book and read it. It will cost you more than you usually pay for a book of the size, but that is not the fault of the editor of Lucifer who must pay for it what the publisher of the book demands. The price is one dollar, but there is more sound sense on the sex question in the book than you could find in some more pretentious books for which you might pay a much higher price. Get it and read it and circulate it among your unenlightened acquaintances. It cannot fail to give them clearer and saner views on the vital question it discusssess.

J. M. C.

"In general, the art of government consists in taking as much money as possible from one part of the citizens to give it to another."—Voltaire.

Competition in Force, and Other Evils.

BY B. B. KERR.

In No. 912 C. L. James, criticising my doctrine that force is least dangerous when it is a monopoly in the hands of the whole people, says: "As to vigilance committees and the like, they have, in our time and country, however it may have been in mediæval Scotland, one decided recommendation as compared with 'the right to use force as a monopoly in the hands of the representatives of the whole people.' They are much more easily got rid of. That was proved in California, after they had outlived their usefulness there."

True, and why? Because there stood in the back-ground, ready to break up the vigilance committees when called on, the state and federal governments. The people used the vigilance committees when needed; but had the vigilance committees refused to abdicate when they were no longer wanted, the people would have used the government to make them abdicate. Had the vigilance committees been as well able to defy any higher power as the McDonalds and the Campbells, the Scotts and the Kerrs, I doubt if they would have abdicated.

Moreover, the vigilance committees were bona fide protective associations in their origin. But the great danger of free competition in force is that it makes it so easy to organize aggressive associations, which may use the word "protection" as a figleaf, while their real aims are plunder and blackmail. Croker, Quay, and Platt are strong at present, but would they not be a thousand times stronger under competition in force? If government were abolished today, tomorrow would be the greatest day of triumph Tammany Hall ever saw. Now it has to submit to the inconvenience of getting a majority of votes by hook or by crook; then it would only need a preponderance of strength, which is easier to get than a majority in numbers. All that Tammany would then want would be a few thousand good riflemen; and it could grab every corner lot, every good building, everything good in sight; it could blackmail the weak unmercifully; it could browbeat the members of weaker voluntary associations whenever they had a dispute with Tammany men; and, if the matter had to come to trial, it could bribe the free jury or threaten it with future vengeance. Today Tammany has at least to divide the spoils with the maimed, the halt, and the blind, to get their votes; under voluntaryism numbers would count for nothing, and the spoils would all go to the strong, and would be used as a bait to bring ever new recruits to the army of Tammany. Free from all annoyance from state and federal authorities, Tammany would indeed have reached its day of glory. Great as the evils of bad government are, every one of them is multiplied a thousand fold under a system of voluntary associations. All nations went through the age of voluntary associations, and all nations rushed into the arms of despotism to escape from voluntaryism. What we now need is neither voluntaryism nor despotism, but monopoly of force in the hands of the whole people.

* * *

Mr. James also says: "Again, it is not mere verbiage but an opinion decidedly about things that, if no man were enabled by government to hold land out of use, all the evils of 'natural monopoly' would cure themselves." Certainly that is an opinion about things, but not a true one. Mr. James is fond of statistics; I will give him some.

Last December the following figures were published in the daily press, to show the cost at which the different mines of the country could produce a pound of copper. The numbers refer to cents.

Atlantic (Michigan), 12; Anaconda, (Montana), 11; Arizona Copper Co (Arizona), 9; Boston & Montana (Montana), 7; Butte & Boston (Montana), 13; Calumet & Hecla (Michigan), 9; Copper Queen (Arizona), 8; Detroit Copper Co (Arizona), 10; Mountain Copper Co (California), 10; Montana Ore Purchasing Co (Montana), 12; Osceola (Michigan), 11; Parrot (Montana), 10; Quincy (Michigan), 8; Tamarack (Michigan), 9; United Verde (Arizona), 4; Utah Consolidated (Utah), 3; Wolverine (Michigan), 9;

These figures may not be accurate, but every mining expert will admit that they give a fair idea of the vast differences in natural richness between different mines, differences which cannot be removed by any industrial economics or scientific discoveries.

Now what do these figures mean? Mr. James will admit that there can only be one wholesale price for copper of a given quality, no matter where it comes from. He will also admit that that price cannot for any length of time be less than the cost of production at the lowest grade mine necessary for the world's supply. If the Butte & Boston is necessary, then the price cannot continue under the price of 13 cents, and Senator Clark will be able to make 9 cents of economic rent from every pound of copper shipped from the United Verde. From the known richness of the United Verde it is safe to say that it runs at least 5 per cent copper to the ton. That means 100 pounds, which, at 9 cents, means $9 of economic rent per ton. The American Mining Review lately stated that the United Verde had 23,000,000 tons in sight, a stupendous but not incredible tonnage. Multiply the tonnage by $9, and it appears that Senator Clark is likely to get $207,000,000 in economic rent out of ore in sight in the United Verde. This is probably not over the mark, for it is conceded by everybody that the right to use and occupy this little piece of ground makes Senator Clark the richest man the world has ever seen, and the American Mining Review says he lately refused $500,000,000 for the property.

Neither can Mr. James say that this economic rent is the result of government allowing men to hold land out of use, for there is hardly a well-known deposit of copper in the world held out of use, and the demand for copper for electric purposes will probably grow faster than the possible supply under any system.

Mr. James' system therefore favors inequality in its most naked and glaring form. He would try to sweep away great organizers and hard workers like Carnegie, Morgan, and Rockefeller, but he would not touch a richer man than any of them, who owes his wealth to a freak of nature. He would have a world of Lilliputians, with here and there a Gulliver stalking about among the crowd, bribing free juries and organizing for his own "protection" voluntary associations which would have made the Dukes of Normandy or the Last of the Barons green with envy.

The contention of Mr. James is as preposterous in the case of land as in that of mines. Every new country opened up, and every improvement in transportation, only increase the value of land in the heart of London and New York, because the people like to flock to a center and look at each other. Nothing can ever make an inside lot as good as a corner. The fact that good land can still be had for nothing in Western Canada does not hinder it being valuable a mile from New York; and even if the use and occupation system made free land available in Iowa, the New Yorker would still have his economic rent. In fact Mr. James' system is founded entirely on the principle of unmerited inequality, the worst of all inequalities.

Here is a remarkable fact, that the masses of the people in any country are prosperous and comfortable just in proportion as there are millionaires.—Andrew Carnegie.

Another remarkable fact is that sheep in any country are plentiful and fat just in proportion as there are roast saddles of mutton.—N. Y. Herald.

Mrs. O'Brien.—Good marnin'. Mrs. McCabe an' phwat makes yez look so sad?

Mrs. McCabe.—Shure, Dennis was sint to the penitentiary fer six months.

Mrs. O'Brien.—Well, shure, don't worry. Six months will soon pass.

Mrs. McCabe.—Shure, that's what worries me.—Leslie's Weekly.

Lucifer, the Lightbearer

M. HARMAN, EDITOR AND PUBLISHER.

PUBLISHED EVERY WEEK AT 500 FULTON STREET, CHICAGO, ILL.

Terms: One year, $1; six months, 50 cents; three months, 25 cents.

Entered at the Chicago Postoffice as Second-Class Mail Matter.

Eastern Representative, E. C. Walker, 244 W. 143d street, New York.

Lucifer—Its Meaning and Purpose.

LUCIFER—The planet Venus; so called from its brightness.—Webster's Dictionary.

LUCIFEROUS—Giving Light; affording light or the means of discovery.—Same.

LUCIFIC—Producing Light.—Same.

LUCIFORM—Having the form of Light.—Same.

The name Lucifer means Light-Bringing or Light-Bearing, and the paper that has adopted this name stands for Light against Darkness—for Reason against Superstition—for Science against Tradition—for Investigation and Enlightenment against Credulity and Ignorance—for Liberty against Slavery—for ustice against Privilege.

Special Offer.

FOR THE NEXT THIRTY DAYS.

In order to extend Lucifer's work in general, and to help tide over the annual dull season in particular, we make for the next thirty days, the following unusual offers to old as well as new subscribers. To old subscribers credit will be given for one year from the date to which they are now paid—whether now paid ahead or in arrears.

1. For $2.30 we will send Lucifer one year and the large Family Medical Work entitled "A Physician in the House," by Dr. J. H. Greer of Chicago. The regular price of this large, well-bound book is $2.75.

2. For $2 we will send Lucifer one year and any one of the bound volumes of Lucifer now on hand, namely, for the year 1899, 1900 and 1901. These volumes are substantially bound in cloth, usual price $1.50 with 25 cents additional for postage.

3. For one dollar we will send Lucifer one year and one copy of "Marriage in Free Society," by Edward Carpenter, price, 25 cents.

4. For $1 we will send Lucifer one year and one copy of "The Abolition of Marriage" by John Beverly Robinson, also other excellent essays including Isabel's Intention, by Mariette; The Sexes and Love in Freedom, by Oscar Rotter; Reminiscences of Berlin Heights, by A. Warren—price of all 25 cents.

4. The Prodigal Daughter, or the Price of Virtue, by Rachel Campbell; to which are added, Legal Wifehood, by Lucinda B. Chandler; Love's Gifts, by Olive Schreiner, and Will the Coming Woman Marry, by M. Harman—price of all, 25 cents. With Lucifer one year $1.

5. The Unwomanly Woman, by Lizzie M. Holmes, including also, Virgin Soil, by George Egerton; Normal Sexual Action by Ernest Winne, and That Great Fraud Ycept Society, by Moses Hull—price of all 25 cents. With Lucifer one year $1.

6. The Rights of Children, by R. B. Kerr; including also What are Women Here For, by Dr. E. B. Foote, Jr.; The New Martyrdom, by Lillian Harman, and The Will, from the French of Guy de Maupassant—price 25 cents. With Lucifer one year,$1

7. For $1.25 we will send Lucifer one year and one bound copy of Government Analyzed, by Col. J. R. Kelso. The publishers' price for this excellent work was originally $1.50, but having on hand a number of slightly but not seriously damaged copies we make this offer of Lucifer and the book for $1.25.

Current Comment.

The movement to form a national or international association to check the suppression of speech and censorship of press, is one in which we all should feel a deep interest. Whether the plan mentioned elsewhere in this issue is the best that can be devised is a matter of secondary importance; the main thing being to get to work, and in a way that will be felt and heeded by the suppressors. For one I like the methods adopted by the American Press Writers' Association, one of the chief objects of which club is defense against censorship of the press and of mails. Membership in the Press-Writers' Association requires the payment of no fees or annual dues. There are no offices with salary attached, and nothing that suggests an inner ring, clique or guild; bills for printing, etc., being paid by voluntary contributions from members and from the general public. A brief statement of principles and objects of the "Free Speech League," to be signed by all co-operators and sympathizers, would seem to be all that is necessary for the purpose of organization. Organization that crystallizes into officialism has been the death or perversion of nearly every good movement in the past.

* * *

The article reproduced in this issue from "The Philistine"—Fra Elbertus Hubbard—is, to my thinking, one of unusual value. While I would not anticipate the comments of our readers upon the problems presented in that paper I would ask, as a starter, where would have been the opening for the world-racking "Beecher scandal" if the members of Plymouth Church, New York, had been civilized up to the plane occupied by the wife of the "Boston Lawyer," as told by the "Philistine." And if no Beecher scandal—with its harvest of hate, of perjury and of suicide—then there would probably have been no postal censorship enactments, such as grew out of the shock received by conventional society during the progress of that most famous of modern prosecutions for the crime of adultery—so-called.

* * *

The late sensational episode in our national legislature, in which Senator Tillman of South Carolina was chief actor, should surprise no one. The newspapers generally speak as though the unexpected, the monstrous, had occurred. When Republican leaders either excuse or partially justify the atrocities inflicted by American soldiers upon the Filipinos it was but natural that a Democratic leader should compare these atrocities with those practiced in the South in order to uphold the white man's rule. If brutalities are permitted in the Philippines, where there is no danger of "negro domination" over the white race, why should similar extreme measures be condemned when no other means are available to save the white race in the South from being ruled by their former slaves?

* * *

Such is Tillman's logic, and the frankness with which it is uttered horrifies his Southern brethren while it delights the Northern Republicans because they think such talk will have the effect of preventing Democratic supremacy in the national councils. With the usual craft of their tribe—the tribe politician—they ignore and hide the fact that it is the Republican party itself that is largely if not chiefly to blame for the horrors of the "shotgun" policy in the South. What else could be reasonably expected, when the Republican majority in congress, to secure the perpetuity of their own power, gave the ballot—the right to rule not only themselves but to rule also the white minority—to a race of slaves, a race besotted and brutalized by ages of contented subjection to the despotic rule of the white man?

M. HARMAN.

By the Way.

From a private letter written by E. C. Walker I quote:

"The movement started by the resolutions which you printed has got so far as this partial letter-head, ['The Free Speech League'] committees on constitution and organization, and a temporary list of officers. The Committee on Constitution met last night and framed its report, to be presented to a full meeting of the initiators next Thursday night. Next week's 'Truth Seeker' will contain Coolridge's report of progress, including M. D. Conway's letter in full and part of Lloyd's. The movement is intended to be national, or international. The Constitution, as drafted, is very brief; the object is stated in these words: 'The object of the Free Speech League is to maintain the right of free speech against all encroachments.' This is as presented by Moses Oppenheimer. The membership article, as presented by me, is this: 'The minimum membership fee is one dollar annually, but this does not exclude good workers to whom such payment would be onerous.' The prospects are good; come in at once and help all you can in a movement that means so much to all who think outside the conventional ruts."

It is to be hoped that this League will grow into a powerful organization. We will print further information regarding it when received.

—

The postoffice at Home, Wash., has been suspended by order of the department at Washington. Efforts are being made by the residents to have it reinstated. At the present they are obliged to go a mile and a half to Lake Bay to receive their mail. This order compels "Discontent" to suspend for a few weeks until the office is reinstated. If they fail in their efforts, an attempt will be made to have "Discontent" and "Clothed With the Sun" entered at Lake Bay. In the meantime, we have offered James F. Morton, Jr., editor of "Discontent," space in Lucifer to give a weekly account of the progress of their case.

—

Queer, isn't it, how "law-abiding citizens,"—even those whose sworn duty it is to enforce the law—go back to primary principles of private vengeance when the law is too slow in its workings or is not framed to suit them? A short time ago a Chicago alderman helped to organize a "vigilance committee" to detect and punish burglars and "hold-up men" on the Northwest Side. And he is proud of it, and doubtless feels that the people of his ward owe their votes to him—their protector. And he's pretty sure to get them, too. Not to be outdone by the alderman in his expressed lack of confidence in the law to deal with offenders is Judge Tuley, one of the most conspicuous occupants of the Chicago bench. Recently a case of wife-beating came before him for decision. He told the complaining wife that she should have shot her husband; that it would be a good thing if all wife-beaters were shot by their victims; and later, in an interview with a reporter, reiterated the statement. Probably many women, reading this judge's opinion, believed that his statement gave women the right to shoot their husbands who attempt to beat them; and if there should be tragedies as a direct result of Judge Tuley's remarks it would not be surprising. The statement did more credit to the judge's heart than to his head—he certainly was in anything but a "judicial frame of mind" when he made it. Why not have told abused wives that neither law nor common sense require that they submit to beatings; that the law has become somewhat enlightened since the time it gave the right to man to "chastise" his wife if said chastisement were given with a stick no larger than his thumb, and that common sense would direct her to leave the man who would abuse her. "But who would support the children?" Who would support them if their father were dead and their mother a murderer?

—

I am not sure that the following note was written for publication; but as I think it of interest I give it place. It was written by Jos. M. Wade, publisher of "Wade's Fibre and Fabric," a large paper devoted to the interests which its name indicates. He thus comments on "Jimmie, the Weaver," which appeared in Lucifer No. 915.

"This 'Jimmie' is a real character in mills where he is tolerated; he is a loafer and a bum; he wants wages, but he don't want to work; he skulks. Did the factory owner force him to come from Ireland to this country? Does his employer force him to work in the mills? No, he came in rags in the steerage—has probably got money enough to send for sisters and brothers and perhaps parents. I began weaving in October 1850—worked fourteen and a half hours per day, and was happy and contented. I liked work so well that I had no time to complain. If I had not liked it I would have left it and gone elsewhere. We had only whale oil for light in those days, no gas. I liked work, minded my own business, began at sixty-four cents per day. In nine years they gave me $8,000 per year. Sensible people know that the Jimmie yarn is a lie—and it does more harm than good to retail it in reform papers. I filled every position in the factory. I have seen 'Jimmies' but not often. It would be a deed of charity to tie a stone around his neck and drop him in the mill pond."

It is quite true that the world is full of inefficient, "slack," ambitionless workers; and no doubt "Jimmie" belongs to that type—but why? There are causes for all things; but as this is only "by the way" I will not enter on a subject which affords material for much deep and earnest thought. Yet even if the "Jimmies" were all efficient, ambitious workers, possessing those qualities equally with Mr. Wade, would they be in his position today—or he in theirs? "There is always room at the top"—yes, because the multitude are unable to reach it; but if they were able, wouldn't the "top" be practically as the bottom is now—with a multitude scrambling and fighting for place? I am reminded of the assertion that every boy has a chance to become the President of the United States. Even if that were true, it would be impossible for all the boys in the United States to become its president, no matter how great their ability and attainments. And is it not a fact that the system demands immense production and cheap labor, and that it is as impossible for the great majority of workers in a mill to get $8,000 positions as it is impossible for the majority of boys to become President of the United States? It is of no avail to blame the "Jimmies" nor the individual mill owners. The "Jimmies" are weak and "shiftless" and unintelligent, wanting only a "good job" for themselves; quite willing to let the "devil take" the other fellow; and the mill owner who should depart from the system would be crushed. And if such is the system, and the character of men under the system, what can be done?

L. H.

Need of Better Definition.

According to Ironicus, "Stateists, miscalled Socialists," are lying low just now, while the United States Postal Department is making war on socialist periodicals. When this matter blows over, the "stateist" will come out of his lair, thinking his inconsistency will be forgotten, and agitate again for more state ownership, though he really knows that these abuses ought to induce him to work for an individualistic postal system, resembling an express company.

As to names. "State Socialist" has been applied to those who think that the state, being as good as the people, could be trusted to own and administer collective wealth, it being observed that the state does not demand the tribute exacted by private concerns, viz: rent, profit and interest. The name expresses the idea, has the force of usage, and is therefore suitable. Says Ironicus:

"The stateists have one thing more to learn, and that is how they themselves would treat the advocates of ideas unlike their own if they controlled the Government. Selah."

What does this mean? To what prophets shall the Stateists apply to learn what they will do at some future time? Will they do what they now intend to do? An advocate of a state ought to intend to treat all alike as regards state postal service. But how can he learn that he intends to do so, and will do it? This is the problem set by Ironicus. A definition of "selah" might also be useful to the uninitiated.

* * *

C. L. James says that the progeny of Adam and Eve would, but for premature deaths, in thirteen centuries stock the world beyond all possibility of finding food or even space. Now let him calculate how much time would be required for the increase from one seed from any common food plant to fill the earth. He may then realize, (possibly) what he has never seen before, that the Malthusian is continually confusing two entirely distinct propositions viz: The rate of increase of food and people; and the ultimate capacity of the earth to support people.

When he says: "The only way to get rid of war, speculation, landlordism &c., is to get rid of undesired maternity," I conclude that only children in large families fight or pay rent.

C. F. H.

REPLY.

Inasmuch as I endorsed the utterance of Mr. James in regard to "undesired maternity" I will say a few words in reply to this point only, allowing "Ironicus" and James to reply, briefly, to other points made by C. F. H., if they desire to do so.

As I see it, undesired maternity means the enslavement of womanhood and motherhood, and that this enslavement naturally and inevitably involves, includes and produces all other forms of human slavery seems to me to require little or no argument. The connection between unwelcome motherhood and a generally inferior and depraved product of motherhood seems self-evident. That wars, speculation and land monopoly depend, primarily, upon the inferiority and depravity of the masses of people, would also seem to need little or no demonstration. To abolish war, speculative profits and land monopoly we must first have a race of men who know their rights and who have the mental and physical power to maintain them. To obtain such a race of men we must first have free, intelligent and self-reliant mothers.

This is nature's way. Men make institutions, but mothers make men. The natural way, the logical way, then to secure all needed reforms of men and their institutions is to arouse womanhood and motherhood to a sense of the importance, the overshadowing responsibility, of their work, and then to remove all obstacles that now prevent mothers from doing their best work in producing a better race.

M. H.

A Target for Press-Writers.

"Farm, Stock and Home" is a fine, large agricultural weekly published at 50 cents a year at 5th St., and Hennepin Ave., Minneapolis, Mina. It has a department known as "Our Home Council," edited by Mrs. C. E. Stephens. In the issue of May 1 Mary Farmington and another lady, who signs herself "The Mother of Eight Children," discuss the sex question. The editress says:

"Again I am glad to yield editorial right of way in Council columns and give space to many excellent letters from 'the sisters.' Mary Farmington touches on a delicate subject, but it is a vital one, of all importance to the family and home, to all humanity in fact, and none should hesitate to take part in its discussion who can give light upon the subject."

Here is a fine chance for the many sex writers to attempt the enlightenment of the many readers of this paper, and to assert the right and importance of progress on the subject. The following paragraphs are from Mary Farmington's letter:

"I was one of a family of eleven. I have often heard mother say that she did not want more than four children, and that she never gave us the care that we should have had in any way, because she had not the strength to do so. One of her regrets was that her practical work, cooking, mending, washing and baking, left no time for loving companionship and training. To say nothing of the feeling that her state of nervous irritation and weariness before our birth, robbed us of our rightful endowment in the way of physical and mental strength. 'I cried too much before you were born,' and yet who could censure her, or any mother who makes a like plea?

"Yet what are we women to do about this important question? Should we bear the cross and wait for the crown—for there is no cross without a crown? Are there not rewards enough to the mother, reward of love, help, care and regard, to make a crown? Home is not home without children, and all of our best thoughts are about home and children, so that a certain number of children must be for the good of all.

"But there are difficult points to settle in regard to the birth, and the power of mother and father to meet them properly. Where does self-control cease and crime begin on the part of parents who feel unable to assume the burden of a large family? Is there any way to prevent conception that is not wrong? Which would be better for men, women and children, to allow nature to have its way or the contrary? These thoughts often perplex and confound me."

I might say just here that "Discontent," "Torch of Reason" and "The Public" have joined forces to make an onslaught on the enemies of free press. I have shown them the only effective way to accomplish anything in the line, but it is doubtful if they avail of the information given, and the result will be only a very partial cesult if they do not.

FRANCIS B. LIVESEY.
Sykesville, Md.

VARIOUS VOICES.

Anna Marcus, Home, Wash.:—Enclosed find $1 to apply on my subscription. Lucifer is one of my beloved companions, and while I don't think it is perfect, still I am convinced that it has fewer faults than any other.

Celia B. Whitehead, Denver, Colo.:—I like especially the article on "Retribution for Marital Domination" (April 24). Am sorry indeed to learn of Mr. Harman's illness and hope recovery may soon be complete. He is a large, brave man for whom I have a grateful respect.

Hermann Wettstein, Fitzgerald, Ga.:—Hope you are on the mend. I am heartily in sympathy with all your reformatory movements. The money-curse is the great obstacle in the path of progress. Abolish money and all other evils will soon correct themselves. I believe in striking the evil at the root; not only lop off a branch here and there.

John Erwin McCall, Editor of "The Eagle and the Serpent," 26, Clovelly Mansions, Grays Inn Rd., London, W. C.:—Would you be good enough to announce in the columns of your journal that I am preparing a special Stirner issue of "The Eagle and the Serpent" and that as the material for such an issue is conspicuously lacking, (in English) I would be deeply grateful for the loan of any extracts from Stirner which any of your readers have by them. The success of the issue depends upon the cordial co-operation of the Stirnerites the world over. All extracts loaned to me will be carefully returned to the senders when such return is desired. American letters must be fully prepaid.

J. B. Elliott, Philadelphia, Pa.:—I enclose the lines of a song "Jeannette and Jeannot" that my father used to sing fifty years ago, which first aroused in me the hatred of war that has remained ever since, just as the sermon that Thomas Paine heard when a boy about the cruelty of the Christian god remained until he was an old man and was the inspiration of his "Age of Reason" which was intended to expose the cruelties that are taught in the Old Testament.

JEANNETTE AND JEANNOT.

You are going far away,
Far away from poor Jeannette;
There is no one left to love me now,
And you, too, may forget;
But my heart will be with you
Wherever you may go,
Can you look me in the face
And say the same, Jeannot?
When you wear the jacket red,
And the beautiful cockade,
Oh, I fear you will forget
All the promises you made,
With the gun upon your shoulder
And the bay'net by your side,
You'll be taking some proud lady
And be making her your bride.
You'll be taking some proud lady
And be making her your bride.

Or when g'ory leads the way,
You'll be madly rushing on;
Never thinking if they kill you
That my happiness is gone.
If you win the day perhaps
A general you'll be;
Though I'm proud to think of that,
What will become of me?

Oh! if I were Queen of France,
Or, still better, Pope of Rome,
I would have no fighting men abroad,
No weeping maids at home.
All the world should be at peace;
Or, if Kings must show their might,
Why, let them who make the quarrels
Be the only men to fight.
Yes, let them who make the quarrels
Be the only men to fight.

DO YOU EVER THINK

Of the fate of the Prodigal Daughter? The Prodigal Son is forgiven and received with rejoicing—why should different treatment be accorded to his sister? For a vivid, true picture of the conditions in homes and factories which produce thousands of so-called fallen women every year, read "The Prodigal Daughter; or, The Price of Virtue," by Rachel Campbell.

SPECIAL OFFER.

This valuable work sent free on receipt of twenty-five cents for a thirteen week's trial subscription to Lucifer the Light Bearer. M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton Street, Chicago, Ill.

VICE: ITS FRIENDS AND ITS FOES

BY EDWIN C. WALKER.

CONTENTS:—Brotherhood of Man; The Recognition of Facts; Folly of "For Men Only." Definition of Vice; Horrors of Prostitution; Abnormal Sexuality; Errors of Fathers, Mothers and Teachers; Persecution Does Not Reform; Prostitution and the Crusaders; The "Spoiling of the Heathen." What are the Effects of Raids and Crusades? The Economic Side of the Problem; Party Politics in Vice Crusading; In What Does Prostitution Consist? Some Causes of Prostitution; Two Kinds of Prostitution Compared; The Opponents of Divorce; "Purifying" the Tenements; Action for Advanced Women.

WITH APPENDIX:—The Wanderings of a Spirit; Our Fair Civilization; The Folly and Cruelty of It All. Price 10c.

Address M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

A "BARGAIN COUNTER" LOT OF LITERATURE AT HALF-PRICE OR LESS.

The following is a partial list of books and pamphlets which have accumulated on our shelves, time worn and dusty. In order to get them out of our way we have marked the price down. Never more than half price, and in many instances less than a quarter of publisher's prices.

Some of these works are out of print, and perhaps you may here find just the pamphlet you have been fruitlessly looking for. Some are clean, but the covers of most are shelf-worn; the inside leaves, however, clean and complete.

In ordering, please state if you wish your money returned in case we are out of the book ordered, or if you will take something else in its place.

An Old Subject in a New Light: Crime, What Shall We Do About It? Charles Houghton. 5c.
Cellular Cosmogony; or the Earth a Concave Sphere. Cyrus R. Teed. 15c.
Catechism on the Science of a Universal Religion. Gabriel Z. Wacht. 10c.
Dictionary of Dreams. Dr. S. Greer. 25 pages. 10c.
Essays on Deaths and Funerals. A collection of facts and ideas, selected and original, referring to deaths and funerals. Joseph Henry. 10c.
Eureka. How to prevent colds, hay fever, etc., without drugs. 5c.
Ethiopianism; or the Wise Men Reviewed. 2 9 p, 20c.
Everybody Made Happy. C. Orchardson. 4c.
Free Trade. E. H. Heywood. 15c
From Pandemonium to Elysium. James Thierry. 10c.
Government Analyzed. Col. J. E. Kelso 40c.
Hints About the Teaching of Natural History. 5c.
How the Devil—Satan—Beat the Salvation Army. 5c.
Law and Gospel. G. W. Foote. 5c.
Liberty, Political, Religious, Social and Sexual. A. F. Tindall, 3c.
Practical Co-operation, E. C. Walker. 5c.
Social Ethics. E. H. Heywood. 15c.
Silver Songs. Words by H. W. Taylor. Music by J. B. Herbert. 5c.
Some Little Rhymes Composed at Odd Times. Wallace E. Nevill. 5c.
The Sabbath. M. Farrington. 5c.
Tobacco: Its Effects on the Human System, by Dr. William A. Alcott, with notes and additions by Nelson Sizer. 149 pages 15c.
The Book of the Hour. Illustrated. Albion Sivell, 264 p. 12c.
The Haggard Circular. The Pirate's Plot and the Road to Ruin. B. S. Heath. 5c.
The Last Song of Jeremiah Hacker. 5c.
The Living Temple, or the House We Live In. (Astrological). C. T. H. Benton. 10c.
The Railway Problem; with many illustrations and diagrams. A. B. Stickney. 20c.
What Diana Teaches. Count Tolstoi. 1c.
What Constitutes a Freethinker. H. L. Green. 1c.
What Is America's Relation to England? Evaleen Laura Mason. 5c.

Address M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

Evenings With Emerson, Whitman, Tolstoi, Ingersoll and Herbert Spencer. Critical and Conversational Readings. Fuller detail by personal interview. Scope and methods, it is conceived, are to a large extent original. An entire evening each week to an author. JOHN M. CLARKE. 727 Walnut St. Chicago.

For Rent: Large, light, furnished room. Inquire of Lillian Harman 500 Fulton, St. Chicago.

917.

If these figures correspond with the number printed on the wrapper of your Lucifer, your subscription expires with this number.

If a copy of Lucifer fails to reach you, please order by number or date.

Lucifer will not be sent "by return mail" unless stamps for postage are enclosed with order.

TO NEW SUBSCRIBERS: Your subscription is paid to No. If you have not ordered Lucifer, a friend has subscribed for you. If you do not wish to receive it, please notify us by card or through your postmaster. If you wish to become a regular subscriber you will confer a favor by renewing before the expiration of your trial subscription.

LOVE'S COMING OF AGE.

This is a book with which few will wholly agree, but which nearly every one can read with profit and enjoyment. The subject is the relation of the sexes in the past, present and future, and is treated with absolute frankness and fearlessness by a writer who unites a broad outlook, a strong grasp of his subject and a charming literary style. The following table of contents will indicate the line of thought followed by the author.

The Sex Passion.
Man, the Ungrown.
Woman, the Serf.
Woman in Freedom.
Marriage: a Retrospect.
Marriage: a Forecast.
The Free Society.
Some remarks on the early star and sex worships.
Notes—On the Primitive Group Marriage; Jealousy; The Family; Preventive Checks to Population.

The book will be printed on extra book paper and handsomely bound in cloth. The price, including postage to any address will be one dollar. Copies will be ready about April 20.

Address M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

RADICAL LITERATURE.

For Sale by M. Harman, 500 Fulton St., Chicago.

A CHAMBERMAID'S DIARY. By Octave Mirbeau. Translated from the French by Benj. R. Tucker. 466 pages. Handsomely bound in cloth. $1.50.
ADVANCEMENT OF SCIENCE. Prof. John Tyndall's famous Inaugural Address before the British Association for the Advancement of Science, with the articles on Prayer which so stirred the religious world. Cloth, 50c; paper, 25c.
AGE OF REASON (The). Presentation edition. Part I reprinted from the first English edition. Part II corrected by M. D. Conway's edition. With Paine's own account of his arrest in Paris. Photogravure portrait from the Romney painting exhibited in London. Containing also portrait from the Jarvis painting; from the Peale painting, known as the Bonneville portrait, representing Paine as a member of the French Assembly, and a half-tone of the Peale painting. Large half-tones of the house presented to Paine, in which he lived in New Rochelle, and of the monument and surroundings, Yorktown, Pa., scenes; also eight half-tone views of buildings, etc., associated with Paine's life in Paris, and other illustrations. With Preface, Chronological Table, Notes, Index, etc. Printed on antique wove paper, large octavo, wide margins, gilt edge. Special cover design in colors. The finest and most accurate of all editions. Boxed. Postpaid, $2.
AGE OF REASON. Thomas Paine. Cloth, with steel plate portrait, 50c; paper 15c.
ANARCHISM: Its Philosophy and Ideal. Peter Kropotkin. 5c.
A PHYSICIAN IN THE HOUSE. A New Family Medical Work, by Dr. J. H. Greer. This book is up-to-date in every particular. It will save you hundreds of dollars in doctors' bills. It tells you how to cure yourself by simple and harmless home remedies. It recommends no poisonous or dangerous drugs. It teaches how to have health and life by safe methods. It teaches prevention—that it is better to know how to live and avoid disease than to take any medicine as a cure. It is not an advertisement and has no medicine to sell. It has hundreds of excellent recipes for the cure of the various diseases. It has 16 colored plates showing different parts of the human body. The chapter on Painless Midwifery is worth its weight in gold to women. The "Care of Children" is something every mother ought to read. It teaches the value of Air, Sunshine, and Water as medicines. It contains valuable information for the married. This book cannot fail to please you. If you are looking for health by the safest and easiest means, do not delay getting it. It has eight hundred pages, is neatly bound in cloth, with gold letters, and will be sent by mail or express, prepaid to any address, for $2.75.
A PLEA FOR THE NEW WOMAN. May L. Collins. With large new half-tone portrait. 10c.
A TALE OF THE STRASSBURG GEESE. R. B. Kerr. Together with The Strike of the Strassburg Geese (C. W. Coolridge), A Traveler's Tale (R. B. Kerr), The Cat's Story (Emile Zola) 5c.
AUTONOMY, SELF-LAW. A fragmentary dissertation on the right to non-invasive self-hood. 5c.
A WEEK ON THE CONCORD AND MERRIMAC RIVERS. Henry D. Thoreau 25c.
BALZAC'S SERAPHITA: The Mystery of Sex. Mary Hanford Ford. Cloth, $1.
BIBLE TEMPERANCE. E. C. Walker. Proving that Liquor Drinking is Condemned, Defended and Enjoined by the Bible, and giving close reference to the chapters and verses. 10c.
BORNING BETTER BABIES—Through regulating reproduction by controlling conception. E. B. Foote, Jr., M. D. 25c.
CAUSES OF HARD TIMES, and the Money Question. Albert Chavannes. 5c.
CHICAGO CONFERENCE OF TRUSTS. Speeches, debates, etc.; 81 portraits of delegates, including Benj. R. Tucker, Laurence Gronlund, William Jennings Bryan, Samuel Gompers, Louis F. Post, and George Schilling. 626 pages. 50c.
CHILDREN OF THE ITALIAN POOR. Paola Lombroso. 5c.
DARWIN'S. THE. (A novel.) Elmina D. Slenker. 50c.
DAWN OF CIVILIZATION, The; or, England in the Nineteenth Century. J. C. Spence. 178 pages. 25c.
DAWN-THOUGHT ON THE RECONCILIATION. By J. Wm. Lloyd. An inspired treatise that, with insight and solution, touches all the questions of life, love, soul and society. A prose-poem, simple enough for a child to enjoy, deep enough to make a philosopher think. The largest creed, the most generous theory, the gladdest gospel. A book of life. A religion of growth and the overlook—freedom and optimism. Read it. Printed in old style antique type, rubricated with portrait of the author. In three editions, de luxe, plain and paper bound. Prices, $1.25, $1.00 and 50c.
DIGGING FOR BED-ROCK. Camp-meeting talks and sketches by Moses Harman. 5c.
ECONOMICS OF ANARCHY. A Study of the Industrial Type. Dyer D. Lum 15c.

DR. FOOTE'S SOCIAL SCIENCE SERIES OF DIME PAMPHLETS—Wedlock; Scientific Marriage; Heredity; A B C of Temperaments; Powell and his Critics; Physiological Marriage; Physical Improvement of Humanity; Causes of Disease, Insanity, and Premature Death; A Step Backward. Any of the above books sent by mail on receipt of price.

DYNAMIC THEORY OF LIFE AND MIND. An attempt to show that all organic beings are both constructed and operated by the dynamic agencies of their respective environments. By James H. Alexander. Over 400 illustrations, 37 chapters, 1,067 pages and a 3-column index of 11 pages. Cloth, $2.75.

EAST TENNESSEE SKETCHES. A and Cecile Chavannes. 25c.

EIGHT-HOUR MOVEMENT. John P. Altgeld, ex-Governor of Illinois. 5c.

EVOLUTION AND REVOLUTION. Elisee Reclus. 5c.

FALSE CLAIMS OF THE CHURCH. John E. Remsberg. Analyzing and confuting the claims made by churchmen that the Christian religion has promoted morality, learning, temperance, science, freedom, and showing how she has opposed progress. Paper, 10c.

FIELDS, FACTORIES, AND WORKSHOPS; or, Industry Combined with Agriculture and Brain Work with Manual Work. Peter Kropotkin. 260 pages. 48c. Postage, 5c.

FREE PRESS. Arguments in support of demurrer to the indictment of M. Harman, E. C. Walker and Geo. Harman, under the Comstock law, G. C. Clemens and David Overmyer. 25c.

GIORDANO BRUNO. His Life, Teachings, and Martyrdom. Burned for heresy in Rome, Feb. 17, 1600. 5c.

GOD AND THE STATE. Bakounine. 25c.

GOVERNMENT ANALYZED. A remarkable work by a remarkable man, Col. John R. Kelso, the history of whose life reads more like romance than reality. This book is the last of a series—Deity Analyzed, Bible Analyzed, Universe Analyzed. By the author's death this work was left unfinished, but was completed by his wife, Etta Dunbar Kelso. 329 pages; cloth. Price reduced from $1.50 to $1.

HILDA'S HOME. Rose Graul. "An o'er true tale" of woman's wrongs and of one woman's struggles and final triumphs in her attempt to secure justice for herself and for her sisters. 68 pages. Cloth, $1; paper, 50c.

HUMAN RIGHTS. J. Madison Hook. 5c.

IMPORTANCE OF HONEST MONEY. A simple, scientific, unvariable standard of price. James Adleman. 320 pages. Paper, 50c.

IN BRIGHTER CLIMES; or, Life in Scotland. Albert Chavannes. 25c.

INFIDEL DEATH-BEDS. "Life Tales of Dying Horrors." G. W. Foote. Brief biographical sketches of 97 Freethinkers, including Bruno, Dolet, Byron, Comte, Darwin, George Eliot, Gibbon, Goethe, Hugo, Harriet Martineau, Mill, Paine, Madame Roland, George Sand, Shelley, Voltaire, Zola. 25c.

IN HELL AND THE WAY OUT. A plan of Social Democracy outlined. Henry E. Allen. 10c.

INSTITUTIONAL MARRIAGE. From the viewpoint of an exiled Ma'sian. M. Harman. 5c.

JOHN'S WAY. A domestic radical story. Elmina D. Slenker. 25c.

KAREEZA. Ethics of Marriage. A bold, brave book, teaching ideal marriage, rights of the unborn child, a designed and controlled maternity. Sample pages free. $1.

KORADINE. A story for young and old. Extra levant cloth. $1.

LIBERTY IN LITERATURE. Testimonial to Walt Whitman. "Let us put wreaths on the brows of the living." An address delivered in Philadelphia, Oct. 21, 1890, with portrait of Whitman. Containing also Col. Ingersoll's address at the funeral of Walt Whitman, Mar. 30, 1892. Cloth, 50c; paper, 25c.

LIBERTY. Political, Religious, Social, and Moral. A. F. Tindall. 5c.

LITTLE LESSONS FOR LITTLE FOLKS. Elmina D. Slenker. Boards, 40c.

LIZZIE MELTON. A story of a self-reliant girl. By Albert Chavannes. With portrait of author. 25c.

LUCIFER. Third Series, Vol. III. (1890). Cloth, $1.25. Postage, 25c.

MAGNETATION, and Its Relation to Health and Character. Albert Chavannes. 25c.

MARRIAGE. An address by Dr. Juliet H. Severance. 5c.

MARRIAGE IN FREE SOCIETY. Edward Carpenter. A dainty little gift book. 25c.

MARTYRDOM OF MAN. Winwood Reade. This is a very interestingly pictured synopsis of universal history, showing what the race has undergone—its martyrdom—in its rise to its present plane. It shows how war and religion have been oppressive factors in man's struggle for liberty; and the last chapter, of some 100 pages, describes his intellectual struggle from the animal period of the earth to the present, adding an outline of what the author conceives would be a religion of reason and love. Winwood Reade's reputation as a writer of fine English, of deep study and careful reasoning, needs no word of praise. Cloth, $1.

MEN, WOMEN AND CHANCE. William Platt. Containing two tales: The Ascent to the Heights, and Blind Men and Seeing. Well printed on heavy paper and artistically bound in cloth. Gilt top, rough edges. 75c.

MEN, WOMEN, AND GODS. Helen H. Gardener. With preface by Col. R. G. Ingersoll. Contents: Introduction by Col. Ingersoll. Men, Women, and Gods. Vicarious Atonement. Historical Facts and Theological Fictions. Appendix. Address to the Clergy and Others. Letter to Cleveland Congress of Freethinkers. The only authorized and correct edition. Large 12mo, heavy tinted paper. Portrait. This volume is by far the best writing this famous author ever did. It is very fine. Cloth, $1; paper, 50c.

MISSING LINK IN MODERN SPIRITUALISM, THE. A. Leah (Fox) Underhill. With portraits of the Fox Sisters and others. 472 pages. Cloth. Reduced to $1.

MORIBUND SOCIETY AND ANARCHY. Jean Grave. Cloth, 60c; paper, 25c.

MOTHERHOOD IN FREEDOM. M. Harman. 5c.

MUTUAL BANKING. A simple plan to abolish interest on money. William B. Greene. 10c.

NORA; A DOLL'S HOUSE, and GHOSTS. Ibsen. Cloth. 75c.

OUR WORSHIP OF PRIMITIVE SOCIAL GUESSES. E. C. Walker. Contents: Love and Law; The Moloch of the Monogamic Ideal; The Continuity of Race-Life, and Tyranny; Food and Sex Fallacies, a Criticism; When Men and Women Are and When They Are Not Varietists; The New Woman: What Is she? What will she be? The State Hiding Behind Its Own Mistakes; Bishop Potter's Opinion of Divorce; Love: Its Attraction and Expression; Is She an Honest Girl? Lloyd, Platt, and the Pitiful Facts; Social Radicals and Parentage; Anthropology and Monogamy; Love and Trust Versus Fear; Reflections upon Reading William Platt's "Women, Love, and Life." 15c.

PERSONAL EXPERIENCES of Two American Anti-Vivisectionists in Various Countries. Philip G. Peabody. With an Appendix by Col. R. G. Ingersoll. Reduced from 25c to 15c.

PERSONAL RIGHTS AND SEXUAL WRONGS. Oswald Dawson. 30c.

PRIESTLY CELIBACY. Prof. A. L. Rawson. Together with The Incoherence of Transition (E. C. Walker), Motherhood in Freedom (Moses Harman), The Greatest Sin (an allegory, H. B. Kerr), and Jealousy, the Foe of Freedom (Oscar Rotter). 25c.

RELIGION AND RATIONALISM. The relation of each to human liberty. The religionist, fancying that he has the whole truth, is logically opposed to investigation, and he appeals to physical force to arrest the discovery of new truths. What Rationalism is, and how many believe themselves Freethinkers who are only unbelieving or disgruntled religionists. The necessity for separate organizations and a division of labor among reformers. The Secular Union. Important facts and arguments in a compact form. E. C. Walker. 5c

RIGHTS OF MAN. Thomas Paine. Answer to Burke's attack upon the French revolution. A political treatise of great general value, as advocating liberty and democracy. Contains the fundamental principles of true republicanism. Cloth, 50c; paper, 25c.

RUBAIYAT (Quatrains) OF OMAR KHAYYAM. Edward FitzGerald's interpretation; with original introduction; special cover; latest version. Paper, 25c.

RULED BY THE TOMB. A discussion of free thought and free love. Orford Northcote. 10c.

SCIENCE IN STORY; or, Sammy Tubbs, the Boy Doctor, and Sponge, the Troublesome Monkey. For young folks. Dr. E. B. Foote. Five volumes in "red line," presentation edition. $5. Five volumes, plainer binding, $2.50; all in one volume, $2.

SEXUAL PHYSIOLOGY FOR THE YOUNG. Being the fifth volume of "Science in Story." 250 pages; cloth bound; illustrated. 50c.

SONGS OF THE UNBLIND CUPID. J. Wm. Lloyd. Edition de luxe. Verses printed from Keimscott type upon deckle edged hand made paper of cerulean tint. Initial letters, ornaments and borders are in red; initial letter and sketch upon the opening page are hand painted in water colors. Covers brown, with choice of silver or gold lettering. Very handsome gift book. 50c.

STUDIES IN SOCIOLOGY. In four parts; I., The Law of Happiness; II., The Law of Individual Control; III., The Law of Exchange; IV., The Law of Environment. Albert Chavannes. 25c.

TALKS ON NATURE. Important information for both sexes. Dr. J. H. Greer. 128 pages. Reduced from 50 to 25c.

THE ABOLITION OF MARRIAGE. John Beverly Robinson. Together with Isabel's Intention (Mariette), Reminiscences of Berlin Heights (A. Warren), and The Sexes and Love in Freedom (Oscar Rotter). 25c.

THE BAR SINISTER AND LICIT LOVE. Including the first biennial proceedings of the Legitimation League, and a full account of the Lanchester case, with full-page half-tone pictures of Edith Lanchester, and Lillian Harman. Handsomely bound in green and gold covers. 207 pages. 25c.

THE BLUE LAWS OF CONNECTICUT. Taken from the Code of 1650 and the public records of the Colony of Connecticut previous to 1665. With an account of the persecution of Witches and Quakers in New England, and some extracts from the Blue Laws of Virginia. Copiously illustrated. 25c.

THE BRITISH BARBARIANS. Grant Allen, the greatest of the Hill-Top pioneers. Dedicated "To all who have heart enough, brain enough, and soul enough to understand it." Handsomely bound in cloth. 281 pages. $1.

THE WOMAN WHO DID. Grant Allen. A powerful story of a refined, educated and high-spirited woman who dared to defy the tyranny of church and state and ignore the institution of marriage. Handsomely bound in cloth. $1.

THE NEW HEDONISM. Grant Allen. The opening paragraph says: "The old ascetism said: 'Be virtuous and you will be happy.' The new hedonism says: 'Be happy and you will be virtuous.'" In another place the writer says: "In proportion as men have freed themselves from mediæval superstitions have they begun to perceive that the unclean and impure things are celibacy and asceticism; that the pure and beautiful and ennobling thing is the fit and worthy exercise of the reproductive function." Paper covers; 96 large pages; twelve copies, 50c. Single copy, 5c.

THE CHICAGO MARTYRS. The famous speeches of the eight condemned anarchists in Judge Gary's Court, and Altgeld's reasons for pardoning Fielden, Neebe and Schwab. 25c.

THE COMING WOMAN. Lillie D. White. 5c.

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM. Principles and platform of organized Freethought. 10c.

THE EVOLUTION OF MODESTY. Jonathan Mayo Crane. A consideration of the origin of clothes and the reasons why people wear clothing. Here are a few questions it answers: What is modesty? What is the cause of it? What is the use of it? What is the cause of the feeling of shame? Is nudity immodest? What is the cause of the notion that it is shameful to expose some parts of the body? Why do not all peoples agree as to what parts of the body should be concealed? 5c.

THE FOUNTAIN OF LIFE; or, The Threefold Power of Sex. Lois Waisbrooker. 50c.

THE FUTURE OF SECULARISM. When will the Cause of Justice triumph? 5c.

THE PRODIGAL DAUGHTER; or, The Price of Virtue. Rachel Campbell. Together with Legal Wifehood (Lucinda B. Chandler), Life's Gifts (Olive Schreiner), and Marriage—What It Was and Is; Will the Coming Woman Marry? 25c.

THE REVIVAL OF PURITANISM. E. C. Walker. 10c.

THE RIGHTS OF CHILDREN. R. B. Kerr. Together with What Are Women Here For? (E. H. Foote, Jr., M. D.), The New Martyrdom (Lillian Harman), and The Will, from the French of Guy de Maupassant. 25c.

THE SANCTITY OF MARRIAGE. As viewed from a moral and sanitary standpoint. A solemn protest against the present demoralizing management of that institution, its effects upon offspring and its influence upon education. By Dr. Robert A. Greer. A valuable "opening wedge" in missionary work. Price reduced from 25c to 10c.

THE SECRET INSTRUCTIONS OF THE JESUITS. A reprint from an edition published in 1723, quoted by the highest authorities as authentic. The work is redolent of Jesuit craft and is a plain index to the underhand working of that order against the welfare of individuals and society. 15c.

THE STATE: ITS HISTORIC ROLE. Prince Peter Kropotkin. 10c.

THE TROUBADOURS AND COURTS OF LOVE. J. F. Rowbotham. Cloth. 359 pages. $1.50. Postage, 10c.

THE UNWOMANLY WOMAN. Lizzie M. Holmes. Together with That Great Fraud, Yelept Society (Moses Hull), Virgin Soil (George Egerton), and Normal Sexual Action (Ernest Winne). 25c.

THE WORM TURNS. Revolutionary Poems. Voltairine de Cleyre. 15c.

THOMAS JEFFERSON. His Political, Social and Religious Philosophy. Gen. M. M. Trumbull. 5c.

TOKOLOGY. A book for every woman. By Alice B. Stockham, M. D. Illustrated. Tokology teaches possible painless pregnancy and parturition, giving full, plain directions for the care of a woman before and after confinement. The ailments of pregnancy can be prevented as well as the pains and dangers of childbirth avoided and women need not go down to death giving birth to children. English, German or Swedish. $2.25.

TRAVELS IN FAITH. By Capt. Robert C. Adams. His mental experience from superstition to rationalism. Cloth, 25c; paper, 25c.

VACCINATION A GIGANTIC CRIME. Samuel Darling. 15c.

VINDICATION OF THOMAS PAINE. Col. R. G. Ingersoll. Dealing with all the slanders brought against the name and fame of Paine. A little pamphlet which every admirer of Thomas Paine should have by him for reference. Paper, 15c.

VITAL FORCE. Magnetic Exchange and Magnetation. Albert Chavannes. 25c.

WHAT THE YOUNG NEED TO KNOW; a Primer of Sexual Rationalism. Edwin C. Walker. "Let us cease to be ashamed of what makes us men, of what makes us women, of what gives us the kisses of lovers and the encircling arms of babes." Paper covers; 42 large pages. 15c.

WHAT IS RELIGION? Ingersoll's last public address, delivered at the meeting of the Free Religious Association in Boston on June 3, 1899. To which is appended the poem, "Proclamation of the Free," the last verse written by the great Freethinker. 5c.

WHEN LOVE IS LIBERTY AND NATURE LAW. John Badcock, Jr. 10c.

WHY THE UNDERTONE? An open letter to Judge Gary. Sarah E. Ames. 10c.

WOMAN, CHURCH, AND STATE. Matilda Joslyn Gage. This is Mrs. Gage's last and crowning work. Every woman ought to read it. Every liberal woman and man will want it. Every burning protest against the tremendous wrong done woman by the church, which controlled the state. It ought to be widely read for the good it will do. Cloth, $1.50; paper, 75c.

WOMAN: Four Centuries of Progress. Susan H. Wixon. 5c.

WOMAN IN THE PAST, PRESENT AND FUTURE. Woman was the first human being that tasted bondage. Woman was a slave before the slave existed. The basis of all oppression is economic dependence on the oppressor. This has been the condition of woman in the past and is so still. She is now a slave of the slave. This work is August Bebel's masterpiece. 8vo, 173 pages. 25c.

Address M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

Price 2 Cents.

LUCIFER.

THE LIGHT-BEARER.

THIRD SERIES, VOL. VI., No. 19. CHICAGO, ILLINOIS, MAY 22, E. M. 302. [C. E. 1902.] WHOLE No. 918

LOVE UNBOUGHT.

Dear, will you have me? I am yours
Entirely. As the river flows
Forever in the swallowing sea
His tribute clear, so fate's decree
Has set the current of my blood
To you: unchecked by club or flood.

Dear, will you have me? Here and now
Yours am I. Though no solemn vow
I make, of faith by year and day
And hour. Then, though the winged-one stay
But just a night, and take his flight—
He once was ours, in love's despite.

L. H. EARLE.

Fables of Asses.

RELIGION.

An observant ass, perceiving that many things occurred for which he was at a loss to account, conferred from time to time with his brethren and learned that they too, all of them, observed similar things, yet could not understand them, being as much in the dark as himself. Then there was the problem of the cause of things in general, and the destiny of asses at death, which served to increase perplexity, and puzzled all alike. The observant ass one day called the rest around him and announced that he had a theory of things which he believed would commend itself to all. He argued that there was a great invisible ass somewhere whose powers and nature were made manifest in all happenings, who had created asses in his own image, and who rewarded and punished at death whom he would. His hypothesis met with great favor, as it relieved the tension of thought, and from the point of view of an ass left very little to be explained. It came to be an article of belief with asses in general, and its acceptance was soon made the test of character and intelligence throughout Assdom. Of course it did not cover the ground very well; in fact it was very superficial; but asses could not be expected to realize that their convictions in the matter of problems were merely expressions of their general assininity.

MEDICINE.

Occasionally an ass suffered from the results of an indiscretion in eating, drinking, or from some manner of harmful habit; and as abnormal social conditions developed in the ass world and abnormal appetites were developed as a consequence the number of those suffering in this way increased till the sick were to be seen everywhere, in all the fields and woods. A remarkable phenomenon accompanied generally efforts to be rid of these indispositions and diseases: the sufferers persisted in continuing to do that which had made them ill and all the while sought an herb or a mineral which would make them well in spite of themselves. Every plant to be found was tasted and eaten as an experiment to determine its properties; and of course many asses died because of poisons in the shrubs. Still the experimentation went on; while what killed one left another ass unhurt, and all the air was filled with praise and condemnation of this or of that mixture called medicine. Soon the seeking of remedies for illness became a profession, and then of course asses were all assured that they could be cured of any ailment by taking a given drug. Rival schools of medicine arose and quarreled, accusing each other of killing the sick, and matters became very much mixed. Of course the practice of hygiene is the way to hold or regain one's health; one cannot have harmful habits and still remain well; but asses have a foolish way of looking at these things, you know. Their brains seem to have all grown to ears.

CAPITALISM.

The thistle-growing industry after being a matter of individual effort for many generations, though there had been a large measure of friendly co-operation in its pursuit, at last fell into the hands of a few asses stronger and less scrupulous than the rest, who did what they called organizing the production of food. Then the large body of asses were each allowed only a few thistles for their personal sustentation, to be eaten at night for their sole daily meal, while the rest of the thousands of tons of thistles which they gathered daily went to enrich the capitalistic asses; who were not such fools as they looked. At times there was considerable grumbling on the part of a few discontented asses, but the rich few sent out capable teachers who conclusively proved to the working asses that without the capitalist ass to invest his capital there would be no thistles raised, for capital was required in order to cultivate the ground. After that all went as smoothly as a war of extermination. How could a fool of an ass be expected to know the difference between capital and capitalism? The asses could not remember their ancestors, could they, who had thistles in plenty ere capitalism was known?

DEMOCRACY.

After the rule of one ass over all the rest had come to be distasteful to asses at large because of the cruelty, rapacity, and ignorance of the great absolute ass, Assilonica, feeling the need of still maintaining "law and order," and desiring something in the way of authority which should stand for justice and truth between the many conflicting interests of asses, decided to establish a democracy and create a code of laws at once just and enlightened. "Of the asses, for the asses, and by the asses," was the slogan of the reformers, and they aimed to keep their government at once clean, wise, and profitable by the golden magic of majority rule. The asses voted on everything from braying to dying, for convenience the vote being taken by the easy process of counting ears; one party keeping its ears down while those of the other party were being counted. There was a division on every question, and campaign brayers made vast numbers of converts. All were satisfied that the opinion of the majority represented wisdom. The asses no doubt forgot that majority rule preserves privilege just as monarchical rule does; nor did they realize that a thousand asses taken together are exactly as wise as one solitary ass.

EDUCATION.

Very early in the history of ass life it was thought necessary to be wise, and accordingly private teachers as well as public schools were provided so that the young asses might learn all that their elders knew, and more if that were possible. Some simple matters were at first all that it was sought to impart, things useful in a measure in the affairs of common life; but very soon artificiality set in and old, wornout, and difficult subjects were made a matter of study, and education began to mean the attaining of that which was ornamental but not useful. A knowledge of life began to be despised as something unnecessary and vulgar, and the languages of long dead ass tribes together with their folk lore, bad and good, took its place. History became the story, not of ass tribes, but of ass kings and their quarrels; legends were studied for moral lessons; young asses were taught, not to speak correctly but to know the rules of speech correctly; art was almost neglected, as was sociology, and political economy; and while a great show was made of teaching physiology and hygiene, one of the most important functions of the body, that upon which the life and health of all asses depended, was totally neglected. Fads began to enter into education to an increasing degree, and finally very little that was of real utility was offered for study in any school. But asses called the hotch potch education, and all sought it. How could an ass be expected to know that he was an ass in every sense of the word?

IRONICUS.

"Collective Action."

I am glad to see the tone which R. B. Kerr takes in his treatment of scientific questions is becoming considerably less dogmatical and facetious. His statement of the governmental theory leaves little to be desired. "The interest or inclination of individuals often leads them to act in a way detrimental to the interests of others, and collective action must therefore be taken to check individual selfishness and carelessness." He says, very correctly, that this theory is quite simple enough for comprehension, and has been lucidly stated by Blackstone, Puffendorf, and other important political theorists ever since Aristotle's time. He is correct also in saying that the abuses of government do not prove it has no legitimate uses. The theory of Anarchism that "the thing itself is the abuse;" cannot be proved by merely stating it, any more than the other. What is to decide between them? Mr. Kerr has told us. "The careful application of observation and experiment." The careful application, observe. There is no theory so unsound that it does not appeal to something in the way of observation and experiment.

All reasoning, as John Stuart Mill showed in his great work on Logic, is fundamentally inductive. The difference between the reasoning by which an old woman arrives at the conclusion that Friday is an unlucky day and that by which Darwin arrived at the law of natural selection, does not consist in this that they perform mental operations unlike in kind. It consists, as Macaulay pointed out when writing about Bacon, in this, that they perform mental operations unlike in degree. Ignorance, haste, carelessness, stupidity and bias, make the old wife content with a much less searching induction than that which the philosopher requires. Now new opinions, such as Anarchism, have this advantage over old ones, prima facie, that they are much less likely to spring from an induction vitiated by such causes. Ignorance, haste, carelessness, and, except in the case of a crank, bias, always side with the opinion in possession; at least when it is, like the theory of governmentalists, so familiar that no one can be ignorant what it is, nor on what arguments it rests. This is by no means enough to prove an unusual opinion sound; for the vitiating influence of stupidity and bias may attach to it; and so sometimes may that of ignorance. A man may know so little about medicine and surgery that he calls their most recent experimental inductions "anachroisms", and supposes methods as old as Hippocrates to be innovations. He may think it his duty to oppose all established belief; and accordingly may be willing to maintain that the sun is inside the earth, simply because all who know anything about it are aware that this would be a case of Jonah's swallowing the whale. He may be unable to get it through his wool that the material of all ideas is feeling; and therefore may see no absurdity in that philosophy which deduces ideas and feelings from matter assumed to be unconscious and inert. But unusual opinions unless they are as well worn out as materialism and "progressive hygiene," deserve respectful consideration on the ground that their promulgator must have begun by learning some facts, taking some time and pains, and conquering some prepossessions: all which is especially the case with really new opinions. Most of the interesting crankisms referred to, are far different from that. It becomes the champion of the old to reflect that those of the new have probably "weighed and considered" what he has been content to "believe and take for granted."

Mr. Kerr gives as specimens of the uses to which government may be put, "limiting the number of births," (how? I, as an Anarchist could propose a method; but it would be simply the withdrawal of government from a very important sphere); "making land collective property; eliminating competition" hem! about as difficult for government as limiting the number (of births); "to keep the streets clear;" "to regulate the storing of dynamite," "to take precautions that water pipes shall be thick enough;" "to establish fire-limits;" "that lepers and cholera patients should be isolated." At this rate, Mr. Kerr and the editor will soon be by the ears about compulsory vaccination, if I do not bring an olive branch. As an Anarchist, I am opposed to compulsory vaccination, and compulsory everything else, for a great many reasons, this being one—that the compulsory feature gives cranks something to howl about—that it introduces an element of evil, of inevitable mismanagement, corruption, bad moral influences, and, to conclude, unpopularity, into sanitary arrangements which by themselves are good. And the same objection applies to all the other alleged benefits of government.

"I believe in sanitary regulations because they have lessened the death rate," says Mr. Kerr. This is an excellent specimen of those one-sided inductions which mislead social theorists. Has Mr. Kerr considered whether sanitary precautions cannot be taken without enforced regulation? Has he ever inquired whether the latter do harm as well as good? Has he reflected that, with their compulsory feature, the whole objection to thing, unpopularity excited by compulsion, in retarding the practical adoption of prophylactics, which may be required by law though generally odious, but cannot be enforced unless public opinion is really for them?

We need wider generalizations than these, if we are to reason like Newton and Darwin, instead of like Dame Durden and Mother Shipton. Mr. Kerr knows that I do not believe we can tell what is for the general good. But if the question be whether some national condition usually reckoned good, as wealth, a tolerably even distribution of the same, internal peace, ability to resist foreign enemies, above all energy and intelligence, are on the whole promoted more by government or by anarchy, then I think the experience of all history is that these flourish in remarkably strict proportion to the degree of individual liberty, and never fail to suffer from governmental meddling. If this induction is too large an one for Mr. Kerr to attempt following, and I admit it does require perseverance; then I recommend to his study the essay of his favorite Herbert Spencer, on Over-Legislation. Its motto might be a sentiment quoted in it "Wherever there is government there is villainy." Nowhere, except in universal history when reduced to its bare facts, do I remember to have found such lurid proofs how the blighting touch of authority corrupts honesty; destroys good management, fosters waste; checks improvement; reduces what useful innovations do run the gauntlet of artificial difficulties to one dead level of wretched unprogressive compromise; above all kills out the spirit of personal enterprise, originality, invention, self-reliance, converting whole nations into beggars for subsidies and pupils of an ignorant teacher; whom competitors trained under happier auspices must inevitably surpass.

C. L. JAMES.

Special Offer.

GOOD UNTIL JUNE FIFTEENTH.

In order to extend Lucifer's work in general, and to help tide over the annual dull season in particular, we make for the next thirty days, the following unusual offers to old as well as new subscribers. To old subscribers credit will be given for one year from the date to which they are now paid—whether now paid ahead or in arrears.

1. For $2.30 we will send Lucifer one year and the large Family Medical Work entitled "A Physician in the House," by Dr. J. H. Greer of Chicago. The regular price of this large, well-bound book is $2.75.

2. For $2 we will send Lucifer one year and any one of the bound volumes of Lucifer now on hand, namely, for the year 1899, 1900 and 1901. These volumes are substantially bound in cloth, usual price $1.50 with 25 cents additional for postage.

3. For one dollar we will send Lucifer one year and one copy of "Marriage in Free Society," by Edward Carpenter, price, 25 cents.

4. For $1 we will send Lucifer one year and one copy of "The Abolition of Marriage" by John Beverly Robinson, also other excellent essays including Isabel's Intention, by Mariette; The Sexes and Love in Freedom, by Oscar Rotter; Reminiscences of Berlin Heights, by A. Warren—price of all 25 cents.

4. The Prodigal Daughter, or the Price of Virtue, by Rachel Campbell; to which are added, Legal Wifehood, by Lucinda B. Chandler; Love's Gifts, by Olive Schreiner, and Will the Coming Woman Marry, by M. Harman—price of all, 25 cents. With Lucifer one year $1.

5. The Unwomanly Woman, by Lizzie M. Holmes, including also, Virgin Soil, by George Egerton; Normal Sexual Action by Ernest Winne, and That Great Fraud Yceptocracy, by Moses Hull—price of all 25 cents. With Lucifer one year $1.

6. The Rights of Children, by R. B. Kerr; including also What are Women Here For, by Dr. E. B. Foote, Jr.; The New Martyrdom, by Lillian Harman, and The Will, from the French of Guy de Maupassant—price 25 cents. With Lucifer one year, $1

7. For $1.25 we will send Lucifer one year and one bound copy of Government Analyzed, by Col. J. R. Kelso. The publishers' price for this excellent work was originally $1.50, but having on hand a number of slightly but not seriously damaged copies we make this offer of Lucifer and the book for $1.25.

A Psalm of Empire.

1.—I am the Filipino's shepherd; he shall not want.

2.—I make him to lie down on the battlefield. I pursue him beside the still waters.

3.—I incorporialize his soul. I lead him into the paths of unrighteousness for my trade's sake.

4.—Yea, though we walk into the valley of the shambles of death he shall fear no evil, for I am with him; my shot and my bayonet they benevolently assimilate him.

5.—I prepare a table before him for the feasting of his enemies; I anoint his head with civilization; his canteen runneth over.

6.—Surely Greed and Militarism shall follow him all the days of his life and he shall dwell in the folds of Old Glory forever. —Palmer Albertson, in "The Whim."

Forty old copies of Lucifer, no two alike, for 15 cents. Why not order several packages for your friends?

What It Means.

The acquittal of Comrades Adams and Larkin of Home is a personal deliverance at which we all rejoice, but beyond that I do not see that anything is gained. Judge Hanford instructed the jury to acquit because he did not consider the indicted matter obscene; had his opinion been opposite the prisoners would probably have been convicted. In other words, as to whether a man accused of obscenity gets penalty or not depends almost altogether upon the whims and prejudices of the court. No clear principle is involved, nor any logical or scientific definition. The whole thing is as loose as that public opinion which in Boston excludes the "Bacchante" and in New York admits it. Here is the awful peril of this whole Comstock inquisition. It has no principles, and every man who takes a new view of any sex problem and tries to utter his honest thought, is liable to be handed over at any moment to the mercies or cruelties of lawyers and juries who know nothing at all about the matter and have only easily-inflamed prejudices and stupid traditions to guide their decision. So Adams and Larkin, sex teachers in Washington, are cleared, and Ida Craddock, sex teacher in New York, is jailed. The whole study and utterance of the most important of the human sciences is completely at the mercy of a gang of rat-catchers. The average judge, or juror, knows infinitely less about the mysteries of sex than he does about astronomy, yet what a howl would go up if what a man should teach concerning the stars were left to the criminal courts. O the damnable, awful stupidity and pitiable barbarism of it all!

And the persecution at Home still continues. Two more arrests—one of Lois Waisbrooker, 76 years old, because she published the "Awful Fate of Fallen Women," which as Comrade Morton says, "is mainly a moving plea against the one-sidedness which tramples mercilessly on the woman who is supposed to be down," and the other of the postmistress, Mattie D. Penhallow, because she, in response to a decoy request from the postal inspector, and with no knowledge of its contents, mailed him, as an act of courtesy and official duty, the paper he asked about. And because of this inspector's accusations, and without waiting for proof, the grand jury of the district recommends that their postoffice be abolished. Send all you can afford to Oliver A. Verity, Home, Pierce Co., Wash., for the defence.—J. Wm. Lloyd, in The Free Comrade.

The Logic of State Socialism.

Government is the coercion, right or wrong, of the weak by the stronger. Majority rule and absolutism are in this respect identical.

In a previous issue of Lucifer I called attention to the action of the existing state in suppressing or almost suppressing certain state socialist journals, and by implication ventured a prophecy to the effect that a state socialist state would not tolerate in the mails literature, journalistic or other, which powerfully attacked state socialism. C. P. H. desires to know by what process of reasoning I arrive at this conclusion.

My answer: The theory that the state is the proper custodian of some of the affairs of a people, provided that the state actually is the majority of that people, logically leads to the contention that the state is the proper custodian of all the affairs of a people; and that a state socialist majority will so reason I contend, because a man or a body of men will follow logic when it flatters them so to do or when it promises to serve their cause. A state socialistic state logically would rigorously rule out of the mails literature antagonizing state socialism because in the judgment of the majority it would be contrary to the well-being of the people that such literature should be read and acted upon; the majority being the accepted best judges of what constituted well-being and having the power to enforce their judgment through the state.

In my first paragraph I describe government; what follows is a picture of the working of irresponsible majorities, infatuated with conceit.

"Selah!" which Bible commentators define variously. Here let it mean, See?

IRONICUS.

Lucifer, the Lightbearer

M. HARMAN, EDITOR AND PUBLISHER.

PUBLISHED EVERY WEEK AT 500 FULTON STREET, CHICAGO, ILL.

Terms: One year, $1; six months, 50 cents; three months, 25 cents.

Entered at the Chicago Postoffice as Second-Class Mail Matter.

Eastern Representative, E. C. Walker, 244 W. 143d street, New York.

Lucifer—Its Meaning and Purpose.

LUCIFER—The planet Venus; so called from its brightness.—Webster's Dictionary.

LUCIFEROUS—Giving Light; affording light or the means of discovery.—Same.

LUCIFIC—Producing Light.—Same.

LUCIFORM—Having the form of Light.—Same.

The name Lucifer means Light-Bringing or Light-Bearing, and the paper that has adopted this name stands for Light against Darkness—for Reason against Superstition—for Science against Tradition—for Investigation and Enlightenment against Credulity and Ignorance—for Liberty against Slavery—for Justice against Privilege.

By the Way.

One of Lucifer's good friends writes: "In regard to first article in No. 917, 'What Would You Do?' I am going to try to have my good Baptist helpmate answer that—for doubtless you will get answers from many Liberals, and that article can be answered from more than one side." We shall be glad to have responses from as many points of view as possible. Responses have already begun to come in, but too late for this issue of Lucifer.

Just as the forms for this issue of Lucifer are filled we receive a communication from James F. Morton, Jr., of "Discontent," in acceptance of our offer to give him a hearing. It will appear next week. From his letter I quote: "Your offer is characteristically kind and generous and I accept it with many thanks. It is uncertain just when 'Discontent' will appear again, as we must await the result of various communications with Washington and the unrolling of several yards of red tape."

It is housec-leaning time in Lucifer's home as well as in the most orthodox households, and here as elsewhere the problem of what to do with accumulations of dust-catchers is a difficult one to solve. Our shelves and store-rooms are loaded with books and papers that some people would like to read. For instance, we have surplus copies of Lucifer of most of the issues for the last fifteen years. We have decided to make them up into packages of 40 copies, no two alike, and offer them for 15 cents a package. Of course at this price we cannot promise consecutive numbers, for many are missing altogether.

In response to many inquiries regarding the condition of the editor, I will say that it is not alarming but that the gain in strength is scarcely perceptible. The attack of grip was very severe and though he has for more than three weeks been able to leave his room and spends much of his time in the park, any physical or mental effort soon exhausts his strength. He suffers but little pain, and takes pleasure in the outdoor exercise and the sunshine. It will probably take several weeks' time for him to recover sufficient strength to do his usual amount of writing. He had expected to reply in this issue to friends who have criticised his late utterances on the "universality of law," but finds his strength not yet equal to the mental effort required.

"Whitman's Ideal Democracy, and Other Writings" is the title of a book recently issued. The volume contains papers written by Helena Born, entitled: Whitman's Ideal Democracy; Thoreau's Joy in Nature; Poets of Revolt; Shelley, Whitman, Carpenter; Whitman's Altruism; Individualism versus Organization; Ingenuities of Economic Argument; The Last Stand Against Democracy in Sex; Inequality in Divorce; Marriage Safeguards. A biographical introduction is written by Helen Tufts, the editor of the work. This is a memorial edition, limited to 500 copies, which are numbered. It is bound in boards, paper label, pages uncut, and contains portrait of Helena Born. We shall be glad to receive orders for the book, the price of which is one dollar.

In a recent letter ordering a copy of Dr. Foote's "Home Cyclopedia," one of Lucifer's subscribers in Texas says:

"We have four boys and four girls in our family—all healthy—and we find it next to impossible to break away from the false and shameful modesty in which we were brought up and tell those dear dependent ones what they ought to know. So, after discussing the matter, wife and I have decided to order the 'Home Cyclopedia,' and tell them there are things in it they ought to know, and insist on their reading it. I shall watch the effect, and let you know later how the 'scheme' works."

In reply I told our friends I thought they would make a mistake in "insisting" on their children reading the book. Human nature instinctively revolts against "improving literature" prescribed by others. Many books have been read because they were forbidden—books which would never have been read had they been labelled "improving." I suggested that the father and mother read interesting passages aloud to each other and discuss them in the presence of the children, but not as if they were making special effort to interest them. If they do this in a frank and matter-of-course way I think it will not be long before the children also will be reading and discussing the book frankly and openly. I read Dr. Foote's "Plain Home Talk" when I was thirteen years of age, and was intensely interested in it, and I am sure that the information I then obtained has been of great value to me. I do not think Dr. Foote's "Home Cyclopedia" (which is a revision and extension of "Plain Home Talk") is beyond the comprehension of the average young person.

L. H.

Radical Women—and Others.

A youth of but two and twenty naively remarked but yesterday that all the radical girls were "enjoying poor health," and artlessly boasted of the reputation he had gained among the "rads" for his "controlled intercourse," having lived with several women for short periods of time. Then it was that my free soul sickened and my whole body withered with outrage. So, my fellows, I fail to see that we have yet risen above the law-bound wife or hired mistress, who make no such exaction of men.

The trinityship of Man, Woman and Liberty we believe to be a holy and lovely existence and through economic or social fear we shirk the natural consequences and insist upon natural relations. Instead of creating we are but corrupting the already lust-bound world.

Wherein, after all, does the radical woman differ from the prostitute? The one barters with nature for cash; the other cheats nature by intrigue. So far we owe our position, such as it is, neither to our intellectual or spiritual development. We are still mere physical receptacles.

Work for your economic freedom; bear your offspring fearlessly and courageously. Teach men that intellectual freedom does not mean physical license but physical freedom; that we will yield a sound body and a clear brain unshackled by law or hire, and in the name of sublime freedom, we will stand by the result gladly and fearlessly.

ERNESTINE DAVISON.

The questions involved in the above communication are of vital importance. But it is almost impossible to discuss them publicly because to so many people any plain talk on the sexual relations is impure, "obscene." So instead of clearly saying what is meant, circumlocutory sentences must be used which may convey to the reader a meaning entirely different from that which the writer intended. For this reason, I am not at all sure that I understand Miss Davison's meaning in her first paragraph.

Many things besides the sexual relations—important though they are—contribute to the unhealthy physical condition of women, whether those women are radical or conservative. My observation, however, has not shown me that radical women "enjoy" more "poor health" than their conservative sisters; rather, the contrary.

It seems that Miss Davison disapproves of women and men sustaining relations which do not result in reproduction, and intimates that radical women "exact" self-control of their lovers, sufficient to relieve them of anxiety in that regard. But certainly neither the average "law-bound wife" nor "hired mistress" are willing to "let nature take its course" to the extent of bearing from five to sixteen children, as our grandmothers did. The small family is the rule, not the exception. We are obliged to adapt ourselves to present conditions, if we wish to survive, while working to make them better; and however we may admire or desire large families of children we are forced to face the fact that there is little room for them in our present society. It is an act of cruelty to bring six children into existence when we have barely sufficient for one.

And how is population limited? The methods are numerous but may be divided into three classes—self-control, prevention, and abortion. The latter two are most prevalent among wives and hired mistresses for the reason that if they "exact" self-control of men, they fear they will lose the support of the men. Self-control, mutually practiced, is preferred by some lovers. But it is a matter which each should decide for him or herself. If Miss Davison can see no difference between the prostitute who sells the use of her body in an undesired embrace, preventing offspring by mechanical or medicinal means, or by abortion, and the woman who, though enjoying the companionship of her lover, stops short of the reproductive act, then—well, we don't agree, that's all.

Nature is wastefully prolific; we must thwart her at every turn. If we have a garden we must limit the number of plants to prevent overcrowding, and a most distressing feature in the ownership of pets is the rapidity of reproduction. If we are to have children of whom we have a right to be proud we must limit their number to our capacity to care for them—then we can "stand by the result gladly and fearlessly." Better that a woman and a man should lose their health through self-control (though that seems to me altogether unnecessary) or even better that they kill themselves at once, than that they should be guilty of thrusting existence upon half a dozen puny, cramped, little beings, for whom they are unable to provide sufficient sustenance.

LILLIAN HARMAN.

Craddock Assaulted.

News has reached me that Mrs. Ida C. Craddock, who was sentenced to three months' imprisonment under pretext that she was circulating obscene literature, while confined a prisoner at the Workhouse, Blackwell's Island, New York, was violently and forcibly assaulted and her person outraged. She was held down by main force by two attendants in spite of all the resistance she could make and she was infected with vaccine poison notwithstanding her prayers, entreaties and protests. Not content with this the brute who thus outraged her threatened to vaccinate her every three days until it "took," thus assuring himself that her blood would be contaminated.

Possibly there is more or less danger of smallpox resulting from the dirty practices of the place which Mrs. Craddock might disclose, but if it were not for the fees paid for vaccination it would appear to be more practical to pursue a policy of cleanliness than to poison the blood of society's outcasts with vaccine. No condemnation can be too severe for such brutal malignity. The dependent situation in which Mrs. Craddock was placed made it doubly obligatory upon those in charge of her to protect her from such an attack and their failure to do so amounts to a criminal participation. The outrage itself is a logical sequence of the lawlessness of the judges who sentenced Mrs. Craddock in violation of her constitutional rights and seems to be a concomitant of that peculiar kind of moral purity which those judges affect.

ED. W. CHAMBERLAIN.

What Will a Woman Do for Love?

Nature never makes mistakes, and when her laws are violated the penalty must be paid. Love which is the dominant principle in woman's nature must be satisfied in motherhood or imbeciles and criminals are the result. The jails, penitentiaries, almshouses and insane asylums are filled with victims the logical result of woman's false education and degradation. She is surrounded by an icy wall of conventionalism. Her natural instincts must be confined within certain prescribed limits. Especially must she deny and conceal the demands of her love nature; the very highest law of her being, the very characteristic that makes her a woman and fits her for the grandest work in nature's plan must be denied and condemned.

Sometimes this artificial dam is too weak to hold the pent up forces, and society is shocked and startled to see how frail are the barriers it has constructed.

C. S. Darrow says: "In the great flood of human life that is spawned upon the earth it is not often that a man is born." Alas how true! And so long as women fail to recognize and demand the right to reproduce only the best of themselves will that condition confront us. If the natural instinct of seeking the proper mate in parenthood had not been stifled for ages, society could erect no barrier strong enough to curb this force, but centuries of suppression has so stifled and dulled this instinct that now only occasionally do women overstep the prescribed boundaries.

Mrs. Elliot reached out, blindly it is true, to satisfy this need, and the position she occupies in the household today proves beyond a doubt that the man to whom she was bound was unfit to become the father of her children: and the attitude of these children toward their heartbroken mother bears out this assertion. Will the world be made better by their lives? With a cold hearted inhuman wretch for a father, and a hopeless heart-hungry mother, is there any hope that among them may be found one life that will benefit the race? Are they not likely to be envious, narrow and unloving?

The mother nature in the woman shrank instinctively from this result. The demand of her heart for a true motherhood broke down the barriers by which she was surrounded and the freed forces, ungoverned and mighty, swept her life into the maelstrom of despair.

MAUD ABBEY.

Wathena, Kansas.

Love's Coming of Age.

Edward Carpenter is best known as a writer upon Socialism—his famous work "Towards Democracy" giving the gist and heart of all he claims for Equality. In "Love's Coming of Age" he holds that woman's freedom is based upon economics,—institutions of the future must make her independent financially that she may not be forced to sell herself in or out of Marriage.

He says: "Nor is her position likely to be improved until she is able to face men on an equality; to find, self-balanced, her natural relation to him; and to dispose of herself and of her sex perfectly freely, and not as a thrall must do."

He makes a strong plea for a motherhood of freedom and thoughtful preparation, and through this gives a hope of betterment for the race. The price of the book is $1. For sale at this office.

However unwillingly a person who has a strong opinion may admit the possibility that his opinion may be false, he ought to be moved by the consideration that however true it may be, if it is not fully, frequently, and fearlessly discussed, it will be held as a dead dogma, not a living truth.—John Stuart Mill.

VARIOUS VOICES.

Juliet H. Severance, M. D., Chicago:—Will my Lucifer friends take notice that I have changed my residence to 6127 Drexel Ave. I am now able to fill engagements to lecture on any reform subject or officiate at funerals. Your editorials are fine. May they long continue.

Elmina D. Slenker, Snowville, Va.:—Lucifer comes regularly and I try to put them where they will sow good seed. The story, "Forgiveness," in No. 916 will do splendid work. A little story does more real good than a whole book of morals and maxims. It reaches the heart as well as the reason.

L. R., Maysville, Ky.:—You did not give the price of the book "Capt. Jinks Hero." So enclosed find $2 for which please send me the book and credit my subscription with the balance.

[The price of "Capt. Jinks Hero" is $1.50, and it is well worth the money in every way. We shall add it to our list of books and will be glad to supply it on receipt of price.]

Mrs. F. N. P., Akron, Ohio:—While in Canton I found a few people who took quite an interest in your literature. I loaned the books I had and they enjoyed them very much. I hope you will get orders for some more books from there and I will try to get people in this city interested during our stay here. Enclosed find 50 cents for two trial subscriptions to accompanying addresses.

Mrs. Nettie Pitcher, S. Dak.:—I just can't keep still any longer. I must tell you that I think Lucifer the grandest paper ever published, and I wish I were able to place it in the hands of every woman and man on earth. The article, "Who Are the Fallen," by Kate Austin is so sensible I would like a few sample copies containing this article sent to my friends, and inclose names and stamps.

Constance Crane, Chicago:—In Lucifer No. 916 our friend Kate Austin calls Dr. Clymer to task for trying to help "fallen" women. Now it seems to me that she is really finding fault with a term and ignores the proposition he makes. If I understand the doctor aright he means to undertake the task of teaching them to respect themselves. There is no doubt in the minds of any of Lucifer's readers, I think, as to the respect-worthiness of these women, so there can be no argument on this point, but I do most heartily endorse Dr. Clymer's undertaking and am willing to do all I can to further its interests.

These "fallen" women, it seems to me, are more ready for reform than any other class of society for the very reason that they have been cast out and made to believe that they can never be anything else than "fallen." The mental prostitutes are harder to reach because they are respectable and are part and parcel of society. Do you not think it necessary that each individual should think himself just as much a part and even a necessity as the rest of humanity? I will close with best wishes for progress in this direction.

W. N. Slocum, Los Angeles, Cal.:—Notwithstanding the apparently general compliance with the statutes relating to marriage, many open transgressions of the law are justified on moral grounds—which fact indicates that at some future period love, not law; natural attraction, not property considerations; personal fitness, not social requirements; free choice, not forced submission, will regulate the relations of the sexes. When that time comes woman will be what nature fits her to become—a free human being, the owner and controller of her home—the sole selecter of her male associates—the revered mother of the race. Paternal service is a momentary experience of man—an infinitesimal portion of his life. Maternal service is the highest and most important experience of woman—it is her very life, and through her, mainly, the race is elevated.

The natural order of human development is: first, physical second, mental; third, moral; fourth, spiritual. Man secured dominion over woman in savagery by brute force, and retained it in civilization by mental superiority. At the beginning of the Twentieth Century the foundation has been laid for the unfoldment of the moral faculties, and the development of the spiritual nature of mankind, and in these realms (the moral and the spiritual) woman will fulfil her divine mission as the leader and inspirer of man. That age of light, the advent of which is very near, will be the "Era of Woman," as the dark and cruel past has been the "Age of Man." When mankind (which means humankind) are fairly started on the line of moral and spiritual development, then "Motherhood in Freedom" will be possible, and the regeneration of the race will speedily follow.

The Extravagant Poor.

A bandit used to rob the peasantry, so that when they began to starve they appealed to him for charity.

Said the bandit: "I will give you nothing; you are poor because you are thriftless; my Associated Charities inform me that you waste even the bones of your meat."

"If you were industrious and honest," said he (as he lifted a sheep), "the country would be richer, and I could make more. You waste your goods, so that there is nothing to steal, and then we all suffer hard times."

"But, sir," replied the peasants, "you yourself throw away even the legs, and eat nothing but the tenderloins."

"I can afford it," said the bandit, "because I do not have to work for my living; you lower classes would better pray to heaven for prosperity, instead of troubling me with your preposterous discontent."—Bolton Hall.

Defense Fund.

For Lois Waisbrooker and Mattie D. Penhallow, Home, Wash. Amount previously reported, $55.78; D. M., Wash., $5; A. J. De. H., Calif., $5; Mrs. N. M., Wash., $2; J. L., Iowa $1.50; Mrs. M. W., Wash., $1; E. M., Wash., $1; J. C., Conn., $1; E. M. D., Calif., $1; E. J. H., Oregon, 50 cents. Total received to May 12, $73.78.

OLIVER A. VERITY, Treas.
Home, Washington.

"Facts Worth Knowing" is the title of a pamphlet of 80 pages "presented to the public by the Brooklyn Philosophical Association." It is a compilation from the writings of Ingersoll, Hugh O. Pentecost, Josephine K. Henry, J. E. Roberts, L. K. Washburn, and Louis Mueller. It is intended for free distribution, but we must ask those who order of us to send three cents a copy or 25 cents a dozen to cover express charges and mailing expenses.

THE ARENA FOR MAY contains several articles helpful as well as interesting to thinkers. Among these may be mentioned: Education and Democracy—Rabbi Chas. Fleischer. The Iconoclast as a Builder—Shaler G. Hillyer. The Place of Education in Reform—Dr. Ernest C. Moore. Japanese Buddhism—Keijiro Nakamura and Rev. Clarence Edgar Rice. Popular Election of U. S. Senators—Chas. H. Fox. Wives, Widows and Wills—Miss M. E. Carter. "He Found Life"—Laura R. Wills. Topics of the Times, (Editorial)—B. O. Flower. 25 cents a copy. Address, Alliance Pub. Co., N. Y.

"Please tell the Court what you did between eight and nine o'clock that morning."

"I gave the two children their breakfast, dressed them for school, made up their lunches, washed the dishes, made the beds, sorted the soiled linen and put it in the tubs, swept and dusted the parlor, sewed a button or two on the children's clothes, interviewed the gas man, grocer and butcher, put off the landlord, sat down to glance over the morning paper, and then——"

"That will do, madam."—New York Herald.

And this is one of the fortunate women who "don't have to work" because supported by a husband!

DO YOU EVER THINK

Of the fate of the Prodigal Daughter? The Prodigal Son is forgiven and received with rejoicing—why should different treatment be accorded to his sister? For a vivid, true picture of the conditions in homes and factories which produce thousands of so-called fallen women every year, read "The Prodigal Daughter; or, The Price of Virtue," by Rachel Campbell.

SPECIAL OFFER.

This valuable work sent free on receipt of twenty-five cents for a thirteen week's trial subscription to Lucifer the Light Bearer. M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton Street, Chicago, Ill.

VICE: ITS FRIENDS AND ITS FOES

BY EDWIN C. WALKER.

CONTENTS:—Brotherhood of Man; The Recognition of Facts; Folly of "For Men Only." Definition of Vice; Horrors of Prostitution; Abnormal Sexuality; Errors of Fathers, Mothers and Teachers; Persecution Does Not Reform; Prostitution and the Crusaders; The "Spoiling of the Heathen;" What are the Effects of Raids and Crusades? The Economic Side of the Problem. Party Politics in Vice Crusading; In What Does Prostitution Consist? Some Causes of Prostitution; Two Kinds of Prostitution Compared; The Opponents of Divorce; "Purifying" the Tenements; Action for Advanced Women.

WITH APPENDIX:—The Wanderings of a Spirit; Our Fair Civilization The Folly and Cruelty of It All. Price 15c.

Address M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

COLLEGE OF MEDICINE AND SURGERY, CHICAGO, ILL.

Session begins September 25 and continues eight months. Four Years' Graded Course. Practical work required in Chemistry Physiology, Bacteriology and Microscopy. Co-Educational. Standard Requirement. For catalogue, address Florence E. Dressler, M. D., Secretary.

245 Ashland Boulevard, Chicago.

A "BARGAIN COUNTER" LOT OF LITERATURE AT HALF-PRICE OR LESS.

The following is a partial list of books and pamphlets which have accumulated on our shelves, time-worn and dusty. In order to get them out of our way we have marked the price down. Never more than half price, and in many instances less than a quarter of publisher's prices.

Some of these works are out of print, and perhaps you may here find just the pamphlet you have been fruitlessly looking for. Some are clean, but the covers of most are shelf-worn; the inside leaves, however, clean and complete.

In ordering, please state if you wish your money returned in case we are out of the book ordered, or if you will take something else in its place.

An Old Subject in a New Light: Crime, What Shall We Do About It? Charles Houghton, 8c.

A Few Words About the Devil, and Other Essays. Charles Bradlaugh. With the story of his life as told by himself, and the history of his Parliamentary struggle. 25 cts Postage 5cts.

Cellular Cosmogony; or the Earth a Concave Sphere. Cyrus R. Teed. 15c.

Catechism on the Science of a Universal Religion. Gabriel Z. Wacht. 10c.

Dictionary of Dreams. Dr. S Greer. 25 pages. 10c.

Essays on Deaths and Funerals. A collection of facts and ideas, selected and original, referring to deaths and funerals. Joseph Henry. 10c.

Eureka, How to prevent colds, hay fever, etc., without drugs. 5c.

Ethicism: or the Wise Men Reviewed. 2.9 p, 20c.

Everybody Made Happy. C. Orchardson. 4c.

Free Trade. E. H. Heywood. 15c

From Pandemonium to Elysium. James Thierry, 10c.

Government Analyzed, Col. J. K. Kelso, 40c.

Hints About the Teaching of Natural History. 4c.

Law and Gospel. G. W. Foote. 5c.

Liberty, Political, Religious, Social and Sexual. A. F. Tindall, 2c.

Preachers and Creeds. I. The Predestination of Preachers. D. K. Tenney. II. The Passing of the Creeds. David B. Page, 5 cts.

Practical Co-operation, E. C. Walker. 5c.

Social Ethics, E. H Heywood. 15c.

Silver Songs, Words by H. W. Taylor. Music by J. B. Herbert. 5c.

Some Little Rhymes Composed at Odd Times, Wallace E. Nevill, 5c.

Twelve Essays. Frederic W. Burry. With portrait, 10 cents.

The Relation of Anarchism to Organization. Fred Schuider, 5 cts.

The Country School Teacher. Jonathan Hunt, 10 cts.

The Sabbath. M. Farrington, 5c.

Tobacco: Its Effects on the Human System, by Dr. William A. Alcott, with notes and additions by Nelson Sizer. 149 pages. 15c.

The Last Song of Jeremiah Hacker, 5c.

The Living Temple, or the House We Live In. (Astrological). C. T. H. Benton. 10c.

The Railway Problem; with many illustrations and diagrams. A. B. Stickney. 20c.

What Diana Teaches. Count Tolstoi. 1c.

What Constitutes a Freethinker, H. L. Green. 1c.

What Is America's Relation to England? Evaleen Laura Mason. 5c.

Address M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

Personal. A man aged thirty, strong and healthy, whose aim is to think and to do what is right, whose ambition is to attain to the highest point of real manhood, who regards all men as brothers and all women as sisters, would like to correspond with a woman that is or wants to be, a true woman. Address Arthur J. Willrat, Postoffice, Toledo, Ohio.

For Rent: Large, light, furnished room. Inquire of Lillian Harman 500 Fulton, St. Chicago.

918.

If these figures correspond with the number printed on the wrapper of your Lucifer, your subscription expires with this number.

If a copy of Lucifer fails to reach you, please order by number or date.

Lucifer will not be sent "by return mail" unless stamps for postage are enclosed with order.

TO NEW SUBSCRIBERS: Your subscription is paid to No. If you have not ordered Lucifer, a friend has subscribed for you. If you do not wish to receive it, please notify us by card or through your postmaster. If you wish to become a regular subscriber you will confer a favor by renewing before the expiration of your trial subscription.

LOVE'S COMING OF AGE.

This is a book with which few will wholly agree, but which nearly every one can read with profit and enjoyment. The subject is the relation of the sexes in the past, present and future, and it is treated with absolute frankness and fearlessness by a writer who unites a broad outlook, a strong grasp of his subject and a charming literary style. The following table of contents will indicate the line of thought followed by the author.

The Sex Passion.
Man, the Ungrown.
Woman, the Serf.
Woman in Freedom
Marriage: a Retrospect
Marriage: a Forecast.
The Free Society.
Some remarks on the early star and sex worships.
Notes—On the Primitive Group Marriage; Jealousy; The Family; Preventive Checks to Population.

The book will be printed on extra book paper and handsomely bound in cloth. The price, including postage to any address will be one dollar. Copies will be ready about April 20.

Address M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

RADICAL LITERATURE.

For Sale by M. Harman, 500 Fulton St., Chicago.

A CHAMBERMAID'S DIARY. By Octave Mirbeau. Translated from the French by Benj. R. Tucker. 400 pages. Handsomely bound in cloth. $1.50.

ADVANCEMENT OF SCIENCE. Prof. John Tyndall's famous Inaugural Address before the British Association for the Advancement of Science, with the articles on Prayer which so stirred the religious world. Cloth, 50c; paper, 25c.

AGE OF REASON (The). Presentation edition. Part I reprinted from the first English edition. Part II corrected by M. D. Conway's edition. With Paine's own account of his arrest in Paris. Photogravure portrait from the Romney painting exhibited in London. Containing also portrait from the Jarvis painting; from the Peale painting, known as the Bonneville portrait, representing Paine as a member of the French Assembly, and a half-tone of the Peale painting. Large half-tones of the house presented to Paine, in which he lived in New Rochelle, and of the monument and surroundings, Yorktown, Pa., scenes; also eight half-tone views of buildings, etc., associated with Paine's life in Paris, and other illustrations. With Preface, Chronological Table, Notes, Index, etc. Printed on antique wove paper, large octavo, wide margins, gilt edge. Special cover design in colors. The finest and most accurate of all editions. Boxed. Postpaid, $2.

AGE OF REASON. Thomas Paine. Cloth, with steel plate portrait, 50c; paper 15c.

ANARCHISM: Its Philosophy and Ideal. Peter Kropotkin. 5c.

A PHYSICIAN IN THE HOUSE. A New Family Medical Work, by Dr. J. H. Greer. This book is up-to-date in every particular. It will save you hundreds of dollars in doctors' bills. It tells you how to cure yourself by simple and harmless home remedies. It recommends no poisonous or dangerous drugs. It teaches how to live health and life by safe methods. It teaches prevention—that it is better to know how to live and avoid disease than to take any medicine as a cure. It is not an advertisement and has no medicine to sell. It has hundreds of excellent recipes for the cure of the various diseases. It has 16 colored plates showing different parts of the human body. The chapter on Painless Midwifery is worth its weight in gold to women. The "Care of Children" is something every mother ought to read. It teaches the value of Air, Sunshine, and Water as medicines. It contains valuable information for the married. This book cannot fail to please you. If you are looking for health by the safest and easiest means, do not delay getting it. It has eight hundred pages, is neatly bound in cloth, with gold letters, and will be sent by mail or express, prepaid to any address, for $1.75.

A PLEA FOR THE NEW WOMAN. May L. Collins. With large new half-tone portrait. 10c.

A TALE OF THE STRASSBURG GEESE. R. B. Kerr. Together with The Strike of the Strassburg Geese (C. W. Coolridge), A Traveler's Tale (R. B. Kerr), The Cat's Story (Emile Zola) 5c.

AUTONOMY, SELF-LAW. A fragmentary dissertation on the right to non-invasive self-hood. 5c.

A WEEK ON THE CONCORD AND MERRIMAC RIVERS. Henry D. Thoreau. 25c.

BALZAC'S SERAPHITA: The Mystery of Sex. Mary Hanford Ford. Cloth. $1.

BIBLE TEMPERANCE. E. C. Walker. Proving that Liquor Drinking is Commended, Defended and Enjoined by the Bible, and giving close reference to the chapters and verses. 10c.

BORNING BETTER BABIES—Through regulating reproduction by controlling conception. E. B. Foote, Jr., M. D. 25c.

CAUSES OF HARD TIMES, and the Money Question. Albert Chavannes. 5c.

CHICAGO CONFERENCE OF TRUSTS. Speeches, debates, etc.; 41 portraits of delegates, including Benj. R. Tucker, Laurence Gronlund, William Jennings Bryan, Samuel Gompers, Louis F. Post, and George Schilling. 428 pages. 50c.

CHILDREN OF THE ITALIAN POOR. Paola Lombroso. 5c.

DARWIN'S THE. (A novel.) Elmina D. Slenker. 50c.

DAWN OF CIVILIZATION, The; or, England in the Nineteenth Century. J. C. Spence. 178 pages. 25c.

DAWN-THOUGHT ON THE RECONCILIATION. By J. Wm. Lloyd. An inspired treatise that, with insight and solution, touches all the questions of life, love, soul and society. A prose-poem, simple enough for a child to enjoy, deep enough to make a philosopher think. The largest creed, the most generous theory, the gladdest gospel. A book of life. A religion of growth and the overlook—freedom and optimism. Read it. Printed in old style antique type, rubricated with portrait of the author. In three editions, de luxe, plain and paper bound. Prices, $1.25, $1.00 and 50c.

DIGGING FOR BED-ROCK. Camp-meeting talks and sketches by Moses Harman. 5c.

ECONOMICS OF ANARCHY. A Study of the Industrial Type. Dyer D. Lum 15c.

DR. FOOTE'S SOCIAL SCIENCE SERIES OF DIME PAMPHLETS—Wedlock; Scientific Marriage; Heredity; A B C of Temperaments; Powell and his Critics; Physiological Marriage; Physical Improvement of Humanity; Causes of Disease, Insanity, and Premature Death; A Step Backward. Any of the above books sent by mail on receipt of price.

DYNAMIC THEORY OF LIFE AND MIND. An attempt to show that all organic beings are both constructed and operated by the dynamic agencies of their respective environments. By James H. Alexander. Over 400 Illustrations, 27 chapters, 1,067 pages and a 2-column index of 11 pages. Cloth, $3.75.

EAST TENNESSEE SKETCHES. A and Cecile Chavannes. 25c.

EIGHT-HOUR MOVEMENT. John P. Altgeld, ex-Governor of Illinois. 5c.

EVOLUTION AND REVOLUTION. Elisee Reclus. 5c.

FALSE CLAIMS OF THE CHURCH. John E. Remsburg. Analyzing and confuting the claims made by churchmen that the Christian religion has promoted morality, learning, temperance, science, freedom, and showing how she has opposed progress. Paper, 10c.

FIELDS, FACTORIES, AND WORKSHOPS; or, Industry Combined with Agriculture and Brain Work with Manual Work. Peter Kropotkin. 360 pages. 60c. Postage, 5c.

FREE PRESS. Arguments in support of demurrer to the indictment of M. Harman, E. C. Walker and Geo. Harman, under the Comstock law. G. C. Siemens and David Overmyer, 20c.

GIORDANO BRUNO. His Life, Teachings, and Martyrdom. Burned for heresy in Rome, Feb. 17, 1600. 5c.

GOD AND THE STATE. Bakounine. 25c.

GOVERNMENT ANALYZED. A remarkable work by a remarkable man, Col. John R. Kelso, the history of whose life reads more like romance than reality. This book is the last of a series—Deity Analyzed, Bible Analyzed, Universe Analyzed. By the author's death this work was left unfinished, but was completed by his wife, Rita Dunbar Kelso. 329 pages; cloth. Price reduced from $1.50 to $1.

HILDA'S HOME. Rosa Graul. "An o'er true tale" of woman's wrongs and of one woman's struggles and final triumphs in her attempt to secure justice for herself and for her sisters. 426 pages. Cloth, $1; paper, 50c.

HUMAN RIGHTS. J. Madison Hook. 5c.

IMPORTANCE OF HONEST MONEY. A simple, scientific, invariable standard of price. James Adleman. 320 pages. Paper, 50c.

IN BRIGHTER CLIMES; or, Life in Scotland. Albert Chavannes. 5c.

INFIDEL DEATH-BEDS. "Idle Tales of Dying Horrors." G. W. Foote. Brief biographical sketches of 37 Freethinkers, including Bruno, Buckle, Byron, Comte, Darwin, George Eliot, Gibbon, Goethe, Hugo, Harriet Martineau, Mill, Paine, Madame Roland, George Sand, Shelley, Voltaire, Voisey, and Voltaire. 25c.

IN HELL, AND THE WAY OUT. A plan of Social Democracy outlined. Henry E. Allen. 10c.

INSTITUTIONAL MARRIAGE. From the viewpoint of an exiled Mormon. M. Harman. 5c.

JOHN'S WAY. A domestic radical story. Elmina D. Slenker. 25c.

KAREZZA. Ethics of Marriage. A bold, brave book, teaching ideal marriage, rights of the unborn child, a designed and controlled maternity. Sample pages free. $1.

KORADINE. A story for young and old. Extra levant cloth. $1.

LIBERTY IN LITERATURE. Testimonial to Walt Whitman. "Let us put wreaths on the brows of the living." An address delivered in Philadelphia, Oct. 21, 1890, with portrait of Whitman. Containing also Col. Ingersoll's address at the funeral of Walt Whitman, Mar. 30, 1892. Cloth, 50c; paper, 25c.

LIBERTY. Political, Religious, Social, and Moral. A. F. Tindall. 5c.

LITTLE LESSONS FOR LITTLE FOLKS. Elmina D. Slenker. Boards, 40c.

LIZZIE MELTON. A story of a self-reliant girl. By Albert Chavannes. With portrait of author. 25c.

LUCIFER. Third Series, Vol. III. (1899). Cloth, $1.25. Postage, 25c.

MAGNETATION, and Its Relation to Health and Character. Albert Chavannes. 25c.

MARRIAGE. An address by Dr. Juliet H. Severance. 5c.

MARRIAGE IN FREE SOCIETY. Edward Carpenter. A dainty little gift book. 25c.

MARTYRDOM OF MAN. Winwood Reade. This is a very interestingly pictured synopsis of universal history, showing what the race has undergone—its martyrdom—in its rise to its present plane. It shows how war and religion have been oppressive factors in man's struggle for liberty; and the last chapter, of some 150 pages, describes his intellectual struggle from the animal period of the earth to the present, adding an outline of what the author conceives would be a religion of reason and love. Winwood Reade's reputation as a writer of fine English, of deep study and careful reasoning, needs no word of praise. Cloth, $1.

MEN, WOMEN AND CHANCE. William Platt. Containing two tales: The Ascent to the Heights, and Blind Men and Seeing. Well printed on heavy paper and artistically bound in cloth. Gilt top, rough edges. 75c.

MEN, WOMEN, AND GODS. Helen H. Gardener. With preface by Col. R. G. Ingersoll. Contents: Introduction by Col. Ingersoll; Man, Woman, and Gods. Vicarious Atonement. Historical Facts and Theological Frothing. Appendix. Address to the Clergy and Others. Letter to Cleveland Congress of Freethinkers. The only authorized and correct edition. Large 12mo, heavy-toned paper. Portrait. This volume is by far the best writing this famous author ever did. It is very fine. Cloth, $1; paper, 50c.

MISSING LINK IN MODERN SPIRITUALISM, THE. A. Leah (Fox) Underhill. With portraits of the Fox Sisters and others. 478 pages. Cloth. Reduced to $1.

MORIBUND SOCIETY AND ANARCHY. Jean Grave. Cloth, 40c; paper, 25c.

MOTHERHOOD IN FREEDOM. M. Harman. 5c.

MUTUAL BANKING. A simple plan to abolish interest on money. William B. Greene. 10c.

NORA, A DOLL'S HOUSE, and GHOSTS. Ibsen. Cloth. 75c.

OUR WORSHIP OF PRIMITIVE SOCIAL GUESSES. E. C. Walker. Contents: Love and Law; The Moloch of the Monogamic Ideal; The Continuity of Race-Life, and Tyranny; Food and Sex Fallacies, a Criticism; When Men and Women Are and When They Are Not Varieties; The New Woman: What is she? What will she be? The Stats Hiding Behind Its Own Mistakes; Bishop Potter's Opinion of Divorce; Love: Its Attraction and Expression; Is She an Honest Ghost? Lloyd, Platt, and the Pitiful Facts; Radicals and Parentage; Anthropology and Monogamy; Love and Trust Versus Fear; Reflections upon Reading William Platt's "Women, Love, and True Life." 15c.

PERSONAL EXPERIENCES of Two American Anti-Vivisectionists in Various Countries. Philip G. Peabody. With an Appendix by Col. R. G. Ingersoll. Reduced from 25c to 15c.

PERSONAL RIGHTS AND SEXUAL WRONGS. Oswald Dawson. 25c.

PRIESTLY CELIBACY. Prof. A. L. Rawson. Together with The Incoherence of Transition (E. C. Walker). Motherhood in Freedom (Moses Harman). The Greatest Sin (an allegory, R. B. Kerr), and Jealousy, the Foe of Freedom (Oscar Rotter). 25c.

RELIGION AND RATIONALISM. The relation of each to human liberty. The religionist, fancying that he has the whole truth, is logically opposed to investigation, and he appeals to physical force to arrest the discovery of new truths. What Rationalism is, and how many believe themselves Freethinkers who are only unbelieving or disgruntled religionists. The necessity for separate organizations and a division of labor among reformers. The Secular Union. Important facts and arguments in a compact form. E. C. Walker. 5c

RIGHTS OF MAN. Thomas Paine. Answer to Burke's attack upon the French revolution. A political treatise of great general value, as advocating liberty and democracy. Contains the fundamental principles of true republicanism. Cloth, 50c; paper, 25c.

RUBAIYAT (Quatrains) OF OMAR KHAYYAM. Edward FitzGerald's interpretation; with original introduction; special cover; latest version. Paper, 10c.

RULED BY THE TOMB. A discussion of free thought and free love. Orford Northcote. 10c.

SCIENCE IN STORY; or, Sammy Tubbs, the Boy Doctor, and Sponsie, the Troublesome Monkey. For young folks. Dr. E. B. Foote. Five volumes in "red line," presentation edition. $5. Five volumes, plainer binding, $2.50; all in one volume, $2.

SEXUAL PHYSIOLOGY FOR THE YOUNG. Being the fifth volume of "Science in Story." 250 pages; cloth bound; illustrated. 50c.

SONGS OF THE UNBLIND CUPID. J. Wm. Lloyd. Edition de luxe. Verses printed from Kelmscott type upon deckle edged hand made paper of cerulean tint. Initial letters, ornaments and borders are in red; initial letter and sketch upon the opening page are hand painted in water colors. Covers brown, with choice of silver or gold lettering. Very handsome gift book. 50c.

STUDIES IN SOCIOLOGY. In four parts: I., The Law of Happiness; II., The Law of Individual Control; III., The Law of Exchange; IV., The Law of Environment. Albert Chavannes. 25c.

TALKS ON NATURE. Important information for both sexes. Dr. J. H. Greer. 192 pages. Reduced from 50 to 25c.

THE ABOLITION OF MARRIAGE. John Beverly Robinson. Together with Isabel's Intention (Marietta), Reminiscences of Berlin Heights (A. Warren), and The Sexes and Love in Freedom (Oscar Rotter). 25c.

THE BAR SINISTER AND LICIT LOVE, including the first biennial proceedings of the Legitimation League, and a full account of the Lanchester case, with full-page half-tone pictures of Edith Lanchester, and Lillian Harman. Handsomely bound in green and gold covers. 307 pages. 25c.

THE BLUE LAWS OF CONNECTICUT. Taken from the Code of 1650 and the public records of the Colony of Connecticut previous to 1665. With an account of the persecution of Witches and Quakers in New England, and some extracts from the Blue Laws of Virginia. Copiously illustrated. 25c.

THE BRITISH BARBARIANS. Grant Allen, the greatest of the Hill-Top pioneers. Dedicated "to all who have heart enough, brain enough, and soul enough to understand it." Handsomely bound in cloth. 281 pages. $1.

THE WOMAN WHO DID. Grant Allen. A powerful story of a refined, educated and high-spirited woman who dared to defy the tyranny of church and state and ignore the institution of marriage. Handsomely bound in cloth. $1.

THE NEW HEDONISM. Grant Allen. The opening paragraph says: "The old sage said: 'Be virtuous and you will be happy.' The new hedonism says: 'Be happy and you will be virtuous.'" In another place the writer says: "In proportion as men have freed themselves from mediæval superstitions have they begun to perceive that the unclean and impure things are the fit and worthy exercise of the reproductive function." Paper covers; 32 large pages; twelve copies, 50c. Single copy, 5c.

THE CHICAGO MARTYRS. The famous speeches of the eight condemned anarchists in Judge Gary's Court, and Altgeld's reasons for pardoning Fielden, Neebe and Schwab. 25c.

THE COMING WOMAN. Lillie D. White. 5c.

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM. Principles and platform of organized Freethought. 10c.

THE EVOLUTION OF MODESTY. Jonathan Mayo Crane. A consideration of the origin of clothes and the reasons why people wear clothing. Here are a few questions it answers: What is modesty? What is the cause of it? What in the use of it? What is the cause of it? nudity immodest? What is the cause of the feeling of shame? Is expose some parts of the body? Why do not all peoples agree as to what parts of the body should be concealed? 5c.

THE FOUNTAIN OF LIFE; or, The Threefold Power of Sex. Lois Waisbrooker. 50c.

THE FUTURE OF SECULARISM. When will the Cause of Justice triumph? 5c.

THE PRODIGAL DAUGHTER; or, The Price of Virtue. Rachel Campbell. Together with Legal Wifehood (Lucinda B. Chandler), Life's Gifts (Olive Schreiner), and Marriage—What It Was and Is; Will the Coming Woman Marry? 25c.

THE REVIVAL OF PURITANISM. E. C. Walker. 10c.

THE RIGHTS OF CHILDREN. R. B. Kerr. Together with What Are Women Here For? (E. B. Foote, Jr., M. D.), The New Martyrdom (Lillian Harman), and The Will, from the French of Guy de Maupassant. 25c.

THE SANCTITY OF MARRIAGE. As viewed from a moral and sanitary standpoint. A solemn protest against the present demoralizing management of that institution, its effects upon offspring and its influence upon education. By Dr. Robert A. Greer. A valuable "opening wedge" in missionary work. Price reduced from 25c to 10c.

THE SECRET INSTRUCTIONS OF THE JESUITS. A reprint from an edition published in 1723, quoted by the highest authorities as authentic. The work is evident of Jesuit craft and is a plain index to the underhand working of that order against the welfare of individuals and society. 15c.

THE STATE: ITS HISTORIC ROLE. Prince Peter Kropotkin. 10c.

THE TROUBADOURS AND COURTS OF LOVE. J. F. Rowbotham. Cloth. 350 pages. $1.50. Postage, 10c.

THE UNWOMANLY WOMAN. Lizzie M. Holmes. Together with That Great Fraud, Telegt Society (Moses Hull), Virgin Soil (George Egerton), and Normal Sexual Action (Ernest Winne). 25c.

THE WORM TURNS. Revolutionary Poems. Voltairine de Cleyre. 10c.

THOMAS JEFFERSON. His Political, Social and Religious Philosophy. Gen. M. M. Trumbull. 5c.

TOKOLOGY. A book for every woman. By Alice B. Stockham, M. D. Illustrated. Tokology teaches possible painless pregnancy and parturition, giving full, plain directions for the care of a woman before and after confinement. The ailments of pregnancy can be prevented as well as the pains and dangers of childbirth avoided and women need not go down to death giving birth to children. English, German or Swedish. $2.25.

TRAVELS IN FAITH. By Capt. Robert C. Adams. His mental experience from superstition to rationalism. Cloth, 75c; paper, 25c.

VACCINATION A GIGANTIC CRIME. Samuel Darling. 15c.

VINDICATION OF THOMAS PAINE. Col. R. G. Ingersoll. Dealing with all the slanders brought against the name and fame of Paine. A little pamphlet which every admirer of Thomas Paine should have by him for reference. Paper, 15c.

VITAL FORCE. Magnetic Exchange and Magnetation. Albert Chavannes. 25c.

WHAT THE YOUNG NEED TO KNOW: a Primer of Sexual Rationalism. Edwin C. Walker. "Let us cease to be ashamed of what makes us men, of what makes us women, of what gives us the kisses of lovers and the embraces of babes." Paper covers; 42 large pages. 10c.

WHAT IS RELIGION? Ingersoll's last public address, delivered at the meeting of the Free Religious Association in Boston on June 3, 1900. To which is appended the poem, "Declaration of the Free," the last verse written by the great Freethinker. 5c.

WHEN LOVE IS LIBERTY AND NATURE LAW. John Badcock, Jr. 10c.

WHY THE UNDERTONE? An open letter to Judge Gary. Sarah E. Ames. 10c.

WOMAN, CHURCH, AND STATE. Matilda Joslyn Gage. This is Mrs. Gage's last and crowning work. Every woman ought to read it. Every liberal woman and man will want it. A burning protest against the tremendous wrong done woman by the church, which controlled the state. It ought to be widely read for the good it will do. Cloth, $1.50; paper, 75c.

WOMAN: Four Centuries of Progress. Susan H. Wixon. 5c.

WOMAN IN THE PAST, PRESENT AND FUTURE. Woman was the first human being that tasted bondage. Woman was a slave before the slave existed. The basis of all oppression is economic dependence on the oppressor. This has been the condition of woman in the past and is so still. She is now a slave of the slave. This work is August Bebel's masterpiece. 8vo, 179 pages. 50c.

Address M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

Price 2 Cents.

LUCIFER.

THE LIGHT-BEARER.

THIRD SERIES, VOL. VI., No. 20. CHICAGO, ILLINOIS, MAY 29, E. M. 302. [C. E. 1902.] WHOLE No. 919

NOT THE LOVER WHO LOVES BUT ME.

I love liberty more than love—
The love of the lover with thought above;
Not the lover who loves but me,
But the love of the lover who sets me free.

I love liberty more than sex,
The cling of a slave my bed would vex;
Give me the woman who instantly
Would leave my arms were she not free!

I love liberty more than all
The helpless loves that stifling fall—
My lover must love immensity
And all the great things more than me.

I love liberty more than bliss,
The comrade touch is the closest kiss;
My dearest is one who will be free,
Not the lover who loves but me.

—J. Wm. Lloyd, in "The Free Comrade."

The Woman and the Law.

Many years ago, before statutory enactments had made some desirable changes in the old common law that we inherited with other ancient customs and ideas from dear Mother England, there was a young seamstress whose one ambition it was to own a writing desk and bureau combined—the same that we now see in the old-fashioned "secretary." To gratify her wish she worked early and late and saved her earnings until she was able to make the purchase and see her vision materialize in the coveted piece of furniture established in her own little home. After enjoying it for a time she married, and, according to the law then prevailing, she ceased to own anything. Her husband entered into possession of all her effects when he took her to wife.

After awhile he "shuffled off the mortal coil," leaving her a childless widow.

Then came the first of a series of tragic events in her life history. Her household goods—the dearly bought desk included—were all appraised as belonging to her deceased lord's estate. In order to retain her beloved desk she bought it again. One would suppose that she had received a salutary and never-to-be-forgotten lesson. But, nay—in time another man came to woo the industrious, hard-working woman. She listened to his suit. He won. Again she lost her "secretary," with herself, in li'e matrimonial.

Years elapsed until she faced widowhood and the inevitable appraisers once more. Her twice purchased desk could not be hers undisputed until she again paid the appraised valuation.

As time glided on, lonely and widowed, but in full possession of her little property, she lived, peacefully and contentedly. Either she or her belongings must have been very attractive, for soon there came another suitor to pay his court to her, and perhaps incidentally to her real and personal estate. Doubtless the latter was alluring. Wonders will never cease! She was almost persuaded to pronounce the fateful affirmative that would again impoverish her. But, fortunately, as the two sat in converse, the would be husband number three, while formulating the momentous question unconsciously leaned toward the desk and took hold of a drawer-handle with which he dallied, possibly to relieve his laudable embarrassment, while thinking how he should deliver himself of his proposal.

Now, the good angels of the widow were near, or perhaps the evil genii of the man presided. Her attention was drawn to the hand that he was so generously proffering for her acceptance. All at once a tide of memories surged through her brain recalled by that one act of the wooer. His hand upon her desk! Experience too vivid for another rash step awoke and saved her from running the risk of their repetition. She was thoroughly roused and on the defensive. When the formal proposal had been made, and it was her turn to speak the decisive word, her answer came in no uncertain tone:

"No! I have bought that 'secretary' three times. I intend to own it absolutely hereafter. I shall never buy it again!"

Some one will say, times have changed, and the laws also. Women now receive much more consideration and have greater privileges than ever before in the world's history. Certainly, we hope so, for the credit of the race and as a proof that mankind is evolving into higher conditions than obtained of yore. But is this a reason for the stagnation that comes from self-satisfaction? Shall any man or woman be permitted to stop or clog the wheels of progress? Rather let "onward forever and upward" always be our watchwords—"eternal progression" our motto.

There are States in this "free Republic" where the law allows a man to claim and collect the daily earnings of his wife. And there are other sustained laws, equally inequitable, touching woman's relation to man. Some of these laws pass belief. If all women knew of them there would be immediate revolution instead of our slow evolution away from them.

Only a few years ago, in Brooklyn, N. Y., the child of a widow was run over and killed by the cars. When suit was brought against the railroad company, the verdict rendered by Judge Allen was that, "as the father of the child was dead, there was no lawful beneficiary." Consequently, that "most righteous and learned judge" granted to the stricken mother—"ninety dollars for funeral expenses;" not in justice, but in charity, we must suppose.

And now a late case reveals the present condition of the law in Nebraska. A boy of fourteen years was killed by a train of the Armour Packing Company while using the rails of the C. N. & S. P. Railway. In recent years he had assisted his mother in the support of the family, "the father having deserted them all ten years ago." The judge admitted a claim, but decided against the mother—for the reason that, according to the statutes of Nebraska, only "the next of kin" could bring suit, and this particular relationship belonged to the father. Therefore, the mother could not appear as plaintiff, "the father having lost nothing by the boy's death," because he had not reaped any advantage from his earnings! There was no one entitled to any damages. Here language fails. And yet, in the face of these and similar glaring cases, we hear it said that the laws are more generous to women than to men!—M. E. Carter, in the "Arena."

Ruminations.

When the resumption of "Discontent" makes it possible to give sufficient space to the matter I intend to enter into a thorough discussion of the scope of philosophic anarchy. J. M. Clarke and a few other writers for "Free Society," who have misinterpreted my position, may possibly learn that it rests on broader foundations that they imagined.

* * *

The comparative indifference of the greater portion of the reform and radical press, concerning the all-important issue of free speech, continues to be a source of amazement to me. Out of the scores of periodicals in the country devoted to the discussion of Freethought, Anarchy, Socialism, Single Tax, Populism, and other mooted questions, how many have considered the systematic effort to suppress the circulation of ideas as worthy of more than passing mention? Lucifer, "Discontent," "Free Society," "The Public," the 'Truth Seeker," the "Torch of Reason," stand isolated from all the rest, as evincing a clear conception of the issue at stake, and a determination to contest it to the end. Comstockism, Maddenism, New York's preposterous "anti-Anarchist" law, "fraud orders," the suppression of anti-administration papers in Manila, are but some of the phases of the most diabolical plot of modern times. Free speech is the issue of the hour; whether the American people recognize the fact or not. Let the reactionary conspiracy fully succeed; and all hope of peaceful progress is at an end. There is something so inherently devilish about the deliberate effort to impede the circulation of ideas, that one feels that he is insulting the intelligence of his audience, by announcing a fact as clear as the sunlight. Free speech, free press, free assemblage, free mails, are the cornerstones of all liberty and all progress. All persons, who are not unqualified fools or knaves, readily admit this in theory; but most people try to make exceptions in practice. In the nature of the case, however, there can be no exceptions. In the evolution of thought, every attempt to interfere with natural selection and the survival of the fittest is fraught with mischief. The history of the human race does not afford one single instance where the suppression of free speech has justified itself. It has always been the enemies of mankind who have resorted to this basest of weapons. At the present day, imperialism stands self-condemned as the vilest of causes, because the forcible repression of dissentient opinions is found to be of its very essence. The church is most to be condemned, not for the transparent falsity of much in its creed, but for its deliberate effort to crush all individuality of thought and expression. A good cause does not breed persecutors. Any man who would suppress the utterance of any other man's opinion may be unhesitatingly set down as an enemy to progress, no matter how loudly he may boast of liberality in certain directions.

* * *

The Manhattan Liberal Club has taken the lead in a movement which should receive the energetic support of every Liberal in the country. Differences of opinion on other subjects are as nothing, compared with the importance of the common ground on which all should stand, where the principle of free speech is involved. That Comstockism, Maddenism and imperialism, the three haters of all that is good, are determined to destroy free speech, is an established fact. That the enemies of this unholy trinity must bestir themselves, must be admitted to be no less certain. We must meet concerted action with concerted action, duplicity with public exposure. The people of the United States need to be stirred up on this question It is time to assume the aggressive, to take up the gauntlet which the neo-feudalists have thrown down. Such a campaign of education is needed, as this country has never seen before. A national federation for pushing the issue of free expression has become an imperative necessity. It must take the broadest ground from the start. It must demand free speech for every individual on every subject. Better that ten thousand errors should be promulgated, than that one truth should be repressed. There is no reason why the membership of such a federation should not mount up into the thousands, or why its influence should not reach into every corner of the land.

* * *

The silence of nearly the whole radical press, with regard to the removal of the Home postoffice, betokens an astounding indifference to the subject of our common liberties. This dastardly outrage is an undisguised assault on liberty of opinion. We are informed of this in practically so many words. The authorities cannot find or even invent the slightest pretext for the removal of the office, except that we do not think as they do. They think to establish a new inquisition of opinion, and to punish us for the crime of thinking for ourselves. If this infamy is winked at, what will be the next step? Let none hold themselves secure. The fiery furnace is being prepared for all who do not bow before the image of imperialism. Liberty has become but a mock, in the eyes of the present rulers of the land. The dinner-pail administration has come to despise the people, and to imagine that those whose suffrages were so cheaply purchased two years ago, by a party which glorified in its repudiation of every principle of democracy, are sufficiently degraded and servile to submit to anything. If this is indeed true, our civilization is doomed; and the "new feudalism" is an accomplished fact.

* * *

Do the readers of Lucifer realize that Lois Waisbrooker is under indictment for alleged "obscenity," and that barely two months remain before the trial? Poor of purse, and in feeble health, at 76 years of age, she is to be dragged before a judicial tribunal, to answer the charge of upholding the cause of womanhood. Have her many years of active service been forgotten? After she has devoted her all to the cause of humanity, is she now to be deserted, in her hour of need? She has toiled long and faithfully, forgetting her own comfort, that she might help to usher in a brighter day for all mankind. When the fangs of the Comstock viper were fastened in the flesh of other toilers in the cause of progress, she has come to the front, eager to render every assistance in her power. Now that she is the coveted prey of malice and villainy, is she to be left to struggle alone? The comrades at Home are doing all they can, and lavishing their time unstintedly. But they are as poor in money as she. Legal expenses, as well as expenses of other kinds, must be met, if the defence is not to be abandoned. What has already been raised, is hardly a sixth of what is required for a successful contest. Shall we appeal in vain to those who know who Lois Waisbrooker is, and what she has done? I cannot think so meanly of the liberals of the country as to doubt that this appeal on behalf of a true and tried veteran will meet with an instant and widespread response. Those who would like to know the exact particulars in the case are invited to write to me. Contributions to the defence fund should be sent to Oliver A. Verity. Be as prompt and generous as possible; for the need is very great. The address of both of us is Home, Wash. We now receive our mail at the neighboring postoffice of Lakebay.

JAMES F. MORTON, JR.

Jingoism.

Breathes there a man with soul so dead
Who never to himself hath said:
"Let's grab some nation's native land!"
Who hath not massacred and burned,
Wasted and ruined, ere he turned
From robbery on some foreign strand?
If such there breathe, go, mark him well!
He makes no water tortures swell;
High though his talents, wide his fame,
Patriot his soul as wish can claim—
Yea, be he Honor's second self,
His worth and intellect we'll shelf,
And make a hero of some clown,
Who bawls: "Let peacemakers go down
To the vile dust from whence they sprung,
All drawn, all quartered, and all hung!"

—Bertrand Shadwell, in "The Public."

What One Woman Did.

In answer to the question, "What would you do if your husband loved another?" I will just state what I did when my husband loved another. Eight years ago, and when we had been married nearly eight years, the children and I went to another town to live, my husband expecting to rejoin us in a short time. Before I left the town of S——I had become acquainted with a nice young widow with one child. She lived with her widowed mother near us and we were good friends. After I left, my husband would go out to their house on Sundays, to call on them. Well, to cut the story short they were often in each other's society and fell in love with each other. After a while she had an offer of marriage and thought favorably of accepting it just to get a home for herself and child. My husband wrote and told me the whole story and asked me to help if I could or would, and told me not to think for a moment that his love for me wasn't as strong as ever, that no one could take my place in his heart. I wrote to her at once and told her she would do wrong to marry a man whom she had no love for and to wait until I came back and she could have a home with us and I would be a sister to her and we could all love each other and be happy together. I am sorry to say, though, she married the man she didn't love, and from what I heard after a year or two she must have been sorry, and I know she failed to find happiness. I knew my husband loved me so much that no one could make him quit loving me.

A few years after that my love for him died. For the children's sake I have remained with him but my affection isn't any more than a sisterly feeling and now I love another. I told him so and told him that I didn't think I ought to live with him any more and I wanted him to let me go, but he says he can't give me up; he loves me too well. He says he will win my love back and I will outgrow the other love. I dread the future.

Sometimes I think I will try and forget self and live for him and the children. Then I think I'll just wait and see what the fates have in store for me.

It makes a woman feel degraded to live with a man she doesn't love. I would like to receive advice. M.

From One Man's Viewpoint.

In No. 917 you invite your readers to tell you what they each would do, if a sweetheart, wife or husband should love another.

As I can speak from experience, therefore from knowledge, hence not from theory only, I take occasion to respond.

I would do whatever she thought would most greatly redound to her happiness. Not, take notice, what seemed to me best for her, because I should claim no right to judge of that and no power to judge wisely.

I believe in Love, that it is the one important element in life, the one thing needful to make life perfect and complete for each and every one of us, but I do not regard sexual love and desire to be synonymous.

To be Love, desire must perforce be mutual.

I do not believe that Love can ever reach its highest plane, except in the monogamous relation.

Plural Love I regard as the feeling in its incipient and imperfect state.

I believe that a perfect monogamous love may, and often does live a life time, but sometimes it does not, and think any one has a perfect right to love another when one will, because until one needs another love, one will not feel a new attraction.

A new attraction is in itself a proof of a further need in the life of the one feeling it, and love if it be Love, prefers to see that other life fulfilled, and if need be, will gladly do all possible to that end.

Perhaps of course this new love may not prove a complet, one, and in such case it may be mutually desirable that the old relations be at least in part maintained, leading to what is called "variety" or such conditions as are mentioned as existing with the Boston lawyer, and the Cleveland physician, and perhaps such may be the best and happiest possible for all concerned.

All that is needed in all such cases is to release all idea of a claim, all feeling of ownership and possession of each other.

If we will but do this, every Love when its season has past, be that season long or short, will resolve itself into a true, sincere, earnest friendship, possessing every valuable element of Love, less the one of special sexual attraction.

All past lovers will be true brothers and sisters.

Variety as an aim, I wholly repudiate, as a means of finding the one I regard it as righteous.

When we can wholly rid ourselves of our preconceived notions of ownership of each other, the fear that sweetheart, husband or wife may love another, will wholly disappear, for as long as Love lasts between two, neither can love another, and when love has died, they are sweethearts, or husband and wife only in name. G. W. SOULE.

Free Motherhood; How Brought About.

"He who would be free himself must strike the blow." From the constantly increasing number of self-supporting women we may reasonably conclude that financial independence for women is here, at least for as many as will or can accept it. This is a step in the right direction, a step towards free motherhood. With financial independence comes a general independence and freedom hitherto unknown to women. She no longer binds herself to man. She loves whom she must and as long as she can. If the state of her finances admits and she wants children and finds a lover she has them. If she wants love without children she has that, provided she and her lover know that there are two distinct methods of sexual relations: the continent as well as the propagative. That there is a continent method is no doubt new to many, to the great majority, but true nevertheless. And I contend that a knowledge of the continent relation between the sexes is one of the most important things next to be learned before we can hope for progress.

Upon this knowledge depends free motherhood. The knowledge can be acquired by reading "Talks on Nature" or "Karezza" sold by M. Harman, or "Sex Ethics." For a long time only a few will believe in or try to learn the continent relation, but these few will never rest until they have done what they can to help bring about a better, a more satisfactory state of affairs, a time when every child will be welcome because wanted, a time when all will be free to love whom they must, a time when old worn out beliefs will be replaced by more reasonable ones, a time when universal brotherhood will take the place of denominational churches, a time when all will have homes and comfort, in short and in fact a time when the kingdom of heaven will be on earth instead of in some imaginary place, all of which will be when humanity will have evolved from the animal to the human plane. The human plane can be reached only through continence, and continence does not mean abstinence but temperance. SARA C. CAMPBELL.

Mark Twain's Cat.

To the "North American Review," Mark Twain contributes one of his humorous sensible articles on the question, "Does the Race of Man Love a Lord?" The answer is contained in the last paragraph: "All the human race loves a lord—that is, it loves to look upon or be noticed by the possessor of Power or Conspiciousness; and sometimes animals, born to better things and higher ideals, descend to man's level in this matter. In the Jardin des Plantes I have seen a cat that was so vain of being the personal friend of an elephant that I was ashamed of her." —Academy and Literature.

When at last a physician came and settled among them, the people wondered.

"Nobody is ever sick here," they said.

"Of course not, with no medical assistance at hand," said the doctor, smiling at their simplicity in spite of his determination to be courtecus.—Life.

Lucifer, the Lightbearer

M. HARMAN, EDITOR AND PUBLISHER.

PUBLISHED EVERY WEEK AT 500 FULTON STREET, CHICAGO, ILL.

Terms: One year, $1; six months, 50 cents; three months, 25 cents.

Entered at the Chicago Postoffice as Second-Class Mail Matter.

Eastern Representative, E. C. Walker, 344 W. 143d street, New York.

Lucifer—Its Meaning and Purpose.

LUCIFER—The planet Venus; so called from its brightness.—Webster's Dictionary.

LUCIFEROUS—Giving Light; affording light or the means of discovery.—Same.

LUCIFIC—Producing Light.—Same.

LUCIFORM—Having the form of Light.—Same.

The name Lucifer means Light-Bringing or Light-Bearing, and the paper that has adopted this name stands for Light against Darkness—for Reason against Superstition—for Science against Tradition—for Investigation and Enlightenment against Credulity and Ignorance—for Liberty against Slavery—for Justice against Privilege.

By the Way.

To many of Lucifer's readers the name of Mattie E. Hursen is familiar, and a considerable circle of them consider her a personal friend. I have just learned that she is confined to her bed with paralysis. Though entirely helpless her mind is active. She has always enjoyed reading and has when able kept in sympathetic touch with many people through correspondence. It has been suggested by one of her friends that those interested in her could help to lighten her confinement by writing letters to her, sending clippings of interest, etc. Throughout her life she has been ever ready to help others in every way possible. Address Mattie E. Hursen, Schoolcraft, Mich.

Here is a note we received a few days ago from the Superintendent of Second-Class Matter at the Chicago postoffice: "Will you kindly call at this office in regard to premiums offered on page 146 of your May 22 number." I accepted the invitation and was informed that our Uncle Samuel would think we were too good to our subscribers and were giving them more than the worth of their money, in sending them Lucifer for a year and such valuable books as "A Physician in the House" and "Government Analyzed" for the sum named in the announcement. I explained that while it was true that we had violated the letter of the regulation, I did not believe we had violated its spirit, and the gentlemanly superintendent said it would probably be all right to continue to offer the books as premiums if we would omit the publishers' prices. Hence the omission and additions which will be noted by referring to the "Special Offers" Nos. 1 and 7.

Justice Bradley of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia has recently made a decision of interest to all publishers. He decided that the Postmaster General had practically "amended" the law in denying the right of second-class entry to certain papers. I do not know for what reasons the Postmaster General had decided adversely, but Justice Bradley stated (so says the Washington "Post,") that "the Postmaster General has read into the law a provision which he had no authority to make in framing the regulations, and that he had no right to bar the publications mentioned from the second class of mail matter." The "Post" adds that "there are between fifteen and twenty cases now before the District Courts involving publications of a different class that have been barred from the second class mail privileges." It would seem the time had arrived when the apparently absolute power assumed by the Postal Department should be taken from it. Such arbitrary authority is a menace to the liberties of all, for the majority of today may be the minority of tomorrow, and today's oppressors then be the oppressed.

I gladly give space to the following note from Judge Murray F. Tuley, though I regret the error which occasioned it:

"My attection has been called to an editorial signed L. H. in which the writer has made a strange mistake in attributing to me a remark alleged to have been made by Judge R. S. Tuthill as to the right of a wife 'to shoot her husband.' It is inconceivable how a Chicago publication could have made such a mistake."

The statement referred to appeared in the daily papers at a time when our entire household was in confusion caused by sickness and death. Then when several weeks later I commented on the judge's remarks the papers containing the report had disappeared. My memory told me positively that Judge Tuley was the one to whom the statement was credited, and I felt no hesitation in so saying. Had I felt any doubt I would have merely said "a Chicago judge," as in the same column I referred to a Chicago alderman of whose name I felt somewhat doubtful. My thanks are due to Judge Tuley for giving me an opportunity to make the correction, as I do not wish to misrepresent any one, and if I do so unwittingly am always ready to make whatever amends are in my power.

The physical condition of the editor has not materially changed since last week. He spent a few days at West Chicago and at Lake Geneva, Wisconsin, the guest of one of our friends, J. S. Barber, of West Chicago; but owing to stormy weather did not find the change as beneficial as he had hoped. I quote the following lines from a personal letter: "So far I am fairly well pleased with my trip. Too much rain has interfered with my out-door exercise. This morning [May 22] and also yesterday afternoon I walked along the shore of the lake—which is nine miles long and a most beautiful sheet of clear water, surrounded by wooded hills. A great many cottages and some large residences have been built, evidently to entertain the summer visitors at the lake. Dr. Stockham's place is about six miles west of here and near the lake; but I presume it is too early for her to be there. I am taking your advice in regard to shaking off all business cares, and so am preparing nothing for next week's Lucifer."

When a child I was much impressed by a little story of a man who burned his house to get rid of a goblin which tormented him. He closed the doors and windows, hoping the goblin would be burned with the house. As he stood, homeless but happy, congratulating himself on his release from his tormentor, a voice joyfully exclaimed in his ear, "Ah, but weren't we lucky to escape being burned!" and there, on the bundle of his few remaining possessions which was slung across his back was perched the grinning goblin! I had reminded my father of this story, on his leaving home. Too many people are like the man with his goblin. They make great efforts and even sacrifices to get away from their cares and troubles—and then carry them along wherever they go.

The story of the woman and her desk, which appears on the first page, may seem to many of our readers an exaggeration, or at least a very unusual case. Yet many women have had experiences with the law similar to that, but involving more serious matters than the ownership of a desk.

Here is the story of one woman with whom I am acquainted. About fifteen years ago she possessed a husband, a baby daughter, and money of her own, or it may be the money was bequeathed to her at about that time. The husband maintained his family in comfort, but the woman rebelled against living with him as his wife. She had a long legal battle to fight before she was secure in the possession of her child, and this fight cost her about five hundred dollars. She felt that she had enough experience with marriage, but when, a few years later, she met a man she loved, she married him, because to ignore the legal tie would have brought pain to her aged mother and her sisters. Her second marriage also proved a costly experiment, and when of her property only her home remained, she felt that again she had enough of marriage. She and her husband separated amicably; but on consulting a legal adviser she was told that unless she obtained a divorce her daughter, on her death, would not enjoy exclusive possession of the home. So she was obliged to incur the expense of a divorce. And she almost failed to get it, for when the judge asked her if she was willing for her husband to go, she answered that she was; as the technical charge was desertion, it took all the ingenuity of her lawyer to extricate her from the difficulty caused by her honesty. For if both husband and wife desire a divorce, they are guilty of "collusion," and the application must be denied. Better be guilty of any crime in the calendar, if a divorce is sought, than that of "collusion!"

The seamstress had to buy her desk three times, but this woman, after bearing her child, had to practically pay the lawyers and the courts five hundred dollars for it, and then was forced to buy her own freedom in order to have the right to give her own property to that child.

Here is the comment of a friend who disapproves as "indelicate" a question we asked two weeks ago:

"'What wou'd you do if your husband, wife or sweetheart loved another?'

"A surprising question from Lucifer! Ask an abolitionist what to do if a slave wants freedom!

"Free lovers do not own husbands and wives. Any left over when emancipation came, who are sweethearts in reality may retain the names received at the marriage altar. And if one of those sweethearts loves another? Why, continue to love our sweetheart. If the sweetheart becomes something else, accept the friend, and adjust self to the new condition. Loving another might or might not so absorb one as to make a change desirable but in freedom we make the change required—whatever the cause. A good question to suggest to persons new to this line of thought, to answer to self, but a very personal, almost indelicate question from one free lover to another. M. F. J."

"What would you do if your slave should desire freedom?" would not, it seems to me, be a surprising question for the editor of an abolitionist paper to ask. Probably many people who read such papers were not abolitionists. I am sure that very many of Lucifer's readers do not endorse freedom in love. And even some of those to whom the theory is a beautiful one, find it difficult to practicalize it in their own lives. It was not expected that all readers of Lucifer would make a personal confession; the question was merely suggested as a means of obtaining an exchange of opinions which might be of benefit to some of our readers. And if M. F. J.'s answer were the only one elicited I should think the question had not been asked in vain.

Since the foregoing was put in type we have received a letter which I think illustrates the point alluded to in my last sentences. Perhaps we should be guided altogether by cold reason, but it is a fact that the personal experience of others has great influence in the lives of most of us. We are unable to give the desired address, but will forward the request to Elbert Hubbard, editor of the "Philistine," who offered to furnish the address. So here is the letter:

"In last issue of Lucifer you stated your readiness to give name and address of a gentleman whose experience in sexual relations have been somewhat unusual. I hesitated long to ask you for his address, fearing he might think me actuated merely by an impertinent curiosity. But my own experience as a married man has been so unusual, so bitter and so long; and I have buried my feeling in my own heart, feeling strong repugnance to communicate my secret to others, that I would now welcome any confidential exchange of experience and sentiment, if we could compare notes. If you think proper, kindly send me his address." L. H.

Send for a dozen "Facts Worth Knowing" to give to your friends. 80 large pages, 25 cents a dozen.

Lucifer five weeks with a copy of Institutional Marriage, 10 cts.

The Free Speech League.

Dr. Conway's letter to the Free Speech League is a truthful setting forth of the tyranny which has come upon our country in the past few years. Our officials have become little despots, tin gods of officialdom, and seem to hold themselves responsible to no one. Our army is being used to oppress a whole people who desire to be free; our post-office has become a censorship bureau; our police are the oppressors of the friendless, and at the same time as corrupt in their own morals as any thief they ever sent to jail. Free speech is rapidly becoming a thing of the past. As Mr. Conway says, the country has gone steadily backward in love of liberty, justice and peace.

The acts of our government in the past few years have shown the danger of the imperialistic spirit. The war against the Filipinos is as unrighteous as England's war against the Boers. It is a war of conquest to extend trade. The post-office censorship established by Mr. Madden, the third assistant postmaster-general, is illegal, unconstitutional, and oppressive. One Socialist paper has been driven to Canada because it was not edited as the post-office officials thought it should be; an unorthodox "healer" in Florida has been characterized as fraudulent, while the Christian Scientists are undisturbed; the people of Home, Wash., have had their post-office closed because of their published radicalism; four men in New York are under the harrow for "incendiary" utterances, and a woman was recently sent to prison for trying to teach marital ethics. None of these people have harmed anyone; they have stolen nothing, committed no assault upon any person, injured no one in any way whatever. They are in the toils of the law because they were indiscreet, and exercised the right of free speech in a way to offend the officials of the state.

The case of John Most stands out prominent in the list of persecutions. He has gone to the penitentiary for a year for printing some rhodomontade written by a man who was denouncing European despots. Mr. Most made the man's words his own by printing them as editorial matter in his "Freiheit," and is paying an awful price for his plagiarism. Of course his advice, borrowed from Heinzen, to use dynamite against rulers is monstrous, but as no one followed his advice, and no harm came from his publication, he is being punished for a constructive crime and not a real one. Had he influenced some one to kill an officer of the government there would be justice in his incarceration; as it is, there is none.

For distributing a pamphlet at the Altgeld memorial meeting on April 3, two young Jews are in jail waiting trial under the new law against Anarchy. We have read the pamphlet, and know what it contains. There is nothing whatever in it advocating violence. . . . .

At a farewell meeting to Most, who was to be taken to prison the next day, the detectives allege that one MacQueen said, 'To hell with the government!" and he is now under bail to be tried for the offense. Another man in the audience was also taken along by the police officers for no reason that any one can see except that he came between the wind and their nobility. If Most had been a real criminal he would have run away instead of publicly celebrating his retirement to Blackwell's Island.

The Home colonists have had their postoffice closed at the instance of a grand jury which indicted some of them for printing matter which a United States judge afterwards pronounced harmless, ordering their acquittal. Whether the office will be restored depends upon the state of mind of the officials at Washington. If sufficient influence can be brought to bear upon them, the Home people will get it; otherwise not, so completely are the people in the power of their "public servants."

There was a man named Wilshire publishing a Socialist paper in California. He came to New York, and was refused newspaper postage rates because his paper advertised himself principally. That he is a mountebank is perhaps true, but his paper came within the meaning of the law on the subject, and he is clearly entitled to newspaper rates. If the people want his paper they have the right to have it; it is their own affair and not that of any official. As Mr. Conway says, a man has "as much right to his immorality" of conceit "as to his unbelief in religious dogma." What would become of some of the Prohibition papers if conceit were made a crime?

We hope the Free Speech League will get to work on the cases right here at home, and see what they can do to regain the rights which appear to have been lost. That it looks like a forlorn hope is certain. The newspapers of this city are edited by their advertisers, the politicians and the churchmen. Not one of them will speak a word in defense of American principles, and when some heretic cries for a little of that liberty of thought and speech for which America is supposed to be celebrated he is put in jail. The mob spirit rules today as ever.—The "Truth Seeker."

Special Offer.

GOOD UNTIL JUNE FIFTEENTH.

In order to extend Lucifer's work in general, and to help tide over the annual dull season in particular, we make for the next thirty days, the following unusual offers to old as well as new subscribers. To old subscribers credit will be given for one year from the date to which they are now paid—whether now paid ahead or in arrears.

1. For $2.30 we will send Lucifer one year and the large Family Medical Work entitled "A Physician in the House," by Dr. J. H. Greer of Chicago. 800 pages; 16 colored plates. With Lucifer, $2.75.

2. For $2 we will send Lucifer one year and any one of the bound volumes of Lucifer now on hand, namely, for the year 1899, 1900 and 1901. These volumes are substantially bound in cloth, usual price $1.50 with 25 cents additional for postage.

3. For one dollar we will send Lucifer one year and one copy of "Marriage in Free Society," by Edward Carpenter, price, 25 cents.

4. For $1 we will send Lucifer one year and one copy of "The Abolition of Marriage" by John Beverly Robinson, also other excellent essays including Isabel's Intention, by Mariette; The Sexes and Love in Freedom, by Oscar Rotter; Reminiscences of Berlin Heights, by A. Warren—price of all 25 cents.

4. The Prodigal Daughter, or the Price of Virtue, by Rachel Campbell; to which are added, Legal Wifehood, by Lucinda B. Chandler; Love's Gifts, by Olive Schreiner, and Will the Coming Woman Marry, by M. Harman—price of all, 25 cents. With Lucifer one year $1.

5. The Unwomanly Woman, by Lizzie M. Holmes, including also, Virgin Soil, by George Egerton; Normal Sexual Action by Ernest Winne, and That Great Fraud Ycept Society, by Moses Hull—price of all 25 cents. With Lucifer one year $1.

6. The Rights of Children, by R. B. Kerr; including also What are Women Here For, by Dr. E. B. Foote, Jr.; The New Martyrdom, by Lillian Harman, and The Will, from the French of Guy de Maupassant—price 25 cents. With Lucifer one year,$1

7. For $1.25 we will send Lucifer one year and one bound copy of "Government Analyzed," by Col. J. R. Kelso. 219 pages. Bound in cloth, but binding slightly damaged. With Lucifer one year $1.25.

VARIOUS VOICES.

Myra Pepper, 4015 Locust St., Kansas City, Mo.:—Have been "on the wing" lately. Am again in Kansas City after a visit to Topeka and Lawrence, Kansas, I expect to be in Chicago in a few weeks.

B.:—In reply for your symposium "What Would You Do"——I would do exactly the same. I could not do differently if I felt love and respect for my companion; otherwise my action would prove love of self and not of the woman in the case. A man must be a lunatic to arrogate to himself the ability to forever interest a woman more than others of his sex; and a woman is to be respected for being true to herself in her attractions which are such a factor in her happiness. This is not an excuse for an untruthful life—to be true and to do right are just as necessary.

Elbert Hubbard, East Aurora, N. Y.:—In reply to your kind favor will say that you certainly are welcome to make use of anything in your valuable little publication that you may find in the "Philistine" or elsewhere in my writings; and if you are ever in our vicinity, will be much pleased to have come and visit our Shop.

Daniel Leatherman, Goshen, Ind.:—Enclosed find stamps for which send bundle of back numbers of Lucifer as advertised in No. 918. If possible, include No. 842, as it contains the conclusion of a story begun in No. 841, which I have.

[This refers to our offer of forty old copies of Lucifer, no two alike, for fifteen cents. We hope to receive enough orders to clear our shelves of all but the regular files.]

R. Stuechck, Alton, Wash.:—Could you suggest a firm who may have books or manuscript to translate—German into English or English into German? I have the necessary training to handle scientific works and am conversant with the "New Thought" also. Can guarantee first-class translation (am a thorough German scholar,) and will type-write manuscript Work must be sent to me as I cannot leave home.

Frank S. Harman, Galt, Calif.:—I tried the Puget Sound country and did not admire it. I stayed at the little place called Home and in my view it is a difficult place to make a living. I do not like a timber country. There is plenty of land already cleared ready to cultivate and as I have already grubbed three farms I beg to be excused from further digging in the timber among the roots. I prefer the broad acres of California where we work from eight to thirty-six horses to farm machinery. I feel at home here because this is more like Texas. "We have elbow room and light" here.

My trip from Seattle to San Francisco was delightful. I never enjoyed a trip so much in my life. I saw the west coast of Washington, Oregon, and California, as our steamship plowed through the waves of the Pacific Ocean. I have passed through the Golden Gate and now am as near to the New Jerusalem as I ever expect to be.

This is the prettiest country that I have ever seen. The wells of water are practically unexhaustible, a wind mill might pump day and night forever and still not diminish the water supply. A wind mill running all the time pumps enough water for a nice little garden and orchard. The largest, most beautiful roses I have ever seen are here. This is a wheat country. Strawberry picking is now in full blast.

People are planting hundreds of acres of grape vines here. It is claimed that oranges, lemons and all kinds of berries do well; and it is doubtless the greatest poultry country on earth. Oats grow here like grass in Texas. I have been mowing oats and will continue to mow volunteer oats for hay. There are thousands of acres of volunteer oats here and it will make from one-half to one ton of hay per acre.

"Is everything true that has been said about the water cure?" questioned the pastor.

"Certainly not," replied the Funstonite; "why, the actual number of fatal cures is less than seventy-five per cent. of the number reported."—G. T. E., in "The Public."

Cahill—Religion is a great thing, Dennis—a foine thing!

Casey—To be sure ut is;—Oi get into more foights about religion than anything else!—Puck.

"Did you hear the wild rumor from Washington?"

"No, what is it?"

"The Congressional Record is to have a colored supplement."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

CAPTAIN JINKS, HERO

BY ERNEST CROSBY.

It is a merciless satire on war and militarism in which the parallel between savagery and soldiery is unerringly drawn. It is a biting burlesque on the various forms of cheap hero-worship. It holds up to withering scorn every important feature of militarism.

Among the accompaniments and results of war exploited and satirized, are hazing at "East Point," the war whoops of the ye low journals, the savagery of war, the Schley-Sampson controversy, civilizing the heathen savage, looting in China, pension abuses, the capture of Aguinaldo, the Peace-Conference, army mismanagement, osculatory attacks by gooney girls, etc.

With 28 Irresistible Drawings by Dan Beard Iam. Cloth Handsome Covers, 400 pages.

Address M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

VACCINATION A CRIME.

With Comments on Other Sanitary Superstitions.

BY FELIX L OSWALD, M D.

"Vaccination spreads diseases; vaccination impairs the organic functions; vaccination encourages reliance on worthless remedies; vaccination spreads small-pox; compulsory vaccination furnishes dangerous legal precedents."

With illustrations of diseases frequently resulting from vaccination. 198 pages. Price 10 cents. For sale by M. Harman, 500 Fulton St. Chicago.

WHITMAN'S IDEAL DEMOCRACY AND OTHER WRITINGS.

BY HELENA BORN.

Comprising besides the title essay, Thoreau's Joy in Nature; Poets of Revolt; Shelley, Whitman Carpenter; Whitman's Altruism; Individualism versus Organization; Ingenuities of Economic Argument; The Last Stand Against Democracy in Sex; Inequality in Divorce; Marriage Safeguards. With portrait of author and biographical introduction by Helen Tufts. 125 pages Edition limited to 500 copies; each copy numbered. Fine paper, uncut pages, bound in boards, paper label. Price $1.

A "BARGAIN COUNTER" LOT OF LITERATURE AT HALF-PRICE OR LESS.

The following is a partial list of books and pamphlets which have accumulated on our shelves, time worn and dusty. In order to get them out of our way we have marked the price down. Never more than half price, and in many instances less than a quarter of publisher's prices.

Some of these works are out of print, and perhaps you may here find just the pamphlet you have been fruitlessly looking for. Some are clean, but the covers of most are shelf-worn; the inside leaves, however, clean and complete.

In ordering, please state if you wish your money returned in case we are out of the book ordered, or if you will take something else in its place.

An Old Subject in a New Light: Crime. What Shall We Do About It? Charles Houghton, 5c.

A Few Words About the Devil, and Other Essays, Charles Bradlaugh, With the story of his life as told by himself, and the history of his Parliamentary struggle. 25 cts Postage 5cts.

Celular Cosmogony; or the Earth a Concave Sphere, Cyrus R. Teed. 10c.

Catechism on the Science of a Universal Religion, Gabriel Z. Wacht. 10c.

Dictionary of Dreams. Dr. R Greer. 25 pages. 10c.

Essays on Deaths and Funerals. A collection of facts and ideas, selected and original, referring to deaths and funerals. Joseph Henry. 10c.

Eureka. How to prevent colds, hay fever, etc., without drugs. 5c.

Ethianism; or the Wise Men Reviewed. 2.9 p. 20c.

Everybody Made Happy. C. Orchardson. 5c.

Free Trade. E. H. Heywood. 10c

From Pandemonium to Elysium, James Thierry. 10c.

Goverment Analyzed, Col. J. R. Kelso. 40c.

Hints About the Teaching of Natural History. 5c.

Law and Gospel. G. W. Foote. 3c.

Liberty, Political, Religious, Social and Sexual, A. F. Tindall, 2c.

Preachers and Creeds. I. The Predestination of Preachers. D. K. Tenney. II. The Passing of the Creeds. David B. Page, 5 cts.

Practical Co-operation, E. C. Walker. 5c.

Social Ethics, E. H Heywood. 10c.

Silver Songs. Words by H. W. Taylor. Music by J. B. Herbert. 5c.

Some Little Rhymes Composed at Odd Times, Wallace E. Nevill, 5c.

Twelve Essays. Frederic W. Burry. With portrait, 10 cents.

The Relation of Anarchism to Organization. Fred Schulder, 5 cts.

The Country School Teacher. Jonathan Hunt, 10 cts.

The Sabbath. M. Farrington, 5c.

The Last Song of Jeremiah Hacker, 5c.

The Living Temple, or the House We Live In. (Astrological). C. T. H. Benton. 10c.

The Railway Problem; with many illustrations and diagrams. A. B. Stickney. 20c.

What Diana Teaches. Count Tolstoi. 1c.

What Constitutes a Freethinker, H. L. Green. 1c.

What Is America's Relation to England? Evaleen Laura Mason. 5c.

Address M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

For Rent: Large, light, furnished room. Inquire of Lillian Harman 500 Fulton, St. Chicago.

919.

If these figures correspond with the number printed on the wrapper of your Lucifer, your subscription expires with this number.

If a copy of Lucifer fails to reach you, please order by number or date.

Lucifer will not be sent "by return mail" unless stamps for postage are enclosed with order.

To New Subscribers: Your subscription is paid to No.

If you have not ordered Lucifer, a friend has subscribed for you. If you do not wish to receive it, please notify us by card or through your postmaster. If you wish to become a regular subscriber you will confer a favor by renewing before the expiration of your trial subscription.

LOVE'S COMING OF AGE.

This is a book with which few will wholly agree, but which nearly every one can read with profit and enjoyment. The subject is the relation of the sexes in the past, present and future, and it is treated with absolute frankness and fearlessness by a writer who unites a broad outlook, a strong grasp of his subject and a charming literary style. The following table of contents will indicate the line of thought followed by the author.

The Sex Passion.
Man, the Ungrown.
Woman, the Serf.
Woman in Freedom
Marriage: a Retrospect
Marriage: a Forecast.
The Free Society.
Some remarks on the early star and sex worships.
Notes—On the Primitive Group Marriage; Jealousy; The Family; Preventive Checks to Population.

The book will be printed on extra book paper and handsomely bound in cloth. The price, including postage to any address will be one dollar. Copies will be ready about April 20.

Address M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

RADICAL LITERATURE.

For Sale by M. Harman, 500 Fulton St., Chicago.

A CHAMBERMAID'S DIARY. By Octave Mirbeau. Translated from the French by Benj. R. Tucker. 400 pages. Handsomely bound in cloth. $1.50.

ADVANCEMENT OF SCIENCE. Prof. John Tyndall's famous Inaugural Address before the British Association for the Advancement of Science, with the articles on Prayer which so stirred the religious world. Cloth, 50c; paper, 25c.

AGE OF REASON (The). Presentation edition. Part I reprinted from the first English edition. Part II corrected by M. D. Conway's edition. With Paine's own account of his arrest in Paris. Photogravure portrait from the Romney painting exhibited in London. Containing also portrait from the Jarvis painting; from the Peale painting, known as the Bonneville portrait, representing Paine as a member of the French Assembly, and a half-tone of the Peale painting. Large half-tones of the house presented to Paine, in which he lived in New Rochelle, and of the monument and surroundings. Yorktown, Pa., scenes; also eight half-tone views of buildings, etc., associated with Paine's life in Paris, and other illustrations. With Preface, Chronological Table, Notes, Index, etc. Printed on antique wove paper, large octavo, wide margins, gilt edge. Special cover design in colors. The finest and most accurate of all editions. Boxed. Postpaid, $1.

AGE OF REASON. Thomas Paine. Cloth, with steel plate portrait, 50c; paper 15c.

ANARCHISM: Its Philosophy and Ideal. Peter Kropotkin. 5c.

A PHYSICIAN IN THE HOUSE. A New Family Medical Work, by Dr. J. H. Greer. This book is up-to-date in every particular. It will save you hundreds of dollars in doctors' bills. It tells you how to cure yourself by simple and harmless home remedies. It recommends no poisonous or dangerous drugs. It teaches how to save health and life by safe methods. It teaches prevention—that it is better to know how to live and avoid disease than to take any medicine as a cure. It is not an advertisement and has no medicine to sell. It has hundreds of excellent recipes for the cure of the various diseases. It has 16 colored plates showing different parts of the human body. The chapter on Painless Midwifery is worth its weight in gold to women. The "Care of Children" is something every mother ought to read. It teaches the value of Air, Sunshine, and Water as medicines. It contains valuable information for the married. This book cannot fail to please you. If you are looking for health by the safest and easiest means, do not delay getting it. It has eight hundred pages, is neatly bound in cloth, with gold letters, and will be sent by mail or express, prepaid to any address, for $2.75.

A PLEA FOR THE NEW WOMAN. May L. Collins. With large new half-tone portrait. 10c.

A TALE OF THE STRASSBURG GEESE. R. B. Kerr. Together with The Strike of the Strassburg Geese (C. W. Coolridge), A Traveler's Tale (R. B. Kerr), The Cat's Story (Emile Zola) 5c.

AUTONOMY, SELF-LAW. A fragmentary dissertation on the right to non-invasive self-hood. 5c.

A WEEK ON THE CONCORD AND MERRIMAC RIVERS. Henry D. Thoreau. 25c.

BALZAC'S SERAPHITA: The Mystery of Sex. Mary Hanford Ford. Cloth, $1.

BIBLE TEMPERANCE. E. C. Walker. Proving that Liquor Drinking is Commended, Defended and Enjoined by the Bible, and giving close reference to the chapters and verses. 10c.

BORNING BETTER BABIES—Through regulating reproduction by controlling conception. E. B. Foote, Jr., M. D. 25c.

CAUSES OF HARD TIMES, and the Money Question. Albert Chavannes. 5c.

CHICAGO CONFERENCES OF TRUSTS. Speeches, debates, etc.; 41 portraits of delegates, including Benj. R. Tucker, Laurence Gronlund, William Jennings Bryan, Samuel Gompers, Louis F. Post, and George Schilling. 428 pages. 50c.

CHILDREN OF THE ITALIAN POOR. Paola Lombroso. 5c.

DARWINS, THE. (A novel.) Elmina D. Slenker. 40c.

DAWN OF CIVILIZATION, The; or, England in the Nineteenth Century. J. C. Spence. 176 pages. 25c.

DAWN-THOUGHT ON THE RECONCILIATION. By J. Wm. Lloyd. An inspired treatise that, with insight and solution, touches all the questions of life, love, soul and society. A prose-poem, simple enough for a child to enjoy, deep enough to make a philosopher think. The largest creed, the most generous theory, the gladdest gospel. A book of life. A religion of growth and the overlook—freedom and optimism. Read it. Printed in old style antique type, rubricated with portrait of the author. In three editions, de luxe, plain and paper bound. Prices, $1.25, $1.00 and 50c.

DIGGING FOR BED-ROCK. Camp-meeting talks and sketches by Moses Harman. 5c.

ECONOMICS OF ANARCHY. A Study of the Industrial Type. Dyer D. Lum 15c.

DR. FOOTE'S SOCIAL SCIENCE SERIES OF DIME PAMPHLETS—Wedlock; Scientific Marriage; Heredity; A B C of Temperaments; Powell and his Critics; Physiological Marriage; Physical Improvement of Humanity; Causes of Disease, Insanity, and Premature Death; A Step Backward. Any of the above books sent by mail on receipt of price.

DYNAMIC THEORY OF LIFE AND MIND. An attempt to show that all organic beings are both constructed and operated by the dynamic agencies of their respective environments. By James B. Alexander. Over 400 illustrations, 21 chapters, 1,067 pages and a 3-column index of 11 pages. Cloth, $3.75.

EAST TENNESSEE SKETCHES. A and Cecile Chavannes. 25c.

EIGHT-HOUR MOVEMENT. John P. Altgeld, ex-Governor of Illinois. 5c.

EVOLUTION AND REVOLUTION. Elisee Reclus. 5c.

FALSE CLAIMS OF THE CHURCH. John E. Remsburg. Analyzing and refuting the claims made by churchmen that the Christian religion has promoted morality, learning, temperance, science, freedom, and showing how she has opposed progress. Paper, 10c.

FIELDS, FACTORIES, AND WORKSHOPS; or, Industry Combined with Agriculture and Brain Work with Manual Work. Peter Kropotkin. 260 pages, 4to. Postage, 5c.

FREE PRESS. Arguments in support of demurrer to the indictment of M. Harman, E. C. Walker and Geo. Harman, under the Comstock law. G. C. Siemens and David Overmyer. 20c.

GIORDANO BRUNO. His Life, Teachings, and Martyrdom. Burned for heresy in Rome, Feb. 17, 1600. 5c.

GOD AND THE STATE. Bakounine. 25c.

GOVERNMENT ANALYZED. A remarkable work by a remarkable man, Col. John R. Kelso, the history of whose life reads more like romance than reality. This book is the last of a series—Deity Analyzed, Bible Analyzed, Universe Analyzed. By the author's death this work was left unfinished, but was completed by his wife, Etta Dunbar Kelso. 319 pages; cloth. Price reduced from $1.50 to $1.

HILDA'S HOME. Rose Graul. "An o'er true tale" of woman's wrongs and of one woman's struggles and final triumphs in her attempt to secure justice for herself and for her sisters. 426 pages. Cloth, $1; paper, 50c.

HUMAN RIGHTS. J. Madison Hook. 5c.

IMPORTANCE OF HONEST MONEY. A simple, scientific, invariable standard of price. James Adleman. 220 pages. Paper, 50c.

IN BRIGHTER CLIMES; or, Life in Socioland. Albert Chavannes. 5c.

INFIDEL DEATH-BEDS. "Idle Tales of Dying Horrors." G. W. Foote. Brief biographical sketches of 97 Freethinkers, including Bruno, Buckle, Byron, Comte, Darwin, George Eliot, Gibbon, Goethe, Hugo, Harriet Martineau, Mill, Paine, Madame Roland, George Sand, Shelley, Volney, and Voltaire. 25c.

IN HELL AND THE WAY OUT. A plan of Social Democracy outlined. Henry E. Allen. 10c.

INSTITUTIONAL MARRIAGE. From the viewpoint of an exiled Mormon. M. Harman. 5c.

JOHN'S WAY. A domestic radical story. Elmina D. Slenker. 25c.

KAREZZA. Ethics of Marriage. A bold, brave book, teaching ideal marriage, rights of the unborn child, a designed and controlled maternity. Sample pages free. $1.

KORADINE. A story for young and old. Extra levant cloth. $1.

LIBERTY IN LITERATURE. Testimonial to Walt Whitman. "Let us put wreaths on the brows of the living." An address delivered in Philadelphia, Oct. 31, 1886, with portrait of Whitman. Containing also Col. Ingersoll's address at the funeral of Walt Whitman, Mar. 30, 1892. Cloth, 50c; paper, 25c.

LIBERTY. Political, Religious, Social, and Moral. A. F. Tindall. 5c.

LITTLE LESSONS FOR LITTLE FOLKS. Elmina D. Slenker. Boards, 40c.

LIZZIE MELTON. A story of a self-reliant girl. By Albert Chavannes. With portrait of author. 25c.

LUCIFER. Third Series, Vol. III. (1899). Cloth, $1.25. Postage, 25c.

MAGNETATION, and Its Relation to Health and Character. Albert Chavannes. 25c.

MARRIAGE. An address by Dr. Juliet H. Severance. 5c.

MARRIAGE IN FREE SOCIETY. Edward Carpenter. A dainty little gift book. 25c.

MARTYRDOM OF MAN. Winwood Reade. This is a very interestingly pictured synopsis of universal history, showing what the race has undergone—its martyrdom—in its rise to its present plane. It shows how war and religion have been oppressive factors in man's struggle for liberty; and the last chapter, of some 150 pages, describes his intellectual struggle from the animal period of the earth to the present, adding an outline of what the author conceives would be a religion of reason and love. Winwood Reade's reputation as a writer of fine English, of deep study and careful reasoning, needs no word of praise. Cloth, $1.

MEN, WOMEN AND CHANCE. William Platt. Containing two tales: The Ascent to the Heights, and Blind Men and Seeing. Well printed on heavy paper and artistically bound in cloth. Gilt top, rough edges. 75c.

MEN, WOMEN, AND GODS. Helen H. Gardener. With preface by Col. R. G. Ingersoll. Contents: Introduction by Col. Ingersoll. Men, Women, and Gods. Vicarious Atonement. Historical Facts and Theological Fictions. Gods. Appendix. Address to the Clergy and Others. Letter to Cleveland Congress of Freethinkers. The only authorized and correct edition. Large 12mo, heavy-toned paper. Portrait. This volume is by far the best writing this famous author ever did. It is very fine. Cloth, $1; paper, 50c.

MISSING LINK IN MODERN SPIRITUALISM, THE. A. Leah (Fox) Underhill. With portraits of the Fox Sisters and others. 478 pages. Cloth. Reduced to $1.

MORIBUND SOCIETY AND ANARCHY. Jean Grave. Cloth, 60c; paper, 30c.

MOTHERHOOD IN FREEDOM. M. Harman. 5c.

MUTUAL BANKING. A simple plan to abolish interest on money. William B. Greene. 10c.

NORA, A DOLL'S HOUSE, and GHOSTS. Ibsen. Cloth, 75c.

OUR WORSHIP OF PRIMITIVE SOCIAL GUESSES. E. C. Walker. Contents: Love and Law; The Moloch of the Monogamic Ideal; The Continuity of Race-Life, and Tyranny; Food and Sex Fallacies, a Criticism; When Men and Women Are and When They Are Not Varieties; The New Woman: What is she? What will she be? The State Hiding Behind Its Own Mistakes; Bishop Potter's Opinion of Divorce; Love: Its Attraction and Expression; Is She an Honest Girl? Lloyd, Platt, and the Pitiful Facts; Social Radicals and Parentage; Anthropology and Monogamy; Love and Trust Versus Fear; Reflections upon Reading William Platt's "Women, Love, and Life." 15c.

PERSONAL EXPERIENCES of Two American Anti-Vivisectionists in Various Countries. Philip G. Peabody. With an Appendix by Col. R. G. Ingersoll. Reduced from 25c to 15c.

PERSONAL RIGHTS AND SEXUAL WRONGS. Oswald Dawson. 25c.

PRIESTLY CELIBACY. Prof. A. L. Rawson. Together with The Incoherence of Transition (E. C. Walker), Motherhood in Freedom (Moses Harman), The Greatest Sin (an allegory, R. B. Kerr), and Jealousy, the Foe of Freedom (Oscar Rotter). 25c.

RELIGION AND RATIONALISM. The relation of each to human liberty. The religionist, fancying that he has the whole truth, is logically opposed to investigation, and he appeals to physical force to arrest the discovery of new truths. What Rationalism is, and how many believe themselves Freethinkers who are only unbelieving or disgruntled religionists. The necessity for separate organizations and a division of labor among reformers. The Secular Union. Important facts and arguments in a compact form. E. C. Walker. 5c.

RIGHTS OF MAN. Thomas Paine. Answer to Burke's attack upon the French revolution. A political treatise of great general value, as advocating liberty and democracy. Contains the fundamental principles of true republicanism. Cloth, 50c; paper, 25c.

RUBAIYAT (Quatrains) OF OMAR KHAYYAM. Edward FitzGerald's interpretation; with original introduction; special cover; latest version. Paper, 10c.

RULED BY THE TOMB. A discussion of free thought and free love. Orford Northcote. 10c.

SCIENCE IN STORY; or, Sammy Tubbs, the Boy Doctor, and Sponsia, the Troublesome Monkey. For young folks. Dr. E. B. Foote. Five volumes in one. Handsomely bound in cloth, with "red line," presentation edition. $1. Five volumes, plainer binding, $1.50; all in one volume, $2.

SEXUAL PHYSIOLOGY FOR THE YOUNG. Being the fifth volume of "Science in Story." 250 pages; cloth bound; illustrated. 50c.

SONGS OF THE UNBLIND CUPID. J. Wm. Lloyd. Edition de luxe. Verses printed from Kelmscott type upon deckle edged hand made paper of cerulean tint. Initial letters, ornaments and borders are in red; initial letter and sketch upon the opening page are hand painted in water colors. Covers brown, with choice of silver or gold lettering. Very handsome gift book. 25c.

STUDIES IN SOCIOLOGY. In four parts: I., The Law of Happiness; II., The Law of Individual Control; III., The Law of Exchange; IV., The Law of Environment. Albert Chavannes. 25c.

TALKS ON NATURE. Important information for both sexes. Dr. J. H. Greer. 192 pages. Reduced from 50 to 25c.

THE ABOLITION OF MARRIAGE. John Beverly Robinson. Together with Isabel's Intention (Marietta), Reminiscences of Berlin Heights (A. Warren), and The Sexes and Love in Freedom (Oscar Rotter). 25c.

THE BAR SINISTER AND LICIT LOVE, including the first biennial proceedings of the Legitimation League, and a full account of the Lanchester case, with full-page half-tone pictures of Edith Lanchester, and Lillian Harman. Handsomely bound in green and gold covers. 307 pages. 25c.

THE BLUE LAWS OF CONNECTICUT. Taken from the Code of 1650 and the public records of the Colony of Connecticut previous to 1665. With an account of the persecution of Witches and Quakers in New England, and some extracts from the Blue Laws of Virginia. Copiously illustrated. 25c.

THE BRITISH BARBARIANS. Grant Allen, the greatest of the Hill-Top pioneers. Dedicated "to all who have heart enough, brain enough, and soul enough to understand it." Handsomely bound in cloth. 281 pages. $1.

THE WOMAN WHO DID. Grant Allen. A powerful story of a refined, educated and high-spirited woman who dared to defy the tyranny of church and state and ignore the institution of marriage. Handsomely bound in cloth. $1.

THE NEW HEDONISM. Grant Allen. The opening paragraph says: "The old ascetism said: 'Be virtuous and you will be happy.' The new hedonism says: 'Be happy and you will be virtuous.'" In another place the writer says: "In proportion as men have freed themselves from mediæval superstitions have they begun to perceive that the unclean and impure things are celibacy and asceticism; that the pure and beautiful and ennobling thing is the fit and worthy exercise of the reproductive function." Paper covers; 32 large pages; twelve copies, 10c. Single copy, 5c.

THE CHICAGO MARTYRS. The famous speeches of the eight condemned anarchists in Judge Gary's Court, and Altgeld's reasons for pardoning Fielden, Neebe and Schwab. 25c.

THE COMING WOMAN. Lillie D. White. 5c.

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM. Principles and platform of organized Freethought. 10c.

THE EVOLUTION OF MODESTY. Jonathan Mayo Crane. A consideration of the origin of clothes and the reasons why people wear clothing. Here are a few questions it answers: What is modesty? What is the cause of it? What is the use of it? What is the cause of the feeling of shame? Is nudity immodest? What is the cause of the notion that it is shameful to expose some parts of the body? Why do not all peoples agree as to what parts of the body should be concealed? 5c.

THE FOUNTAIN OF LIFE; or, The Threefold Power of Sex. Lois Waisbrooker. 50c.

THE FUTURE OF SECULARISM. When will the Cause of Justice triumph? 5c.

THE PRODIGAL DAUGHTER; or, The Price of Virtue. Rachel Campbell. Together with Legal Wifehood (Lucinda B. Chandler), Life's Gifts (Olive Schreiner), and Marriage—What It Was and Is; Will the Coming Woman Marry? 25c.

THE REVIVAL OF PURITANISM. E. C. Walker. 10c.

THE RIGHTS OF CHILDREN. R. B. Kerr. Together with What Are Women Here For? (E. B. Foote, Jr., M. D.), The New Martyrdom (Lillian Harman), and The Will, from the French of Guy de Maupassant. 25c.

THE SANCTITY OF MARRIAGE. As viewed from a moral and sanitary standpoint. A solemn protest against the present demoralizing management of that institution. Its effects upon offspring and its influence upon education. By Dr. Robert A. Greer. A valuable "opening wedge" in missionary work. Price reduced from 25c to 10c.

THE SECRET INSTRUCTIONS OF THE JESUITS. A reprint from an edition published in 1723, quoted by the highest authorities as authentic. The work is redolent of Jesuit craft and is a plain index to the underhand working of that order against the welfare of individuals and society. 15c.

THE STATE: ITS HISTORIC ROLE. Prince Peter Kropotkin. 25c.

THE TROUBADOURS AND COURTS OF LOVE. J. F. Rowbotham. Cloth. 350 pages. $1.50. Postage, 15c.

THE UNWOMANLY WOMAN. Lizzie M. Holmes. Together with That Great Fraud, Telegt Society (Moses Hull), Virgin Soil (Georgs Egerton), and Normal Sexual Action (Ernest Winns). 25c.

THE WORLD TURNS. Revolutionary Poems. Voltairine de Cleyre. 10c.

THOMAS JEFFERSON. His Political, Social and Religious Philosophy. Gen. M. M. Trumbull. 5c.

TOKOLOGY. A book for every woman. By Alice B. Stockham, M. D. Illustrated. Tokology teaches possible painless pregnancy and parturition, giving full, plain directions for the care of a woman before and after confinement. The ailments of pregnancy can be prevented as well as the pains and dangers of childbirth avoided and women need not go down to death giving birth to children. English, German or Swedish. $1.25.

TRAVELS IN FAITH. By Capt. Robert C. Adams. His mental experience from superstition to rationalism. Cloth, 75c; paper, 25c.

VACCINATION A GIGANTIC CRIME. Samuel Darling. 15c.

VINDICATION OF THOMAS PAINE. Col. R. G. Ingersoll. Dealing with all the slanders brought against the name and fame of Paine. A little pamphlet which every admirer of Thomas Paine should have by him for reference. Paper, 15c.

VITAL FORCE. Magnetic Exchange and Magnetation. Albert Chavannes. 25c.

WHAT THE YOUNG NEED TO KNOW; a Primer of Sexual Rationalism. Edwin C. Walker. "Let us cease to be ashamed of what makes us men, of what makes us women, of what gives us the kisses of lovers and the encircling arms of babes." Paper covers; 42 large pages. 10c.

WHAT IS RELIGION? Ingersoll's last public address, delivered at the meeting of the Free Religious Association in Boston on June 2, 1899. To which is appended the poem, "Declaration of the Free," the last verse written by the great Freethinker. 5c.

WHEN LOVE IS LIBERTY AND NATURE LAW. John Badcock, Jr. 10c.

WHY THE UNDERTONE? An open letter to Judge Gary. Sarah E. Amos. 10c.

WOMAN, CHURCH, AND STATE. Matilda Joslyn Gage. This is Mrs. Gage's last and crowning work. Every woman ought to read it. Every liberal woman and man will want it. A burning protest against the tremendous wrong done woman by the church, which controlled the state. It ought to be widely read for the good it will do. Cloth, $1.50; paper, 75c.

WOMAN: Four Centuries of Progress. Susan H. Wixon. 5c.

WOMAN IN THE PAST, PRESENT AND FUTURE. Woman was the first human being that tasted bondage. Woman was a slave before the slave existed. The basis of all oppression is economic dependence on the oppressor. This has been the condition of woman in the past and is so still. She is now a slave of the slave. This work is August Bebel's masterpiece. 500, 12mo pages. 25c.

Address M. HARMAN, 550 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

Price 2 Cents.

LUCIFER.

THE LIGHT-BEARER.

THIRD SERIES, VOL. VI., No. 21. CHICAGO, ILLINOIS, JUNE 5, E. M. 302. [C. E. 1902.] WHOLE No. 920

LOVE AND MEMORY.

Love laid his happy head
Upon a rose-leaf bed;
But one by one the blossoms fell away
And left their thorns instead.
No sad word Love hath said,
Nor from that spot hath fled;
He bides with memories of a sweet June day
Though now the roots are dead.

Yes, Love had found a mate;
And they kept glorious state;
But one heart grew at last cold as a stone
And left Love to his fate.
Still doth he stand and wait,
Tender and without hate;
Dreaming the past in silence and alone,
Where all is desolate.

WILLIAM FRANCIS BARNARD.

Hammer Sparks.

The slave loves not liberty.

A fool makes a lie of the truth.

A Chief Justice may be a chief injustice.

How lawless is the administration of the law!

Has Spain a new king, or has a new king Spain?

Andrew Carnegie is still giving other people's money away.

Ripper legislation is the real thing; other kinds are imitations.

A slanderer is much like a skunk; but comparisons are odorous.

There is no place like Home, (Wash.) if you wish to see tyranny.

The State is prosecuting Anarchists in New York; it is persecuting the people everywhere.

The law may not be outraged with impunity, but Mrs. Craddock may be outraged by the law with impunity.

The coal miners are striking, and they number 145,000. Now if their blows could only fall in the right places!

The Meat Trust is shaking in its shoes, (with laughter) while the courts bluster and threaten. The tariff on meat "will stay put."

In the present condition of things there is a chance for everyone who cares neither for truth nor the rights of his fellow beings.

Most has gone to jail; but Rockefeller, though his god has lately snatched him bald-headed, still goes to church and is tolerated there.

Mark Hanna is going about settling strikes for workmen. When will the people remember the record of this man and proceed to settle Mark Hanna?

Love has no rights which the law is bound to respect, but it manages now and then to get its own in spite of the law, by promising one thing and performing another.

The rush of the clergy to the rostrum in a frantic effort to explain the earthquakes and volcanic eruptions in terms of God's love is a spectacle. Don't worry, Gentlemen; you will not lose your jobs, yet.

The coronation of King Edward is soon to take place, and charity will be lavishly doled out for the occasion. Isn't it nice that the dogs get the bones and the rejected crusts from the master's table?

It is natural that some men should be so ashamed of taxes that they seek to reduce all taxes to one, The Single Tax; but one tax or many, it is just robbery after all. Wealth is from work: the people pay all the taxes.

Free silver is like free soup, a charitable palliative at best, a pernicious delusion at worst. Freedom crowns neither silver nor gold, nor both; in liberty all that is real wealth is money. A legal tender is a legal crime, fostering monopoly.

How can the Robpublic of the United States of America have the face to accept a statue of the Frenchman, Rochambeau, and unveil it in Washington? Did not Rochambeau help us in our Revolution? And are we not now exchanging smiles and compliments with the British Government?

Gen. Funston is being handled rather severely just now; but really he has rendered a signal service to the cause of humanity by proving true to the character of a soldier. Why talk of tempering murder with consideration? "War is hell," and soldiers in consequence, are or should be devils.

Cuba is "free" for the time being. Ring all the bells, load and fire the cannon, make congratulatory addresses; get the people enthused; tell them to hurrah and shout "we have kept our pledge." Let the celebration begin early and last long; perhaps the noise will drown that other disturbing sound, the cry of agony from the Philippines.

The President is shocked by the atrocities in the Philippines, but it took him a long time to realize that he was shocked. Gen. Miles was suppressed in the endeavor to shock him. Torture is a matter of course it seems in the far east, and Americans, free-born Americans, easily become adepts in its administration. Are we really as low as Spaniards? Well!

The difference between a Democratic State and a Republican State is this, mainly, the Democratic State promises what it does not perform, while the Republican State performs what it does not promise. The people who divert themselves amidst their degradation with balloting find always that their defense against the rapacity of their masters is only a paper one. A ballot is an opinion, not a power.

IRONICUS.

The Hopelessly Fallen.

I generally like what Kate Austin says and always admire the spirited way she says it; but I feel moved to write a word of disagreement with her and others concerning this attitude towards "fallen women." I do not know just what class of persons are included in that category; but from K. A.'s general blunt, straightforward, non-equivocating nature, and her strong determination to apply her faith under all circumstances, I suppose she means all, beginning with the young girl who has once deviated from the rigid line of conventional morality, and been found out, to the inmates of the vilest brothel.

Now I can but think that had she lived in a city, where she must inevitably sooner or later, have seen prostitutes at their trade, that she would be compelled to admit either that their native morality was of such a low type that they never could fall, or that they had certainly fallen.

A week ago, at the corner of two busy streets not far from where I write, a woman in a most shocking state of intoxication her face bleeding from a fisticuff fight with other inmates of the house, with no clothing but a long draggled torn chemise, rushed into the street, and commenced shouting abuse at everything and everybody; a policeman arrested her; he was as decent about it as the case allowed, did no clubbing, used no bad language; the crowd that always collects at such a scene gathered rapidly; at the patrol box, the woman jeered and mocked the policeman, and finally taking in her fingers the mass of corrupt matter, blood, etc., streaming from her nostrils smeared it on the policeman's back. "—— you," he growled "stop that!" She laughed with the satisfaction of one who has done something "smart," and winked at the crowd. When the patrol wagon came she got in lightly and gaily as her drunken reel permitted, and calling to the crowd: "Ta—ta: see you again," was driven away.

Now what is the use of pretending to yourself that such a creature has not fallen? And she is the very ordinary type of the prostitute. In her infinite degradation, she has one compensation: she does not care. She is light-hearted about it. In her sober state, she eats her dinner, and if in company with one of her kind discusses "the points" of her latest male acquisition. I have heard one say to another: "She can't have that old man —that old man's mine." If she is alone, she manages by every species of vulgar ribaldry to draw attention to herself. If she gets herself put out, perhaps arrested, so much the better. She has no sense of shame at being frowned or stared at; she feels complimented by it; she has advertised herself. If she finds a young man easy with his money and soft-hearted she devises melting stories, which an hour later in company with some old bald-headed customer she laughs at; or she drugs him and steals his watch.

If Carrie Nation comes to pray, they all kneel down and shed tears and are pious beyond conception; when she has gone they imitate her and get especially drunk to celebrate the event. You can no more talk reform to such women than to the paving stones. You cannot talk anything to them. They understand nothing but how to get a drink and how to "make something." To do something outrageous, shocking, attention-drawing—that is their trade. The foulness of their language is simply the index of their thoughts, if what goes through their brain can be called thoughts! It matters not how they came to be so, if you are going to do anything with them at all you must begin by understanding that they are so; that they are fallen to an almost unfathomable gulf of degradation.

It is useless to fly out with, "the respectable married prostitute is just as bad." Whether she is or not, is not to the point; it cures nothing; it does not alter this case. And my own personal belief, from much witnessing and much reflecting, is that for women who have become confirmed prostitutes there is no help. They do not want to be helped. They do not admire your society. They do not like your company. They do not want you. They like drinking, gambling, eating, and wallowing. They see others who are a little older than themselves, hideous, diseased, beggars; they hear these old hags proclaiming themselves cheap at the corner of the saloon, and boasting how high-priced they were once. But not one of them all but imagines she is gifted with a cunning to outwit that fate; and they reason no further.

For the young woman who has made the mistake of deviating from her own rule of right-doing, the remedy is to give her a better rule if her mind is capable of receiving it—a knowledge of sexual physiology and its demands; if not, then let her stick fast to her religion and its promise of forgiveness to the transgressor. For the beginner in the bargain and sale business, even, it may be that much might be done, if she has any real character, firmness, decision. But for these others it seems to me, that nature having mercifully administered the antidote of utter moral paralysis and rot in return for their physical degradation, the most sensible thing is to let them alone. You will not make a drunken man sober by telling him that he is; you will not make the prostitute self-respecting by talking to her as if she were Leo Tolstoi. Let them both alone; that is what they want of you. And spend your efforts where they will be of some possible avail. Undoubtedly these poor wretches are the victims of economic conditions, of sexual superstitions, of religious lies, of bad heredity. While these institutions flourish, for every one you try to save, a hundred new ones will be made. Go your way and try rather to give light to the young, and let those others alone to die upon the wheel whose revolutions hurt you far more to look upon than them who are bound upon it. They are fallen; they are felled; snapped off from all moral life at the root. Such is our society. Smile.

VOLTAIRINE DE CLEYRE.

Ruminations.

The petty persecutions of which Home has been the victim have in no wise dampened the spirits of the members of the community. Through all difficulties and disappointments, there is a steady and healthful growth. We are gaining experience, and learning our lessons. It will be several weeks before we are likely to have any definite information from Washington, as to the prospect of regaining our postoffice at an early date, and matters must, in the meantime, remain in statu quo. All necessary steps are being taken, as promptly as possible.

* * *

As a general rule, I like as little formality as possible in connection with associative effort. But in the tremendous conflict for free speech, the time has come to close ranks as firmly as possible. We are not dealing with the propaganda of extreme radicalism, which can, at best, reach but a limited number of people. The Free Speech League, if accorded the proper support, will be the most important movement of recent years. Every one of us can work energetically for it, even among those who will not so much as listen to our more extreme views. Imperialism has gone a step too far; and there are thousands who are more than ready to unite in resisting its encroachments. Maddenism has opened the eyes of an immense number of people, who were blind to the dangers of Comstockism. The time is ripe for appealing, not merely to the few radicals, but to the great American public. If there is yet virtue in the people, it will respond to the plea for free speech, when the hideousness of the imperialist conspiracy is brought fully home. I believe that such an organization as the Free Speech League, once fairly under way, and pushed with vigor, will attract so large a membership as to admit of arousing the honest sentiment of every town and hamlet in the land. When free speech is denied, even the conservative can never feel himself wholly safe. Nobody can find an excuse for indifference on such a subject. The issue can be fairly forced; and we shall see how many "statesmen" will dare to face an aroused and fairly enlightened constituency with an unblushing avowal of a desire to destroy the freedom of the press and of the mails. The widest publicity is to be sought, and the broadest platform adopted. Whatever form the organization takes, this is no time for quibbling. United action is called for; and any honorable means of reaching the people is to be adopted.

The Press Writers' Association is a most valuable auxiliary in this whole fight for free speech, and reaches a large section of the public. Remembering this, it is easy to forgive the little weakness with which friend Livesey persists in assuming infallibility, and in pooh-poohing all methods but his own. We can appreciate his splendid work for the common cause, without necessarily accepting all his advice. No man can be expected to be entirely free from foibles.

JAMES F. MORTON, JR.

Special Offer.

GOOD UNTIL JUNE FIFTEENTH.

In order to extend Lucifer's work in general, and to help tide over the annual dull season in particular, we make for the next thirty days, the following unusual offers to old as well as new subscribers. To old subscribers credit will be given for one year from the date to which they are now paid—whether now paid ahead or in arrears.

1. For $2.30 we will send Lucifer one year and the large Family Medical Work entitled "A Physician in the House," by Dr. J. H. Greer of Chicago. 800 pages; 16 colored plates. With Lucifer, $2.30.

2. For $2 we will send Lucifer one year and any one of the bound volumes of Lucifer now on hand, namely, for the year 1899, 1900 and 1901. These volumes are substantially bound in cloth, usual price $1.50 with 25 cents additional for postage.

3. For one dollar we will send Lucifer one year and one copy of "Marriage in Free Society," by Edward Carpenter, price, 25 cents.

4. For $1 we will send Lucifer one year and one copy of "The Abolition of Marriage" by John Beverly Robinson, also other excellent essays including Isabel's Intention, by Mariette; The Sexes and Love in Freedom, by Oscar Rotter; Reminiscences of Berlin Heights, by A. Warren—price of all 25 cents.

4. The Prodigal Daughter, or the Price of Virtue, by Rachel Campbell; to which are added, Legal Wifehood, by Lucinda B. Chandler; Love's Gifts, by Olive Schreiner, and Will the Coming Woman Marry, by M. Harman—price of all, 25 cents. With Lucifer one year $1.

5. The Unwomanly Woman, by Lizzie M. Holmes, including also, Virgin Soil, by George Egerton; Normal Sexual Action by Ernest Winne, and That Great Fraud Yeept Society, by Moses Hull—price of all 25 cents. With Lucifer one year $1.

6. The Rights of Children, by R. B. Kerr; including also What are Women Here For, by Dr. E. B. Foote, Jr.; The New Martyrdom, by Lillian Harman, and The Will, from the French of Guy de Maupassant—price 25 cents. With Lucifer one year, $1

7. For $1.25 we will send Lucifer one year and one bound copy of "Government Analyzed," by Col. J. R. Kelso. 219 pages. Bound in cloth, but binding slightly damaged. With Lucifer one year $1.25.

Announcement.

The numerous co-operative enterprises which have failed on account of their isolation, have taught us that in view of the immensity of such undertakings all our forces have to be united, and so far all the co-operators to whom we have submitted our proposition have agreed upon it. The adhesions from this city and from the country are already sufficient to start this new enterprise but it is best to give it publicity before we begin, and invite all comrades to join us.

Our plan is very simple; all dealers belonging to this society will agree to work for a salary and give the net profits to their customers, of whom they will keep a list, for what they do or have and forward those lists to the headquarters where members will be classified and organized for co-operative production. A convention will be held at the beginning of each season to nominate the officers and discuss all vital questions such as remuneration, hours of labor, prices of goods, etc., to be submitted for adoption to all adults of the Federation.

Our first meeting will be held at the Chicago Commons, Grand Ave. & Morgan St, June 2, at 8 o'clock P. M. for the purpose of electing our temporary officers and committee, and we invite all co-operators to call and help us to make this enterprise a success.

CHARLES LEVY, 233 Milwaukee Ave.
G. W. HUGHES, 30 Ogden Ave., Chicago, Ill.

Publications, Periodic and Otherwise.

Leo Tolstoi has performed a great service to the race in writing "The Slavery of Our Times." We shall print selections from it from time to time.

James F. Morton, Jr., is collecting material on Comstockism with the intention of preparing a book on the subject. He would like to communicate with persons possessing information which might be useful to him. His address is Home, Wash.

About two decades ago a little pamphlet written by H. W. Boozer was quite popular with the readers of radical literature. It was entitled "An Open Letter: Stubborn Facts Concerning the Sexual Relations." For ten years or more it has been "out of print." Recently Mr. Boozer moved from the house which has been his home for many years, and in moving found a few of these pamphlets and has sent them to us for sale. The price is 15 cents each, and we shall be glad to fill orders as long as the supply lasts.

One of the most welcome of our regular visitors is "The Socialist Spirit," published monthly at 313 Ashland Block, Chicago, by Franklin H. Wentworth. Possibly "Social Justice" would class it as food for giraffes—I do not know as to that—but it is full of well-written, interesting articles, clear-cut and earnest, and one of its best traits is its freedom from the bickering, fault-finding spirit. Its writers appear to feel that they have "the Truth," but that thought does not make them ready to condemn every one who is not ready to agree with them and share their good fortune.

Etta Semple, who suspended the publication of her paper, the "Freethought Ideal," about the first of the year, has revived it under the title of "The New Thought Ideal," and now publishes it at her new home, Excelsior Springs, Mo. In her issue of May 26 she says that though a "born fighter" she has left that plane and for the future will be content to "let the others do the fighting." Personally, I am glad to know that she has arrived at this conclusion. Her disposition to "fight to a finish" always seemed to me a flaw in the character of this great-hearted, generous woman.

A very much alive little magazine is "Social Justice," published by F. G. Strickland and May M. Strickland at Yellow Springs, Ohio. It wants to convert the great common people to Socialism, and here is what it has to say of its methods:

"Some of the people that we want to convert to Socialism are giraffes and some are donkeys. The only way you can feed the giraffe is to give him some cut feed up in the hay-mow. To feed the donkey just throw some hay on the barn floor. Now we have a lot of Socialist publications intended for giraffes. They are placing the right kind of diet at the proper altitude, and the giraffes are doing very well. But 'Social Justice' and a few others are set for the feeding of donkeys. There is one excuse for our existence—there are so many more donkeys than giraffes in the human family."

If you want to know more of "Social Justice," send for a sample copy. L. H.

Defense Fund.

For Lois Waisbrooker and Mattie D. Penhallow, Home, Wash. Amount previously reported, $73.78. J. L. A., Alaska, $5; Friends, Alaska, $5; C. R., Calif., $5; Group Freiheit, Pa., $5; Dr. G. P., Calif., $3; Mrs. L., Wash., $2; J. T. N., N. Y., $1; Miss B. A., N. Y., $1; E. G. B., N. Y., $1; S. D. W., Mass., $1; T. W. C., Mass., 50 cents; W. M., Wash., 50 cents; H. D. M., 50 cents. Total received to May 20, $105.28

OLIVER A. VERITY, Treas., Home, Washington.

Whereas it has long been known and declared the poor have no right to the property of the rich, I wish it to be known and declared that the rich have no right to the property of the poo —John Ruskin.

Lucifer, the Lightbearer

M. HARMAN, EDITOR AND PUBLISHER.

PUBLISHED EVERY WEEK AT 500 FULTON STREET, CHICAGO, ILL.

Terms: One year, $1; six months, 50 cents; three months, 25 cents.

Entered at the Chicago Postoffice as Second-Class Mail Matter.

Eastern Representative, E. C. Walker, 244 W. 143d street, New York.

Lucifer—Its Meaning and Purpose.

LUCIFER—The planet Venus; so called from its brightness.—Webster's Dictionary.

LUCIFEROUS—Giving Light; affording light or the means of discovery.—Same.

LUCIFIC—Producing Light.—Same.

LUCIFORM—Having the form of Light.—Same.

The name Lucifer means Light-Bringing or Light-Bearing, and the paper that has adopted this name stands for Light against Darkness—for Reason against Superstition—for Science against Tradition—for Investigation and Enlightenment against Credulity and Ignorance—for Liberty against Slavery—for Justice against Privilege.

Near-Sighted Reform.

"The Woman's Journal," Boston—founded by Lucy Stone, one of the pioneers in the work of woman's emancipation from her ages-old bondage to man's rule in the home as well as in all other departments of associative life—"The Woman's Journal" gives as its leading editorial, May 24, an article headed "Woman Suffrage Means Peace."

In this article, as a striking illustration of the horrors of war, the editor reproduces a statement from Prof. N. B. Shaler's book on "Nature and Man in America," telling us that the "first Kentucky Confederate Brigade" went into the Civil War, in 1861, 5000 strong, and that at the close of the war, though "less than ten men had deserted, out of five thousand men in the prime of life in 1861, within four years only 240 survived."

Commenting on this terrible mortality—a rate of mortality that had many parallels on both sides of this greatest of modern civil conflicts—the editor says:

> One great underlying cause of war is that our political system excludes women. A political society of men alone never did and never will maintain permanent peace, simply because masculine human nature is unduly belligerent, unless tempered by the amenity of feminine companionship. "Every class that votes makes itself felt in the goverment." So long as women remain disfranchised, the mother element is lacking in the conduct of public affairs. This fact is, to my mind, one of the most powerful of all reasons for woman suffrage.

Mr. Blackwell says many excellent things in this and other editorials in the old, able and much respected "Woman's Journal," but is it true, as implied in this quoted paragraph, that no class can make itself felt in the government except the "class that votes?"

And is Brother Blackwell quite sure that equal suffrage for women would abolish war?

Having lived in the southern states most of my life, including the war period and "reconstruction" period, I can testify that the women were quite as much in favor of war as the men, and that they were more bitterly opposed to peace on the basis of freedom for the negroes than were the men.

More than this: I believe a careful examination of the facts would show that almost every soldier in that famous "first Kentucky Brigade" was prompted to enlist by a WOMAN!—was prompted, encouraged, inspired by some woman—mother, sister, wife or sweetheart, to go to war, to endure bravely all the hardships and horrors incident to war—to fight to the death in defense of southern independence and to perpetuate the right of the white race to enslave the African. And today, if left to the suffrage of the white women of the south I verily believe that the negroes would be deprived of such citizen rights as they now possess, and the old regime of chattel slavery—or something very nearly akin to it—would be re-established.

What, let me ask, did the women of Colorado do with the ballot, when through the efforts of Populists they were given the right to vote? Did they not celebrate their political emancipation and show their gratitude to their deliverers by putting the reins of government again into the hands of the Republicans? into the hands of the party of aristocratic privilege? The party of high tariffs, of monopolistic trusts and of gold-standard currency? The party of imperialism, of wars of conquest and of wholesale robbery and murder—as illustrated in the policy of the present Republican administration in the Philippines?

* * *

The editor of "Woman's Journal" is not alone in thinking that "equal suffrage" for both sexes would cure many if not most of the political, social and economic ills that now afflict the masses of people in this and other countries. Elbert Hubbard, one of the clearest, most logical and most courageous of the reform writers of today, in his little monthly magazine, "The Philistine" for May, in a most powerfully written arraignment of "child labor" in the southern cotton mills, tells us that "if women could vote in South Carolina they would wipe child labor out with a sweep."

In the light of all past experience I again ask, Is Brother Hubbard sure of this?

While I should be glad to see the experiment tried I have little faith in this or any other political device.

To make the ballot effective as a weapon to secure equal rights, equal privilege, equal freedom and justice, it requires, as necessary conditions, equal INTELLIGENCE; equal financial and social position; involving and including equal leisure to devote to the work of psychologizing or hypnotizing one's neighbors, to say nothing of equal honesty and benevolence!

These very necessary conditions have never yet been present in any political campaign and, in the nature of things, they never can be present.

* * *

To my thinking the most important, most basic or underlying of all the reforms that ever can result in an approximation, even, to the conditions under which the ballot could be relied on to bring equal freedom and justice to all, is the reform that will practicalize the

RIGHT TO BE BORN WELL,

which right can only be practicalized through free, intelligent and consciously RESPONSIBLE MOTHERHOOD!

Once, and once only, did Bro. Hubbard, in his eighteen page article, allude to the enslavement of womanhood and motherhood in the reproductive realm—when he said, "But alas! in South Carolina a woman does not own her own body."

The first question that suggests itself right here, is, Does woman own her own body in NORTH Carolina?

Does she own her body, that is, is she free to choose her time, her conditions and her helpers in the work of reproduction, in any state of the American Union? or anywhere else on the so-called civilized globe?

* * *

While I would by no means say a word in depreciation of the work that is now being done by our Anarchistic and Socialistic contemporaries, it does seem to me very strange that they all, or nearly all, fight so shy of this most important of all reforms; that they say so little of this basic slavery, this prolific mother of all other slaveries—the enslavement of woman in the realm of motherhood, the realm of reproduction of new human beings to take the place of the tyrants and slaves that now make and perpetuate our political, economic and social institutions.

As I see it, nothing short of the freedom of motherhood, nothing short of the complete emancipation of the mothers of the race from the superstitions that now surround the subject of sex—involving the control of the creative functions of motherhood, will ever destroy the evils that now inhere in all governmental systems, whether called democratic, republican, aristocratic, monarchic, imperialistic or what not.

At this precise hour in the so-called "year of grace," 1902, tremendous efforts are being put forth to prevent agitation of questions that lead to freedom of motherhood. Censorship of press and mails is one means relied on to keep down this agitation, and the movement by churchmen and politicians everywhere to secure "uniformity" of divorce laws, and thereby make it harder for women to escape from unwelcome marital bonds, is another.

* * *

The outlook for the future is by no means what an optimist would desire, and yet there are signs of waking up in many quarters. More books and pamphlets are being written and circulated, treating upon the primal right to be born well, than ever before. One of the most recent of these is entitled, "Right Generation, The Key to Kingdom of Heaven upon Earth," by Dr. M. E. Conger of this city.

Dr. Conger's solution of the problem of cure for the evils against which religion, law and economic reforms are now so vainly battling is, "Cease the propagation of barbarians and end wars, crime and debauchery." The following paragraphs give the reader some idea of this well-known writer's method of treating the subject of Right Generation:

> First, to be born healthy and happy, to grow and unfold to maturity without sin or sickness, would certainly be a desirable change; it is possible, it is the demand of the hour. This may be labeled result number one.
>
> Second, to be born free from sin and sickness is exactly in harmony with the aspirations and inspirations of honest independent people,—the unselfish thinkers—the agitators of this age for equality and brotherhood.
>
> Right generation signifies only obeying, conforming to the natural laws of life as expressed by the animal kingdom. Everywhere in nature except in the human animal, the female decides the question of multiplying and replenishing the earth; there are no bastards, no child born with a brand upon its forehead in nature's kingdom; no unwelcome additions, and seldom, very seldom are there any miscarriages, dwarfs, or deformities, in nature's creative methods. If we had sufficient imagination to reach the results of honest, just, right living for one generation, the question of the proposed change would be settled at once and forever.

This small but very comprehensive book deserves a wide circulation. It is printed on superior paper and well bound, price not given, but presumably it is seventy-five cents. Address the Educator Pub. Co., 1027 Monroe St., Chicago, or this office,

M. HARMAN.

"A man who cannot be acquainted with me, taxes me, ordains that part of my labor shall go to this or that whimsical end; not as I, but as he happens to fancy. Behold the consequences! Of all debts, men are least willing to pay the taxes. What a satire is that on government. . . . . Every actual State is corrupt. . . . Good men must not obey the laws too well."—Emerson.

Personal and Impersonal.

There are two kinds of journalism, the personal and the impersonal. Each has its advantages or merits. In the personal kind the name of each writer is given, or known, including that of the editor or editors. Each is responsible, morally or intellectually, for his or her opinions, statements and arguments, and for those of none other.

Impersonal journalism sinks the personality, the individuality, of the editor or editors and instead magnifies that of the paper or journal itself. Editorials are unsigned. It is not the editors who speak but the journal. "'The Tribune' says"—so and so. "'The Times' congratulates itself on its record"—in regard to such and such matters of public interest.

Whether there is greater opportunity for the display of arrogance, dogmatism, and of offensive egotism under personal than under impersonal journalism may be a matter of opinion. Speaking for myself alone I decidedly prefer the plan of holding each writer responsible for her or his utterances and for none else. To my thinking this method is far more just, fair and honorable and usually far less open to the charge of offensive egotism, arrogance and dogmatism, than is the method that hides or shelters the individuality of the writer behind that of the journal in whose name he or she speaks.

In accord with this view I nearly always sign my name or initials when writing for Lucifer's columns, and ask and expect each reader to consider whatever I may say as addressed to him or to her personally. I much prefer to regard each reader in the light of a personal friend; as one interested in the same work, the same objects or purposes to which I am devoting my time and whatever of mental and physical energy I may possess.

Pursuant to this plan I now say to each reader that for the past two months my reserve stock of physical and mental energy has been so small, so nearly exhausted, that I have been compelled to leave the labor and responsibility of editing and publishing the weekly editions of Lucifer mainly to others. Naturally this work, this responsibility has fallen chiefly upon my daughter Lillian, who as most of our readers know, has been associated with me in the publishing business for many years.

During these two months many articles have appeared in the paper upon which I much desired to comment, but consoled myself with the reflection that most of our readers know that Lucifer is not published to give voice to the opinions of one man or one woman, or of any set or coterie of men and women, but to give FREE EXPRESSION, as far as possible, to the honest thought of many minds however divergent. Hence neither my daughter nor myself feel it necessary to see that no sentiment adverse to our own opinions, shall appear in the paper without editorial comment.

* * *

As to the future: Judging the future by past experiences of a similar nature I cannot expect to regain my accustomed health and strength without taking a vacation of some sort. Since April first I have lost about twenty pounds of flesh—from 140 to 120—and still losing. So have about decided to take the advice contained in the kindly fraternal letter printed elsewhere in this issue, and get away entirely for a few weeks, from the mental tension inseparable from the office of publication, and during this vacation will probably write very little for Lucifer's columns, and do very little mental work of any sort.

While off duty I leave, as usual, the chief responsibility to rest on Lillian's shoulders, but would ask every reader of these lines to consider herself or himself specially invited and requested to help her, in all possible ways, to carry this load and to help her to introduce the educational work of Lucifer wherever there may be an opening. From many sources we receive words of encouragement like these—taken from the private letter of a Boston friend: "I see evidences on every side that you are making great progress in demolishing the rotten shell of hypocritical 'respectability,' but even though rotten it still retains its shape—greatly weakened of course." M. HARMAN.

VARIOUS VOICES.

Mrs. Celia Danzig, Herkimer, Kas.:—Enclosed find $1 to pay for one year's subscription to Lucifer, and "The Rights of Children" by Kerr. I like Lucifer very much. I would rather do without some other necessities than without it. Although I am only in the primary department of Lucifer's school I understand enough to do me much good. I hope the editor will soon be well enough to go on with his noble work.

James F. Morton, Jr., Home, Wash.:—"Do if my sweetheart loved another?" Why, exactly what I would do, if she did not love another? She being a free and independent individual, her personal relations with others than myself are none of my business; and I should not concern myself with them in the slightest degree. This is the only possible position for one who has outgrown the shameful idea of sexual ownership. No apology for the disgusting vice of jealousy can hold water for a moment.

W. W. Carter, Kalispell, Montana:—Replying to the question in No. 917.

1. I would see that no other person should treat my wife or sweetheart with greater respect or more consideration than I.

2. I would study well and carefully the talents, character and disposition of the loved one, to ascertain if possible wherein he was my superior.

3. I could love her none the less because I was incapable of making her happy.

Emeline A. Prescott, Hallowell, Maine:—I enclose $1, 15 cents of which is to pay for 40 old copies of Lucifer; remainder of money please credit on regular subscription. I want many of your books, but can't have them. I wrote some time ago that I am in years 73—earning my living with a business that pays little. Years ago made more money, then I scattered much literature through the mails and in other ways. My will is good as ever and better to help along reform. I do what I can. I have worn the "American reform dress" for forty years, and shown my colors in belief and practice. Like your father, I was very sick with grip eight weeks last winter. Am well as formerly, except tire more easily.

M. W., Conn.:—In order to help to keep the Lucifer ball a rolling, I am sending you $2.30 for one year's subscription to Lucifer and "A Physician in the House," by Dr. J. H. Greer. My subscription is paid to 1099, but notwithstanding this fact I will advance it a little farther for I don't know that one can have too much of a good thing, and besides, by so doing I can do something to celebrate the 49th anniversary of my birth, which occurs today. It will probably be an assistance to you, else you would not make the offer, although I can't see how you can afford to offer so much value for so little money. I will give the book to a young lady friend, recently married, for a wedding present and possibly the useful information contained in the book may be of service to her. In this way I can be "killing three birds with one stone:" I can be helping you; possibly be helping her, and gratifying myself, as it is gratifying to me to be able to do a little to help Lucifer keep afloat, and it is also a pleasure to me to give something in the way of a present to anybody whom I like.

Philip G. Peabody, Boston, Mass.:—I am exceedingly sorry to hear that you are not enjoying your usual good health; I think that, if you can absent yourself from your office and home and keep perfectly contented, a change for a few weeks would do you good; and as Lucifer is so admirably managed by your daughter, I fail to see why you could not leave it without anxiety. I am taking the liberty of asking you to accept the enclosed check, as a personal gift, for any purpose for which you may care to use it; but my hope is that you will use it for your own immediate pleasure and comfort, and in taking a good rest.

Lucifer seems to be getting better and better; I heartily accord with some words of praise I recently read of E. C. Walker: I think he is one of the wisest, most logical writers of whom I know; he seems to live and flourish on the very bedrock of truth.

Another writer who is positively brilliant in his wit and logic—with whom I am sorry to say I have no acquaintance—is R. B. Kerr; his recent "parables" on life in Jupiter, and "A Strange Custom" deserve to live forever, as illustrations of an idiocy in the twentieth century; for, indeed, the "strangeness" of the curious peoples therein related is no greater than our own. Mr. Kerr's essay a year or two ago on the "Rights of Children" was a very great work, showing marvelous powers of reasoning and analysis.

Another admirable article in Lucifer, recently was, "Who Are the Fallen?" But if I continue to even name the able, or merely the great articles recently published in Lucifer, I will have to name so many that my letter would become tiresome

A. Davison, Prairie View, Kans.:—I received a sample copy of Lucifer, and was much interested in "Hamilton and the Constitution," but cannot agree with you that the Constitution is to blame for the policies that have obtained in the administration of the government for the last forty years. The wrong has resulted from an evasion, disregard and open violation of both the letter and spirit of the Constitution. The trouble is with the fool mallet-headed people that could not see the trend of things, as any one of ordinary intelligence ought to have seen soon after the Republican party came into power. They neglected to safeguard and protect the charter of their liberties, forgot the axiom, "Eternal vigilance is the price of liberty," and listened to the idiotic rot of the "full dinner pail," and other rot on a par with it; and now they are bellyaching around because there is no meat in their dinner-pail. I might cite many instances in which they openly and shamefully violated the provisions of the Constitution; but will only mention two or three.

First, the exclusion act they have applied to what they call our insular possessions; the Supreme Court has decided that they are citizens—and that they are not citizens—that's a conundrum for you.

Second, that the people cannot go anywhere they choose in their own country. But that is imperialism, to restrict their liberty is the first step to control them. The next step will be to compel them to serve a certain time in the army.

Third, the infamous monetary system they have saddled upon the country would not have been allowed by anything but a nation of mullet-heads. The case of Roberts of Utah is another in point; he was excluded on account of his religion, for which there was not a particle of constitutional ground. A man's religion cuts no figure in his qualifications for office from a constitutional standpoint. But a set of as arrant hypocrite, as ever lived, feigned a little cheap, sickly, sentimentality for effect, and to serve a purpose; when there was not one in ten of them as clean as Roberts. Don't understand that I am defending Roberts' religion or any other religion; for I am not, as I don't believe in any religion. But I do detest hypocrisy wherever found. The people have very nearly proved the Hamiltonian idea, that the people are not capable of self government. No, no Brother Harman it's not the Constitution that is at fault, it's the mullet-headed people. What brains they have are in their stomachs, at least that is the case with a majority of them. I have decided to accept your offer of Lucifer thirteen weeks and the "Prodigal Daughter" for 25 cents, and enclose 75 cents to pay for same and other pamphlets as named herewith.

TOLSTOI'S NEW WORK.

The Slavery of Our Times.

With Portrait of the Gifted Author, and Introduction by the Translator, Aylmer Maude.

CHAPTER TITLES,

I., Goods Porters Who Work Thirty-seven Hours; II., Society's Indifference While Men Perish; III., Justification of the Existing Position of Sciences; IV., The Assertion of Economic Science that Rural Laborers Must Enter the Factory System; V., Why Learned Economists Assert what is False; VI., Bankruptcy of the Socialist Ideal; VII., Culture or Freedom? VIII., Slavery Exists Among Us. IX., What is Slavery? X., Laws Concerning Taxes, Land and Property; XI., Laws the Cause of Slavery; XII., The Essence of Legislation Is Organized Violence; XIII., What Are Governments? Is It Possible to Exist Without Governments? XIV., How Can Governments Be Abolished? XV., What Should Each Man Do? An Afterword.

Well printed on heavy paper Substantially bound. 186 pages Price, $1.50.

Address M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

CAPTAIN JINKS, HERO

BY ERNEST CROSBY.

It is a merciless satire on war and militarism in which the parallel between savagery and soldiery is unerringly drawn. It is a biting burlesque on the various forms of cheap hero-worship. It holds up to withering scorn every important feature of militarism.

Among the accompaniments and results of war exploited and satirized, are hazing at "West Point," the war whoops of the yellow journals, the savagery of war, the Schley-Sampson controversy, civilizing the heathen savage, looting in China, pension abuses, the capture of Aguinaldo, the Peace Conference, army mismanagement, osculatory attacks by gooney girls, etc.

With 25 Irresistible Drawings by Dan Beard. 12mo, Cloth, Handsome Covers, 400 pages.

Address M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

VICE: ITS FRIENDS AND ITS FOES

BY EDWIN C. WALKER.

CONTENTS:—Brotherhood of Man; The Recognition of Facts; Folly of "For Men Only." Definition of Vice; Horrors of Prostitution; Abnormal Sexuality; Errors of Fathers, Mothers and Teachers; Persecution Does Not Reform; Prostitution and the Crusaders; The "Spoiling of the Heathen;" What are the Effects of Raids and Crusades? The Economic Side of the Problem. Party Politics in Vice Crusading; In What Does Prostitution Consist? Some Causes of Prostitution; Two Kinds of Prostitution Compared; The Opponents of Divorce; "Purifying" the Tenements; Action for Advanced Women.

WITH APPENDIX:—The Wanderings of a Spirit; Our Fair Civilization. The Folly and Cruelty of It All. Price 15c.

Address M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

VACCINATION A CRIME.

With Comments on Other Sanitary Superstitions.

BY FELIX L. OSWALD, M. D.

"Vaccination spreads diseases; vaccination impairs the organic functions; vaccination encourages reliance on worthless remedies; vaccination spreads small-pox; compulsory vaccination furnishes dangerous legal precedents."

With illustrations of diseases frequently resulting from vaccination. 198 pages. Price 10 cents. For sale by M. Harman, 500 Fulton St. Chicago.

DO YOU EVER THINK

Of the fate of the Prodigal Daughter? The Prodigal Son is forgiven and received with rejoicing—why should different treatment be accorded to his sister? For a vivid, true picture of the conditions in homes and factories which produce thousands of so-called fallen women every year, read "The Prodigal Daughter; or, The Price of Virtue," by Rachel Campbell.

SPECIAL OFFER.

This valuable work sent free on receipt of twenty-five cents for a thirteen week's trial subscription to Lucifer the Light Bearer. M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton Street, Chicago, Ill.

Notice! I would be glad to hear from Liberals who would like to correspond with other Liberals. Address (with stamp.)
Snowville, Va. ELMINA DRAKE SLENKER.

920.

If these figures correspond with the number printed on the wrapper of your Lucifer, your subscription expires with this number.

If a copy of Lucifer fails to reach you, please order by number or date.

Lucifer will not be sent "by return mail" unless stamps for postage are enclosed with order.

To NEW SUBSCRIBERS: Your subscription is paid to No. If you have not ordered Lucifer, a friend has subscribed for you. If you do not wish to receive it, please notify us by card or through your postmaster. If you wish to become a regular subscriber you will confer a favor by renewing before the expiration of your trial subscription.

LOVE'S COMING OF AGE.

BY EDWARD CARPENTER.

This is a book with which few will wholly agree, but which nearly every one can read with profit and enjoyment. The subject is the relation of the sexes in the past, present and future, and it is treated with absolute frankness and fearlessness by a writer who unites a broad outlook, a strong grasp of his subject and a charming literary style. The following table of contents will indicate the line of thought followed by the author.

The Sex Passion.
Man, the Ungrown.
Woman, the Serf.
Woman in Freedom
Marriage: a Retrospect.
Marriage: a Forecast.
The Free Society.
Some remarks on the early star and sex worships.
Notes—On the Primitive Group Marriage; Jealousy; The Family; Preventive Checks to Population.

The book is printed on extra book paper and handsomely bound in cloth. Price, $1.

Address M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

WHITMAN'S IDEAL DEMOCRACY, AND OTHER WRITINGS.

BY HELENA BORN.

Comprising besides the title essay, Thoreau's Joy in Nature; Poets of Revolt; Shelley, Whitman, Carpenter; Whitman's Altruism; Individualism versus Organization; Ingenuities of Economic Argument; The Last Stand Against Democracy in Sex; Inequality in Divorce; Marriage Safeguards. With portrait of author and biographical introduction by Helen Tufts. 125 pages. Edition limited to 500 copies; each copy numbered. Fine paper, uncut pages, bound in boards, paper label. Price $1.

COLLEGE OF MEDICINE AND SURGERY,

CHICAGO, ILL.

Session begins September 25 and continues eight months. Four Years' Graded Course. Practical work required in Chemistry Physiology, Bacteriology and Microscopy. Co-Educational. Standard Requirement. For catalogue, address Secretary, 2'4 Ashland Boulevard, Chicago

For Rent: Large, light, furnished room, Inquire of Lillian Harman 500 Fulton, St. Chicago.

RADICAL LITERATURE.

For Sale by M. Harman, 500 Fulton St., Chicago.

A CHAMBERMAID'S DIARY. By Octave Mirbeau. Translated from the French by Benj. R. Tucker. 460 pages. Handsomely bound in cloth. $1.50.

ADVANCEMENT OF SCIENCE. Prof. John Tyndall's famous Inaugural Address before the British Association for the Advancement of Science, with the articles on Prayer which so stirred the religious world. Cloth, 50c; paper, 25c.

AGE OF REASON. Thomas Paine. Cloth, with steel plate portrait, 75c; paper 15c.

ANARCHISM: Its Philosophy and Ideal. Peter Kropotkin. 5c.

A PHYSICIAN IN THE HOUSE. A New Family Medical Work, by Dr. J. H. Greer. This book is up-to-date in every particular. It will save you hundreds of dollars in doctors' bills. It tells you how to cure yourself by simple and harmless home remedies. It recommends no poisonous or dangerous drugs. It teaches how to save health and life by safe methods. It teaches prevention—that it is better to know how to live and avoid disease than to take any medicine as a cure. It is not an advertisement and has no medicine to sell. It has hundreds of excellent recipes for the cure of the various diseases. It has 16 colored plates showing different parts of the human body. The chapter on Painless Midwifery is worth its weight in gold to women. The "Care of Children" is something every mother ought to read. It teaches the value of Air, Sunshine, and Water as medicines. It contains valuable information for the married. This book cannot fail to please you. If you are looking for health by the safest and easiest means, do not delay getting it. It has eight hundred pages, is neatly bound in cloth, with gold letters, and will be sent by mail or express, prepaid to any address, for $2.75.

A PLEA FOR THE NEW WOMAN. May L. Collins. With large new half-tone portrait. 10c.

A TALE OF THE STRASSBURG GEESE. R. B. Kerr. Together with The Strike of the Strassburg Geese (C. W. Coolridge), A Traveler's Tale (R. B. Kerr), The Cat's Story (Emile Zola) 5c.

AUTONOMY, SELF-LAW. A fragmentary dissertation on the right to non-invasive self-hood. 5c.

BALZAC'S SERAPHITA: The Mystery of Sex. Mary Hanford Ford. Cloth, $1.

BIBLE TEMPERANCE. E. C. Walker. Proving that Liquor Drinking is Commanded, Defended and Enjoined by the Bible, and giving close reference to the chapters and verses. 10c.

BORNING BETTER BABIES—Through regulating reproduction by controlling conception. E. B. Foote, Jr., M. D. 25c.

CAUSES OF HARD TIMES, and the Money Question. Albert Chavannes. 5c.

CHICAGO CONFERENCE OF TRUSTS. Speeches, debates, etc.; 81 portraits of delegates, including Benj. R. Tucker, Laurence Gronlund, William Jennings Bryan, Samuel Gompers, Louis F. Post, and George Schilling. 428 pages. 50c.

CHILDREN OF THE ITALIAN POOR. Paola Lombroso. 5c.

DARWINS, THE. (A novel.) Elmina D. Slenker. 50c.

DAWN OF CIVILIZATION, The; or, England in the Nineteenth Century. J. C. Spence. 178 pages. 50c.

DAWN-THOUGHT ON THE RECONCILIATION. By J. Wm. Lloyd. An inspired treatise that, with insight and solution, touches all the questions of life, love, soul and society. A prose-poem, simple enough for a child to enjoy, deep enough to make a philosopher think. The largest creed, the most generous theory, the gladdest gospel. A book of life. A religion of growth and the overlook—freedom and optimism. Read it. Printed in old style antique type, rubricated with portrait of the author. In three editions, de luxe, paste and paper bound. Prices, $1.25, $1.00 and 50c.

DIGGING FOR RED-ROCK. Camp-meeting talks and sketches by Moses Harman. 5c.

DR. FOOTE'S SOCIAL SCIENCE SERIES OF DIME PAMPHLETS—Wedlock; Scientific Marriage; Heredity; A B C of Temperaments; Powell and his Critics; Physiological Marriage; Physical Improvement of Humanity; Causes of Disease, Insanity, and Premature Death; A Step Backward. Any of the above books sent by mail on receipt of price.

DYNAMIC THEORY OF LIFE AND MIND. An attempt to show that all organic beings are both constructed and operated by the dynamic agencies of their respective environments. By James B. Alexander. Over 400 illustrations, 41 chapters, 1,067 pages and a 3-column index of 11 pages. Cloth, $2.75.

EAST TENNESSEE SKETCHES. A and Cecile Chavannes. 25c.

ECONOMICS OF ANARCHY. A Study of the Industrial Type. Orer D. Lum [illegible]

EIGHT-HOUR MOVEMENT. John P. Altgeld, ex-Governor of Illinois. 5c.

EVOLUTION AND REVOLUTION. Elisee Reclus. 5c.

FALSE CLAIMS OF THE CHURCH. John E. Remsburg. Analyzing and confuting the claims made by churchmen that the Christian religion has promoted morality, learning, temperance, science, freedom, and showing how she has opposed progress. Paper, 10c.

FIELDS, FACTORIES, AND WORKSHOPS; or, Industry Combined with Agriculture and Brain Work with Manual Work. Peter Kropotkin. 280 pages. 40c. Postage, 5c.

FREE PRESS. Arguments in support of demurrer to the indictment of M. Harman, E. C. Walker and Geo. Harman, under the Comstock law. G. C. Clemens and David Overmyer. 20c.

GIORDANO BRUNO. His Life, Teachings, and Martyrdom. Burned for heresy in Rome, Feb. 17, 1600. 5c.

GOD AND THE STATE. Bakounine. 25c.

GOVERNMENT ANALYZED. A remarkable work by a remarkable man, Col. John R. Kelso; the history of whose life reads more like romance than reality. This book is the last of a series—Deity Analyzed, Bible Analyzed, Universe Analyzed. By the author's death this work was left unfinished, but was completed by his wife, Etta Dunbar Kelso. 519 pages; cloth. Price reduced from $1.50 to $1.

HILDA'S HOME. Rose Graul. "An o'er true tale" of woman's wrongs and of one woman's struggles and final triumphs in her attempt to secure justice for herself and for her sisters. 428 pages. Cloth, $1; paper, 50c.

HUMAN RIGHTS. J. Madison Hook. 5c.

IMPORTANCE OF HONEST MONEY. A simple, scientific, invariable standard of price. James Adleman. 250 pages. Paper, 50c.

IN BRIGHTER CLIMES; or, Life in Socioland. Albert Chavannes. 5c.

INFIDEL DEATH-BEDS. "Idle Tales of Dying Horrors." G. W. Foote. Brief biographical sketches of 97 Freethinkers, including Bruno, Buckle, Byron, Comte, Darwin, George Eliot, Gibbon, Goethe, Hugo, Harriet Martineau, Mill, Paine, Madame Roland, George Sand, Shelley, Voltaire, Zola, Voltaire. 25c.

IN HELL AND THE WAY OUT. A plan of Social Democracy outlined. Henry E. Allen. 10c.

INSTITUTIONAL MARRIAGE. From the viewpoint of an exiled Mavian. M. Harman. 5c.

JOHN'S WAY. A domestic radical story. Elmina D. Slenker. 25c.

KAREEZA. Ethics of Marriage. A bold, brave book, teaching ideal marriage, rights of the unborn child, a designed and controlled maternity. Sample pages free. $1.

KORADINE. A story for young and old. Extra levant cloth. $1.

LIBERTY IN LITERATURE. Testimonial to Walt Whitman. "Let us put wreaths on the brows of the living." An address delivered in Philadelphia, Oct. 31, 1891, with portrait of Whitman. Containing also Col. Ingersoll's address at the funeral of Walt Whitman, Mar. 30, 1892. Cloth, 50c; paper, 25c.

LIBERTY. Political, Religious, Social, and Moral. A. F. Tindall. 5c.

LITTLE LESSONS FOR LITTLE FOLKS. Elmina D. Slenker. Boards, 40c.

LIZZIE MELTON. A story of a self-reliant girl. By Albert Chavannes. With portrait of author. 25c.

LUCIFER. Third Series, Vol. III. (1899). Cloth, $1.25. Postage, 25c.

MAGNETISM, and Its Relation to Health and Character. Albert Chavannes. 25c.

MARRIAGE. An address by Dr. Juliet H. Severance. 5c.

MARRIAGE IN FREE SOCIETY. Edward Carpenter. A dainty little gift book. 25c.

MEN, WOMEN AND CHANCE. William Platt. Containing two tales: The Ascent to the Heights, and Blind Men and Seeing. Well printed on heavy paper and artistically bound in cloth. Gilt top, rough edges. 50c.

MEN, WOMEN, AND GODS. Helen H. Gardener. With preface by Col. R. G. Ingersoll. Contents: Introduction by Col. Ingersoll. Men, Women, and Gods. Vicarious Atonement. Historical Facts and Theological Fictions. Appendix. Address to the Clergy and Others. Letter to Cleveland Congress of Freethinkers. The only authorized and correct edition. Large 12mo, heavy-toned paper. Portrait. This volume is by far the best writing this famous author ever did. It is very fine. Cloth, $1; paper, 50c.

MISSING LINK IN MODERN SPIRITUALISM, THE. A. Leah (Fox) Underhill. With portraits of the Fox Sisters and others. 478 pages. Cloth. Reduced to $1.

MORIBUND SOCIETY AND ANARCHY. Jean Grave. Cloth, 60c; paper, 35c.

MOTHERHOOD IN FREEDOM. M. Harman. 5c.

MUTUAL BANKING. A simple plan to abolish interest on money. William B. Greene. 10c.

NORA, A DOLL'S HOUSE, and GHOSTS. Ibsen. Cloth. 75c.

OUR WORSHIP OF PRIMITIVE SOCIAL GUESSES. E. C. Walker. Contents: Love and Law; The Moloch of the Monogamic Ideal; The Continuity of Race-Life, and Tyranny; Food and Sex Fallacies; a Criticism; When Men and Women Are and When They Are Not Varietists; The New Woman: What is she? What will she be? The State Hiding Behind Its Own Mistakes; Bishop Potter's Opinion of Divorce; Love: Its Attraction and Expression; Is She an Honest Girl? Lloyd, Platt, and the Pitiful Facts; Social Radicals and Parentage; Anthropology and Monogamy; Love and Trust Versus Fear; Reflections upon Reading William Platt's "Women, Love, and Life." 15c.

PERSONAL EXPERIENCES of Two American Anti-Vivisectionists in Various Countries. Philip G. Peabody. With an Appendix by Col. R. G. Ingersoll. Reduced from 25c to 15c.

PERSONAL RIGHTS AND SEXUAL WRONGS. Oswald Dawson. 25c.

PRIESTLY CELIBACY. Prof. A. L. Rawson. Together with The Incoherence of Transition (H. C. Walker), Motherhood in Freedom (Moses Harman), The Greatest Sin (an allegory, R. B. Kerr), and Jealousy, the Foe of Freedom (Oscar Rotter). 25c.

RELIGION AND RATIONALISM. The relation of each to human liberty. The religionist, fancying that he has the whole truth, is logically opposed to investigation, and he appeals to physical force to arrest the discovery of new truths. What Rationalism is, and how many believe themselves Freethinkers who are only unbelieving or disgruntled religionists. The necessity for separate organizations and a division of labor among reformers. The Secular Union. Important facts and arguments in a compact form. E. C. Walker. 5c.

RIGHTS OF MAN. Thomas Paine. Answer to Burke's attack upon the French revolution. A political treatise of great general value, as advocating liberty and democracy. Contains the fundamental principles of true republicanism. Cloth, 50c, paper, 25c.

RUBAIYAT (Quatrains) OF OMAR KHAYYAM. Edward FitzGerald's interpretation; with original introduction; special cover; latest version. Paper, 15c.

RULED BY THE TOMB. A discussion of free thought and free love. Orford Northcote. 10c.

SCIENCE IN STORY; or, Sammy Tubbs, the Boy Doctor, and Sponsie, the Troublesome Monkey. For young folks. Dr. E. B. Foote. Five volumes in "red line," presentation edition. $5. Five volumes, plainer binding, $2.50; all in one volume, $2.

SEXUAL PHYSIOLOGY FOR THE YOUNG. Being the fifth volume of "Science in Story." 250 pages; cloth bound; illustrated. 50c.

SONGS OF THE UNBLIND CUPID. J. Wm. Lloyd. Edition de luxe. Verses printed from Kelmscott type upon deckle edged hand made paper of cerulean tint. Initial letters, ornaments and borders are in red; initial letter and sketch upon the opening page are hand painted in water colors. Covers brown, with choice of silver or gold lettering. Very handsome gift book. 50c.

STUDIES IN SOCIOLOGY. In four parts: I., The Law of Happiness; II., The Law of Individual Control; III., The Law of Exchange; IV., The Law of Environment. Albert Chavannes. 25c.

TALKS ON NATURE. Important information for both sexes. Dr. J. H. Greer. 192 pages. Reduced from 50 to 25c.

THE ABOLITION OF MARRIAGE. John Beverly Robinson. Together with Isabel's Intention (Marlette), Reminiscences of Berlin Heights (A. Warren), and The Sexes and Love in Freedom (Oscar Rotter). 25c.

THE BAR SINISTER AND LICIT LOVE, including the first biennial proceedings of the Legitimation League, and a full account of the Lanchester case, with full-page half-tone pictures of Edith Lanchester, and Lillian Harman. Handsomely bound in green and gold covers. 207 pages. 25c.

THE BLUE LAWS OF CONNECTICUT. Taken from the Code of 1650 and the public records of the Colony of Connecticut previous to 1665. With an account of the persecution of Witches and Quakers in New England, and some extracts from the Blue Laws of Virginia. Copiously illustrated. 25c.

THE BRITISH BARBARIANS. Grant Allen, the greatest of the Hill-Top pioneers. Dedicated "to all who have heart enough, brain enough, and soul enough to understand it." Handsomely bound in cloth. 291 pages. $1.

THE WOMAN WHO DID. Grant Allen. A powerful story of a refined, educated and high-spirited woman who dared to defy the tyranny of church and state and ignore the institution of marriage. Handsomely bound in cloth. $1.

THE NEW HEDONISM. Grant Allen. The opening paragraph says: "The old asceticism said: 'Be virtuous and you will be happy.' The new hedonism says: 'Be happy and you will be virtuous.'" In another place the writer says: "In proportion as men have freed themselves from mediæval superstitions have they begun to perceive that the unclean and impure things are celibacy and asceticism; that the pure and beautiful and ennobling thing is the fit and worthy exercise of the reproductive function." Paper covers; 96 large pages; twelve copies, 50c. Single copy, 5c.

THE CHICAGO MARTYRS. The famous speeches of the eight condemned anarchists in Judge Gary's Court, and Altgeld's reasons for pardoning Fielden, Neebe and Schwab. 25c.

THE COMING WOMAN. Lillie D. White. 5c.

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM. Principles and platform of organized Freethought. 10c.

THE EVOLUTION OF MODESTY. Jonathan Mayo Crane. A consideration of the origin of clothes and the reasons why people wear clothing. Here are a few questions it answers: What is modesty? What is the cause of it? What is the use of it? What is the cause of the feeling of shame? Is nudity immodest? What is the cause of the notion that it is shameful to expose some parts of the body? Why do not all peoples agree as to what parts of the body should be concealed? 5c.

THE FOUNTAIN OF LIFE; or, The Threefold Power of Sex. Lois Waisbrooker. 50c.

THE FUTURE OF SECULARISM. When will the Cause of Justice triumph? 5c.

THE PRODIGAL DAUGHTER; or, The Price of Virtue. Rachel Campbell. Together with Legal Wifehood (Lucinda B. Chandler), Life's Gifts (Olive Schreiner), and Marriage—What It Was and Is; Will the Coming Woman Marry? 25c.

THE REVIVAL OF PURITANISM. E. C. Walker. 10c.

THE RIGHTS OF CHILDREN. R. B. Kerr. Together with What Are Women Here For? (E. B. Foote, Jr., M. D.), The New Martyrdom (Lillian Harman), and The Will, from the French of Guy de Maupassant. 25c.

THE SANCTITY OF MARRIAGE. As viewed from a moral and sanitary standpoint. A solemn protest against the present demoralizing management of that institution, its effects upon offspring and its influence upon educative work. Price reduced from 25c to 15c.

THE SECRET INSTRUCTIONS OF THE JESUITS. A reprint from an edition published in 1723, quoted by the highest authorities as authentic. The work is redolent of Jesuit craft and is a plain index to the underhand working of that order against the welfare of individuals and society. 15c.

THE STATE: ITS HISTORIC ROLE. Prince Peter Kropotkin. 10c.

THE UNWOMANLY WOMAN. Lizzie M. Holmes. Together with That Great Fraud, Telepathy (Moses Hull), Virgin Soil (George Egerton), and Normal Sexual Action (Ernest Wilson). 25c.

THE WORM TURNS. Revolutionary Poems. Voltairine de Cleyre. 15c.

THOMAS JEFFERSON. His Political, Social and Religious Philosophy. Gen. M. M. Trumbull. 5c.

TOKOLOGY. A book for every woman. By Alice B. Stockham, M. D. Illustrated. Tokology teaches possible painless pregnancy and parturition, giving full, plain directions for the care of a woman before and after confinement. The ailments of pregnancy can be prevented as well as the pains and dangers of childbirth avoided and women need not go down to death giving birth to children. English, German or Swedish. $2.25.

TRAVELS IN FAITH. By Capt. Robert C. Adams. His mental experience from superstition to rationalism. Cloth, 75c; paper, 25c.

VACCINATION A GIGANTIC CRIME. Samuel Darling. 15c.

VINDICATION OF THOMAS PAINE. Col. R. G. Ingersoll. Dealing with all the slanders brought against the name and fame of Paine. A little pamphlet which every admirer of Thomas Paine should have by him for reference. Paper, 15c.

VITAL FORCE. Magnetic Exchange and Magnetation. Albert Chavannes. 25c.

WHAT THE YOUNG NEED TO KNOW; a Primer of Sexual Rationalism. Edwin C. Walker. "Let us cease to be ashamed of what makes us men, of circling suns of babes." Paper covers; 42 large pages. 10c.

WHAT IS RELIGION? Ingersoll's last public address, delivered at the meeting of the Free Religious Association in Boston on June 2, 1899. To which is appended the poem, "Proclamation of the Free," the last verse written by the great Freethinker. 5c.

WHEN LOVE IS LIBERTY AND NATURE LAW. John Badcock, Jr. 10c.

WHY THE UNDERTONE? An open letter to Judge Gary. Sarah E. Ames. 10c.

WOMAN, CHURCH, AND STATE. Matilda Joslyn Gage. This is Mrs. Gage's last and crowning work. Every woman ought to read it. Every liberal man and man will want it. A burning protest against the tremendous wrong done woman by the church, which controlled the state. It ought to be widely read for the good it will do. Cloth, $1.50; paper, 75c.

WOMAN IN THE PAST, PRESENT AND FUTURE. Woman was the first human being that tasted bondage. Woman was a slave before the slave existed. The basis of all oppression is economic dependence on the oppressor. Woman is a slave of the slave. This work is August Bebel's masterpiece. 8vo. 178 pages. 25c.

Address M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

Price 2 Cents.

LUCIFER.

THE LIGHT-BEARER.

THIRD SERIES, VOL. VI., No. 22. CHICAGO, ILLINOIS, JUNE 12, E. M. 302. [C. E. 1902.] WHOLE No. 921

TREASON.

"Stop thief!" the thief himself when hotly pressed,
Vociferates with lusty accents loud,
To mystify and turn aside the crowd
That unobserved he may elude arrest.

So treason is most flagrantly confessed
By men of aspect virtuous and proud,
From whose false lips is loyalty avowed,
And "traitor" shouted to confuse the quest.

Mark well the accusers, though in reverend guise,
In cabinet or press or pulpit found,
Entrenched behind a bulwark made of lies,
They launch anathemas of empty sound.
The loyal heart authority defies
When that, disloyal, passes freedom's bound.

—W. L. Garrison.

Wage-Slavery in Russia.

An acquaintance of mine who works on the Moscow-Kursk Railway as a weigher, in the course of conversation mentioned to me that the men who load the goods on to his scales work for thirty-seven hours on end.

Though I had full confidence in the speaker's truthfulness I was unable to believe him. I thought he was making a mistake, or exaggerating, or that I misunderstood something.

But the weigher narrated the conditions under which this work is done so exactly that there was no room left for doubt. He told me that there are two hundred and fifty such goods-porters at the Kursk station in Moscow. They were all divided into gangs of five men, and were on piece-work, receiving from one rouble to 1R. 15 (say two shillings to two and fourpence, or forty-eight cents to fifty-six cents) for one thousand poods (over sixteen tons) of goods received or dispatched.

They come in the morning, work for a day and a night at unloading the trucks, and in the morning, as soon as the night is ended, they begin to re-load, and work on for another day. So that in two days they get one night's sleep.

Their work consists of unloading and moving bales of seven, eight, and up to ten poods (say eighteen, twenty, and up to nearly twenty-six stone). Two men place the bales on the backs of the other three who carry them. By such work they earn less than a rouble (two shillings, or forty-eight cents) a day. They work continually, without holiday.

The account given by the weigher was so circumstantial that it was impossible to doubt it, but, nevertheless, I decided to verify it with my own eyes, and I went to the goods-station.

Finding my acquaintance at the goods-station, I told him that I had come to see what he had told me about.

"No one I mention it to believes it," said I.

Without replying to me, the weigher called to some one in a shed. "Nikita, come here."

From the door appeared a tall, lean workman in a torn coat.

"When did you begin work?"

"When? Yesterday morning."

"And where were you last night?"

"I was unloading, of course."

"Did you work during the night?" asked I.

"Of course we worked."

"And when did you begin to-day?"

"We began in the morning—when else should we begin?"

"And when will you finish working?"

"When they let us go; then we shall finish!"

The four other workmen of his gang came up to us. They all wore torn coats and were without overcoats, though there were about 20° Reamur of cold (13° below zero, Fahrenheit).

I began to ask them about the conditions of their work, and evidently surprised them by taking an interest in such a simple and natural thing (as it seemed to them) as their thirty-six hour work.

They were all villagers; for the most part fellow-countrymen of my own—from Tula; some, however, were from Orla, and some from Voronesh. They lived in Moscow in lodgings, some of them with their families, but most of them without.

Those who have come here alone send their earnings home to the village.

They board with contractors. Their food costs them ten roubles (say £1 1s., or five dollars per month). They always eat meat, disregarding the fasts.

Their work always keeps them occupied more than thirty-six hours running, because it takes more than half an hour to get to their lodgings and from their lodgings, and, besides, they are often kept at work beyond the time fixed.

Paying for their own food, they earn, by such thirty-seven-hour-on-end work, about twenty-five roubles a month.

To my question, why they did such convict work, they replied:

"Where is one to go to?"

"But why work thirty-six hours on end? Cannot the work be arranged in shifts?"

"We do what we're told to."

"Yes; but why do you agree to it?"

"We agree because we have to feed ourselves. 'If you don't like it—be off!' If one's even an hour late one has one's ticket shied at one and are told to march; and there are ten men ready to take the place."

The men were all young, only one was somewhat older, perhaps about forty. All their faces were lean, and had exhausted, weary eyes, as though the men were drunk. The lean workman to whom I first spoke struck me especially by the strange weariness of his look. I asked him whether he had not been drinking today.

"I don't drink," answered he, in the decided way in which men who really do not drink always reply to that question.

"And I do not smoke," added he.

"Do the others drink?" asked I.

"Yes; it is brought here."

"The work is not light, and a drink always adds to one's strength," said the older workman.

This workman had been drinking that day, but it was not in the least noticeable.

After some more talk with the workmen I went to watch the work.

Passing long rows of all sorts of goods, I came to some workmen slowly pushing a loaded truck. I learned afterwards that the men have to shunt the trucks themselves and to keep the platform clear of snow, without being paid for the work. It is so stated in the "Conditions of Pay." These workmen were just as tattered and emaciated as those with whom I had been talking. When they had moved the truck to its place I went up to them and asked when they had begun work, and when they had dined.

I was told that they had started work at seven o'clock, and had only just dined. The work had prevented their being let off sooner.

"And when do you get away?"

"As it happens; sometimes not till ten o'clock," replied the men, as if boasting of their endurance. Seeing my interest in their position, they surrounded me, and, probably taking me for an inspector, several of them speaking at once, informed me of what was evidently their chief subject of complaint—namely, that the apartment in which they could sometimes warm themselves and snatch an hour's sleep between the day-work and the night-work was crowded. All of them expressed great dissatisfaction at this crowding.

"There may be one hundred men, and nowhere to lie down; even under the shelves it is crowded," said dissatisfied voices. "Have a look at it yourself. It is close here."

The room was certainly not large enough. In the thirty-six-foot room about forty men might find place to lie down on the shelves.

Some of the men entered the room with me, and they vied with each other in complaining of the scantiness of the accommodation.

"Even under the shelves there is nowhere to lie down," said they.

These men, who in twenty degrees of frost, without overcoats, carry on their backs twenty-stone loads during thirty-six hours; who dine and sup not when they need food, but when their overseer allows them to eat; living altogether in conditions far worse than those of dray-horses, it seemed strange that these people only complained of insufficient accommodation in the room where they warm themselves. But though this seemed to me strange at first, yet, entering further into their position, I understood what a feeling of torture these men, who never get enough sleep, and who are half-frozen, must experience, when, instead of resting and being warmed, they have to creep on the dirty floor under the shelves, and there, in the stuffy and vitiated air, become yet weaker and more broken down.

Only, perhaps, in that miserable hour of vain attempt do they painfully realise all the horror of their life-destroying thirty-seven-hour work, and that is why they are especially agitated by such an apparently insignificant circumstance as the overcrowding of their room.

Having watched several gangs at work, and having talked with some of the men and heard the same story from them all, I drove home, having convinced myself that what my acquaintance had told me was true.

It was true that for money, only enough to subsist on, people considering themselves free men thought it necessary to give themselves up to work such as, in the days of serfdom, not one slave owner, however cruel, would have sent his slaves to. Let alone slave owners, not one cab proprietor would send his horses to such work, for horses cost money, and it would be wasteful, by excessive, thirty-seven-hour work, to shorten the life of an animal of value.—From "The Slavery of Our Times," by Leo Tolstoi.

The Future of Force.

I am glad to learn from C. L. James in No. 918 that my tone is becoming "considerably less dogmatical and facetious." As I am many years younger than Mr. James, I am beginning to hope that I may some day be as free from dogmatism as he is himself. In the same article Mr. James says I mentioned "limiting the number of births" as a specimen of the uses to which government could be put. Mr. James is mistaken, for I never suggested that government could be so used. I said that limiting the number of births, however accomplished, might suspend the Darwinian struggle for existence.

In discussing Anarchism the chief difficulty arises from the ambiguity of the word. The name "Anarchism" is used by different sects which have no more in common than two men who both happen to be called "John Smith." Confusion has been worse confounded by the fact that most Anarchists of every sect are utterly devoid of the gift of clearness. We must therefore begin with careful definition, if anything is to be accomplished.

In the first place it is evident that Anarchy may mean either that no force shall be used at all, or only that there shall be no organized government. We see the distinction among savages, most of whom have no government, but all of whom have plenty of force. Different schools have used the word "Anarchy" in these different senses, and accordingly there are non-coercive Anarchists and coercive Anarchists.

Again, there are some who look on the disuse of force as only an ultimate social ideal, and others who consider it practicable here and now. To the former class belong men like Frederick Engels, who believed that economic socialism would inevitably lead to the dying out of force; a view also held by William Morris, Edward Carpenter, and many other persons who consider Social Democracy the immediate need of the hour. But to call such people Anarchists would be to deprive the word of all practical utility. There are so many people who hope that moral force may at last entirely supplant physical force, and who agree in nothing else, that no purpose could be served by giving them a common name.

On the other hand persons like Jesus Christ and Tolstoi, who want to do away with force at once, are wisely described as Anarchists. They have an immediate practical policy, on which they are agreed. This policy may be expressed as follows:

"Force is no remedy for any evil, for it only begets more force. If you punish a man, he will go home and ill-treat his wife and children, and they in their turn will cause others to suffer. Force always generates force, and love generates love. As Tennyson says:

"Our echoes roll from soul to soul,
And grow for ever and for ever."

What, then, is any temporary gain derived from force, compared with the resulting evils? Force may save a few people from being blown up by dynamite by a careless neighbor, or it may save Chicago from being burnt down again for want of fire limits. It may compel a selfish man to endure some personal inconvenience, rather than spread cholera over a continent. But such things are trifles. Eschew force, and they will all be added unto you, for your example will soon convert the world, and then all men will do what is right without any force at all."

Such is the doctrine of non-coercive Anarchism. Now it is clear that this doctrine depends on one or other of two assumptions. It either assumes that men are gentle and non-coercive by heredity, and only await favorable circumstances to develop their latent virtues, or else it assumes that environment is so much stronger than heredity that good influences will work miracles in spite of bad heredity. To assert the latter proposition is to repudiate modern science, which inclines to the belief of Darwin "that education and environment produce only a small effect on the mind of anyone, and that most of our qualities are innate." (Life and Letters, I. page 22). If we regard Darwin's dictum as substantially correct, then we are left to consider the other alternative, that man may have inherited a nature which would readily incline him to become a peaceful member of a non-coercive society.

What, then, is the general type of character that we have inherited? To discover this by observation alone is almost impossible, but fortunately we can here use the deductive method with great effect. Darwin has proved that natural selection tends to eliminate all qualities which are useless, and to preserve those which are useful, in the struggle for existence. What, then, were the qualities our ancestors needed in their struggle for existence? During most of their history they were fighters, and when not fighting in the strict sense they were often struggling for the possession of females, or hunting, or doing something else that required force and outrage. Broadly speaking, it is fair to say that throughout near all the past history of our race the rule of force has prevailed, and that those who could not or would not use force had little chance of keeping alive, and still less of leaving offspring. As like begets like, we must therefore conclude that we ourselves are largely fighting and force-loving animals.

There is another side to it, however. Fighting was not the only thing needful in the past; care of offspring was also a great advantage in the struggle for existence. Good treatment of women promoted number of offspring. Loyalty to the tribe, and self-sacrifice for it, also helped it to survive. Thus there was a great demand for altruism within certain limits, as well as for egoism. This altruism we have also inherited, and thus we are a kind of composite of gentleness and brutality, of selfishness and self-sacrifice.

The difficulty of changing character by breeding has lately been made evident by Weismann's theory of heredity. He denies that qualities acquired during the life of the individual can be inherited by offspring. The early evoluticnists thought that a blacksmith would have more muscular children than if he had been a shoemaker; that a man by studying would propagate more intellectual children than if he had never read a book; that by cultivating virtue we could transmit it to our children. All this is now considered highly improbable, if not utterly exploded; and the prevailing opinion is that no man or woman can by taking thought add a single hairs-breadth to the mental, moral, or physical stature of his or her offspring. Weissmann also sweeps away the theory of the pre natal influence. We can only hand on what we have ourselves inherited. According to his doctrine there is only one possible way in which the heredity of the race can be improved, viz, by those who have a good pedigree leaving more children than those who had a bad one. This is what nature has accomplished in the past by natural selection, and what Moses Harman proposes to accomplish in the future by artificial selection.

Mr. James will now see where I stand. I believe we have all inherited a fighting and force-loving disposition, with a certain mixture of gentler qualities; and that it is a slow business to change human nature, either by education or breeding. I am therefore persuaded that the conquest of the world by turning the other cheek would take a long time, and prefer to pin my faith to the seven million adult males, nearly all trained soldiers, who now vote the ticket of International Social Democracy in Europe. We shall reach absolute liberty quicker by the low road of William Morris and Edward Carpenter than by the high road of Jesus and Tolstoi. I am confirmed in this view by the history of the early Christians, Quakers, Doukhobors, and other non-resisting sects of the last two thousand years, none of whom accomplished anything durable.

So much for non-coercive Anarchists. I need say little about the varieties that favor force, but do not favor its exercise by an executive elected by the whole population. I have so lately shown why I consider voluntary protective associations more dangerous than monopoly of force by all the people that I need not go over the ground again. I have more sympathy with the Anarchist Communists who would have all the people assemble together as in the Russian Mir, and transact their business without representatives. This system I approve, except for large cities; but I think it must be supplemented by some kind of centralization a little more binding than Bakounin's "free federation."

The great weakness of Anarchism is not that it is utterly false, but that it is a "one horse" theory. Devotion to one idea has always been a defect of the second order of minds. Milton and Schiller thought liberty was everything; but Shakespeare and Goethe saw that it was only one good thing among many others. As William Liebknecht said, "freedom is only a conventional phrase, which conceals all possible things." To a Tolstoi freedom means freedom to love and help men; to a tiger it means freedom to eat men. I have more faith in Capt Adams' trinity, "Liberty, Learning, Love;" but no one of these is the mother of the rest; they are all sisters, and must grow up side by side. I should hardly like to say that these three sisters have a mother, but they have an aunt called Economic equality, without whose aid they have little chance of achieving much.

I am glad that the men of my generation are broader and deeper than their libertarian fathers. In America, and still more in Europe, sectarian Anarchism is already an old man's movement. Among men over seventy Anarchism has its demigods, like Tolstoi, Ibsen, and Moses Harman. Over fifty it has its giants, like Kropotkin, Tucker, Walker, and James. Under fifty it has not a male supporter in the world who is fit to be mentioned in the same breath with Bernard Shaw, Sidney Webb, or G. D. Herron. In America it has many splendid women of the younger generation, but that is due to the belief, that it has some special connection with the emancipation of women, belief which history utterly confutes.

R. B. Kerr.

Special Offer.

GOOD UNTIL JUNE FIFTEENTH.

In order to extend Lucifer's work in general, and to help tide over the annual dull season in particular, we make for the next thirty days, the following unusual offers to old as well as new subscribers. To old subscribers credit will be given for one year from the date to which they are now paid—whether now paid ahead or in arrears.

1. For $2.30 we will send Lucifer one year and the large Family Medical Work entitled "A Physician in the House," by Dr. J. H. Greer of Chicago. 800 pages; 16 colored plates. With Lucifer, $2.30.

2. For $2 we will send Lucifer one year and any one of the bound volumes of Lucifer now on hand, namely, for the year 1899, 1900 and 1901. These volumes are substantially bound in cloth, usual price $1.50 with 25 cents additional for postage.

3. For one dollar we will send Lucifer one year and one copy of "Marriage in Free Society," by Edward Carpenter, price, 25 cents.

4. For $1 we will send Lucifer one year and one copy of "The Abolition of Marriage" by John Beverly Robinson, also other excellent essays including Isabel's Intention, by Mariette; The Sexes and Love in Freedom, by Oscar Rotter; Reminiscences of Berlin Heights, by A. Warren—price of all 25 cents.

4. The Prodigal Daughter, or the Price of Virtue, by Rachel Campbell; to which are added, Legal Wifehood, by Lucinda B. Chandler; Love's Gifts, by Olive Schreiner, and Will the Coming Woman Marry, by M. Harman—price of all, 25 cents. With Lucifer one year $1.

5. The Unwomanly Woman, by Lizzie M. Holmes, including also, Virgin Soil, by George Egerton; Normal Sexual Action by Ernest Winne, and That Great Fraud Yeept Society, by Moses Hull—price of all 25 cents. With Lucifer one year $1.

6. The Rights of Children, by R. B. Kerr; including also What are Women Here For, by Dr. E. B. Foote, Jr.; The New Martyrdom, by Lillian Harman, and The Will, from the French of Guy de Manpassant—price 25 cents. With Lucifer one year $1

7. For $1.25 we will send Lucifer one year and one bound copy of "Government Analyzed," by Col. J. R. Kelso. 219 pages. Bound in cloth, but binding slightly damaged. With Lucifer one year $1.25.

Lucifer, the Lightbearer

M. HARMAN, EDITOR AND PUBLISHER.

PUBLISHED EVERY WEEK AT 500 FULTON STREET, CHICAGO, ILL.

Terms: One year, $1; six months, 50 cents; three months, 25 cents.

Entered at the Chicago Postoffice as Second-Class Mail Matter.

Eastern Representative, E. C. Walker, 244 W. 143d street, New York.

Lucifer—Its Meaning and Purpose.

LUCIFER—The planet Venus; so called from its brightness.—Webster's Dictionary.

LUCIFEROUS—Giving Light; affording light or the means of discovery.—Same.

LUCIFIC—Producing Light.—Same.

LUCIFORM—Having the form of Light.—Same.

The name Lucifer means Light-Bringing or Light-Bearing, and the paper that has adopted this name stands for Light against Darkness—for Reason against Superstition—for Science against Tradition—for Investigation and Enlightenment against Credulity and Ignorance—for Liberty against Slavery—for Justice against Privilege.

By the Way.

In ordering a supply of our publications for sale, C. L. Govan, publisher of "Discontent," Home, Wash., remarks: "Notwithstanding persecutions we are growing, numbering now over one hundred people." We are glad to learn this, and hope the growth will continue. We are also glad to note that despite the temporary suspension of "Discontent" the friends of the group are helping them by ordering their literature.

—

Dr. Foote sends us the following interesting extract from a personal letter received by him: "Recently reading Mahaffy's 'Rambles in Greece' I was interested in his account of the monastery at Athos—that community of 6,000 or more males. Nothing female, not even a hen, is allowed. A curious example of sexual starvation; or better, perhaps, isolation. I can't quote the page—but you can easily find it if you look for it. He—Dr. Mahaffy—says that though everything is scrupulously clean and neat there is a peculiar gloom about the whole place; the men are haggard, tom-cats are silent, and the roosters crow in a faint voice. Only the little birds [they can't bar their females] are really alive." From which it would appear that the presence of women is necessary to stir men to activity and arouse their ambition. As both the male and the female element is necessary at the inception of life, so both are necessary to normal growth and fulfillment.

—

In renewing his subscription a friend in Iowa writes: "I was in Chicago one day about a week ago. I wanted to call on you and make your personal acquaintance but heard that you and your father were not feeling well so thought I would wait until in the city again."

We are always glad to have our subscribers call on us. Our place of business is in our home, two miles west of the business center of Chicago. The Fulton street electric cars stop in front of our house, corner Fulton street and St. John's Place. A station of the Lake street elevated is at Ashland avenue, one block south and one west of us. There is also a Lake street surface electric line. The north and south bound Paulina street surface electric cars pass in one block of our home and give transfers on Madison, Van Buren, Harrison, Twelfth, and nearly all other east and west bound lines. The Ogden avenue and Randolph street cars, also, are only two blocks away, and there are others near. If our friends who intend to visit Chicago will make a note of these directions they will find it easy to reach us from any part of the city. Remember, our "latch-string hangs out," always, for our friends.

—

It seems to me that the difficulty which Mr. Kerr finds in the discussion of Anarchism—that of the ambiguity of the word—is to be found in the discussion of many other theories, Socialism not excepted. For instance, Mr. Kerr advocates liberty of individual choice in what he defines as personal affairs, the sexual relations, food, drink, etc., for example. He would use force only in such matters as public improvements, fire limits, the quarantining of contagious-disease-infected persons, etc.

I could live quite comfortably, I think, under Mr. Kerr's Socialism. But unfortunately, the majority of Socialists, if we can correctly judge by the literature received at this office, hold that many of the questions which Mr. Kerr would leave to the individual, should, properly, be settled by the whole people. And it really seems to me that it can be logically demonstrated that the reproduction of the race affects the community at large quite as seriously as does the maintenance of the streets and the public parks. These remarks are made, not in defense of Anarchism—"You're another" is no defense,—but merely because it appears to me impossible to place Anarchism and Socialism in two, or even four, clearly defined classes. There are almost as many kinds of Anarchism and Socialism as there are individuals calling themselves by those names.

—

A short time ago I listened to a paper on the French Revolution by F. H. Monroe, at the Chicago Anthropological Society. Among other striking statements Mr. Monroe said that though the working people of France, before the Revolution, toiled long hours for a mere pittance, and many were obliged to subsist on boiled grass, they yet retained about a twelfth of what they produced. The American laborer of the present time, he said, retains about one fiftieth of what he produces. The life of the ante-Revolutionary French laborer, in spite of his distressing hardships and unsanitary surroundings averaged twenty-seven years. With all our gain in knowledge of hygiene, etc., and in ease of production the life of the American workingman averages only thirty-three years.

While listening to these statements my thoughts reverted to information once given me by the agent of an "old line" life insurance company. Among the people for whom he could not write policies of $1.000 and upward were bar-tenders, policemen, and day-laborers. On my expressing surprise at the ruling against laborers, he said that their prospects of continued employment, and therefore ability to pay premiums, were too uncertain; also nearly all lived in cramped quarters with unsanitary surroundings, and were unable to procure proper medical attendance when sick; therefore the insurance companies refused the risk. In itself, the occupation of these men is not extra hazardous, but the poor pay makes the risk too great for the insurance companies to assume. True, laborers can pay five or ten cents a week on a small policy just as they can buy coal by the basket. But they get the worst of the bargain, every time. The insurance companies are not to blame. It is a matter of business, not sentiment, with them, and it is their business to reduce their risks to a minimum. Our social system—therefore each laborer himself—is responsible.

—

When a child I heard of the terrible ravages made in families by hereditary consumption. A few years later I read that consumption was not really inherited—the heritage was a "tendency toward consumption caused by congenital weakness." Now the germ theory is displacing both theories of heredity. This is brought to mind by Mr. Kerr's remark on heredity. Certainly many families possess traits in common which have been acquired but recently by their ancestors. We see families, nearly all of whose members show a marked inclination toward music, literature, art, etc. It may be said that this is caused by early association. But take a very small matter—that of spelling correctly. In my experience in school and elsewhere I have observed that the ability to remember the letters constituting words was possessed by groups of the same families, while members of other families, though studying immeasurably harder, simply could not remember the form of the words.

For example, take a family the members of which practically never had to learn to spell. A glance or two at a new word was sufficient to fix it indelibly in the mind. Yet we have only a few generations to trace back before we come to ancestors, [Virginia Germans] who could neither read or write. But those ancestors possessed an insatiable desire for education. After they were married and while rearing a family of little ones they studied at night, after their day of hard toil was done, together by the light of the pine logs on the hearth, mastered the alphabet and the spelling book sufficiently to be able to read to each other and to the children, and soon could write, also. To me the theory is perfectly reasonable that their intense desire for the information which could be obtained from the printed page implanted in unborn generations a positive love for the characters with which they familiarized themselves so laboriously. But if they had merely said, "An education is a desirable possession, therefore we will study in order that our children may love books, the effect would probably have been far different. The desire which is so strong that it is a part of the nature of father or mother, or both, is, as I see it, the desire that is passed on to the child. Possibly it is not heredity. It may be only a tendency in that direction, or a germ which the child catches and which resembles the germ possessed by its parents—or the other way about, as the case may be.

Yesterday I spent a few hours in one of the rooms of the fourth grade of a Chicago school. The children were reviewing their work for the year. As each child brought its examination paper up to the teacher's desk it was permitted to take a newspaper to read while its fellow pupils were completing their tasks. One of the largest girls in the room brought her paper forward and was turning away without the newspaper.

"Don't you like to read?" asked the teacher, handing one to her.

"Yes'm," was the reply.

"What do you like to read?" A blank stare was the only response.

"What do you read at home?"

"Nothin'"—then, after a pause and apparently as an afterthought of self-justification, "I take music lessons."

Her brow was low and receding, nose flat, lips thick—and her face was nearly black. "O, only a nigger!" do I hear? Yes, but the desire for improvement in condition was manifest. Her clothes, though awkwardly made and ill-fitting were of good material and scrupulously clean. They with the words, "I take music lessons!" told of the desire of the mother to give her daughter "advantages"—her child should have just as good things as any one else, if she had to work her fingers to the bone! But it is highly improbable that the woman had endeavored to obtain an education for herself, for her own gratification and self-development. The education was to be bestowed upon the daughter. And so, though this dark-skinned child has equal opportunities with her fair-skinned fellow pupils, she has not, and nothing can give her, capacity equal to that possessed by the majority of them. Neither her ancestors nor herself had been inoculated with the bacilli of a desire for education for the pleasure to be attained through possession of knowledge. And there are too many white children in the same condition.

LILLIAN HARMAN.

Defense Fund.

For Lois Waisbrooker and Mattie D. Penhallow, Home, Wash. Amount previously reported, $105.28; P. G. P., Mass., $10; J. C., Ill., $2; M. B., Wash., $2; B. F. H., Oregon, $1; D. R., Ohio, $1; Wm. H., N. Y., $1; C. B. H., Kan., $1; E. D. B., N. J., 50 cents; A. A. C., Calif., 25 cents. Total to May 27, $124.03. OLIVER A. VERITY, Treas., Home, Washington.

—

Aunt Hanna—When I was here two years ago, Hulda was looking for a husband; she is married now.

Uncle George—Yes; she is still looking for him—that is to say a good deal of the time.—"Boston Transcript."

Ruminations.

The British and American governments are very philanthropic. They are eager to relieve the suffering in Martinique with such funds as are not required for the patriotic work of creating worse suffering in South Africa and the Philipoine Islands.

* * *

Circulars giving particulars of the Waisbrooker and Penhallow cases, which are to be tried in July, are on hand, and will be sent to any who can use them to advantage. The defence is still in great need of financial support. Send contributions to Oliver A. Verity, Home, Wash.

* * *

Some of our correspondents have expressed a doubt as to the manner in which they should address letters intended for residents of Home. It is sufficient to address to Home, Wash., although Pierce County may be added for greater security. All letters addressed to Home are promptly delivered at the Lake-bay postoffice, a mile and a-half from our community. The mail arrives three times a week; and we take turns in going after it.

* * *

The Typhoon or Tyconda now leaves Commercial Wharf, Tacoma, for Home, at 2:30 P. M. every day except Saturday and Sunday. It leaves Home for Tacoma at about 8 A. M., every day except Sunday and Monday. On Sunday, the boat leaves Tacoma at 8 A. M., arriving at Home about noon, and leaves Home for Tacoma at about 2:30 P. M. This schedule will prevail throughout the summer, and perhaps longer. Visitors are always welcome.

* * *

The average "radical novel" is pretty poor stuff, considered as literature. Its defects may be minimized, if not overlooked, by us who sympathize with its purpose, and honor the noble intention of its author. But for the great body of readers it simply does not exist. For this reason, we may feel all the more encouraged at the marked radical tendency in general fiction. The hack writers are nearly all conservative, the morbid sensationalists forming no exception. But the greater novelists show an increasing tendency to step outside the beaten track of thought. We may pass over Grant Allen's daring onslaughts on the stronghold of conventionalism, as well as such insignificant works as Richard Le Gallienne's "Romance of Zion Chapel." But when Thomas Hardy, generally acknowledged to be the leader in contemporary English fiction, defies Podsnappery with his splendid "Tess" and "Jude," it really means something. George Meredith, too, Hardy's only possible living equal or superior, has put some of his best work into "Lord Ormont and his Aminta." Among the newer writers, there are scores of ephemeral favorites, who are satisfied with a little claptrap popularity. One woman, however, displays such unmistakable signs of true genius, as to tower head and shoulders above the rest. With marvellous skill in narrative, unusual beauty in description, and extraordinary power of dogmatic characterization, she might have won unstinted praise from the whole critic tribe, by catering to the popular demands. Instead of this, she has chosen to write that which deserves admiration, rather than that which is likely to receive it. I do not hesitate to affirm that the literary reputation of Mrs. E. L. Voynich rests on an enduring foundation. I dare pronounce "The Gadfly" the greatest novel of the decade in which it appeared. Her later production, "Jack Raymond," while very different in theme, is equal in merit. Without the slightest affectation of propaganda, these novels rend the veil of pretence which hides the dead bones of conventionalism. They are profoundly true to human nature, appealing to the heart, as well as to the head. As works of literary art, they are flawless. Their tone is intensely radical, not so much by intention, as because perfect truthfulness could lead to no other result. This does not please the conventional critics, who are shocked at so emphatic a refusal to bend the knee to Baal. But it is worth the while of every radical who is interested in literary matters, to stimulate the circulation of these two novels.

JAMES F. MORTON, JR.

VARIOUS VOICES.

H. Bool, Ithaca, N. Y.:—I hope you can circulate many copies of "The Slavery of Our Times." It is the best book for every day folks' reading that I know of.

J. W. Van Deventer, Sterling, Colo.:—Enclosed find $1 for which send me that bold, brave book, Karezza. Have long wanted to read it. Every one with whom I have talked, who has read it, says it is a grand, good book.

B. D. Wilcox, Tacoma, Wash.:—I have just received a few copies of Lucifer. I cannot yet get a good idea of what it proposes to do, and how. Therefore please find enclosed $2.65 for subscription to Lucifer and pamphlets as named herein.

L. C., N. Y.:—You ask "What would you do?" What I did do, when my husband loved another woman, was to take her into my home and guard her health and reputation, until their mutual "love" was past. My only claim, in view of this, is exclusive ownership of my own body and soul, for the future.

Frank Harrison, "The Crown," Providence, R. I.:—Please note I am about to leave the New York "Magaziae of Mysteries." I have started for the Master, Our Lord and Savior, a new magazine—The Christian American Magazine. See enclosed printer's proof of front cover. My love be with you. In Christ Jesus. Your sincerely.

Mrs. G. L., Canton, Ohio:—The books reached me all right—both the packages by mail and express, and I want to thank you for your prompt attention to my request. I have read part of "Karezza" and like it very much. I think the sentiments expressed in it are grand. If only all people could and would live according to its teachings how much happier every one would be.

Leon Partridge, Milford, Mass.:—In reply to the "indelicate" question of "What would you do." If my sweetheart loves another as well as myself, or in other degree, that is in itself none of my adjective business. But if she tells me, it is my affair. In that case I would do all in my power to make matters pleasant for both. That of course,—If I love a woman shall I not seek her greater happiness?

M. Coffin, Longmont, Colo.:—I wish to take advantage of your Special Offer. For enclosed $1 credit me one year forward on Lucifer and send me No. 5 of your offer. I also enclose 45 cents for three packages of Lucifers, sent to these addresses one package each. Am sorry because of Mr. H.'s poor health. I commend you—Lillian—for late editorials, and Kate Austin for "Who are the Fallen?" K. A. is a trump.

F. J. B., Chicago:—Two days ago I received your sample copy of Lucifer for which I am much obliged to you. I found it very interesting reading matter from the first and send a dollar for one year's subscription with "The Prodigal Daughter." I am now beyond the age where sexual love is an item of importance to me, but my philosophy all through my life, and my wife's as long as she lived, substantially harmonized with Lucifer's.

A. A. C., Cleveland, Ohio:—Enclosed find 80 cents for forty back numbers of Lucifer, and pamphlets as named herein. The editor of "Nautilus," Elizabeth Towne, Holyoke, Mass., is a very progressive woman and might be interested in books on sex reform. Send her a copy of Lucifer with list. I will subscribe soon.

[We have exchanged with "The Nautilus" for three or four years, and have enjoyed reading its bright, interesting pages.]

Lora Carter, Minneapolis, Minn.:—To the question, "What would you do if your husband, wife or sweetheart loved another?" I would answer in the words of Victoria Woodhull, "The love that I cannot command is not mine." So if my husband loved another and I could not win him back and could not live without love (and very few can) I would win the love of some other man who came near my ideal of manhood, providing he was not loved by and didn't love another but I would never purchase my own happiness at the cost of that of any one else.

M. Grantham, M. D., Fredericksburg, Texas:—Through the kindness of a comrade I have been a reader of Lucifer for two or three years and am in full sympathy with what it is trying to do and is doing. I have read many of the books in the Lucifer list and trust soon to be able to read more of them. I am new in the liberal field and do not always fully comprehend the full meaning of many of the articles in Lucifer but I realize that every writer is trying to bring to the light some truth. I wish you would tell me the true objects of the American Press-Writers' Association. I think, as well as I understand it, I'd like to join it if I may.

W. T. B., Chicago:—Find enclosed currency to renew my subscription to Lucifer. While I do not agree with all you advocate, I do believe you are an earnest, honest seeker for truth, justice and liberty.

[If, when Mr. B. says he does not "agree with all you advocate" he means he does not agree with all the ideas advocated in Lucifer his position is similar to that of the publishers of this paper. Scarcely an issue goes to press which does not contain ideas from which we more or less seriously dissent. But we endeavor to give a hearing to as many varying views as possible, trusting the intelligence of our readers to "hear all sides, then decide." L. H.]

Harriet M. Closz, Webster City, Iowa:—For the enclosed $1 please send me "The British Barbarians." I think I can make another convert here by some judicious reading. Keep showing up the laws for women. It is a good way to bring home facts. I have been playing editor to our local paper here and have had several cases of legalized injustice to women in its columns.

[Mrs. Closz is the author of that valuable little work, "Woman and Her Relation to the Church; or Canon Law for Women," in which she throws a great deal of light on the position of woman in law, human and divine. The price of the pamphlet is 10 cents and it is for sale at this office.]

Albina L. Washburn, Ft. Collins, Colo.:—I have read "What One Woman Did" in No. 919, and I sympathize with "M;" but dare not offer advice as no one can judge for another to that extent, supposing the advice were taken. However, it does seem that the husband is not treating her with the same generosity shown by herself to him when he was similarly situated. Love seeks the happiness of its object. What if he were to invite the man she loves to dwell with them for awhile at least and endeavor to act the manly man as she did the womanly woman? I mean the best in each to be held persistently before the mind. Granted, few men may be capable of it—they love "too well." Better not to love (themselves) "too well."

'For friendship's flame burns ever the same
And burns but the brighter the longer it lasts.'

Evidently too much is thought of sex and not enough of character and justice.

Learn to laugh. A good laugh is better than medicine. Learn to tell a story. A well-told story is as welcome as a sunbeam in a sick room. Learn to keep your own troubles to yourself. The world is too busy to care for your ills and sorrows. Learn to do something for others. Even if you are a bedridden invalid, there is always something that you can do to make others happier, and that is the surest way to attain happiness for yourself.—Human Faculty.

TOLSTOI'S NEW WORK.

The Slavery of Our Times.

With Portrait of the Gifted Author, and Introduction by the Translator, Aylmer Maude.

CHAPTER TITLES,

I., Goods Porters Who Work Thirty-Seven Hours; II., Society's Indifference While Men Perish; III., Justification of the Existing Position of Sciences; IV., The Assertion of Economic Science that Rural Laborers Must Enter the Factory System; V., Why Learned Economists Assert what is False; VI., Bankruptcy of the Socialist Ideal; VII., Culture or Freedom? VIII., Slavery Exists Among Us! IX., What is Slavery? X., Laws Concerning Taxes, Land and Property; XI., Laws the Cause of Slavery; XII., The Essence of Legislation Is Organized Violence; XIII., What Are Governments? Is It Possible to Exist Without Governments? XIV., How Can Governments Be Abolished? XV., What Should Each Man Do? An Afterword.

Well printed on heavy paper. Substantially bound. 186 pages. Price, $1.50.

Address M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

CAPTAIN JINKS, HERO

BY ERNEST CROSBY.

It is a merciless satire on war and militarism in which the parallel between savagery and soldiery is unerringly drawn. It is a biting burlesque on the various forms of cheap hero-worship. It holds up to withering scorn every important feature of militarism.

Among the accompaniments and results of war exploited and satirized, are hazing at "West Point," the war whoops of the yellow journals, the savagery of war, the Schley-Sampson controversy, civilizing the heathen savage, looting in China, pension abuses, the capture of Aguinaldo, the Peace Conference, army mismanagement, osculatory attacks by gooney girls, etc.

With 25 Irresistible Drawings by Dan Beard. 12mo, Cloth. Handsome Covers, 100 pages. Price $1.10

Address M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

VICE: ITS FRIENDS AND ITS FOES

BY EDWIN C. WALKER.

CONTENTS:—Brotherhood of Man; The Recognition of Facts; Folly of 'For Men Only." Definition of Vice; Horrors of Prostitution; Abnormal Sexuality; Errors of Fathers, Mothers and Teachers; Persecution Does Not Reform; Prostitution and the Crusaders; The "Spolling of the Heathen;" What are the Effects of Raids and Crusades? The Economic Side of the Problem, Party Politics in Vice Crusading; In What Does Prostitution Consist? Some Causes of Prostitution; Two Kinds of Prostitution Compared; The Opponents of Divorce; "Purifying" the Tenements; Action for Advanced Women.

WITH APPENDIX:—The Wanderings of a Spirit; Our Fair Civilization. The Folly and Cruelty of It All. Price 15c.

Address M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

VACCINATION A CRIME.

With Comments on Other Sanitary Superstitions.

BY FELIX L. OSWALD, M. D.

"Vaccination spreads diseases; vaccination impairs the organic functions; vaccination encourages reliance on worthless remedies; vaccination spreads small-pox; compulsory vaccination furnishes dangerous legal precedents."

With illustrations of diseases frequently resulting from vaccination. 198 pages. Price 10 cents. For sale by M. Harman, 500 Fulton St. Chicago.

DO YOU EVER THINK

Of the fate of the Prodigal Daughter? The Prodigal Son is forgiven and received with rejoicing—why should different treatment be accorded to his sister? For a vivid, true picture of the conditions in homes and factories which produce thousands of so-called fallen women every year, read "The Prodigal Daughter; or, The Price of Virtue," by Rachel Campbell.

SPECIAL OFFER.

This valuable work sent free on receipt of twenty-five cents for a thirteen week's trial subscription to Lucifer the Light Bearer. M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton Street, Chicago, Ill.

Notice! I would be glad to hear from Liberals who would like to correspond with other Liberals. Address (with stamp.)
Snowville, Va. ELMINA DRAKE SLENKER.

921.

If these figures correspond with the number printed on the wrapper of your Lucifer, your subscription expires with this number.

If a copy of Lucifer fails to reach you, please order by number or date.

Lucifer will not be sent "by return mail" unless stamps for postage are enclosed with order.

To NEW SUBSCRIBERS: Your subscription is paid to No. If you have not ordered Lucifer, a friend has subscribed for you. If you do not wish to receive it, please notify us by card or through your postmaster. If you wish to become a regular subscriber you will confer a favor by renewing before the expiration of your trial subscription.

LOVE'S COMING OF AGE.

BY EDWARD CARPENTER.

This is a book with which few will wholly agree, but which nearly every one can read with profit and enjoyment. The subject is the relation of the sexes in the past, present and future, and it is treated with absolute frankness and fearlessness by a writer who unites a broad outlook, a strong grasp of his subject and a charming literary style. The following table of contents will indicate the line of thought followed by the author.

The Sex Passion;
Man, the Ungrown.
Woman, the Serf.
Woman in Freedom
Marriage: a Retrospect.
Marriage: a Forecast.
The Free Society.
Some remarks on the early star and sex worships.
Notes—On the Primitive Group Marriage; Jealousy; The Family; Preventive Checks to Population.

The book is printed on extra book paper and handsomely bound in cloth. Price, $1.

Address M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

WHITMAN'S IDEAL DEMOCRACY, AND OTHER WRITINGS.

BY HELENA BORN.

Comprising besides the title essay, Thoreau's Joy in Nature; Poets of Revolt; Shelley, Whitman, Carpenter; Whitman's Altruism; Individualism versus Organization; Ingenuities of Economic Argument; The Last Stand Against Democracy in Sex; Inequality in Divorce; Marriage Safeguards. With portrait of author and biographical introduction by Helen Tufts. 125 pages. Edition limited to 500 copies; each copy numbered. Fine paper, uncut pages, bound in boards, paper label. Price $1.

COLLEGE OF MEDICINE AND SURGERY,

CHICAGO, ILL.

Session begins September 25 and continues eight months. Four Years' Graded Course. Practical work required in Chemistry Physiology, Bacteriology and Microscopy. Co-Educational. Standard Requirement. For catalogue, address Secretary, 2'4 Ashland Boulevard, Chicago

For Rent: Large, light, furnished room. Inquire of Lillian Harman 500 Fulton, St. Chicago.

RADICAL LITERATURE.

For Sale by M. Harman, 500 Fulton St., Chicago.

A CHAMBERMAID'S DIARY. By Octave Mirbeau. Translated from the French by Benj. R. Tucker. 400 pages. Handsomely bound in cloth. $1.50.

ADVANCEMENT OF SCIENCE. Prof. John Tyndall's famous Inaugural Address before the British Association for the Advancement of Science, with the articles on Prayer which so stirred the religious world. Cloth, 50c; paper, 25c.

AGE OF REASON. Thomas Paine. Cloth, with steel plate portrait, 75c; paper 15c.

ANARCHISM: Its Philosophy and Ideal. Peter Kropotkin. 5c.

A PHYSICIAN IN THE HOUSE. A New Family Medical Work, by Dr. J. H. Greer. This book is up-to-date in every particular. It will save you hundreds of dollars in doctors' bills. It tells you how to cure yourself by simple and harmless home remedies. It recommends no poisonous or dangerous drugs. It teaches how to save health and life by safe methods. It teaches prevention—that it is better to know how to live and avoid disease than to take any medicine as a cure. It is not an advertisement and has no medicine to sell. It has hundreds of excellent recipes for the cure of the various diseases. It has 18 colored plates showing different parts of the human body. The chapter on Painless Midwifery is worth its weight in gold to women. The "Care of Children" is something every mother ought to read. It teaches the value of Air, Sunshine, and Water as medicines. It contains valuable information for the married. This book cannot fail to please you. If you are looking for health by the safest and easiest means, do not delay getting it. It has eight hundred pages, is neatly bound in cloth, with gold letters, and will be sent by mail or express, prepaid to any address, for $2.75.

A FLEA FOR THE NEW WOMAN. May L. Collins. With large new half-tone portrait. 10c.

A TALE OF THE STRASSBURG GEESE. B. B. Kerr. Together with The Strike of the Strassburg Geese (C. W. Coolridge), A Traveler's Tale (B. B. Kerr), The Cat's Story (Emile Zola) 5c.

AUTONOMY, SELF-LAW. A fragmentary dissertation on the right to non-invasive self-hood. 5c.

BALZAC'S SERAPHITA: The Mystery of Sex. Mary Hanford Ford. Cloth, $1.

BIBLE TEMPERANCE. E. C. Walker. Proving that Liquor Drinking is Commended, Defended and Enjoined by the Bible, and giving close reference to the chapters and verses. 10c.

BORNING BETTER BABIES—Through regulating reproduction by controlling conception. E. B. Foote, Jr., M. D. 25c.

CAUSES OF HARD TIMES, and the Money Question. Albert Chavannes. 5c.

CHICAGO CONFERENCE OF TRUSTS. Speeches, debates, etc.; 81 portraits of delegates, including Benj. R. Tucker, Laurence Gronlund, William Jennings Bryan, Samuel Gompers, Louis F. Post, and George Schilling. 628 pages. 50c.

CHILDREN OF THE ITALIAN POOR. Paola Lombroso. 5c.

DARWIN, THE. (A novel.) Elmina D. Slenker. 50c.

DAWN OF CIVILIZATION, The; or, England in the Nineteenth Century. J. C. Spence. 176 pages. 50c.

DAWN-THOUGHT ON THE RECONCILIATION. By J. Wm. Lloyd. An inspired treatise that, with insight and solution, touches all the questions of life, love, soul and society. A prose-poem, simple enough for a child to enjoy, deep enough to make a philosopher think. The largest creed, the most generous theory, the gladdest gospel. A book of life. A religion of growth and the overlook—freedom and optimism. Read it. Printed in old style antique type, rubricated with portrait of the author. In three editions, de luxe, plain and paper bound. Prices, $1.25, $1.00 and 50c.

DIGGING FOR RED-ROCK. Camp-meeting talks and sketches by Moses Harman. 5c.

DR. FOOTE'S SOCIAL SCIENCE SERIES OF DIME PAMPHLETS—Wedlock; Scientific Marriage; Heredity; A B C of Temperaments; Powell and his Critics; Physiological Marriage; Physical Improvement of Humanity; Causes of Disease, Insanity, and Premature Death; A Step Backward. Any of the above books sent by mail on receipt of price.

DYNAMIC THEORY OF LIFE AND MIND. An attempt to show that all organic beings are both constructed and operated by the dynamic agencies of their respective environments. By James H. Alexander. Over 400 illustrations, 37 chapters, 1,067 pages and a 3-column index of 11 pages. Cloth, $3.75.

EAST TENNESSEE SKETCHES. A and Cecile Chavannes. 50c.

ECONOMICS OF ANARCHY. A Study of the Industrial Type. Dyer D. Lum 15c.

EIGHT-HOUR MOVEMENT. John P. Altgeld, ex-Governor of Illinois. 5c.

EVOLUTION AND REVOLUTION. Elisee Reclus. 5c.

FALSE CLAIMS OF THE CHURCH. John E. Remsburg. Analyzing and confuting the claims made by churchmen that the Christian religion has promoted morality, learning, temperance, science, freedom, and showing how she has opposed progress. Paper, 10c.

FIELDS, FACTORIES, AND WORKSHOPS; or, Industry Combined with Agriculture and Brain Work with Manual Work. Peter Kropotkin. 280 pages. 40c. Postage, 5c.

FREE PRESS. Arguments in support of demurrer to the indictment of M. Tarman, E. C. Walker and Geo. Harman, under the Comstock law. G. C. Siemens and David Overmyer. 20c.

GIORDANO BRUNO. His Life, Teachings, and Martyrdom. Burned for heresy in Rome, Feb. 17, 1600. 5c.

GOD AND THE STATE. Bakounine. 25c.

GOVERNMENT ANALYZED. A remarkable work by a remarkable man, Col. John H. Ketler, the history of whose life reads more like romance than reality. This book is the last of a series—Deity Analyzed, Bible Analyzed, Universe Analyzed. By the author's death this work was left unfinished, but was completed by his wife, Etta Dunbar Keler. 519 pages; cloth. Price reduced from $1.50 to $1.

HILDA'S HOME. Rosa Graul. "An o'er true tale" of woman's wrongs and of one woman's struggles and final triumphs in her attempt to secure justice for herself and for her sisters. 426 pages. Cloth, $1; paper, 50c.

HUMAN RIGHTS. J. Madison Hook. 5c.

IMPORTANCE OF HONEST MONEY. A simple, scientific, invariable standard of price. James Adleman. 126 pages. Paper, 50c.

IN BRIGHTER CLIMES; or, Life in Scotoland. Albert Chavannes. 25c.

INFIDEL DEATH-BEDS. "Idle Tales of Dying Horrors." G. W. Foote. Brief biographical sketches of 87 Freethinkers, including Bruno, Buckle, Byron, Comte, Darwin, George Eliot, Gibbon, Goethe, Hugo, Harriet Martineau, Mill, Paine, Madame Roland, George Sand, Shelley, Volney, and Voltaire. 25c.

IN HELL AND THE WAY OUT. A plan of Social Democracy outlined. Henry E. Allen. 10c.

INSTITUTIONAL MARRIAGE. From the viewpoint of an exiled Moslem. M. Harman. 5c.

JOHN'S WAY. A domestic radical story. Elmina D. Slenker. 25c.

KAREZZA. Ethics of Marriage. A bold, brave book, teaching ideal marriage, rights of the unborn child, a designed and controlled maternity. Sample pages free. $1.

KORADINE. A story for young and old. Extra levant cloth. $1.

LIBERTY IN LITERATURE. Testimonial to Walt Whitman. "Let us put wreaths on the brows of the living." An address delivered in Philadelphia, Oct. 31, 1890, with portrait of Whitman. Containing also Col. Ingersoll's address at the funeral of Walt Whitman, Mar. 30, 1892. Cloth, 50c; paper, 25c.

LIBERTY. Political, Religious, Social, and Moral. A. F. Tindall. 5c.

LITTLE LESSONS FOR LITTLE FOLKS. Elmina D. Slenker. Boards, 40c.

LIZZIE MELTON. A story of a self-reliant girl. By Albert Chavannes. With portrait of author. 25c.

LUCIFER. Third Series, Vol. III. (1899). Cloth, $1.25. Postage, 25c.

MAGNETATION, and Its Relation to Health and Character. Albert Chavannes. 25c.

MARRIAGE. An address by Dr. Juliet H. Severance. 5c.

MARRIAGE IN FREE SOCIETY. Edward Carpenter. A dainty little gift book. 25c.

MEN, WOMEN AND CHANCE. William Platt. Containing two tales: The Ascent to the Heights, and Blind Men and Seeing. Well printed on heavy paper and artistically bound in cloth. Gilt top, rough edges. 75c.

MEN, WOMEN, AND GODS. Helen H. Gardener. With preface by Col. R. G. Ingersoll. Contents: Introduction by Col. Ingersoll. Men, Women, and Gods. Vicarious Atonement. Historical Facts and Theological Fictions. Appendix. Address to the Clergy and Others. Letter to Cleveland Congress of Freethinkers. The only authorized and correct edition. Large 12mo, heavy-toned paper. Portrait. This volume is by far the best writing this famous author ever did. It is very fine. Cloth, $1; paper, 50c.

MISSING LINK IN MODERN SPIRITUALISM, THE. A. Leah (Fox) Underhill. With portraits of the Fox Sisters and others. 471 pages. Cloth. Reduced to $1.

MORIBUND SOCIETY AND ANARCHY. Jean Grave. Cloth, 60c; paper, 25c.

MOTHERHOOD IN FREEDOM. M. Harman. 5c.

MUTUAL BANKING. A simple plan to abolish interest on money. William B. Greene. 10c.

NORA, A DOLL'S HOUSE, and GHOSTS. Ibsen. Cloth. 75c.

OUR WORSHIP OF PRIMITIVE SOCIAL GUESSES. E. C. Walker. Contents: Love and Law; The Moloch of the Monogamic Ideal; The Continuity of Race-Life, and Tyranny; Food and Sex Fallacies, a Criticism; When Men and Women Are and When They Are Not Varieties; The New Woman: What is she? What will she be? The State Hiding Behind Its Own Mistakes; Bishop Potter's Opinion of Divorce; Love: Its Attraction and Expression; Is She an Honest Girl? Lloyd, Platt, and the Pitiful Facts; Social Radicals and Parentage; Anthropology and Monogamy; Love and Trust Versus Fear; Reflections upon Reading William Platt's "Women, Love, and Life." 15c.

PERSONAL EXPERIENCES of Two American Anti-Vivisectionists in Various Countries. Philip G. Peabody. With an Appendix by Col. R. G. Ingersoll. Reduced from 25c to 15c.

PERSONAL RIGHTS AND SEXUAL WRONGS. Oswald Dawson. 25c.

PRIESTLY CELIBACY. Prof. A. L. Rawson. Together with The Incoherence of Transition (E. C. Walker), Motherhood in Freedom (Moses Harman), The Greatest Sin (an allegory, R. B. Kerr), and Jealousy, the Foe of Freedom (Oscar Rotter). 25c.

RELIGION AND RATIONALISM. The relation of each to human liberty. The religionist, fancying that he has the whole truth, is logically opposed to investigation, and he appeals to physical force to arrest the discovery of new truths. What Rationalism is, and how many believe themselves Freethinkers who are only unbelieving or disgruntled religionists. The necessity for separate organizations and a division of labor among reformers. The Secular Union. Important facts and arguments in a compact form. E. C. Walker. 5c.

RIGHTS OF MAN. Thomas Paine. Answer to Burke's attack upon the French revolution. A political treatise of great general value, as advocating liberty and democracy. Contains the fundamental principles of true republicanism. Cloth, 50c; paper, 25c.

RUBAIYAT (Quatrains) OF OMAR KHAYYAM. Edward FitzGerald's interpretation; with original introduction; special cover; latest version. Paper, 10c.

RULED BY THE TOMB. A discussion of free thought and free love. Orford Northcote. 10c.

SCIENCE IN STORY; or, Sammy Tubbs, the Boy Doctor, and Sponsle, the Troublesome Monkey. For young folks. Dr. E. B. Foote. Five volumes in "red line," presentation edition. $5. Five volumes, plainer binding, $2.50; all in one volume, $2.

SEXUAL PHYSIOLOGY FOR THE YOUNG. Being the fifth volume of "Science in Story." 250 pages; cloth bound; illustrated. 50c.

SONGS OF THE UNBLIND CUPID. J. Wm. Lloyd. Edition de luxe. Verses printed from Kelmscott type upon deckle edged hand made paper of cerulean tint. Initial letters, ornaments and borders are in red; initial letter and sketch upon the opening page are hand painted in water colors. Covers brown, with choice of silver or gold lettering. Very handsome gift book. 25c.

STUDIES IN SOCIOLOGY. In four parts: I., The Law of Happiness; II., The Law of Individual Control; III., The Law of Exchange; IV., The Law of Environment. Albert Chavannes. 25c.

TALKS ON NATURE. Important information for both sexes. Dr. J. H. Greer. 192 pages. Reduced from 50 to 25c.

THE ABOLITION OF MARRIAGE. John Beverly Robinson. Together with Isabel's Intention (Marlette), Reminiscences of Berlin Heights (A. Warren), and The Sexes and Love in Freedom (Oscar Rotter). 25c.

THE BAR SINISTER AND LICIT LOVE, including the first biennial proceedings of the Libertarian League, and a full account of the Lanchester case, with full-page half-tone pictures of Edith Lanchester, and Lillian Harman. Handsomely bound in green and gold covers. 307 pages. 50c.

THE BLUE LAWS OF CONNECTICUT. Taken from the Code of 1650 and the public records of the Colony of Connecticut previous to 1665. With an account of the persecution of Witches and Quakers in New England, and some extracts from the Blue Laws of Virginia. Copiously illustrated. 25c.

THE BRITISH BARBARIANS. Grant Allen, the greatest of the Hill-Top pioneers. Dedicated "to all who have heart enough, brain enough, and soul enough to understand it." Handsomely bound in cloth. 281 pages. $1.

THE WOMAN WHO DID. Grant Allen. A powerful story of a refined, educated and high-spirited woman who dared to defy the tyranny of church and state and ignore the institution of marriage. Handsomely bound in cloth. $1.

THE NEW HEDONISM. Grant Allen. The opening paragraph says: "The old ascetism said: 'Be virtuous and you will be happy.' The new hedonism says: 'Be happy and you will be virtuous.'" In another place the writer says: "In proportion as men have freed themselves from mediæval superstitions have they begun to perceive that the unclean and impure things are celibacy and asceticism; that the pure and beautiful and ennobling thing is the fit and worthy exercise of the reproductive function." Paper covers; 32 large pages; twelve copies, 25c. Single copy, 5c.

THE CHICAGO MARTYRS. The famous speeches of the eight condemned anarchists in Judge Gary's Court, and Altgeld's reasons for pardoning Fielden, Neebe and Schwab. 25c.

THE COMING WOMAN. Lillie D. White. 5c.

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM. Principles and platform of organized Freethought. 10c.

THE EVOLUTION OF MODESTY. Jonathan Mayo Crane. A consideration of the origin of clothes and the reasons why people wear clothing. Here are a few questions it answers: What is modesty? What is the cause of it? What is the use of it? What is the cause of the feeling of shame? Is nudity immodest? What is the cause of the notion that it is shameful to expose some parts of the body? Why do not all peoples agree as to what parts of the body should be concealed? 5c.

THE FOUNTAIN OF LIFE; or, The Threefold Power of Sex. Lois Waisbrooker. 10c.

THE FUTURE OF SECULARISM. When will the Cause of Justice triumph? 5c.

THE PRODIGAL DAUGHTER; or, The Price of Virtue. Rachel Campbell. Together with Legal Wifehood (Lucinda B. Chandler), Life's Gifts (Olive Schreiner), and Marriage—What It Was and Is; Will the Coming Woman Marry? 25c.

THE REVIVAL OF PURITANISM. E. C. Walker. 10c.

THE RIGHTS OF CHILDREN. R. B. Kerr. Together with What Are Women Here For? (E. B. Foote, Jr., M. D.), The New Martyrdom (Lillian Harman), and The Will, from the French of Guy de Maupassant. 25c.

THE SANCTITY OF MARRIAGE. As viewed from a moral and sanitary standpoint. A solemn protest against the present demoralizing management of that institution. Its effects upon offspring and its influence upon education. Price reduced from 25c to 10c.

THE SECRET INSTRUCTIONS OF THE JESUITS. A reprint from an edition published in 1761, quoted by the highest authorities as authentic. The work is redolent of Jesuit craft and is a plain index to the underhand working of that order against the welfare of individuals and society. 15c.

THE STATE: ITS HISTORIC ROLE. Prince Peter Kropotkin. 10c.

THE UNWOMANLY WOMAN. Lizzie M. Holmes. Together with That Great Fraud, Telepathy (Moses Hull), Virgin Soil (George Egerton), and Normal Sexual Action (Ernest Winne). 25c.

THE WORM TURNS. Revolutionary Poems. Voltairine de Cleyre. 10c.

THOMAS JEFFERSON. His Political, Social and Religious Philosophy. Gen. M. M. Trumbull. 5c.

TOKOLOGY. A book for every woman. By Alice B. Stockham, M. D. Illustrated. Tokology teaches possible painless pregnancy and parturition, giving full, plain directions for the care of a woman before and after confinement. The ailments of pregnancy can be prevented as well as the pains and dangers of childbirth avoided and women need not go down to death giving birth to children. English, German or Swedish. $2.50.

TRAVELS OF FAITH. By Capt. Robert C. Adams. His mental experience from superstition to rationalism. Cloth, 75c; paper, 25c.

VACCINATION A GIGANTIC CRIME. Samuel Darling. 15c.

VINDICATION OF THOMAS PAINE. Col. R. G. Ingersoll. Dealing with all the slanders brought against the name and fame of Paine. A little pamphlet that every admirer of Thomas Paine should have by him for reference. Paper, 15c.

VITAL FORCE. Magnetic Exchange and Magnetation. Albert Chavannes. 25c.

WHAT THE YOUNG NEED TO KNOW: a Primer of Sexual Rationalism. Edwin C. Walker. "Let us cease to be ashamed of what makes us men, of what makes us women, of what gives us the kisses of lovers and the encircling arms of babes." Paper covers; 42 large pages. 10c.

WHAT IS RELIGION? Ingersoll's last public address, delivered at the meeting of the Free Religious Association in Boston on June 1, 1899. To which is appended the poem, "Declaration of the Free," the last verse written by the great Freethinker. 5c.

WHEN LOVE IS LIBERTY AND NATURE LAW. John Badcock, Jr. 10c.

WHY THE UNDERTONE? An open letter to Judge Gary. Sarah E. Ames. 10c.

WOMAN, CHURCH, AND STATE. Matilda Joslyn Gage. This is Mrs. Gage's last and crowning work. Every woman ought to read it. Every liberal woman and man will want it. A burning protest against the tremendous wrong done woman by the church, which controlled the state. It ought to be widely read for the good it will do. Cloth, $1.50; paper, 75c.

WOMAN IN THE PAST, PRESENT AND FUTURE. Woman was the first exiled. The basis of all oppression is economic dependence on the oppressor. a slave of the slave. This work is August Bebel's masterpiece. 8vo, 370 pages. 25c.

Address M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

Price 2 Cents.

LUCIFER.

THE LIGHT-BEARER.

THIRD SERIES, VOL. VI., No. 23. CHICAGO, ILLINOIS, JUNE 19, E. M. 302. [C. E. 1902.] WHOLE No. 922

THE LESSON OF OUR MISTAKES.

Could we recall the bitter words that blight our yesterdays
And blot out all their influence from life's diverging ways,

Could we undo the errors and the wrong we may have done
Through weakness or through ignorance or passion's stress alone,

The memories that torture us would not be ours today
And peace would look into our eyes and fold her wings and stay.

But though the past companions us with these reproaches, need
Tomorrow and today be sown with such unholy seed?

Ah no. Though these reproaches speak our weakness and our shame,
Let them become the lash, the spur unto a noble aim.

—Carrie Kenfrew, in "Woman's Tribune."

Hammer Sparks.

Justice knows no compromise.

There is no life without liberty.

The red sun of discontent never sets.

A republic is another name for a robpublic.

The promises of capital are the kisses of Judas.

Love forgets great wrongs, hate remembers little ones.

Live to learn, but only that you may thus learn how to live.

What a spectacle when slaves lift their chains swearing they are free!

Samar will not hear the Declaration of Independence read this Fourth of July.

The sphere of woman is the sphere of humanity, not a narrow and restricted sphere.

Coronations come high, but Nero scents the time when the people must be given a spectacle.

Another judge, Kavanaugh, has condemned the verdict of a jury. Let us have done with jury trials.

Liberty is not a gift from the powerful to the weak, it is a right wrested from those who would enslave us.

The old adage has it "Think twice before you speak once." The new adage, for fools is, "Learn to think before you speak."

There is nothing like two busybodies and a little time to waste to spoil a reputation and darken the fairest of fames among men.

Some men would need a light to find the sun, and then they would lose it; others come to it at last after leagues and leagues of blackest night.

"Love your enemies," must have been addressed to the capitalists, who love the people, their enemies, for what they can get out of them.

A man who does not stand for free speech is not only a slave, but a fool, for in denying the right to others he is paving the way for others to deny it to him.

The anthracite miners were receiving about 80 cents per day, while the coal trust was putting the price of coal still higher; miners are mere machines; eh, Mr. Magnate?

Lovers of real liberty did not honor the Boers for the avowed object of their fine struggle against the English, the right to choose their masters, but for their unavowed object, an innate hatred of tyranny.

The two Washington women who are to be tried for trying to circulate the truth have now a practical opportunity to reflect upon the glorious privilege of being Americans. We are the freest of all peoples indeed!

Who tells the truth about this world would better prepare himself for the next without delay, for the more it is the truth and the more he tells it, the greater danger is he in of making a close friend of a hempen rope.

Let the Democrat and Republican barkers do their best, which is their very worst, to make the day night and the night day; the truth of the matter is that they teach that the strongest should rule in this world; that might is right.

Religion is a pact with a god to eternally praise him and tell him how great and grand he is, in return for the privilege of doing evil as much as you will and repenting of it at the last moment. The Fathers were most astute men and cunning.

The anti-anarchy bill now before the House provides that no anarchist shall be allowed to take out naturalization papers. This is the richest joke known resulting from the presumption and crass ignorance of those who make our laws. Naturalization for anarchists, indeed!

The meat trust was forced to arbitrate because the people of Chicago were plainly with the striking teamsters. Had the teamsters stood alone and without the people to speak for them, there would have been no arbitration. If the people only knew their power the meat trust would die.

The "Man on Horseback" is going to lay aside the cares of state for a brief period, so rumor has it, and undertake a bear hunt. It reminds us of the "broncho buster" who became an employer of large numbers of men and was a "man buster" for awhile, and then returned to his first love with the remark, "It isn't exciting enough; I want to twist something."

An agitation looking to the unification of divorce laws throughout the United States is under way, and soon we may expect something to happen. This is as it should be; morality ought not to vary in crossing state lines, and legislators should make up their minds as to what they will have to be moral and then change the statutes quickly and quietly. It would not do to let the people know how things have stood; they might begin thinking.

IRONICUS.

Platonic Love.

What is Platonic love? The question has often been asked and has received many inconsistent answers, most of them, evidently by persons who had not read Plato, or were determined to tell what they thought, not what he thought. Among such answers I should be disposed to include the alleged definition given by the last edition of the Standard Dictionary. If I try to tell what Platonic love is, my statement will possess at least these advantages, that I have read Plato; that I have read the two dialogues in which he principally treats of love (the Symposium and the Phædrus) quite recently; and that I will not read anything into Plato, but say only what I can prove by Plato.

The most fundamental and characteristic of Plato's doctrines is the divine character of reason. For while other philosophers use the same language vaguely, Plato alone is precise about it. Assuming, as he always does, not that the gods of his country are quite correctly reported by tradition, but that tradition is right in asserting the existence of a higher or divine nature, he argues, with great variety of illustration, that, for example, this divine nature is admitted to be wisdom. But by reason only, man becomes wise. Again the divine nature is immortal. But the truths revealed by pure reason, as, to use his favorite case, those of mathematics, are eternal; while all those particular things whence reason evolves those abstract ideas with which she is conversant are transitory. So too, the gods are creators of the universe; but it is by reason man becomes a creator. Thus, in all ways, reason appears that by which man becomes like God; it is the chief good; it is the life of the soul: and if we inquire after its opposite, that is easily found. The life of the flesh, with desires which bring only disappointment or satiety, is the chief evil of which man is capable, and by which he becomes like the brutes which perish. It might be, and often has been, inferred that Plato's conception of love must needs be ascetic—love without desire, love which is satisfied with the contemplation of material beauty, with possession of mental and spiritual beauty (conversation), and creation of beauty (art), is the right kind, and any other the wrong. But this is one of the errors into which people fall who have not read Plato. Plato was far too much of a Greek to be an ascetic. With admirable common-sense, he recognizes at once that the immediate effect of beauty is to excite desire. And though desire, not regulated by reason, ends only in misery, desire has a function which it is the business of reason to prescribe. As man, if he were destitute of bodily senses could never acquire, or regain (for according to Plato they are innate), those abstract ideas which reason disposes; so, if the flesh itself did not teach him that beauty is desirable, he would never rise to the ideal beauty and the ideal good. Now desire is evidently regulated by reason when it acts after the fashion of reason. But we remember reason tends to wisdom; therefore desire must be curbed when it tends to folly. Neither intemperance, nor insane possession with a single object, nor mischievous indulgence of any kind, but above all not violence and selfishness, can have any place in the Platonic idea of love.

> "Love surfeits not; lust like a glutton dies:
> Love is all truth; lust full of forged lies."

Again reason is creative. Desire, then, ought to result in something, of which the simplest commonest mode is propagation. But Plato was too much of a philosopher not to set other things above that; and he triumphantly asks whether the artist, the poet, the thinker, inspired by Love, which the world might call unfortunate, have not more beautiful and hopeful children than if they had married and quenched the divine fire in that sort of satisfaction which can only be ephemeral. Finally, reason is the immortal part of man. Desire, therefore, fulfils its highest and most rational function when it leads the soul from the beauty of individuals to the beauty of universal truth righteousness and the creative soul. All which may involve very severe mortification of desire; but does not at all exclude desire, —on the contrary, at every turn supposes it.

It will be seen that Plato was in no small measure the founder of Christianity. At the time of Jesus, such ideas as the sacramental character of sexual love; the immortality of the soul; the Beatific Vision of perfect truth and holiness, constituting the happiness of heaven; had long been widely diffused among the partially Hellenized peoples of the east, in philosophies which, though very often corrupt and degenerate, were essentially Platonic, because no such spiritualism as this, so familiar to Christians, can, as a whole, be traced further back than Plato.

One of the greatest and most common mistakes is to suppose that Platonic love is a peculiar kind, allowable between those who are not married, and different from what the ceremony of marriage sanctions. In this lies the whole point of Byron's apostrophe

> "Oh Plato, Plato! you have paved the way,
> With your confounded fantasies, to more
> Immoral conduct, through the fancied sway
> Your system gives o'er the controlless core
> Of human hearts, than the combined array
> Of poets and romancers. You're a bore,
> A charlatan, a coxcomb; and have been
> At best no better than a go-between."

But Plato is nothing of the sort, for he is perfectly candid. Plato was a professed varietist. Intrigues and adultery, as the world goes, he would certainly have condemned, for part of those manifestations of desire which are mischievous and foolish. But in his Republic, the philosophers, who are to be the dominant class, include both sexes, and have no such institution as marriage. It was like no calm reasoner as Plato not to see that the exclusive love professed by our Swedenborgians and affinity-hunters, is, if genuine and permanent, very rare; if real, but subject to change, a perfect specimen of that unbridled passion which he held so foolish; if permanent, but affected, then a fraud. It is on mere grounds of social utility and convenience, not for the good of the soul, that he sanctions marriage among the military and commercial, but not the philosophic order. Thus, in realization of Platonic love, there is simply no question of being married or not married. No philosopher, male or female, will indulge passion without discretion; all are equally free to indulge it at (mutual) discretion.

And, to clinch the nail, I may observe that Plato's ideal commonwealth is not a mere creation, like Aristophanes, Nephelococcygia, or Dean Swift's Laputa; but an abstraction from actually existing tendencies. The school to which Plato belonged had a very fair general notion of Induction. Their defect in this respect as compared with Bacon's disciples, is chiefly that they did not appreciate the possibilities of experiment. Plato saw that in the Greek cities, his native Athens especially, marriage was mostly a prudential arrangement. The philosophers, in fact, disdained it. Their associations were with women like Aspasia, of cultivated minds, and exempt from the restraints of ordinary society. And, notwithstanding great prejudice, it was men like Pericles and women like Aspasia who ruled. Plato's Republic is an idealized Athens.

I have by no means exhausted the subject, though I have tried to give some idea what Platonic love really means. Believers in "elective affinity" might get some new light by reading the original view of it given by Aristophanes, as reported by Plato, in the Symposium. Nor is the peculiar love of Grecian men by any means to be ignored, though it is a most difficult matter to treat or even to rightly understand in our age and country. No better advice can be given any one who finds this essay at all interesting, than to read Plato's Dialogues, of which excellent translations are in every city library; particularly the Symposium, the Phædrus, the Republic, and those relating to Socrates' last days (the Apology, the Crito, and the Phædo).

* * *

I think R. B. Kerr will find most of those points he makes in Lucifer 917, are met by my reply (918) to his article "Natural Law in the Social World" 914. The governmental argument is mainly a prophecy. "If we have no government, there will be the devil to pay"—and the answer is "careful (not biased and haphazard) application of observation and experiment, shows that the more government you have, the more devil." He has, however, in 917, some other arguments, new only by being sufficiently old. "All nations went through the age of voluntary associations, and all nations rushed into the arms of despotism to escape from voluntaryism." When was the age of voluntary association? Not within that of record. The clan (called in Ireland sept, in Greece gens, in Tartary horde, in ancient Rome sodales) does, indeed, appear to be everywhere the primitive type of association; and it may have begun as voluntary. But "the McDonalds and the Campbells, the Scotts and the Kerrs," were certainly not voluntary associations when we begin to know something about them. In the first article in which Mr. Kerr refers to these organizations, he states, what is unquestionably true, that secession from them would have been dealt with substantially as secession from our great and glorious Nation (with a big N.) was. They were simply little nations, whose little governments were sustained by the national feeling of patriotism, even after a "higher power" had stamped on them at Culloden, Glencoe, etc. It was just the same in Ireland. To this day, an O'Donnell can come "coshering" among the peasants of his sept, notwithstanding severe laws against this practice, of later date than the battle of the Boyne and the capitulation of Limerick. The Californian vigilance committees were easily shaken when they had served their purpose, not because the state and federal governments were ready to play Culloden and Glencoe with them—these governments cannot do that with southern vigilance committees, notwithstanding Appomatox—but because people in our time are getting used to voluntary association, and getting free from the superstition which makes it involuntary. And progress along that line is the measure of civilization. The more backward any people are, the more governed; because the stronger is their inclination both to govern when they can and to sustain a government when they cannot make one.

If Mr. Kerr will ask himself how Senator Clarke comes to own all that copper in the earth, he may begin to see that when no man is enabled by government to hold land out of use, all the evils of natural monopoly will cure themselves.

* * *

C. F. Hunt, when writing under the name of Zeno, taught me a lesson, for which I am obliged to him. The lesson was never to attempt answering an opponent who talks for the sake of talking. I am particularly unlikely to forget this time, because I do not think even those many readers of Lucifer who suppose bacteriology and anti-toxin to be anachronisms, instead of the very latest wrinkles, can read his reply to me without seeing that it contradicts itself.

* * *

While Congress, the New York legislature, etc., are in the business of anarchy-crushing, they will have to suppress a good deal of literature not hitherto reckoned Anarchistic. The moral of that song, "Jeannette and Jeannot"—

> "Let them who make the quarrels
> Be the only ones to fight"—

is just exactly what killed McKinley.

* * *

I have not the gift of putting an argument into a fable, as R. B. Kerr has. Neither has Ironicus. But I know something about history—not altogether of the distant past,—and will relate a chapter from the annals of Asses. As lately as 1884, there were asses (of the biped variety) in Montreal. I am indeed far from saying that the breed is extinct there yet. But in that year over three thousand died of small-pox. Two-thirds of them were young asses. A reasoner of Ironicus' type had been around persuading the old asses that small-pox had about died out of itself; that "pure water, pure food, sanitary living places, healthful habits, and general cleanliness, would render cures superfluous;" also that "it was a doubtful advantage to exchange one disease for another." To be sure they were also told (by the Encyclopedia Brittanica) that, before vaccination, the great majority of deaths from small-pox were among children, and now only a very small minority. But what of that? All asses agree that statistics are "notoriously unreliable." It is no longer a "sanitary habit" to talk anti-vaccination in Montreal. French asses have a well known use for lamp posts; and "progressive hygienists" are not quite sincere in thinking a sudden death preferable to a living one. An ass is "not especially gifted mentally," it is true. But he can learn something by experience. One who cannot do that, is a crank, not a plain improveable ass.

* * *

It is to be regretted the author of that funny paragraph in "Life" did not state where the community is in which the people were surprised at seeing a doctor come to settle among them, because no one was ever sick there. If I knew of such a place, even in the Philippine Islands, I would certainly go to it. But I fear it is the same community so many wind up by going to in the sloppy variety of socialistic novels. C. L. JAMES.

Sex and Sin.

Woman is the cause of three fourths of the crimes committed in America. So said Bishop Spalding, of Peoria, in a sermon a few weeks ago. This sermon has aroused a great deal of comment, criticism, and indignation. Bishop Spalding's statement is, however, a sign of progress. It has not been so many years since the leaders of religious thought attributed to woman all the crime and misery in the world, as when Tertullian exclaimed, "Woman, thou oughtest always to walk in mourning and rags, thine eyes filled with the tears of repentance, to make men forget thou hast been the destruction of the race!" Now that our responsibility has dwindled down to only three-fourths, we should be properly grateful. Among the many editorials on Bishop Spalding's speech, which I have read, the following from the Minneapolis "Tribune" seems to me one of the broadest and fairest:

"Bishop Spalding's impressions are evidently gained largely from the confessional and from the intimate observation of the details of family and social life permitted to a priest of his church. Physicians who, in a way, often serve as father confessors to the unfortunate, draw facts from their own experience which would lead to a similar conclusion. But in saying that women are the source of a large percentage of the crime we would not understand either the priest or the physician as saying that the women were culpably so. Eve may have had no intention of tempting Adam to sin. Manlike, he may have followed the lure of her beauty and her charm on his own responsibility, and resolved to tread the path of disobedience in her company, though it led to death.

"The philosophic statement of the broad truth would be that the sex motive is at the bottom of seventy-five per cent of the crime in the world. Next to alimentiveness, amativeness is the strongest instinct of human nature. The race first seeks the means of continuing the individual existence, and next the means of continuing the species. Woman is at once the tempted and the temptress. The lawless passions of man wreak themselves on her, and she in her weakness protects herself with subtlety, oftentimes with deception. The consequences of common sin are more fearful to her than to the man, and she is taught from her childhood to protect her virtue at the sacrifice, if necessary, of other noble qualities—or that failing to do so she is utterly lost. Hence the reckless abandon of impure women. The boy, on the other hand, is taught that truth, courage, honor are of more importance than bodily purity. As society is largely constituted, the man violates the law of purity lightly, but holds to his other standards of honor, while the woman who shares his sin is dragged to utter degradation. The man perhaps recovers his balance; finds his standing in society not impaired, and leads a useful and honorable life, as worldly honors go. Thus the contrast between the two classes of sinners becomes accentuated to the disadvantage of the woman and the advantage of the man.

"The scientist Lombroso accounts woman the immoral sex, because she has not the same standards of truth and honor and courage that men have. If she has not, it is the fault of her education and not of nature. Under existing standards she has not a fair chance in the world. But in spite of this a large percentage of the sex rise to moral heights of which men are incapable. Bishop Spalding's arraignment at first blush excites indignation; but when properly construed it is really more an arraignment of men and the false standards of education and morality, than of women as women. The fair sex may be the source of crime, through their attraction and fascination, without being themselves the responsible sinners. If the reader will keep this fact in view he (or she) will be able to appreciate the force of the bishop's observation without mentally accusing him of either false diagnosis or intentional slander."

Lucifer, the Lightbearer

M. HARMAN, EDITOR AND PUBLISHER.

PUBLISHED EVERY WEEK AT 500 FULTON STREET, CHICAGO, ILL.

Terms: One year, $1; six months, 50 cents; three months, 25 cents.

Entered at the Chicago Postoffice as Second-Class Mail Matter.

Eastern Representative, E. C. Walker, 244 W. 143d street, New York.

Lucifer—Its Meaning and Purpose.

LUCIFER—The planet Venus; so called from its brightness.—Webster's Dictionary.

LUCIFEROUS—Giving Light; affording light or the means of discovery.—Same.

LUCIFIC—Producing Light.—Same.

LUCIFORM—Having the form of Light.—Same.

The name Lucifer means Light-Bringing or Light-Bearing, and the paper that has adopted this name stands for Light against Darkness—for Reason against Superstition—for Science against Tradition—for Investigation and Enlightenment against Credulity and Ignorance—for Liberty against Slavery—for Justice against Privilege.

Current Comment.

Despite my recent resolve and promise to "be good" for the next few weeks, and to let others do the talking in Lucifer, I find the temptation to say a few words too strong to resist.

First, I want to add a little to my recent notice of Dr. Conger's book entitled, "Right Generation, the Key to the Kingdom of Heaven on Earth." I want to say, very briefly, that if any reader of Lucifer should infer, from what was said of it in No. 920, that I endorse without qualification the methods recommended by its author, my object would be much misunderstood. It is the general purpose or object of the book and the evident earnestness, sincerity and candor of the author, that I wished to commend, and not the methods, from some of which, such as state-regulation of marriage and reproduction, I most emphatically dissent.

Time was when I, too, advocated state supervision of the personal affairs of the individual citizen—for the reason that since society, or the collectivity, must care for its lunatics and its criminals it is but fair and right that it should be allowed to take cognizance of causes, and to prevent, as far as possible, the making of lunatics and criminals. Thus arguing I advocated state regulation of the manufacture and sale of intoxicants as beverages, believing the "drink habit" to be one of the chief causes of lunacy and of crime, and that the formation of this habit was mainly due to "free trade" in drinks that intoxicate.

The underlying fallacy of this line of reasoning, as I now see it, is the assumption that "the state" is a person; that organized society has rights and duties different from and superior to those of the individual units composing that society. In other words it is the old, old doctrine of the right of government of man by his fellow man, whether called divine right of kings and priests, or right of majorities to rule minorities, or of minorities (the best) to rule majorities—the worst, or less capable of governing themselves.

When once we admit the validity of this old-time doctrine of rulers and ruled the door is opened wide for the entrance of all the tyrannies, all the despotisms, all the outrages, ever perpetrated by the strong against the weak, whether of body or mind.

* * *

As I now see it, the only rational hope of real and permanent improvement and progress for the race is through the door opened by the trinity known as Liberty, Love, Wisdom, or through enlarging rather than contracting the domain of personal right, personal responsibility, and by elevating personal ideals through a broader, deeper, truer, more rational education of the young of both sexes.

BOOK REVIEWS.

Speaking of books I want to say to all who have sent us books and pamphlets for review, that it is mainly owing to lack of energy—physical and mental—that so little space has been given to this department of Lucifer's work. The field is a very inviting one—so many excellent additions are being constantly made to the accumulated mass of reform literature. For this time I can notice only one of many that invite the attention of all seekers of the better way and the higher aims of life, in the ever present here and now:

A New Catechism, by M. M. Mangasarian, lecturer of Independent Religious Society of Chicago. In the preface the author says:

"The old Catechisms which were imposed upon us in our youth—when our intelligence could not defend itself against them—no longer command our respect. They have become mildewed with neglect. The times in which they were conceived and composed are dead—quite dead! A New Catechism to express the the thoughts of men and women and children living in these new times is needed. This is a modest effort in that direction."

The method of teaching important truths by question and answer is, to many, a very attractive one, and as an exponent of the newer and more rational views in regard to theology, science and ethics I know of no attempt that more nearly fills the bill of requirements than does this small but very comprehensive volume of 188 pages. Having attended two of Mr. Mangasarian's lectures I find him second to none, as I think, of the many able and progressive public teachers in this great center of the world's modern thought. The price of the book is fifty cents. Address the Open Court Pub. Co., of this City or this office.

LUCIFER AND ANARCHISM.

"The great weakness of Anarchism is not that it is utterly false but that it is a 'one horse' theory. Devotion to one idea has always been a defect of the second order of minds. . . . I am glad that the men of my generation are broader and deeper than their libertarian fathers. In America, and still more in Europe, sectarian Anarchism is already an old man's movement. Among men over seventy Anarchism has its demigods, like Tolstoi, Ibsen, Moses Harman."—R. B. Kerr in No. 921.

Whether Friend Kerr uses the word "demigod" in a complimentary or a disparaging sense is a little difficult to determine from reading the above. Demigod means a "half god;" what the other half may be, whether beast or human, cannot be told by a study of history bearing upon the subject. And if instead of only demigods Tolstoi, Ibsen and Harman had been called gods it would still be an open question—considering the character given to all gods, ancient and modern, by their believers and worshipers—whether we should take the epithet as one of honor or of dishonor.

Emerson says, "when the half-gods go the gods arrive." Are we to infer from R. B. Kerr's application of the word that the three persons named belong to the older, narrower and shallower race of libertarians spoken of, and that when they are gone—as in the course of nature they soon will be—the real gods, "the broader, deeper libertarians," will take the place vacated by these three septuagenarians?

Few men, I fancy, in this age would not feel it a rare compliment to be placed third in a class in which Tolstoi and Ibsen are ranked first and second. But much as I may prize the supposed compliment I respectfully but firmly decline the honor, and would let it pass without further notice were it a personal question merely. But if Bro. Kerr, with his wonderful faculty of clear discrimination; with his rare ability to classify, assort, and "put things in the right boxes"—if Robert B. Kerr, with his dozen or more years acquaintance with Lucifer and its work, can so misunderstand the position of its editor as these and other quoted lines indicate, then certainly there is need for continual re-statement of the aims, the purposes, for the attainment of which we have so long been asking the co-operation of thinking minds everywhere.

Once more, then, let it be clearly understood that I do not object to the term Anarchism per se—of itself—but, with both hands and both feet I protest against being classed as a "one horse" Anarchist, a "one idea" Anarchist, as Mr. Kerr has done in his article, and as nearly every one else does when applying that term. While freely admitting that there was a time when I welcomed this label I must remind Bro. Kerr that it was before I learned the very important lesson that there are nearly as many kinds of Anarchists as there are people calling themselves by that name. Hence to submit to wearing the Anarchist collar involves the perpetual necessity of explaining just what I mean by Anarchism and what I do not mean.

* * *

It has been freely charged, by the way, that the name Lucifer is open to the same objection, and that there is perpetual necessity of explaining what we mean by the title, the cognomen, under which or by which we wish our paper and work to be known. A little reflection should convince any one that this charge is not true. Anarchism is a negation, rather than an affirmation. It means absence of rule, or of rulers, leaving it to be inferred what the Anarchist would substitute for such rule; that is, whether he would have autarchy—self-rule—or simply chaos "in first packages."

Lucifer, on the contrary, has a well-defined affirmative meaning. Its place in astronomic science is well-known to all people of culture. Only the grossly ignorant, or those led blindfold by religious bigots, believe that Lucifer means Satan, the second great character, if not the chief hero, in the Christian's theologic scheme. But even with this latter interpretation the name Lucifer is by no means one to be ashamed of. In proof of this statement, hear what a Christian clergyman, Reverend Thomas B. Gregory of this city, a leading space writer on the "Chicago American," has to say of the character of the orthodox Prince of Devils. Last week in Jackson Park, this city, a man committed suicide under circumstances that led to the conviction that the cause of the rash act was the reading of Marie Corelli's novel entitled "The Sorrows of Satan." Here is part of Rev. Gregory's comment upon this man's sad ending:

"I know nothing of Corelli's Satan, but I make bold to say that no man was ever induced to give up the battle by reading of Milton's Satan.

"Satan, as reported by Milton, had sorrows such as never fell to the lot of any other being, but he never showed the white feather.

"No human being was ever induced to commit suicide from reading of the character of Milton's Satan. Of that you may be certain, absolutely certain.

"It is a character to inspire rather than to depress; a character which fills one with resolution, and not despair; a character the study of which makes one want to live rather than die.

"Milton's Satan never contemplated suicide. Never! When the battle went the fiercest against him he simply gritted his teeth, knitted his brows and resolved the harder to win.

"Such is the character of Satan as Milton reports him—a character sublime in its self-reliance and hopefulness, in its versatility of resource, in its unconquerable courage.

"Get acquainted with Milton's Satan, young men, young women, and whatever 'blues' you may have will disappear like a puff of smoke in the wind, and you will find yourselves ready to do and to dare anything."

When Bro. Kerr puts Lucifer's editor in the category of "minds of the second order" such as "Milton and Schiller," who, as he says, "thought liberty was everything," I am forced to the conclusion that he has not been a very careful reader of what has appeared in our columns, and also in the pages of the Light-Bearer Library, and of Our New Humanity, during the last decade or two of years. If he had read these he would have known that whatever may be the teaching of Tolstoi, Ibsen and others, Harman marches under the triune banner of "Freedom, Love, Wisdom," which trinity is substantially the same as that of Capt. R. C. Adams, namely, "Liberty, Learning, Love," which trinity receives the warm endorsement of Friend Kerr.

HEREDITY AND ARTIFICIAL SELECTION.

When we are told by our British Columbian correspondent that "Weissmann sweeps away the theory of prenatal influence," adding that "we can only hand on what we have ourselves inherited," I am forcibly reminded of the Irishman who, finding his new shoes two or three sizes too small for his feet, wisely concluded that he "would have to wear them a few days before he could get them on!" According to Kerr and Weissmann it would be forever impossible to improve mankind by introducing new racial traits, since every such improvement must be old before it can be introduced!

In conclusion for this time, I must enter a mild protest, also, against the charge that I would supersede "natural selection" by substituting "artificial selection." I recognize that all selection must be natural, since nature includes all that there is, and that there ever can be, but I would supplement what we call the blind or unconscious natural attractions by intelligently conscious selection. My doctrine in regard to heredity and prenatal influence is substantially the same as that of Darwin, Stinson Jarvis and others who teach that the "ascent of life is the ascent of ideals." That the desire, the imaged features or quality in the mind of the parent, especially of the mother, becomes the incarnated feature or trait in the next generation.

M. HARMAN.

Ruminations.

M. Abbott Brigham, in writing of the Craddock case, in the "Boston Traveler," uses the following language:

"I have but little sympathy with a certain class of so-called reformers who persist in trying to inject the essence of decency into words that by common use have become vulgar—relegated to the bar room and brothel—obscene. The discussion of all questions, of whatsoever kind, in proper language, is right and necessary."

While Mr. Brigham rightly protests against the imprisonment of Ida C. Craddock, he does so on what I consider to be wrong grounds. The consistent defender of free speech has no right to establish arbitrary standards of propriety, and to consent to the persecution of those who fail to conform to his view of what is "proper." The "so-called reformers" who have shared the conviction of Ezra Heywood that the habitual use of foreign phrases and circumlocutions in connection with sex places a barrier in the way of clean and natural thinking, include many of the most earnest and intelligent workers in the paths of sex reform. And I quite agree with them. Every concession to prudery is a confession of lingering belief that there is "obscenity" in the thought of sex. A word does not become vulgar, simply from being used by vulgar people. Nobody thinks of eliminating the words "drink," "whiskey," "cards," "dance," and "smoke," from polite usage, because they are heard with great frequency in "the bar-room and brothel." If there is just one plain English word to express an idea, it is ridiculous to avoid its use, merely because it is frequently on the lips of those who take a perverted view of the matter in question. Nor is it done in any department, save that of sex, although degraded persons hold low and disgusting ideas on many other subjects. This has nothing to do with slang, which is the substitution of a corrupted phrase or unnecessary neologism for clear and straightforward language.

To me, the famous "Mother letter" in "The Word" was as fit for publication as anything ever written on the sex question. And I have found among those "so-called reformers," who believe in writing or speaking of sex matters as simply and plainly as of matters of dress or digestion, fully as much genuine refinement and as high sex ideals as among any other persons whatever. Even were the fact otherwise, there is no essential criminality in poor taste, and we shall never purify the minds of individuals by a mere revision of their vocabulary.

* * *

The date of the Waisbrooker and Penhallow trials is not yet certain; but it will be during the month of July. There is but little danger of conviction in the Penhallow case, which is one of the most dishonest examples of petty persecution on record, and which was mainly intended as a pretext for stealing our post-office. Nor is it at all likely that Lois Waisbrooker can be convicted in a fair trial. But both cases will be sharply contested; and the help of all friends of liberty will be necessary to defeat the Comstock plotters. The defence fund still falls far short of what is needed. Do not forget that Oliver A. Verity, Home, Wash., is treasurer of the defence fund, and that delays are dangerous.

* * *

Now that the Free Speech League is fairly launched, it should receive the immediate and energetic support of every reader of Lucifer. The least that can be done is to become a member at once. The membership ought to run up into the hundreds, during the next few weeks. This is no time for idleness. No other issue can compare in importance with that of securing freedom of expression. All who do not wish to see the United States completely Russianized are called upon to act without delay. It is too late for indifference. The enemies of free speech are well organized, and allow nothing to come between them and their object. If the professed friends of liberty are sluggish and inactive, we may as well abandon the hope of human progress until many evil years have passed over the race. The Free Speech League offers an opportunity to put our efforts where they will do the most good. It should claim the adherence of every individual who wishes well to his country or to humanity.

* * *

As I am preparing a work on Comstockism, I should be pleased to receive any books, pamphlets, circulars, newspaper clippings or other printed matter or written information bearing on the subject, which any reader of Lucifer may be able to spare.

JAMES F. MORTON, JR.

Defense Fund.

For Lois Waisbrooker and Mattie D. Penhallow, Home, Wash. Amount previously reported, $124.03; E. W., Ohio, $5; L. L. L., Mich., $1; M. G., Mass., $1; R. S., Ills., $1; J. C. B., Ills., 50 cents; Wm E. F., 25 cents. Total to June 3, $132.78.

OLIVER A. VERITY, Treas., Home, Washington.

The Free Speech League will give a dinner to Ida C. Craddock on her release from Blackwell's Island, to which prison she was sent for circulating her books. We have not been informed as to the date, but it will probably be some time in the week ending June 21. Our readers residing in New York and vicinity who desire to attend, should write to E. C. Walker, 243 W. 143 St., for particulars.

The National Press-Writers Association now has an organ of its own, "The Boston Press Writer," edited by A. C. Armstrong, 17 Leroy St., Dorchester, Mass. We wish it success. But why a local name for the mouthpiece of a national organization?

VARIOUS VOICES.

Martin Nortvedt, Laurium, Mich.:—For the enclosed 25 cents please send me one dozen copies of "Facts Worth Knowing." I am glad that the editor is improving, and hope that he will continue to improve and will be with us for many years to come.

W. R. J., Hanover, Kansas:—For the enclosed $1 please let Lucifer pay me weekly visits for another year and send me the "Unwomanly Woman," etc. My subscription expired last week. I enjoy Lucifer very much and cannot afford to miss a number.

Elizabeth Breese, Talent, Ore.:—I send you $1 for good old Lucifer and your Special Offer No. 4. I have read all those pamphlets, but I need them to help show the light to my friends. I hope Father Moses is better. I wish he could take a trip to Oregon. I would give him a comfortable home while here.

W. H. A., Carlisle, Pa.:—I should like very much to secure a copy of "A Cityless and Countryless World" by H. Olerich, and recently advertised for sale by you. If you no longer have it in stock, any assistance you may be able to give me in tracing a copy will be greatly appreciated.

[In reply to this and many similar requests, we will say that the author has his stock of this book stored at Hawarden, Iowa, his old home, and is away from that place and seems unable to have any one else attend to shipping them. So we must console ourselves with the thought—as did the Irishman whose tin tea-kettle was at the bottom of the sea—that they're safe, and we know where they are, but we can't get at them!]

Leroy Cumming, San Diego, Cal.:—Find enclosed money order for $1.50. Please credit me with $1 on subscription to Lucifer and send me "The Blue Laws of Connecticut" and "Personal Rights and Sexual Wrongs." There are many books in your list that I want and intend to get as my means will allow. The suggestion is advanced for consideration that if the eastern climate is too rigorous for the editor's health, he could find in Southern California a sunny refuge from which to issue Lucifer, with several friends to welcome him and the co-editor on arrival here.

Lucifer is like the morning star shining into the fog-bank of ignorance. And the worst feature of the situation is the mass of wilful ignorance. The majority refuses even to investigate a proposition for their betterment. Nine women out of ten would gladly scald you with hot dish water as a punishment for your "immorality" in advocating their freedom. To mingle with such dunderpates is enough to make a cynic of one. Whoever maintains that majority rule is the best form of social arrangement must be content to wander forever with the long-eared thistle-eaters.

Is Benj. Tucker publishing a paper at present? If so, will you please give me his address?

Can you furnish me with an English translation of John Most's "Die Gottespest?" If so, at what price?

[Mr. Tucker is not publishing "Liberty," at present; but I do not understand that he has definitely abandoned its publication. His address is Box 1312 New York.

If "Die Gottespest" is published in English we are not aware of the fact.]

H. C. Roberts, Bennington, Kansas:—Enclosed find $1 to extend my subscription to Lucifer another year. I like the style in which Lucifer is conducted, in that both sides have an impartial hearing, for in this way only can the good and the bad of a question be brought out.

Ever since Kate Austin wrote her finely sympathetic, beautiful and characteristically womanly article, "Who Are the Fallen?" I have desired to thank her for her bold and progressive attitude on this important question. And I am convinced that if all independent and right thinking people would join in her just and humane demands it would greatly ameliorate the condition of a large class of our sisters who are simply forced into their unhappy position by our false and very "Christian" society. I am aware that an erroneous idea is prevalent that the so-called fallen women are inherently vile and unspeakably depraved and that they do not desire reformation but desire simply to be let alone, while the fact is they are in the relentless grasp of social environment from which they can no more release themselves than can the victims of the governmental institution of Blackwell's Island, the hirelings of which institution have so recently outraged the personal liberties of one of the fairest, most loving and lovable women amongst all the millions of beautiful American womanhood. That very mild-mannered and docile policeman of whom Voltairine de Cleyre speaks in her rejoinder to Kate Austin, was, if I may be allowed the use of the vernacular, simply "outo his job." The policemen know full well that if justice prevailed their sinecure positions, would disappear in the twinkling of an eye. Hence it is necessary for the police to protect and carefully foster all the evils and vices which the dear people are so diligently taught makes government so necessary to their well-being.

Husband—How did you suspect that I had been drinking?
Wife—By your polite manner.—"Detroit Free Press."

TOLSTOI'S NEW WORK.

The Slavery of Our Times.

With Portrait of the Gifted Author, and Introduction by the Translator, Aylmer Maude.

CHAPTER TITLES,

I., Goods Porters Who Work Thirty-seven Hours; II., Society's Indifference While Men Perish; III., Justification of the Existing Position of Sciences; IV., The Assertion of Economic Science that Rural Laborers Must Enter the Factory System; V., Why Learned Economists Assert what is False; VI., Bankruptcy of the Socialist Ideal; VII., Culture or Freedom? VIII., Slavery Exists Among Us; IX., What is Slavery? X., Laws Concerning Taxes, Land and Property; XI., Laws the Cause of Slavery; XII., The Essence of Legislation Is Organized Violence; XIII., What Are Governments? Is It Possible to Exist Without Governments? XIV., How Can Governments Be Abolished? XV., What Should Each Man Do? An Afterword.

Well printed on heavy paper. Substantially bound. 186 pages. Price, $1.50.

Address M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

CAPTAIN JINKS, HERO

BY ERNEST CROSBY.

It is a merciless satire on war and militarism in which the parallel between savagery and soldiery is unsparingly drawn. It is a biting burlesque on the various forms of cheap hero-worship. It holds up to withering scorn every important feature of militarism.

Among the accompaniments and results of war exploited and satirized, are hazing at "East Point," the war whoops of the yellow journals, the savagery of war, the Schley-Sampson controversy, civilizing the heathen savage, looting in China, pension abuses, the capture of Aguinaldo, the Peace-Conference, army mismanagement, osculatory attacks by goosey girls, etc.

With 25 Irresistible Drawings by Dan Beard. 12mo, Cloth, Handsome Covers, 400 pages. Price $1.10

Address M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

VICE: ITS FRIENDS AND ITS FOES

BY EDWIN C. WALKER.

CONTENTS:—Brotherhood of Man; The Recognition of Facts; Folly of "For Men Only," Definition of Vice; Horrors of Prostitution; Abnormal Sexuality; Errors of Fathers, Mothers and Teachers; Persecution Does Not Reform; Prostitution and the Crusaders; The "Spoiling of the Heathen;" What are the Effects of Raids and Crusades? The Economic Side of the Problem. Party Politics in Vice Crusading; Is What Does Prostitution Consist? Some Causes of Prostitution; Two Kinds of Prostitution Compared; The Opponents of Divorce; "Purifying" the Tenements; Action for Advanced Women.

WITH APPENDIX:—The Wanderings of a Spirit; Our Fair Civilization. The Folly and Cruelty of it All. Price 15c.

Address M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

VACCINATION A CRIME.

With Comments on Other Sanitary Superstitions.

BY FELIX L. OSWALD, M. D.

"Vaccination spreads diseases; vaccination impairs the organic functions; vaccination encourages reliance on worthless remedies; vaccination spreads small-pox; compulsory vaccination furnishes dangerous legal precedents."

With illustrations of diseases frequently resulting from vaccination. 196 pages. Price 10 cents. For sale by M. Harman, 500 Fulton St. Chicago.

DO YOU EVER THINK

Of the fate of the Prodigal Daughter? The Prodigal Son is forgiven and received with rejoicing—why should different treatment be accorded to his sister? For a vivid, true picture of the conditions in homes and factories which produce thousands of so-called fallen women every year, read "The Prodigal Daughter; or, The Price of Virtue," by Rachel Campbell.

SPECIAL OFFER.

This valuable work sent free on receipt of twenty-five cents for a thirteen week's trial subscription to Lucifer the Light Bearer. M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton Street, Chicago, Ill.

Notice! I would be glad to hear from Liberals who would like to correspond with other Liberals. Address (with stamp)
Snowville, Va. ELMINA DRAKE SLENKER.

922.

If these figures correspond with the number printed on the wrapper of your Lucifer, your subscription expires with this number.

If a copy of Lucifer fails to reach you, please order by number or date.

Lucifer will not be sent "by return mail" unless stamps for postage are enclosed with order.

TO NEW SUBSCRIBERS: Your subscription is paid to No. If you have not ordered Lucifer, a friend has subscribed for you. If you do not wish to receive it, please notify us by card or through your postmaster. If you wish to become a regular subscriber you will confer a favor by renewing before the expiration of your trial subscription.

LOVE'S COMING OF AGE.

BY EDWARD CARPENTER.

This is a book with which few will wholly agree, but which nearly every one can read with profit and enjoyment. The subject is the relation of the sexes in the past, present and future, and it is treated with absolute frankness and fearlessness by a writer who unites a broad outlook, a strong grasp of his subject and a charming literary style. The following table of contents will indicate the line of thought followed by the author.

The Sex Passion.
Man, the Ungovern.
Woman, the Serf.
Woman in Freedom
Marriage: a Retrospect.
Marriage: a Forecast.
The Free Society.
Some remarks on the early star and sex worships.
Notes—On the Primitive Group Marriage; Jealousy; The Family; Preventive Checks to Population.

The book is printed on extra book paper and handsomely bound in cloth. Price, $1.

Address M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

WHITMAN'S IDEAL DEMOCRACY, AND OTHER WRITINGS.

BY HELENA BORN.

Comprising besides the title essay, Thoreau's Joy in Nature; Poets of Revolt; Shelley, Whitman, Carpenter; Whitman's Altruism; Individualism versus Organization; Insecurities of Economic Argument; The Last Stand Against Democracy in Sex; Inequality in Divorce; Marriage Safeguards. With portrait of author and biographical introduction by Helen Tufts. 125 pages. Edition limited to 500 copies; each copy numbered. Fine paper, uncut pages, bound in boards, paper label. Price $1.

COLLEGE OF MEDICINE AND SURGERY,

CHICAGO, ILL.

Session begins September 25 and continues eight months. Four Years' Graded Course. Practical work required in Chemistry, Physiology, Bacteriology and Microscopy. Co-Educational. Standard Requirement. For catalogue, address Secretary, 2 4 Ashland Boulevard, Chicago.

For Rent: Large, light, furnished room. Inquire of Lillian Harman 500 Fulton, St. Chicago.

RADICAL LITERATURE.

For Sale by M. Harman, 500 Fulton St., Chicago.

A CHAMBERMAID'S DIARY. By Octave Mirbeau. Translated from the French by Benj. R. Tucker. 400 pages. Handsomely bound in cloth. $1.50.

ADVANCEMENT OF SCIENCE. Prof. John Tyndall's famous Inaugural Address before the British Association for the Advancement of Science, with the articles on Prayer which so stirred the religious world. Cloth, 50c; paper, 25c.

AGE OF REASON. Thomas Paine. Cloth, with steel plate portrait, 50c; paper 15c.

ANARCHISM; Its Philosophy and Ideal. Peter Kropotkin. 5c.

A PHYSICIAN IN THE HOUSE. A New Family Medical Work, by Dr. J. H. Greer. This book is up-to-date in every particular. It will save you hundreds of dollars in doctors' bills. It tells you how to cure yourself by simple and harmless home remedies. It recommends no poisonous or dangerous drugs. It teaches how to save health and life by safe methods. It teaches prevention—that it is better to know how to live and avoid disease than to take any medicine as a cure. It is not an advertisement and has no medicine to sell. It has hundreds of excellent recipes for the cure of the various diseases. It has 16 colored plates showing different parts of the human body. The chapter on Painless Midwifery is worth its weight in gold to women. The "Care of Children" is something every mother ought to read. It teaches the value of Air, Sunshine, and Water as medicines. It contains valuable information for the married. This book cannot fail to please you. If you are looking for health by the safest and easiest means, do not delay getting it. It has eight hundred pages, is neatly bound in cloth, with gold letters, and will be sent by mail or express, prepaid to any address, for $1.75.

A PLEA FOR THE NEW WOMAN. May L. Collins. With large new half-tone portrait. 10c.

A TALE OF THE STRASSBURG GEESE. R. B. Kerr. Together with The Strike of the Strassburg Geese (C. W. Coolridge), A Traveler's Tale (R. B. Kerr), The Cat's Story (Emile Zola) 5c.

AUTONOMY, SELF-LAW. A fragmentary dissertation on the right to non-invasive self-hood. 5c.

BALZAC'S SERAPHITA: The Mystery of Sex. Mary Hanford Ford. Cloth. $1.

BIBLE TEMPERANCE. R. C. Walker. Proving that Liquor Drinking is Condemned, Defended and Enjoined by the Bible, and giving close reference to the chapters and verses. 10c.

BORNING BETTER BABIES—Through regulating reproduction by controlling conception. E. B. Foote, Jr., M. D. 25c.

CAUSES OF HARD TIMES, and the Money Question. Albert Chavannes. 5c.

CHICAGO CONFERENCE OF TRUSTS. Speeches, debates, etc.; 31 portraits of delegates, including Benj. R. Tucker, Laurence Gronlund, William Jennings Bryan, Samuel Gompers, Louis F. Post, and George Schilling. 625 pages. 50c.

CHILDREN OF THE ITALIAN POOR. Paola Lombroso. 25c.

DARWIN, THE. (A novel.) Elmina D. Slenker. 25c.

DAWN OF CIVILIZATION, The; or, England in the Nineteenth Century. J. C. Spence. 176 pages. 25c.

DAWN-THOUGHT ON THE RECONCILIATION. By J. Wm. Lloyd. An inspired treatise that, with insight and solution, touches all the questions of life, love, soul and society. A prose-poem, simple enough for a child to enjoy, deep enough to make a philosopher think. The largest creed, the most generous theory, the gladdest gospel. A book of life. A religion of growth and the overlook—freedom and optimism. Read it. Printed in old style antique type, rubricated with portrait of the author. In three editions, de luxe, cloth and paper bound. Prices, $1.25, $1.00 and 50c.

DIGGING FOR BED-ROCK. Camp-meeting talks and sketches by Moses Harman. 5c.

DR. FOOTE'S SOCIAL SCIENCE SERIES OF DIME PAMPHLETS—Wedlock; Scientific Marriage; Heredity; A B C of Temperaments; Powell and his Critics; Physiological Marriage; Physical Improvement of Humanity; Causes of Disease, Insanity, and Premature Death; A Step Backward. Any of the above books sent by mail on receipt of price.

DYNAMIC THEORY OF LIFE AND MIND. An attempt to show that all organic beings are both constructed and operated by the dynamic agencies of their respective environments. By James H. Alexander. Over 400 illustrations, 37 chapters, 1,067 pages and a 3-column index of 11 pages. Cloth, $3.75.

EAST TENNESSEE SKETCHES. A and Cecile Chavannes. 25c.

ECONOMICS OF ANARCHY. A study of the Industrial Type. Dyer D. Lum. 10c.

EIGHT-HOUR MOVEMENT. John P. Altgeld, ex-Governor of Illinois. 5c.

EVOLUTION AND REVOLUTION. Elisee Reclus. 5c.

FALSE CLAIMS OF THE CHURCH. John E. Remsburg. Analyzing and confuting the claims made by churchmen that the Christian religion has promoted morality, learning, temperance, science, freedom, and showing how she has opposed progress. Paper, 10c.

FIELDS, FACTORIES, AND WORKSHOPS; or, Industry Combined with Agriculture and Brain Work with Manual Work. Peter Kropotkin. 280 pages. 60c. Postage, 5c.

FREE PRESS. Arguments in support of demurrer to the indictment of M. Harman, E. C. Walker and Geo. Harman, under the Comstock law. G. C. Siemens and David Overmeyer. 20c.

GIORDANO BRUNO. His Life, Teachings, and Martyrdom. Burned for heresy in Rome, Feb. 17, 1600. 5c.

GOD AND THE STATE. Bakounine. 25c.

GOVERNMENT ANALYZED. A remarkable work by a remarkable man, Col. John S. Kelso, the history of whose life reads more like romance than reality. This book is the last of a series—Deity Analyzed, Bible Analyzed, Universe Analyzed. By the author's death this work was left unfinished, but was completed by his wife, Etta Dunbar Kelso. 459 pages; cloth. Price reduced from $1.50 to $1.

HILDA'S HOME. Rosa Graul. "An o'er true tale" of woman's wrongs and of one woman's struggles and final triumphs in her attempt to secure justice for herself and for her sisters. 426 pages. Cloth, $1; paper, 50c.

HUMAN RIGHTS. J. Madison Hook. 5c.

IMPORTANCE OF HONEST MONEY. A simple, scientific, invariable standard of price. James Adleman. 120 pages. Paper, 50c.

IN BRIGHTER CLIMES; or, Life in Scotoland. Albert Chavannes. 25c.

INFIDEL DEATH-BEDS. "Idle Tales of Dying Horrors." G. W. Foote. Brief biographical sketches of 37 Freethinkers, including Bruno, Buckle, Byron, Comte, Darwin, George Eliot, Gibbon, Goethe, Hugo, Harriet Martineau, Mill, Paine, Madame Roland, George Sand, Shelley, Volney, and Voltaire. 25c.

IN HELL AND THE WAY OUT. A plan of Social Democracy outlined. Henry E. Allen. 10c.

INSTITUTIONAL MARRIAGE. From the viewpoint of an exiled Mormon. M. Harman. 5c.

JOHN'S WAY. A domestic radical story. Elmina D. Slenker. 25c.

KAREZZA. Ethics of Marriage. A bold, brave book, teaching ideal marriage, rights of the unborn child, a designed and controlled maternity. Sample pages free. $1.

KORADINE. A story for young and old. Extra levant cloth. $1.

LIBERTY IN LITERATURE. Testimonial to Walt Whitman. "Let us put wreaths on the brows of the living." An address delivered in Philadelphia, Oct. 31, 1896, with portrait of Whitman. Containing also Col. Ingersoll's address at the funeral of Walt Whitman, Mar. 30, 1892. Cloth, 50c; paper, 25c.

LIBERTY. Political, Religious, Social, and Moral. A. F. Tindall. 5c.

LITTLE LESSONS FOR LITTLE FOLKS. Elmina D. Slenker. Boards, 40c.

LIZZIE MELTON. A story of a self-reliant girl. By Albert Chavannes. With portrait of author. 25c.

LUCIFER. Third Series, Vol. III. (1899). Cloth, $1.25. Postage, 25c.

MAGNETATION, and Its Relation to Health and Character. Albert Chavannes. 25c.

MARRIAGE. An address by Dr. Juliet H. Severance. 5c.

MARRIAGE IN FREE SOCIETY. Edward Carpenter. A dainty little gift book. 25c.

MEN, WOMEN AND CHANCE. William Platt. Containing two tales: The Ascent to the Heights, and Blind Men and Seeing. Well printed on heavy paper and artistically bound in cloth. Gilt top, rough edges. 75c.

MEN, WOMEN, AND GODS. Helen H. Gardener. With preface by Col. R. G. Ingersoll. Contents: Introduction by Col. Ingersoll. Men, Women, and Gods. Vicarious Atonement. Historical Facts and Theological Fictions. Appendix. Address to the Clergy and Others. Letter to Cleveland Congress of Freethinkers. The only authorized and correct edition. Large 12mo, heavy-toned paper. Portrait. This volume is by far the best writing this famous author ever did. It is very fine. Cloth, $1; paper, 50c.

MISSING LINK IN MODERN SPIRITUALISM, THE. A Leah (Fox) Underhill. With portraits of the Fox Sisters and others. 418 pages. Cloth. Reduced to $1.

MORIBUND SOCIETY AND ANARCHY. Jean Grave. Cloth, 60c; paper, 25c.

MOTHERHOOD IN FREEDOM. M. Harman. 5c.

MUTUAL BANKING. A simple plan to abolish interest on money. William B. Greene. 10c.

NORA, A DOLL'S HOUSE, and GHOSTS. Ibsen. Cloth. 75c.

OUR WORSHIP OF PRIMITIVE SOCIAL GUESSES. E. C. Walker. Contents: Love and Law; The Moloch of the Monogamic Ideal; The Continuity of Race-Life, and Tyranny; Food and Sex Fallacies, a Criticism; When Men and Women Are and When They Are Not Varieties; The New Woman: What is she? What will she be? The State Hiding Behind Its Own Mistakes; Bishop Potter's Opinion of Divorce; Love: Its Attraction and Expression; Is She an Honest Girl? Lloyd Platt, and the Pitiful Facts; Social Radicals and Parentage; Anthropology and Monogamy; Love and Trust Versus Fear; Reflections upon Reading William Platt's "Women, Love, and Life." 15c.

PERSONAL EXPERIENCES of Two American Anti-Vivisectionists in Various Countries. Philip G. Peabody. With an Appendix by Col. R. G. Ingersoll. Reduced from 25c to 15c.

PERSONAL RIGHTS AND SEXUAL WRONGS. Oswald Dawson. 25c.

PRIESTLY CELIBACY. Prof. A. L. Rawson. Together with The Incoherence of Transition (E. C. Walker), Motherhood in Freedom (Moses Harman), The Greatest Sin (an allegory, R. B. Kerr), and Jealousy, the Foe of Freedom (Oscar Rotter). 25c.

RELIGION AND RATIONALISM. The relation of each to human liberty. The religionist, fancying that he has the whole truth, is logically opposed to investigation, and he appeals to physical force to arrest the discovery of new truths. What Rationalism is, and how many believe themselves Freethinkers who are only unbelieving or disgruntled religionists. The necessity for separate organizations and a division of labor among reformers. The Secular Union. Important facts and arguments in a compact form. E. C. Walker. 5c.

RIGHTS OF MAN. Thomas Paine. Answer to Burke's attack upon the French revolution. A political treatise of great general value, as advocating liberty and democracy. Contains the fundamental principles of true republicanism. Cloth, 50c, paper, 25c.

RUBAIYAT (Quatrains) OF OMAR KHAYYAM. Edward FitzGerald's interpretation; with original introduction; special cover; latest version. Paper, 10c.

RULED BY THE TOMB. A discussion of free thought and free love. Orford Northcote. 10c.

SCIENCE IN STORY; or, Sammy Tubbs, the Boy Doctor, and Spondo, the Troublesome Monkey. For young folks. Dr. E. B. Foote. Five volumes in "red line," presentation edition. $5. Five volumes, plainer binding, $2.50; all in one volume, $2.

SEXUAL PHYSIOLOGY FOR THE YOUNG. Being the fifth volume of "Science in Story." 250 pages; cloth bound; illustrated. 50c.

SONGS OF THE UNBLIND CUPID. J. Wm. Lloyd. Edition de luxe. Verses printed from Kelmscott type upon deckle edged hand made paper of cerulean tint. Initial letters, ornaments and borders are in red; initial letter and sketch upon the opening page are hand painted in water colors. Covers brown, with choice of silver or gold lettering. Very handsome gift book. 50c.

STUDIES IN SOCIOLOGY. In four parts: I., The Law of Happiness; II., The Law of Individual Control; III., The Law of Exchange; IV., The Law of Environment. Albert Chavannes. 25c.

TALKS ON NATURE. Important information for both sexes. Dr. J. H. Greer. 192 pages. Reduced from 50 to 25c.

THE ABOLITION OF MARRIAGE. John Beverly Robinson. Together with Isabel's Intention (Mariette), Reminiscences of Berlin Heights (A. Warren), and The Sexes and Love in Freedom (Oscar Rotter). 25c.

THE BAR SINISTER AND LICIT LOVE, including the first biennial proceedings of the Legitimation League, and a full account of the Lanchester case, with full-page half-tone pictures of Edith Lanchester, and Lillian Harman. Handsomely bound in green and gold covers. 207 pages. 25c.

THE BLUE LAWS OF CONNECTICUT. Taken from the Code of 1650 and the public records of the Colony of Connecticut previous to 1665. With an account of the persecution of Witches and Quakers in New England, and some extracts from the Blue Laws of Virginia. Copiously illustrated. 25c.

THE BRITISH BARBARIANS. Grant Allen, the greatest of the Hill-Top pioneers. Dedicated "to all who have heart enough, brain enough, and soul enough to understand it." Handsomely bound in cloth. 282 pages. $1.

THE WOMAN WHO DID. Grant Allen. A powerful story of a refined, educated and high-spirited woman who dared to defy the tyranny of church and state and ignore the institution of marriage. Handsomely bound in cloth. $1.

THE NEW HEDONISM. Grant Allen. The opening paragraph says: "The old ascetism said: 'Be virtuous and you will be happy.' The new hedonism says: 'Be happy and you will be virtuous.'" In another place the writer says: "In proportion as men have freed themselves from mediæval superstitions have they begun to perceive that the unclean and impure things are celibacy and asceticism; that the pure and beautiful and ennobling thing is the fit and worthy exercise of the reproductive function." Paper covers; 32 large pages; twelve copies, 50c. Single copy, 5c.

THE CHICAGO MARTYRS. The famous speeches of the eight condemned anarchists in Judge Gary's Court, and Altgeld's reasons for pardoning Fielden, Neebe and Schwab. 25c.

THE COMING WOMAN. Lillie D. White. 5c.

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM. Principles and platform of organized Freethought. 10c.

THE EVOLUTION OF MODESTY. Jonathan Mayo Crane. A consideration of the origin of clothes and the reasons why people wear clothing. Here are a few questions it answers: What is modesty? What is the cause of it? What is the use of it? What is the cause of the feeling of shame? Is nudity immodest? What is the cause of the notion that it is shameful to expose some parts of the body? Why do not all peoples agree as to what parts of the body should be concealed? 5c.

THE FOUNTAIN OF LIFE; or, The Threefold Power of Sex. Lois Waisbrooker. 50c.

THE FUTURE OF SECULARISM. When will the Cause of Justice triumph? 5c.

THE PRODIGAL DAUGHTER; or, The Price of Virtue. Rachel Campbell. Together with Legal Wifehood (Lucinda B. Chandler), Life's Gifts (Olive Schreiner), and Marriage—What It Was and Is; Will the Coming Woman Marry? 25c.

THE REVIVAL OF PURITANISM. E. C. Walker. 10c.

THE RIGHTS OF CHILDREN. R. B. Kerr. Together with What Are Women Here For? (E. B. Foote, Jr., M. D.), The New Martyrdom (Lillian Harman), and The Will, from the French of Guy de Maupassant. 25c.

THE SANCTITY OF MARRIAGE. As viewed from a moral and sanitary standpoint. A solemn protest against the present demoralizing management of that institution, its effects upon offspring and its influence upon education. By Dr. Robert A. Greer. A valuable "opening wedge" in missionary work. Price reduced from 25c to 10c.

THE SECRET INSTRUCTIONS OF THE JESUITS. A reprint from an edition published in 1723, quoted by the highest authorities as authentic. The work is redolent of Jesuit craft and is a plain index to the underhand working of that order against the welfare of individuals and society. 15c.

THE STATE: ITS HISTORIC ROLE. Prince Peter Kropotkin. 10c.

THE UNWOMANLY WOMAN. Lizzie M. Holmes. Together with That Great Fraud, Yelept Society (Moses Hull), Virgin Soil (George Egerton), and Normal Sexual Action (Ernest Winne). 25c.

THE WORM TURNS. Revolutionary Poems. Voltairine de Cleyre. 10c.

THOMAS JEFFERSON. His Political, Social and Religious Philosophy. Gen. M. M. Trumbull. 5c.

TOKOLOGY. A book for every woman. By Alice B. Stockham, M. D. Illustrated. Tokology teaches possible painless pregnancy and parturition, giving full, plain directions for the care of a woman before and after confinement. The ailments of pregnancy can be prevented as well as the pains and dangers of childbirth avoided and women need not go down to death giving birth to children. English, German or Swedish. $2.25.

TRAVELS IN FAITH. By Capt. Robert C. Adams. His mental experience from superstition to rationalism. Cloth, 75c; paper, 25c.

VACCINATION A GIGANTIC CRIME. Samuel Darling. 15c.

VINDICATION OF THOMAS PAINE. Col. R. G. Ingersoll. Dealing with all the slanders brought against the name and fame of Paine. A little pamphlet which every admirer of Thomas Paine should have by him for reference. Paper, 15c.

VITAL FORCE. Magnetic Exchange and Magnetation. Albert Chavannes. 25c.

WHAT THE YOUNG NEED TO KNOW: a Primer of Sexual Rationalism. Edwin C. Walker. "Let us cease to be ashamed of what makes us men, of what makes us women, of what gives us the kisses of lovers and the encircling arms of babes." Paper covers; 42 large pages. 25c.

WHAT IS RELIGION? Ingersoll's last public address, delivered at the meeting of the Free Religious Association in Boston on June 2, 1899. To which is appended the poem, "Declaration of the Free," the last verse written by the great Freethinker. 5c.

WHEN LOVE IS LIBERTY AND NATURE LAW. John Badcock, Jr. 10c.

WHY THE UNDERTONE? An open letter to Judge Gary. Sarah E. Ames. 10c.

WOMAN, CHURCH, AND STATE. Matilda Joslyn Gage. This is Mrs. Gage's last and crowning work. Every woman ought to read it. Every liberal woman and man will want it. A burning protest against the tremendous wrong done woman by the church, which controlled the state. It ought to be widely read for the good it will do. Cloth, $1.50; paper, 75c.

WOMAN IN THE PAST, PRESENT AND FUTURE. Woman was the first human being that lasted bondage. Woman was a slave before the slave existed. The basis of all oppression is economic dependence on the oppressor. The basis of all oppression is economic dependence on the oppressor. This has been the condition of woman in the past and is so still. She is now a slave of the slave. This work is August Bebel's masterpiece. 8vo, 178 pages. 50c.

Address M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

Price 2 Cents.

LUCIFER.

THE LIGHT-BEARER.

THIRD SERIES, VOL. VI., No. 24. CHICAGO, ILLINOIS, JUNE 26, E. M. 302 [C. E. 1902.] WHOLE No. 923

WHEN WE SEE THE LIGHT.

Lo, when we wade the tangled wood,
In haste and hurry to be there
Nought seem its leaves and blossoms good,
For all that they be fashioned fair.

But looking up, at last we see
The glimmer of the open light,
From o'er the place where we would be:
Then grow the brambles bright.

So now, amidst our day of strife,
With many a matter glad we play,
When once we see the light of life
Gleam through the tangle of today.

—William Morris.

How We Enforce Respect for Our Civilization.

Sam's morning was occupied in familiarizing himself with the regimental routine in barracks. The building enclosed a large court which was used for drills and guard-mounting parade, and he did not have occasion to leave it until he went to join his friends at head-quarters. Promptly at three o'clock the three men sallied forth. Sam was struck with the magnificence of the principal buildings, including the palace and the cathedral.

"It's a fine city, isn't it?" he said.

"Yes, and the women are not bad-looking," said Cleary.

"The people don't quite look like savages," said Sam.

"You can't judge of them by these," said Foster. "Wait till you meet some negritos in the country."

"How large a part of the population are they?" said Sam.

"About one-fortieth, I think, but where principle is involved you can't go by numbers."

"Of course not," was Sam's reply. "What building is that," he added, "with our flag over it and the nicely dressed young women in the windows?"

"That?" said Foster, laughing, "oh, that's the Young Ladies' Home. We have to license the place. It's the only way to keep the army in condition. Why, we've got about fifty per cent infected now."

"Really?" cried Sam. "How our poor fellows are called upon to suffer for these ungrateful Cubapinos! Still they can feel that they are suffering for their country, too. That's a consolation."

"There's more consolation than that," said Foster, "for we're spreading the thing like wildfire among the natives. We'll come out ahead."

"I wish, though, that they wouldn't fly Old Gory over the house," said Sam.

"There was some talk of taking it down, but you see it's the policy of the Administration never to haul down the flag when it has once been raised. It presents rather a problem, you see."

"It may wear out in time," said Sam, "although it looks painfully new. What will they do then?"

"I confess I don't know," said Foster. "They'll cross the bridge when they reach it."

"A good many of the shop signs are in English already," remarked Sam. "That's a good beginning."

"Yes," said Cleary. "But they seem to be almost all saloons, that's queer."

"So they are," said Sam.

"There are some pretty good ones, too," said Foster. "Just stop in here for a moment and take a drink."

They entered a drinking place and found a bar planned on the old lines of home.

"Look at this list of our drinks," said Foster proudly. "Count 'em; there are eighty-two."

Sam examined the list, which was printed and framed and hanging on the wall, and they each took a glass of beer, standing. There were about a dozen men in the place, most of them soldiers.

"Do they do a big business in these places?" asked Sam.

"You'll think so when you see the drunken soldiers in the streets in the evening," answered Foster. "We're planting our institutions here, I tell you."

"Not only saloons," said Sam. "There's the post-office, for instance."

"They had a post-office before," said Cleary.

"But ours is surely better," rejoined Sam.

"It's better than it was," said Foster, "now that they've put the new postmaster in jail. They say he's bagged $75,000."

"It's a good example of the way we treat the embezzlers," cried Sam. "It ought to be a lesson to these Cubapinos. He'll be sent home to be tried. They ought to do that with every one caught robbing the mails in any way."

"I'm afraid if they did the force would be pretty well crippled," said Foster.

"Then there's the custom house," said Sam. "They must be delighted to get rid of these Castalian swindlers."

"A merchant here told me," said Foster, "that they have to pay just as often now, but that they have to pay bigger sums."

"Of course," cried Cleary, "you wouldn't expect our people to bother with the little bribes the Castalians were after. We live on a larger scale. It will do these natives good to open their eyes to a real nation. I'm sorry any of them steal, but if they do, let 'em take a lot and be done with it."

"We must remember that these people are only civilians," said Sam. "What can we expect of them?"

"Our commissary and quartermaster departments aren't much better, though," said Foster. "Somebody's getting rich, to judge from the prices we pay and the stuff we get. The meat stinks, and the boots are made with glue instead of stitches and nails."

"Then they must have been appointed from civil life," cried Sam.

"Come, Sam," said Cleary, "I'm a civilian now, and I'm not going to have you crow over us. How about Captain Peters, who was the pet of Whoppington and cleaned out the Deer Harbor fund?"

Sam walked on in silence.

"See here," said Foster, "I'm tired of going on foot. Let's take a cab. Here, you fellow!"

A two-wheeled wagon with an awning, drawn by a small, shaggy horse, drew up before them.

"There's a gentleman in it," said Sam. "We must wait for another."

"Nonsense!" cried Foster in a loud voice. "You evidently are a new arrival. It's only one of those monkeys. Here you, sir, get out of that!"

The native expostulated a little, shrugged his shoulders, and did as he was told, and the three men got in.

"I'm afraid he didn't like it," said Sam.

"Didn't like it? What of it?" said Foster. "Whatever we do in uniform is official business, and we've got to impress these fellows with our power and make them respect us."—From Capt. Jinks, Hero, by Ernest H. Crosby.

Musings.

People do what they love to do better than what they do not care particularly about or do under compulsion.

Sometimes those who do not particularly care about their work get better results than some who do care, but this is owing to greater ability; if those who love their work and yet turn out ordinary results did not like their work they would do still worse, and if those who turn out good work, with little interest in it, liked their work they would do still better.

Women are the builders of the race and what the mothers of the world are in their inmost soul creates the characteristics transmitted to the race, and look! What is the race? Afraid, weak, hypocritical, murderous! O, ye prospective mothers! Will you not put yourselves in harmony with the laws of the Universe and make yourselves excellent beings and builders?

The type of woman that is most admirably adapted to the building of a fine human being is the most beautiful woman, and the greatest honor one person can confer upon another is to permit one to become the parent of one's children, but men use generative power like boys use gunpowder, haphazard and recklessly. Learn to use it wisely and designedly. When a man breeds an animal he does his utmost to make it a success, but when he engages in the breeding process himself, if he does not do his utmost to prevent its success be at any rate hopes it wont be successful and feels annoyed if it is. What conduct for the "Lord of Creation!"

Love thy neighbor as thyself—
Love worketh no ill to his neighbor—
Is a man's wife his neighbor?
Is a man's child his neighbor?

When you compel your wife to yield her body to your passion do you not work ill to her? When your child is born undesired by its own mother do you not work ill to the child?

It is a crime to compel a woman to bear a child, because if she does not want to—is not anxious to—it is a certain sign that she is unfit at that time and she will build worse than if she loved to.

The mothers who walk the earth have more influence on the next generation than have any others.

WILLIAM JOHNSON.

Good Taste and Ethics.

Good taste is essentially a moral quality. Taste is not only a part and an index of morality—it is the only morality. The first, last, and closest trial question to any living creature is—"What do you like?" and the entire object of true education is to make people not merely do the right things, but enjoy the right things. What we like determines what we are, and is the sign of what we are; and to teach taste is inevitably to form character.—Ruskin.

The Degradation of Woman—Its Cause and Cure.

The third type of woman, the prostitute, provides us with that question which—according to Bebel—is the sphinx-riddle that modern society cannot solve, and yet which unsolved threatens society's destruction. The commercial prostitution of love is the last outcome of our whole social system, and its most clear condemnation. It flaunts in our streets, it hides itself in the garment of respectability under the name of matrimony, it eats in actual physical disease and death right through our midst; it is fed by the oppression and the ignorance of women, by their poverty and denied means of livelihood, and by the hypocritical puritanism which forbids them by millions not only to gratify but even to speak of their natural desires; and it is encouraged by the callousness of an age which has accustomed men to buy and sell for money every most precious thing—even the life-long labor of their brothers, therefore why not also the very bodies of their sisters?

Here there is no solution except the freedom of woman—which means of course also the freedom of the masses of the people, men and women, and the ceasing altogether of economic slavery. There is no solution which will not include the redemption of the terms "free woman" and "free love" to their true and rightful significance. Let every woman whose heart bleeds for the sufferings of her sex, hasten to declare herself and to constitute herself as far as she possibly can, a free woman. Let her accept the term with all the odium that belongs to it; let her insist on her right to speak, dress, think, act, and above all to use her sex, as she deems best; let her face the scorn and the ridicule; let her "lose her own life" if she likes; assured that only so can come deliverance, and that only when the free woman is honored will the prostitute cease to exist. And let every man who really would respect his counterpart, entreat her also to act so; let him never by word or deed tempt her to grant as a bargain what can only be precious as a gift; let him see her with pleasure stand a little aloof; let him help her to gain her feet; so at last, by what slight sacrifices on his part such a course may involve, will it dawn upon him that he has gained a real companion and helpmate on life's journey.

The whole evil of commercial prostitution arises out of the domination of Man in matters of sex. Better indeed were a Saturnalia of free men and women than the spectacle which as it is our great cities present at night. Here in Sex, the women's instincts are, as a rule, so clean, so direct, so well-rooted in the needs of the race, that except for man's domination they would scarcely have suffered this perversion. Sex in man is an unorganized passion, an individual need or impetus; but in woman it may more properly be termed a constructive instinct, with the larger signification that that involves. Even more than man should woman be "free" to work out the problem of her sex-relations as may commend itself to her—hampered as little as possible by legal, conventional, or economic considerations, and relying chiefly on her own native sense and tact in the matter. Once thus free—free from the mere cash-nexus to a husband, from the money-slavery of the streets, from the nameless terrors of social opinion, and from the threats of the choice of perpetual virginity or perpetual bondage—would she not indeed choose her career (whether that of wife and mother, or that of free companion, or one of single blessedness) far better for herself than it is chosen for her today—regarding really in some degree the needs of society, and the welfare of children, and the sincerity and durability of her relations to her lovers, and less the petty motives of profit and fear?

The point is that the whole conception of a nobler Womanhood for the future has to proceed candidly from this basis of her complete freedom as to the disposal of her sex, and from the healthy conviction that, with whatever individual aberrations, she will on the whole use that freedom rationally and well. And surely this—in view too of some decent education of the young on sexual matters—is not too great a demand to make on our faith in women. If it is, then indeed we are undone—for short of this we can only retain them in servitude, and society in its form of the hell on earth which it largely is today.

Refreshing therefore in its way is the spirit of revolt which is spreading on all sides. Let us hope such revolt will continue. If it lead here and there to strained or false situations, or to temporary misunderstandings—still, declared enmity is better than unreal acquiescence. Too long have women acted the part of mere appendages to the male, suppressing their own individuality and fostering his self-conceit. In order to have souls of their own they must free themselves, and greatly by their own efforts. They must learn to fight. Whitman in his poem "A Woman Waits for Me," draws a picture of a woman who stands in the sharpest possible contrast with the feeble bourgeois ideal—a woman who can "swim, row, ride, wrestle, shoot, run, strike, retreat, defend herself," etc.; and Bebel, in his book on Woman, while pointing out that in Sparta, "where the greatest attention was paid to the physical development of both sexes, boys and girls went about naked till they had reached the age of puberty, and were trained together in bodily exercises, games and wrestling," complains that nowadays "the notion that women require strength, courage and resolution is regarded as very heterodox." But the truth is that qualities of courage and independence are not agreeable in a slave, and that is why man during all these centuries has consistently discountenanced them—till at last the female herself has come to consider them "unwomanly." Yet this last epithet is absurd; for if tenderness is the crown and glory of woman, nothing can be more certain than that true tenderness is only found in strong and courageous natures; the tenderness of a servile person is no tenderness at all.—From "Love's Coming of Age," by Edward Carpenter.

Blood on the Khaki.

"The wars that are bringing civilization to the Philippines and South Africa are also giving employment to thousands of workmen in England and America."—jingo argument.

Little slaves of the needle, I see,
  Crowded in breath-poisoned rooms;
Nimble fingers move busily,—
Fingers that never in childish glee
  Picked daisy and clover blooms.
Coarse is the khaki; the heavy folds slip
  And rasp little hands till they bleed,
And oft a red tear from the needle will drip
  Unseen by the hawk-eye of Greed.

Proudly the officers prance in parade,
  Uniforms glisten with gold;
Privates march steadily, each in his grade,
All in the brave, new khaki arrayed,
  That cost a red drop for each fold.
But never a blemish of blood or of woe
  Clings to the soldier's proud mien,
Glory will greet him where'er he may go—
  The needle's wee tear is unseen.

Yet the slaves of the needle may feel the same pride
  That blood "for their country" they "pour;"
That the foe by their "glittering steel" is defied;
That for "loved ones at home" have their comrades died,
  In keeping the wolf from the door.
For the bright new khaki the soldiers wear
  Is marked already by stain
Which tells to the good man everywhere,
  That War bears the Brand of Cain.

—R. A. Theodora Bliss, in "The Comrade."

The Man to the Goose.

A man was engaged in picking a live goose. The feathers did not respond readily to the process, and the bird addressed the man thus:

"If you were a goose, would you enjoy this sort of thing?"

"Your hypothesis is absurd," answered the man. "You miss the point entirely."

"How so?" asked the goose.

"It is true that I am causing you inconvenience, and there may be some pain connected with the operation; but this does not alter the fact that if I don't pluck you some other fellow will."

This fable teaches that our administration in the Philippines is wholly justified by precedent.—Rochester (N. Y.) Post-Express.

Benj. R. Tucker Testifies.

In your issue of June 12 I observed the following remarks, over the signature of R. B. Kerr:

"In America, and still more in Europe, sectarian Anarchism is already an old man's movement. Among men over seventy Anarchism has its demigods, like Tolstoi, Ibsen and Moses Harman. Over fifty it has its giants, like Kropotkin, Tucker, Walker, and James. Under fifty it has not a male supporter in the world who is fit to be mentioned in the same breath with Bernard Shaw, Sidney Webb, or G. D. Herron.

Of course it is useless to attempt to convince, by mere reasoning, a man who estimates opinions by the age of those who advance them. But, if Mr. Kerr were to learn that he has based his political theories upon false information as to the age of political thinkers, possibly it would revolutionize his attitude toward Anarchism. Perhaps, therefore, it is worth while to offer the testimony of one of the "giants" named by Mr. Kerr that, to the best of his knowledge and belief, he was born on the seventeenth of April, 1854. BENJ. R. TUCKER.

A State-Socialistic Rejoinder.

"The theory that the state is the proper custodian of some of the affairs of a people logically leads to the contention that the state is the proper custodian of all the affairs of a people."—Ironicus.

If a state should build and maintain a street, then it should rule upon dress, food, conduct and morals of a people. If this be logic, then is Anarchism competent for all human affairs. It follows that a people must always pay some sort of tribute to owners of capital for the people cannot own any. Collective use, as of a railroad, is unavoidable; but collective ownership of a railroad is dangerous, leading logically to state toothpicks and soap; therefore the people must use private railroads as well as turnpikes, pavements, etc., accepting such service as capitalists choose to give.

Chicago owns and manages water works, distributing water at a price which private capital could not approach; and exacts no rent, interest, nor any profit except that which is a common fund. But the people will pay dearly for this benefit, for public water service leads logically to state courtships under the supervision of State Marriage Experts, and other unpleasant infringements of liberty. C. F. H.

Jay Chaapel.

Jay Chaapel, veteran reformer and intrepid explorer in Truth's undiscovered country, has crossed the Great Divide, aged seventy-three years. He laid down his mortal life peacefully at his late home in Palmetto, Fla., last week. Brother Chaapel was the friend and co-worker of such men as Henry Ward Beecher, Garrison, Tilton, Sumner, Wilson, Phillips, the Fosters, Stephen and Abby, and others who worked for the abolition of slavery. A ready writer, a close thinker, cautious, yet radical and always tolerant, he was at all times a prominent figure in reform work. He early became interested in Spiritualism. The first time I met him was at the Spiritualist campmeeting at Parkland, Pa., years ago, where he was working up a petition in behalf of Moses Harman, then in prison for truth telling in Kansas. He was always fighting for the under dog. The unfortunate everywhere ever enlisted his sympathies and his energies in their behalf. He was one of nature's noblemen, and his sphere of activity in the unseen world will surely be large and glorious. His companion, Dr. Houghton-Chaapel preceded him to spirit life only a few months.—W. J. Hull, editor "Light of Truth."

Defense Fund.

For Lois Waisbrooker and Mattie D. Penhallow, Home, Wash. Amount previously reported, $132.78; J. G. H., Wyoming, $5; H. B., N. Y., $5; Group Aurora, Federal, Pa., $2; H. Van. B., Wash., $1; D. L. B., Ill., $1; W. W. M., Conn., 25 cents. Total to June 9, $147.03.

OLIVER A. VERITY, Treas., Home, Washington.

Lucifer, the Lightbearer

M. HARMAN, EDITOR AND PUBLISHER.

PUBLISHED EVERY WEEK AT 500 FULTON STREET, CHICAGO, ILL.

Terms: One year, $1; six months, 50 cents; three months, 25 cents.

Entered at the Chicago Postoffice as Second-Class Mail Matter.

Eastern Representative, E. C. Walker, 244 W. 143d street, New York.

Lucifer—Its Meaning and Purpose.

LUCIFER—The planet Venus; so called from its brightness.—Webster's Dictionary.

LUCIFEROUS—Giving Light; affording light or the means of discovery.—Same.

LUCIFIC—Producing Light.—Same.

LUCIFORM—Having the form of Light.—Same.

The name Lucifer means Light-Bringing or Light-Bearing, and the paper that has adopted this name stands for Light against Darkness—for Reason against Superstition—for Science against Tradition—for Investigation and Enlightenment against Credulity and Ignorance—for Liberty against Slavery—for Justice against Privilege.

By the Way.

In its issue of June 18, Helen Wilmans' "Freedom," Sea breeze, Fla., says that again witnesses are being called before the Federal Grand Jury for the purpose of indicting Mrs. Wilmans and her associates. All the former cases brought against them have been dismissed, I understand. A petty post office official has charge of, and is very zealous in their prosecution, he having declared, so they are informed, that he is determined to suppress them, no matter what means he must use to attain that end. It is to be hoped the "Freedom" workers will be as successful in this as in the preceding cases.

Here is a specimen letter from one of our Chicago workers. He is not blessed with much superfluous money, but not a week goes by in which he does not help to extend the circulation of Lucifer:

"Will you please send a marked copy of Lucifer containing Kate Austin's analysis of Clymer's 'Fallen Women' to Miss——, Chicago. Find two dimes enclosed for which send Lucifer five weeks to each of the following barber shops. They may get frightened and order it stopped. If so, O. K. It will accomplish my purpose. Lucifer No. 922 is up to the standard. Please send me an extra copy as I wish to send mine to one of our new lady Press Writers. Haven't yet read Pa's article but I can see it is full of his philosophy and old-time fire."

May our friend's tribe increase!

The editor is "rusticating" near Benton Harbor, Mich. As we are nearly ready to close our forms, I received a card written at Sister Lake, Mich., June 19, in which he says: "Came over here an hour ago with Mr. Allen and his family, a trip of ten miles or so, over a very beautiful country. We came to have a picnic. A neighbor and a cousin visiting with the Allen family are added to the company, making a right jolly crowd. We have just had our first lunch, and will have another, I presume, before we start back. Some of the folks are now out boating on the lake. The air is quite cool and fresh—an ideal day for a picnic. I am feeling unusually well."

The Mr. Allen referred to is Henry E Allen—a name which has frequently appeared in Lucifer, and a staunch friend of many years' standing.

Though minutes may seem hours to a mother away from her dying child, the "proprieties" must be observed. Mildred Goodrich, a nineteen-years old mother left her little child, aged three, with its grandmother in Kansas City while she came to Chicago with its father in search of employment. One day last week she heard that the baby was not expected to live. Having no money, the mother dressed herself in man's clothing and together she and her husband "beat" their way on the railroads to Kansas City. On arrival there she was arrested for impersonating a man. On telling their story "Goodrich was allowed to go to Mrs. Goodrich's mother where he procured proper attire for his wife and the couple then hurried to the bedside of their dying child," says the newspaper report. Think of the poor mother cheated out of the precious moments with her child so soon to leave her, by a senseless city ordinance! The morals of the citizens of Kansas City must be very easily polluted—in the eyes of the city guardians!

"I wouldn't do this!" "I would do that!" These are assertions we hear every day—and with almost equal truth it might be said we make them every day. And we speak as if what "I" would do should be the rule of conduct for all the rest of the world. Lydia R. Todd says on p. 189 that she would not employ a lawyer, if arrested, and the inference is strong that, in her opinion, no one who does so can be a good Anarchist. She has a right to choose for herself; but others have an equal right to choose for themselves. If she does not want to contribute to a defense fund which is to be used for a legal defense, that is her affair. But that is no reason why the friends of the indicted should not give those who wish to contribute an opportunity to do so. Why should all Anarchists follow exactly the same line of conduct? They might as well be governed by a Pope, as are the Catholics. I do not care whether I am called an Anarchist or not. I should find it difficult to make my conduct conform with the requirements of all who call themselves Anarchists, and I do not try to do so.

In sending $1.30 for a year's subscription to Lucifer and a copy of "The Prodigal Daughter," E. Martina of New York says:

"It is to be regretted that Lucifer must resort to the special offer inducement in order to insure its life and to procure the necessary means for its regular publication. Its fairness, its impartiality in treating all the social questions, and especially its devotion of its invaluable time to the complete emancipation of sexual relations; these, I surmise, should be the best inducement for a contribution for the maintenance of its needed appearance among the few other uncompromising radical papers in the country."

Such letters are encouraging and the continued existence of Lucifer is due to the fact that it has had friends who felt, as does Mr. Martina, that it is worth full price and even more. But it is essential that we enlarge the circle of its readers as widely as possible, and to do so we find it necessary to offer special inducements. If our subscription list were doubled we could afford to reduce the subscription price to 75 cents or even 50 cents a year. In the meantime, we are glad to give reduced rates or other inducements to all who will help increase our list.

If the natural fertility of the soil were the only factor in production, Mr. Freeland's argument (see "Various Voices") might be tenable. If A, B, and C agreed to seed all their land with wheat and "let natur' take 'er coorse," while they sat, heels in air, puffing their pipes, swapping stories and enjoying the scenery until time for harvest, it would logically follow that B and C should use their surplus product in paying for needed improvements. But in my observation, that is not the manner in which successful farming is done. The farmer's brains and muscles are quite as essential as natural fertility of the soil. A may decide that by fertilizing his soil and cultivating carefully he may grow some crop which will bring in greater returns than wheat. So in the spring he buys car loads of fertilizer, hauls them on his land, plants his crop, and during the long hot days while his neighbors sit in the shade waiting for their wheat to grow, he cultivates his fields. In the autumn, when the products of the three farms are marketed, if his land—and labor—have produced value equal to twenty-eight bushels of wheat he finds himself taxed for bridges, roads, etc., while his easy going neighbors are exempt from taxation. Which pays the tax—the labor or the land?

LILLIAN HARMAN.

"The Coming Woman" by Lillie D. White—a splendid entering wedge—sent with Lucifer 15 weeks for 10 cents.

Ruminations.

Ironicus is a little equivocal in a recent issue of Lucifer. In spite of persecution from without, there is less tyranny to be seen in Home than in any other community with which I am familiar, because we do not seek to rule over one another. There is no spot on the globe where complete liberty is possible at the present day; nor can there ever be, until the whole globe is free. Freedom in isolation presents at best a feeble approximation to the full blessings of liberty. The relations of men to one another, and of all to the earth, are so involved and complicated that until all are free, it is pretty sure that all must be more or less bound. It is especially impossible for a small community like Home to become entirely independent of the outside world. We have, however, succeeded in showing an increase of harmony and happiness. Conditions at Home are steadily improving. The community will never break up through internal dissensions, as so many colony experiments have done.

The difficulties in the way of making a living here have really served an excellent purpose, in frightening away namby-pamby colonists, who are simply looking for a soft snap. It takes sturdy material to exemplify a great principle in actual life. Home does not appeal to loafers, but has immense charms for those who love liberty enough to face hard work and some few deprivations.

There is perhaps no place on earth where so little friction is found in conjunction with such intense and varied individualities as are to be found in Home. The people here are by no means angels; and if we tried to run one another's affairs, as is done in other communities, we would be in hot water all the time. As it is, under our principle of freedom, there is so little quarreling as to be hardly worth mentioning. Personal tastes and congeniality govern our choice of associates; and those who are not congenial to each other simply let one another alone.

We have been spending three or four Sundays in slashing the four acres which have been set apart for school purposes. This is purely volunteer work. While the men are slashing, the women get dinner ready; and we make a jolly picnic affair out of it. We have for some time been having a general social every week, with music and recitations. Quite a number of the people here are musically inclined; and there are several pianos and organs and a variety of stringed instruments in the community. Those who enjoy dancing come together for the purpose nearly every week. A few of us devote an evening a week to the study of the poets; and others meet to enjoy themselves in various ways. Boating and bathing are much enjoyed in such leisure as can be had in the day time. Almost everybody has a collection of agates, many of which are washed up on the shore, and to be had for the pains of searching. There are nearly or quite two thousand books in the community, although the community library itself is as yet but a small one. Tacoma is near, and three or four hours on the steamer bring us to the city with its varied interests. There is pleasant walking around Home, with plenty of charming scenery. So it may be seen that life here, albeit full of hard work, is by no means a dreary, monotonous round.

We are anxiously awaiting the result of the Waisbrooker and Penhallow trials in July, but have little serious fear of the outcome.

JAMES F. MORTON, JR.

Anarchism and Individualism.

I cannot quite agree with R. B. Kerr about there being so many kinds of Anarchists. I do, indeed, agree that mere Individualism—"every man has a right to do as he pleases, provided he does not invade the equal right of others"—is not worthy to be called Anarchism. It is metaphysical, and, like everything else which is so, ambiguous. It leaves all unsettled the practical question what is "invasion," and who is to be the judge? And hence Individualists are unreliable when it comes to practise. The most noteable example is Herbert Spencer, who put unquestionably Anarchistic sentiments into his Social Statics, but has taken them out of the new edition. I guess, however, Mr. Kerr will find that the difference between force Anarchists and no-force Anarchists is in the "environment"—it is the difference between a cat in a corner and a cat elsewhere.

Buckle says, in his famous History of Civilization, that it is a peculiarity of the Scotch intellect to follow the method of syllogistic reasoning from more or less certain premises, rather than the inductive, which establishes facts by observation and experiment. Perhaps he should rather have said it is Celtic. It is not confined to the Scotch. It is characteristic of the French intellect also. But it is foreign to the English. Bacon and Des Cartes are continually named together as founders of the modern scientific method. They were alike in that; but there was a difference, dependent, no doubt, on their nationalities, and conducive to their success in different countries. The great Frenchman was a most eminent mathematician; the great Englishman a very poor one. The former is almost as much known by his metaphysics, of which the final result was German Transcendentalism, as by his science. The other was as impervious to metaphysics as a duck's coat to water. Science, on the principles of Des Cartes alone, would probably have evaporated in speculation. On those of Bacon alone, it would have been hampered by his dislike to hypothesis, theory, and abstract studies. Both, therefore, were necessary. But the glory of Bacon is unique in this—that he was the apostle of verification, and therefore of experiment, which had never been sufficiently valued before, and was not even by Des Cartes.

These reflections are suggested to me by Mr. Kerr's way of reasoning about Anarchism. He goes on, Celtic fashion, drawing inferences from human wickedness, among which the most important, and surely the stalest, is that because we are not perfect we must be governed. I have several times suggested, in my English way, that he should inquire carefully, impartially, and with systematic abhorrence of all one-sidedness, whether, as a matter of experience, being governed makes us and our condition better or worse?—that too quantitatively—is more interference with individual habits shown by experience to be better or worse than less? If he will do that, he may perhaps arrive at the conclusion I reached sometime since—that the invasive coercive individual is ridiculously weak and harmless except as he can persuade immense multitudes of others to accept him for a protector, president, king; and that to destroy the idolatrous spirit which makes them do so, is the one thing needful, for at least one great purpose, which is to end the expiring childhood and introduce the dawning maturity of Man. I admit the inquiry is laborious. It covers the entire field of history; and not of history as written for the amusement of idle readers, but as it can be made out of dry facts, carefully denuded of rhetoric, and then boiled down to essence. But taking trouble like this, is the English method of inductive verification. It may not be accidental that England is the first country which had Anarchists.

I cannot admit that Anarchism is "an old man's movement" in any other sense than this, that its oldest living advocates are no longer young. Kropotkin, whom Mr. Kerr classes among the giants only, is a more distinguished scientist than any of those he calls demi-gods. Creative artists like Ibsen and Tolstoi of course are not born every day; but is Mr. Kerr aware that the whole young literary France is Anarchistic? Anarchism is eminently a young man's movement in this sense, that the great majority of its advocates are young, which does not seem to have been the case until about seven years ago; and, if I may judge by those socialists whom Mr. Kerr selects as their superiors, they are as likely to surpass governmentalists of any kind as much as Proudhon surpassed Louis Blanc.

C. L. JAMES.

Back Numbers of Lucifer.

Forty copies of Lucifer, no two alike, of 1900 or 1901 will be sent to any address for 15 cents. Nine bundles for $1. We are anxious to place these papers where they will do good. Please let us have your orders soon. State which year you want.

VARIOUS VOICES.

Anton Merakergaard, Sioux Falls:—Enclosed find 50 cents for which send me some copies of the pamphlet, "An Open Letter," by H. W. Boozer, which you mentioned in last Lucifer. I am very sorry to hear of your dear father's illness, but I hope he will soon recover so we again can read his splendid articles in the Light-Bearer. I have just read Dr. Foote's "Home Cyclopedia." It is worth more than all the wealth in the world for the information it gives.

Lydia R. Todd, 1213 Powell St., San Francisco, California:—Anarchists, are you not very inconsistent? You hate laws—then why cater to them? I am an Anarchist. I have no love, time, or money for law or lawyers. I was followed, shadowed, my house was entered and searched, my letters, pictures, and other things taken away, (and not returned), was threatened with arrest, lied on through the daily papers, but remained true blue. If I am ever arrested I will go to jail; no bail; no lawyers, no money to get me out. As long as we uphold the laws so long will we be cursed with them. I am more than willing to do anything I can for Lois Waisbrooker, because I think she is a noble woman, but I have no money for the defence fund, and cannot help how meanly James F. Morton, Jr., thinks of me. Bribing judges is too rich for my blood.

A. Freeland, Mt. Pleasant, Tenn.:—Lucifer says of the Single Tax: "But one tax or many, it is just robbery after all. Wealth is from work; the people pay all the taxes." It is true that "wealth is from work; the people [who work] pay all the taxes." But as to "robbery:" Three families crossing the plains discover a valley containing 480 acres, enough for three farms. Each takes up 160 acres. On account of the lay of the land a given amount of labor will yield on the different farms 20, 21 and 22 bushels of wheat per acre. Under the Single Tax the 20 bushel land would pay no tax, the 21 bushel land would pay one bushel tax per acre and the best land would pay two bushels per acre. There are common expenses in the community—road and bridge building, etc., which cost 480 bushels of wheat annually. A. contributes nothing, B. 160 bushels and C. 320 bushels. The result is the same as if the whole valley was of equal fertility—21 bushel land. The Single Tax is a misnomer. It is simply the appropriation of ground rent, in lieu of taxes, for the public needs. It would maintain the equal right of all to the land, if public expenses could be eliminated. This fund should be distributed equally. Is it robbery?

Herman Wettstein, Fitzgerald, Ga.:—In reading Voltairine de Cleyre's admirable little essay "The Hopelessly Fallen" I was quite disappointed to see that she suggested no remedy for the evils complained of, though I presume her views in regard thereto must be well known to the generality of your readers. Of the various causes she mentions that lead to the social evil: "Economic conditions, sexual superstitions, religious lies, bad heredity," the first are the most potent and lead to all the rest, for to what but money and property rights can religious lies be traced with all their superstitions, as well as the moral, mental and physical degeneracy—the effect of "bad heredity?" To our wretched economic conditions ninety per cent of all the misery with which mankind is afflicted is due. Abolish that and let us concentrate our efforts upon educating people into not abusing their personal liberties and observing the "golden rule," and no other laws are needed to make a veritable paradise on earth.

Any system that recognizes money and property, that is: more than any one's needs and comforts require, is bound to lead to moral and physical corruption. Eradicate avarice (the desire to accumulate), and virtue will assert itself.

M. H. L., Colo.:—I see my subscription has expired and of course you like a prompt renewal. I enclose herewith $3.50. Please send me "Capt. Jinks, Hero," "Love's Coming of Age" and credit one year on Lucifer.

Every time I have occasion to write to you I think, now soon I'll write again and send you a few dollars for your very own. But when I look through Lucifer with the titles of all those books staring me in the face I'm just too selfish to resist ordering more of them! If I did not live out here in such an isolated place I could get you new subscribers occasionally. I am real proud over one whose name I saw in Lucifer—Mr. N. J. Jenks. He called here one day, bringing a book on Spiritualism to my husband. I ventured to ask him if he had ever read a paper called Lucifer the Light-Bearer. He answered that he had never heard of it. So I offered him a few copies explaining, with some misgiving, that it was a very radical publication. I never saw him before or since. But I have had some very unpleasant experiences in trying to interest acquaintances in the paper. Mostly it is casting pearls before swine.

Well, well, whatever should we do without the Light-Bearer, anyway? I wonder how many of your readers realize what it has been to them, how much they have learned from its pages. I never take a copy into my hand but I have a feeling of gratitude—of profound thankfulness that I have been permitted to have the benefit of its teachings. Could anything be truer than Mrs. Austin's "Who Are the Fallen?" What a pity it could not be published in a thousand papers.

I feel so bad about Mr. H.'s illness. I hope he will continue to spend the most of his time in the park until entirely recovered. I would so much rather act than talk. If possible you will hear from me again soon. I hope your work has, for both of you, its own compensations. It cannot but be a burden sometimes. It shall be my greatest endeavor to help you bear it. All good be with you.

J. C. Barnes, Hindsboro, Ill.:—In a late issue you said, concerning Single Tax: "But all taxation is robbery. Wealth is from work. The people pay all taxes." I wish to inform you and your readers that the so-called "Single Tax," a term used to most concisely express the modus operandi of collecting the economic rent or annual value of land, is not a tax as defined by the Dictionaries, but is a taking for the use of all, that value attaching to land (not to wealth) by reason of the presence of people on or near the land so made valuable.

The double tax we now pay, does come off of the people, especially the poor people. The poor man pays a tax on his little wealth and on everything he consumes, for it has been taxed on its way to the consumers and the tax added to its last selling price, and he pays a tax to the land-lord who puts it in to his pocket. He pays a double tax. By a single tax, he would pay only the economic annual rent of the land, and that would go into a common treasury of which he would get his share in public benefits. Besides raising the price of products to the consumers by taxing wealth, it acts as a fine on industry, causing fewer improvements on vacant lots, raising rents to tenants. If vacant lots were taxed as high as adjoining improved ones, they would be built on by the owner to make his tax, or abandoned to some one who would, making land virtually free. All would get their equal share of land, or what is the same, of land values. It is land value people need more than land. There are millions of acres of vacant land, free to any one, but it has no value. People rush from rural districts to great centers of population and every man, woman or child that goes into a town or city adds $4 per acre to the value of land in the heart of the town or city, but does he get it? No, but he would under a Single Tax. There is nowhere else it could go legitimately. Land, Labor and Capital are the only factors that enter into the production of wealth, and if the landlord is eliminated as a sharer, then all wealth would be divided between labor as wages and capital as interest. The landlord as a landlord is an entirely useless person, and pockets about one-third of the wealth produced. Let us eliminate him by taking the economic rent of land, a value all produced, and take the longest step towards ultimate freedom that has ever been taken in the world's history.

TOLSTOI'S NEW WORK.

The Slavery of Our Times.

With Portrait of the Gifted Author, and Introduction by the Translator, Aylmer Maude.

CHAPTER TITLES,

I., Goods Porters Who Work Thirty-Seven Hours; II., Society's Indifference While Men Perish; III., Justification of the Existing Position of Sciences; IV., The Assertion of Economic Science that Rural Laborers Must Enter the Factory System; V., Why Learned Economists Assert what is False; VI., Bankruptcy of the Socialist Ideal; VII., Culture or Freedom? VIII., Slavery Exists Among Us. IX., What Is Slavery? X., Laws Concerning Taxes, Land and Property; XI., Laws the Cause of Slavery; XII., The Essence of Legislation Is Organized Violence; XIII., What Are Governments? Is It Possible to Exist Without Governments? XIV., How Can Governments Be Abolished? XV., What Should Each Man Do? An Afterword.

Well printed on heavy paper. Substantially bound. 186 pages. Price, $1.50.

Address M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

CAPTAIN JINKS, HERO

BY ERNEST CROSBY.

It is a merciless satire on war and militarism in which the parallel between savagery and soldiery is unerringly drawn. It is a biting burlesque on the various forms of cheap hero-worship. It holds up to withering scorn every important feature of militarism.

Among the accompaniments and results of war exploited and satirized, are hazing at "East Point," the war whoops of the yellow journals, the savagery of war, the Schley-Sampson controversy, civilizing the heathen savage, looting in China, pension abuses, the capture of Aguinaldo, the Peace Conference, army mismanagement, osculatory attacks by gooney girls, etc.

With 25 Irresistible Drawings by Dan Beard. 12mo, Cloth, Handsome Covers, 400 pages. Price $1.50

Address M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

VICE: ITS FRIENDS AND ITS FOES

BY EDWIN C. WALKER.

CONTENTS:—Brotherhood of Man; The Recognition of Facts; Folly of "For Men Only," Definition of Vice; Horrors of Prostitution; Abnormal Sexuality; Errors of Fathers, Mothers and Teachers; Persecution Does Not Reform; Prostitution and the Crusaders; The "Spoiling of the Heathen;" What are the Effects of Raids and Crusades? The Economic Side of the Problem. Party Politics in Vice Crusading; In What Does Prostitution Consist? Some Causes of Prostitution; Two Kinds of Prostitution Compared; The Opponents of Divorce; "Purifying" the Tenements; Action for Advanced Women.

WITH APPENDIX:—The Wanderings of a Spirit; Our Fair Civilization. The Folly and Cruelty of It All. Price 15c.

Address M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

VACCINATION A CRIME.

With Comments on Other Sanitary Superstitions.

BY FELIX L. OSWALD, M. D.

"Vaccination spreads diseases; vaccination impairs the organic functions; vaccination encourages reliance on worthless remedies; vaccination spreads small-pox; compulsory vaccination furnishes dangerous legal precedents."

With illustrations of diseases frequently resulting from vaccination. 198 pages. Price 10 cents. For sale by M. Harman, 500 Fulton St. Chicago.

DO YOU EVER THINK

Of the fate of the Prodigal Daughter? The Prodigal Son is forgiven and received with rejoicing—why should different treatment be accorded to his sister? For a vivid, true picture of the conditions in homes and factories which produce thousands of so-called fallen women every year, read "The Prodigal Daughter; or, The Price of Virtue," by Rachel Campbell.

SPECIAL OFFER.

This valuable work sent free on receipt of twenty-five cents for a thirteen week's trial subscription to Lucifer the Light Bearer. M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton Street, Chicago, Ill.

Notice! I would be glad to hear from Liberals who would like to correspond with other Liberals. Address (with stamp.)
Snowville, Va. ELMINA DRAKE SLENKER.

923.

If these figures correspond with the number printed on the wrapper of your Lucifer, your subscription expires with this number.

If a copy of Lucifer fails to reach you, please order by number or date.

Lucifer will not be sent "by return mail" unless stamps for postage are enclosed with order.

TO NEW SUBSCRIBERS: Your subscription is paid to No. If you have not ordered Lucifer, a friend has subscribed for you. If you do not wish to receive it, please notify us by card or through your postmaster. If you wish to become a regular subscriber you will confer a favor by renewing before the expiration of your trial subscription.

LOVE'S COMING OF AGE.

BY EDWARD CARPENTER.

This is a book with which few will wholly agree, but which nearly every one can read with profit and enjoyment. The subject is the relation of the sexes in the past, present and future, and it is treated with absolute frankness and fearlessness by a writer who unites a broad outlook, a strong grasp of his subject and a charming literary style. The following table of contents will indicate the line of thought followed by the author.

The Sex Passion.
Man, the Ungrown.
Woman, the Serf.
Woman in Freedom
Marriage: a Retrospect.
Marriage: a Forecast.
The Free Society.
Some remarks on the early star and sex worships.
Notes—On the Primitive Group Marriage; Jealousy; The Family; Preventive Checks to Population.

The book is printed on extra book paper and handsomely bound in cloth. Price, $1.

Address M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

WHITMAN'S IDEAL DEMOCRACY, AND OTHER WRITINGS.

BY HELENA BORN.

Comprising besides the title essay, Thoreau's Joy in Nature; Poets of Revolt: Shelley, Whitman, Carpenter; Whitman's Altruism; Individualism versus Organization: Ingenuities of Economic Argument; The Last Stand Against Democracy in Sex; Inequality in Divorce; Marriage Safeguards. With portrait of author and biographical introduction by Helen Tufts. 125 pages. Edition limited to 500 copies; each copy numbered. Fine paper, uncut pages, bound in boards, paper label. Price $1.

THE AMERICAN INSTITUTE OF PHRENOLOGY, Incorporated 1866, opens its next session, September 3rd, 1902. For particulars apply to the Secretary, M. H. Piercy, care of Fowler & Wells Co., 24 East 22nd St., New York.

JOHN M. CLARKE'S New Method Language Lessons. They include (if desired) Practical Mathematics and Elementary Natural Science. This method is a radical departure from usual routine. Personal interview desirable for any one interested. Lessons at 717 Walnut St., Chicago.

RADICAL LITERATURE.

For Sale by M. Harman, 500 Fulton St., Chicago.

A CHAMBERMAID'S DIARY. By Octave Mirbeau. Translated from the French by Benj. R. Tucker. 300 pages. Handsomely bound in cloth. $1.50.

ADVANCEMENT OF SCIENCE. Prof. John Tyndall's famous Inaugural Address before the British Association for the Advancement of Science, with the articles on Prayer which so stirred the religious world. Cloth, 50c; paper, 25c.

AGE OF REASON. Thomas Paine. Cloth, with steel plate portrait, 75c; paper 15c.

ANARCHISM: Its Philosophy and Ideal. Peter Kropotkin. 5c.

A PHYSICIAN IN THE HOUSE. A New Family Medical Work, by Dr. J. H. Greer. This book is up-to-date in every particular. It will save you hundreds of dollars in doctors' bills. It tells you how to cure yourself by simple and harmless home remedies. It recommends no poisonous or dangerous drugs. It teaches how to save health and life by safe methods. It teaches prevention—that it is better to know how to live and avoid disease than to take any medicine as a cure. It is not an advertisement and has no medicine to sell. It has hundreds of excellent recipes for the cure of the various diseases. It has 16 colored plates showing different parts of the human body. The chapter on Painless Midwifery is worth its weight in gold to women. The "Care of Children" is something every mother ought to read. It teaches the value of Air, Sunshine, and Water as medicines. It contains valuable information for the married. This book cannot fail to please you. If you are looking for health by the safest and easiest means, do not delay getting it. It has eight hundred pages, is neatly bound in cloth, with gold letters, and will be sent by mail or express, prepaid to any address, for $2.75.

A PLEA FOR THE NEW WOMAN. May L. Collins. With large new half-tone portrait. 25c.

A TALE OF THE STRASSBURG GEESE. R. B. Kerr. Together with The Strike of the Strassburg Geese (C. W. Coolridge), A Traveler's Tale (R. B. Kerr), The Cat's Story (Emile Zola) 5c.

AUTONOMY, SELF-LAW. A fragmentary dissertation on the right to non-invasive self-hood. 5c.

BALZAC'S SERAPHITA: The Mystery of Sex. Mary Hanford Ford. Cloth, $1.

BIBLE TEMPERANCE. E. C. Walker. Proving that Liquor Drinking is Commended, Defended and Enjoined by the Bible, and giving close reference to the chapters and verses. 10c.

BORNING BETTER BABIES—Through regulating reproduction by controlling conception. E. B. Foote, Jr., M. D. 25c.

CAUSES OF HARD TIMES, and the Money Question. Albert Chavannes. 5c.

CHICAGO CONFERENCE OF TRUSTS. Speeches, debates, etc.; 81 portraits of delegates, including Benj. R. Tucker, Laurence Gronlund, William Jennings Bryan, Samuel Gompers, Louis F. Post, and George Schilling. 416 pages, 50c.

CHILDREN OF THE ITALIAN POOR. Paola Lombroso. 5c.

DARWINS, THE. (A novel.) Elmina D. Slenker. 50c.

DAWN OF CIVILIZATION, The; or, England in the Nineteenth Century. J. C. Spence. 178 pages. 25c.

DAWN-THOUGHT ON THE RECONCILIATION. By J. Wm. Lloyd. An inspired treatise that, with insight and solution, touches all the questions of life, love, soul and society. A prose-poem, simple enough for a child to enjoy, deep enough to make a philosopher think. The largest creed, the most generous theory, the gladdest gospel. A book of life. A religion of growth and the overlook—freedom and optimism. Read it. Printed in old style antique type, rubricated with portrait of the author. In three editions, de luxe, plain and paper bound. Prices, $1.25, $1.00 and 50c.

DIGGING FOR BED-ROCK. Camp-meeting talks and sketches by Moses Harman. 5c.

DR. FOOTE'S SOCIAL SCIENCE SERIES OF DIME PAMPHLETS—Wedlock; Scientific Marriage; Heredity; A B C of Temperaments; Powell and his Critics; Physiological Marriage; Physical Improvement of Humanity; Causes of Disease, Insanity, and Premature Death; A Step Backward. Any of the above books sent by mail on receipt of price.

DYNAMIC THEORY OF LIFE AND MIND. An attempt to show that all organic beings are both constructed and operated by the dynamic agencies of their respective environments. By James H. Alexander. Over 400 illustrations, 37 chapters, 1,067 pages and a 3-column index of 11 pages. Cloth, $2.75.

EAST TENNESSEE SKETCHES. A and Cecile Chavannes. 10c.

ECONOMICS OF ANARCHY. A Study of the Industrial Type. Dyer D. Lum. 10c

EIGHT-HOUR MOVEMENT. John P. Altgeld, ex-Governor of Illinois. 5c.

EVOLUTION AND REVOLUTION. Elisee Reclus. 5c.

FALSE CLAIMS OF THE CHURCH. John E. Remsburg. Analyzing and confuting the claims made by churchmen that the Christian religion has promoted morality, learning, temperance, science, freedom, and showing how she has opposed progress. Paper, 10c.

FIELDS, FACTORIES, AND WORKSHOPS; or, Industry Combined with Agriculture and Brain Work with Manual Work. Peter Kropotkin. 360 pages. 40c. Postage, 5c.

FREE PRESS. Arguments in support of demurrer to the indictment of M. Harman, E. C. Walker and Geo. Harman, under the Comstock law. G. C. Semens and David Overmyer. 20c.

GIORDANO BRUNO. His Life, Teachings, and Martyrdom. Burned for heresy in Rome, Feb. 17, 1600. 5c.

GOD AND THE STATE. Bakounine. 25c.

GOVERNMENT ANALYZED. A remarkable work by a remarkable man, Col. John R. Kelso, the history of whose life reads more like romance than reality. This book is the last of a series—Deity Analyzed, Bible Analyzed, Universe Analyzed. By the author's death this work was left unfinished, but was completed by his wife, Etta Dunbar Kelso. 319 pages; cloth. Price reduced from $1.50 to $1.

HILDA'S HOME. Rosa Grand. "An o'er true tale" of woman's wrongs and of one woman's struggles and final triumphs in her attempt to secure justice for herself and for her sisters. 426 pages. Cloth, $1; paper, 50c.

HUMAN RIGHTS. J. Madison Hook. 5c.

IMPORTANCE OF HONEST MONEY. A simple, scientific, invariable standard of price. James Adleman. 320 pages. Paper, 50c.

IN BRIGHTER CLIMES; or, Life in Socioland. Albert Chavannes. 5c.

INFIDEL DEATH-BEDS. "Idle Tales of Dying Horrors." G. W. Foote. Brief biographical sketches of 37 Freethinkers, including Bruno, Buckle, Byron, Comte, Darwin, George Eliot, Gibbon, Goethe, Hugo, Harriet Martineau, Mill, Paine, Madame Roland, George Sand, Shelley, Volney, and Voltaire. 25c.

IN HELL AND THE WAY OUT. A plan of Social Democracy outlined. Henry H. Allen. 10c.

INSTITUTIONAL MARRIAGE. From the viewpoint of an exiled Mormon. M. Harman. 5c.

JOHN'S WAY. A domestic radical story. Elmina D. Slenker. 25c.

KAREZZA. Ethics of Marriage. A bold, brave book, teaching ideal marriage, rights of the unborn child, a designed and controlled maternity. Sample pages free. $1.

KORADINE. A story for young and old. Extra levant cloth. $1.

LIBERTY IN LITERATURE. Testimonial to Walt Whitman. "Let us put wreaths on the brows of the living." An address delivered in Philadelphia, Oct. 21, 1890, with portrait of Whitman. Containing also Col. Ingersoll's address at the funeral of Walt Whitman, Mar. 30, 1892. Cloth, 50c; paper, 25c.

LIBERTY. Political, Religious, Social, and Moral. A. F. Tindall. 5c.

LITTLE LESSONS FOR LITTLE FOLKS. Elmina D. Slenker. Boards, 40c.

LIZZIE MELTON. A story of a self-reliant girl. By Albert Chavannes. With portrait of author. 25c.

LUCIFER. Third Series, Vol. III. (1889). Cloth, $1.50. Postage, 25c.

MAGNETATION, and Its Relation to Health and Character. Albert Chavannes. 25c.

MARRIAGE. An address by Dr. Juliet H. Severance. 5c.

MARRIAGE IN FREE SOCIETY. Edward Carpenter. A dainty little gift book. 25c.

MEN, WOMEN AND CHANCE. William Platt. Containing two tales: The Ascent to the Heights, and Blind Men and Seeing. Well printed on heavy paper and artistically bound in cloth. Gilt top, rough edges. 75c.

MEN, WOMEN, AND GODS. Helen H. Gardener. With preface by Col. R. G. Ingersoll. Contents: Introduction by Col. Ingersoll. Men, Women, and Gods. Vicarious Atonement. Historical Facts and Theological Fictions. Appendix. Address to the Clergy and Others. Letter to Cleveland Congress of Freethinkers. The only authorised and correct edition. Large 12mo, heavy-toned paper. Portrait. This volume is by far the best writing this famous author ever did. It is very fine. Cloth, $1; paper, 50c.

MISSING LINK IN MODERN SPIRITUALISM, THE. A. Leah (Fox) Underhill. With portraits of the Fox Sisters and others. 418 pages. Cloth. Reduced to $1.

MORIBUND SOCIETY AND ANARCHY. Jean Grave. Cloth, 50c; paper, 25c.

MOTHERHOOD IN FREEDOM. M. Harman. 5c.

MUTUAL BANKING. A simple plan to abolish interest on money. William B. Greene. 10c.

NORA, A DOLL'S HOUSE, and GHOSTS. Ibsen. Cloth. 75c.

OUR WORSHIP OF PRIMITIVE SOCIAL GUESSES. E. C. Walker. Contents: Love and Law; The Moloch of the Monogamic Ideal; The Continuity of Race-Life, and Tyranny; Food and Sex Fallacies, a Criticism; When Men and Women Are and When They Are Not Varieties; The New Woman: What is she? What will she be? The State Hiding Behind Its Own Mistakes; Bishop Potter's Opinion of Divorce; Love: Its Attraction and Expression; Is She an Honest Girl? Lloyd, Platt, and the Pitiful Facts; Social Radicals and Parentage; Anthropology and Monogamy; Love and Trust Versus Fear; Reflections upon Reading William Platt's "Women, Love, and Life." 15c.

PERSONAL EXPERIENCES of Two American Anti-Vivisectionists in Various Countries. Phillip G. Peabody. With an Appendix by Col. R. G. Ingersoll. Reduced from 25c to 15c.

PERSONAL RIGHTS AND SEXUAL WRONGS. Oswald Dawson. 25c.

PRIESTLY CELIBACY. Prof. A. L. Rawson. Together with The Incoherence of Transition (E. C. Walker), Motherhood in Freedom (Moses Harman), The Greatest Sin (an allegory, R. B. Kerr), and Jealousy, the Foe of Freedom (Oscar Rotter). 25c.

RELIGION AND RATIONALISM. The relation of each to human liberty. The religionist, fancying that he has the whole truth, is logically opposed to investigation, and he appeals to physical force to arrest the discovery of new truths. What Rationalism is, and how many believe themselves Freethinkers who are only unbelieving or disgruntled religionists. The necessity for separate organizations and a division of labor among reformers. The Secular Union. Important facts and arguments in a compact form. E. C. Walker. 5c.

RIGHTS OF MAN. Thomas Paine. Answer to Burke's attack upon the French revolution. A political treatise of great general value, as advancing liberty and democracy. Contains the fundamental principles of true representation. Cloth, 50c; paper, 25c.

RUBAIYAT (Quatrains) OF OMAR KHAYYAM. Edward FitzGerald's interpretation; with original introduction; special cover; latest version. Paper, 50c.

RULED BY THE TOMB. A discussion of free thought and free love. Oxford Northcote. 15c.

SCIENCE IN STORY; or, Sammy Tubbs, the Boy Doctor, and Spunk, the Troublesome Monkey. For young folks. Dr. E. B. Foote. Five volumes in "red line," presentation edition. $5. Five volumes, plainer binding, $3.50; all in one volume, $2.

SEXUAL PHYSIOLOGY FOR THE YOUNG. Being the fifth volume of "Science in Story." 250 pages; cloth bound; illustrated. 50c.

SONGS OF THE UNBLIND CUPID. J. Wm. Lloyd. Edition de luxe. Verses printed from Kelmscott type upon deckle edged hand made paper of cream tint. Initial letters, ornaments and borders are in red; initial letter and sketch upon the opening page are hand painted in water colors. Covers brown, with choice of silver or gold lettering. Very handsome gift book. $5.

STUDIES IN SOCIOLOGY. In four parts: I., The Law of Happiness; II., The Law of Individual Control; III., The Law of Exchange; IV., The Law of Environment. Albert Chavannes. 25c.

TALKS ON NATURE. Important information for both sexes. Dr. J. H. Greer. 192 pages. Reduced from 50 to 25c.

THE ABOLITION OF MARRIAGE. John Beverly Robinson. Together with Isabel's Intention (Mariette), Reminiscences of Berlin Heights (A. Warren), and The Sense and Love in Freedom (Oscar Rotter). 25c.

THE BAR SINISTER AND LICIT LOVE, including the first biennial proceedings of the Legitimation League, and a full account of the Lanchester case, with full-page half-tone pictures of Edith Lanchester, and Lillian Harman. Handsomely bound in green and gold covers. 367 pages. 25c.

THE BLUE LAWS OF CONNECTICUT. Taken from the Code of 1650 and the public records of the Colony of Connecticut previous to 1665. With an account of the persecution of Witches and Quakers in New England, and some extracts from the Blue Laws of Virginia. Copiously illustrated. 25c.

THE BRITISH BARBARIANS. Grant Allen, the greatest of the Hill-Top pioneers. Dedicated "to all who have heart enough, brain enough, and soul enough to understand it." Handsomely bound in cloth. 281 pages. $1.

THE WOMAN WHO DID. Grant Allen. A powerful story of a refined, educated and high-spirited woman who dared to defy the tyranny of church and state and ignore the institution of marriage. Handsomely bound in cloth. $1.

THE NEW HEDONISM. Grant Allen. The opening paragraph says: "The old asceticism said: 'Be virtuous and you will be happy.' The new hedonism says: 'Be happy and you will be virtuous.'" In another place the writer says: "In proportion as men have freed themselves from mediæval superstitions have they begun to perceive that the unclean and impure things are cowardice and anæmism; that the pure and beautiful and ennobling thing is the fit and worthy exercise of the reproductive function." Paper cover; 12 large pages; twelve copies, 50c. Single copy, 5c.

THE CHICAGO MARTYRS. The famous speeches of the eight condemned anarchists in Judge Gary's Court, and Altgeld's reasons for pardoning Fielden, Neebe and Schwab. 5c.

THE COMING WOMAN. Lillie D. White. 5c.

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM. Principles and platform of organized Freethought. 10c.

THE EVOLUTION OF MODESTY. Jonathan Mayo Crane. A consideration of the origin of clothes and the reasons why people wear clothing. Here are a few questions it answers: What is modesty? What is the cause of it? What is the use of it? What is the cause of the feeling of shame? Is nudity immodest? What is the cause of the notion that it is shameful to expose some parts of the body? Why do not all peoples agree as to what parts of the body should be concealed? 5c.

THE FOUNTAIN OF LIFE; or, The Threefold Power of Sex. Lois Waisbrooker. 10c.

THE FUTURE OF SECULARISM. When will the Cause of Justice triumph? 5c.

THE PRODIGAL DAUGHTER; or, The Price of Virtue. Rachel Campbell. Together with Legal Wifehood (Lucinda B. Chandler), Life's Gifts (Olive Schreiner), and Marriage—What It Was and Is; Will the Coming Woman Marry? 25c.

THE REVIVAL OF PURITANISM. E. C. Walker. 10c.

THE RIGHTS OF CHILDREN. R. B. Kerr. Together with What Are Women Here For? (H. R. Foote, Jr., M. D.), The New Martyrdom (Lillian Harman), and The Will, from the French of Guy de Maupassant. 25c.

THE SANCTITY OF MARRIAGE. As viewed from a moral and sanitary standpoint. A solemn protest against the present demoralizing management of that institution, its effects upon offspring and its influence upon education. By Dr. Robert A. Greer. A valuable "opening wedge" in missionary work. Price reduced from 25c to 10c.

THE SECRET INSTRUCTIONS OF THE JESUITS. A reprint from an edition published in 1723, quoted by the highest authorities as authentic. The work is redolent of Jesuit craft and is a plain index to the underhand working of that order against the welfare of individuals and society. 25c.

THE STATE: ITS HISTORIC ROLE. Prince Peter Kropotkin. 10c.

THE UNWOMANLY WOMAN. Lizzie M. Holmes. Together with That Great Fraud, Velvet Society (Moses Hull), Virgin Soil (George Egerton), and Normal Sexual Action (Ernest Wilnes). 25c.

THE WORM TURNS. Revolutionary Poems. Voltairine de Cleyre. 10c.

THOMAS JEFFERSON. His Political, Social and Religious Philosophy. Gen. M. M. Trumbull. 5c.

TOKOLOGY. A book for every woman. By Alice B. Stockham, M. D. Illustrated. Tokology teaches possible painless pregnancy and parturition, giving full, plain directions for the care of a woman before and after confinement. The ailments of pregnancy can be prevented as well as the pains and dangers of childbirth avoided and women need not go down to death giving birth to children. English, German or Swedish. $1.25.

TRAVELS IN FAITH. By Capt. Robert C. Adams. His mental experience from superstition to rationalism. Cloth, 75c; paper, 25c.

VACCINATION A GIGANTIC CRIME. Samuel Darling. 15c.

VINDICATION OF THOMAS PAINE. Col. R. G. Ingersoll. Dealing with all the slanders brought against the name and fame of Paine. A little pamphlet which every admirer of Thomas Paine should have by him for reference. Paper, 15c.

VITAL FORCE. Magnetic Exchange and Magnetation. Albert Chavannes. 5c.

WHAT THE YOUNG NEED TO KNOW: a Primer of Sexual Rationalism. Edwin C. Walker. "Let us cease to be ashamed of what makes us men, of what makes us women, of what gives us the kisses of lovers and the encircling arms of babes." Paper covers; 42 large pages. 15c.

WHAT IS RELIGION? Ingersoll's last public address, delivered at the meeting of the Free Religious Association in Boston on June 1, 1899. To which is appended the poem, "Declaration of the Free," the last verse written by the great Freethinker. 5c.

WHEN LOVE IS LIBERTY AND NATURE LAW. John Badcock, Jr. 10c.

WHY THE UNDERTONE? An open letter to Judge Gary. Sarah E. Amos. 10c.

WOMAN, CHURCH, AND STATE. Matilda Joslyn Gage. This is Mrs. Gage's last and crowning work. Every woman ought to read it. Every liberty woman and man will want it. A burning protest against the tremendous wrong done woman by the church, which controlled the state. It ought to be widely read for the good it will do. Cloth, $1.60; paper, 75c.

WOMAN IN THE PAST, PRESENT AND FUTURE. Woman was the first human being that tasted bondage. Woman was a slave before the slave existed. The basis of all oppression is economic dependence on the oppressor. This has been the condition of woman in the past and is so still. She is now a slave of the slave. This work is August Bebel's masterpiece. 8vo, 575 pages. 50c.

Address M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

Price 2 Cents.

LUCIFER.

THE LIGHT-BEARER.

THIRD SERIES, VOL. VI., No. 25. CHICAGO, ILLINOIS, JULY 3, E. M. 302. [C. E. 1902.] WHOLE No. 924

STORM AND CALM.

There is a grandeur in a stormful sea;
And breathless awe is mine when on the shore
That trembles neath its shock, I stand and o'er
Ocean's expanse gaze long and silently;
The roaring, laboring waves then seem to me
Most like to myriad warriors mixed ie war;
The followers each of some great conqueror
Who tyrant o'er a world of men would be.
But most I love it when a mighty peace
Rests on its bosom; then its solemn sound
And calmest aspect image to me One,
A power by night as by the morning sun,
Standing where vigilance may never cease,
Alone, great in his strength, on his own ground.

WILLIAM FRANCIS BARNARD.

Some Virtues.

"We must beware lest there enter our soul certain parasitic virtues."—Maeterlinck.

Alas! for Prudence, poor thing. She would be right, and she is only safe, She would be sure, and she ever falters. She would be just, and she always sees double. She would be rich, and she is perennially bankrupt.

Yet there are many that pin their faith to Prudence, worshiping in her temple night and morning.

She embodies the principle of negation. She is the stepmother of opinion, and would choke it before it is grown. She will wet-nurse freedom to death, if, indeed, she do not strangle it in its birth.

But it is with love that she is most cruel. First she cuts love's wings, to keep him to earth. Then she hangs chains of doubt on his feet. She covers him with useless clothes so that he shall be decent. Then she makes him go at a jog-trot so that he shall not get over heated; then she prods him with the goad of custom so that he may keep going and not become chilled.

Then she sets the myrmidons of the law and the church on him, and love is finished: arrested, jailed, executed.

Yes, alas! for Prudence. But did I say "poor thing?" Oh, no; no poor thing she. Poor things we, who are her willing slaves. Why have we so exalted her that she stands among the virtues? Perhaps, though, she got in there by some collusion with others of those ladies who are not so immaculate as their admirers would have us think. Modesty, for example; she appears before men with a candid front; but she will not look a woman in the eye, so afraid is she of exposure by the sex that knows her and her base origin. Gratitude, again, is a sneaking, snivelling sort of a creature; hers is just the spirit that would give honors to the unworthy, if she were paid for it.

Perhaps the most universally worshipped of all these goddesses is jealousy. Her image is held in the heart. Both sexes equally pay tribute to her. She is not only a temple deity, she s a goddess of the hearth, of the home. She has no detractors. Her votaries may kill, maim, or enslave the body of their victims, they may break or corrupt the spirit; there is no redress to be had. Lo! it was done in the name of the goddess.

There may be other imposters in the galaxy of the virtues: but these are enough. What can any exterior system of religion do for a race, whose household gods are Prudence and Jealousy?

L. H. EARLE.

The Statistics of Vaccination.

One might well hesitate before taking up the cudgels of controversy with so cocksure an advocate as C. L. James; not so much through fear of that gentleman's prowess as through fear that the battle once begun, it would never conclude,

"And bring sweet peace with all her pleasant train."

At the risk of loosening a formidable array of words in the mouth of that one who would set me right, however, I will venture to observe that the action of the Montreal asses to which Mr. James sarcastically, and it would seem approvingly refers in his recent Lucifer comment on my little fable, savors strongly of that persuasiveness to which certain people resort when they cannot convince by legitimate means. Threatening with the lamp post those who oppose vaccination is hardly the best way, so it seems to me, to carry conviction to the mind; but then I will not carp overmuch about this, merely remarking that Mr. James and his Montreal friends have their way of proving a thing while I have another.

As for statistics: Carlyle says something to the effect that we must get up statistics; not in the vain hope of arriving at the truth, but in order to keep the ignorance of others from being thrust upon us; and while I believe that statistics are valuable to a limited degree in determining some matters, these vaccination statistics are "notoriously unreliable." Let me then, after making this statement, place over against the dread news from Montreal some statistics for Mr. James to dispose of, not with a lamp post.

Dr. Friedrich, head of the Board of Health of Cleveland Ohio, has just published some vaccination and anti-vaccination statistics in a report, from which I quote the salient parts as follows:

"It affords me great pleasure to state that the house-to-house disinfection freed Cleveland from smallpox. Since Aug. 23, 1901, to this very hour of writing, not a single case has originated in this city, but seven cases were imported. The disease raged here uninterruptedly since 1898. We relied upon vaccination and quarantine as the most effective weapons to combat it, but in spite of all our efforts it doubled itself every year and was in a fair way of repeating the record of last year, as in 1900 we had 993 cases and from Jan. 1 to July 21, 1901, the number amounted to 1223. On this date I was called to take charge of the health office, with seventeen cases on hand. I had been in the city's employ ever since 1899, and it had fallen to my lot to investigate and diagnose most of the cases of smallpox that occurred in Cleveland. During that time I observed that, after disinfection with formaldehyde of a house in which we had found smallpox, never another case could be traced to this house. On the other hand, vaccination had given us many untoward symptoms. Frequently it did not 'take' at all. One-fourth of all cases developed sepsis instead of vaccina. Some arms swelled clear down to the wrist joint, with pieces of flesh as big as a silver dollar and twice as thick dropping right out, leaving an ugly, suppurating wound, which to heal took in many cases over three months. Finally, four cases of tetanus developed after vaccination, so that the people became alarmed, and rightly so.

"I laid these facts before Mayor Johnson and proposed to stop vaccination entirely and instead of it disinfect thoroughly with formaldehyde every section of the city where smallpox had made its appearance; also to give the city a general cleaning up. The Mayor not only consented to my plan, but also gave me all aid needed. I formed two squads of disinfectors, preferring medical students for the work. Each squad consisted of twenty men, with a regular sanitary patrolman at their head, and each man was provided with a formaldehyde generator. Thus equipped they started out to disinfect every section of the city where the disease had shown its head, and every house in this section, no matter if smallpox had been within or not, and every room, nook and corner of the house, special attention being paid to winter clothes that had been stored away, presumably laden with germs. It took over three months to do the work, but the result was most gratifying. After July 23 seven more cases developed, the last one Aug. 23.

"Cleveland is now free from smallpox, and from the worst infected city it has become the cleanest."

After Mr. James has tried his splendid gift of words upon Dr. Friedrich's report, will he tell the world how it is that Leicester, England, is practically free from smallpox while less than five per cent of children born are vaccinated, whereas up to 1872 vaccination was almost universal there while smallpox held its own. Ironicus, an American, has lived in this very city, and knows of what he speaks. The people of Leicester have fought the British Government itself over vaccination. Their opposition was based upon experience.

A reasoner of the James type will find that the asses listen well to bluster; let Mr. James cultivate this gift, it fits his spirit well. As for the efficacy of vaccination let us have the matter kept open, and not closed, even with lamp posts.

IRONICUS.

Ruminations.

I see that a Chicago jury, determined to take a front rank in asininity, has nullified a contract for the purchase of Balzac's works, on the ground of their alleged immorality. The condemnation of Shakespeare is next in order. Comstockism has poisoned the American people so thoroughly that "respectability" and imbecility have become synonymous in this country.

* * *

The compositor was rather rough on me in No. 921, in making me credit Mrs. Voynich with "extraordinary power of dogmatic characterization." What I wrote was "dramatic characterization." I am also very sure that I wrote "significant," and not "insignificant," in referring to the "Romance of Zion Chapel." At any rate, that was my intention.

* * *

I see that several answer the question as to what they would do if their sweetheart should love another, in such a manner as to imply that the new love must necessarily imply the loss of the old love. This is to miss the very point of the question. Of course, any decent man or woman would surrender a lover who had ceased to love, without deserving any special credit for such an elementary act of decency. Lucifer is a perennial protest against the unfathomable vileness of the slaveholding husbands and wives, who unfortunately constitute the bulk of the population. Practically all of Lucifer's readers are agreed to this extent. The real question, which "L. C., N. Y.," Lora Carter and some others seem to lose sight of is: What would you do, if your sweetheart loved another, without ceasing to love you? That a simultaneous love for two or more of the opposite sex is possible, ought to be generally recognized by this time, even though it plays havoc with the monogamic superstition. If I have lost the love of my sweetheart, I will let her go, with my best wishes for her happiness apart from me. But I shall certainly not part with her simply because her heart is large enough to contain love for others, as well as for myself. The matter concerns her, and not myself, and could in no way alter my relations with her. If anything, I shall be glad that more happiness has come into her life. How can a free man or woman take any other position? JAMES F. MORTON, JR.

Social Distinctions.

The woman whom Voltairine de Cleyre saw taken to quod recently, must have looked very much like Fantine, in Les Miserables, when she pitched into M. Batamabois. Yet Victor Hugo has managed to make Fantine and even Eponine interesting. But then, you see, they lived a long way off—in Paris or Metz (M. sur M.—does that mean Metz sur Moselle?)—and if they lived in Philadelphia it might be different. Sympathy is always easy to bestow on Borioboola Gha—because it costs nothing, way out there.

However it may be with Kate Austin, I have to confess knowing a great deal about women of this kind; and if such knowledge is rarely acquired without some experiences which may excite regret, the remedy is to make a good use of it at last.

I am sure my view of their situation is not sloppy, because I could never be imposed on by those sentimentalisms of Victor Hugo's which really are so—making out that Fantine was wise to love her student, e. g. that she was justified in selling herself to provide for Cosette, that parents like the Thenardiers were apt to have children as much superior to education and environment as little Gavroche and Eponine.

The true distinction is not between prostitutes or others coming within the definition of Les Miserables (the outcasts), and the respectables, but between people capable and incapable of better things than their actual state. Some of each are to be found both among the respectables and Les Miserables. It follows that if we would distinguish characters justly, we must begin by rubbing out the damnable imaginary line between the respectables and Les Miserables.

The study of degeneracy and penology is useful for the purpose of reducing these distinctions to precision, though for that of seeing them plainly enough in general, the only two requisites are actual acquaintance and unbiased common sense. All penologists have remarked that the proportion of criminals, in the sense of jurisprudence, is much smaller among women than among men. It is greatest where the habits of the two sexes are least differentiated. Crimes of sexual origin, as murder with a view to marriage or adultery, are more characteristic of women than men—that is, account for a larger proportion of their grave transgressions. The suggestion has been made by penological writers that prostitution largely explains the difference. Where men would become thieves or something similar, women become prostitutes, who are only reckoned quasi-criminal. This appears to be borne out by statistics. When Sanger published his History of Prostitution, there were (in round numbers) 5000 prostitutes, half of them "regulars," known to the police in New York, whose population was then estimated at 700,000. Adding them to the women legally reckoned criminals, would induce equality of crime between the sexes. It may be said that New York is not a test, because prostitution is rare in the country as compared with the cities; but this I believe to be a mistake. Prostitution, like all crime, is quite as common in the country as the cities—it only attracts less attention through being less open, professional, and limited to quarters where it can be easily seen. The alleged difference in proportion of crime among men and women appears, therefore, to be unscientific. The real difference is only in the kind of crime. But this, though by no means unimportant to the criminalogist, is viewed in his system from a point of view very unlike the lawyers'. Degeneracy, measured by its physical stigmata, does not keep pace with the assumed heinousness of crimes but their inveteracy. It is more pronounced among pilferers, tramps, prostitutes, professional beggars, whose misdeeds are highly instinctive, than among murderers or pirates, of whom the latter have been found among the most reformable of felons—their crime being largely what is called collective—that is possible only for an association, to which a person, once out of it, will not return.

Now if Voltairine de Cleyre will enlarge her acquaintance with prostitutes a little, I venture to predict she will have no difficulty in seeing that a considerable part belong to the criminalogical grades of Born Criminals or Criminaloids, marked by stigmata unquestionably physical—the coarse, rude figure; the misshapen head, with enormous sensual and emotional but dwarfish intellectual and moral "organs;" the unusual complexion; the features, perhaps not without beauty, but gross, vulgar, sensual, furtive, even brutal. Of her judgment that such people cannot be reformed, criminalogy says only that it is a little too harsh. It was among the glories of Christianity to proclaim, for the first time, that in a measure they can. Their impulsive, susceptible disposition makes it quite possible for them to be led right as well as wrong—provided some one is always on hand to lead them. What cannot be done is to make them independent of outside influence. Like all the lower types of humanity, they have feeling, but no stamina.

By the time Miss de Cleyre has learned this, she must also, I think, have perceived that many prostitutes are very unlike these. Such historic names as Aspasia, Phryne, Magdalene, Afra, Agnes Sorel, Emma Hamilton, are enough to show that women outside the ranks of respectability may have not only good, but great and exceptional, qualities—which it would be unreasonable to suppose means no real faults. It is not more evident to one who has been among them with open eyes that a large proportion of prostitutes are born ne'er-do-wells, than that another large proportion are nothing of the sort. It is true, they are, in the language of both law and criminalogy, Habitual Misdemeanants. But the Habitual grade is the exact one at which criminalogy finds the balance of hope to be wavering and uncertain. This grade consists of persons who, physically and mentally, appear almost normal. It includes at least three classes, much more easily distinguished in theory than practise.

1. Criminals, not absolutely born such, yet by choice.

2. "Criminals" whose "crime," though "inveterate," is not criminalogically so bad, because it is compatible with many virtues—is a vice, a bad habit, but not a general depravation.

3. Victims of social injustice—those whose badness would be imperceptible if it were not of a peculiar kind, which society has ordained shall be a trade. Miss de Cleyre's idea that there is a point at which prostitution becomes incorrigible; and that all prostitutes end as "old hags, holding themselves cheap at the corner of the saloon and boasting how high-priced they once were," is a relic of this injustice—at any rate it is a mistake, just like the temperance lecturer's dogma that a drunkard is merely a moderate drinker come to maturity. Aspasia, Phryne, Agnes Sorel, Emma Hamilton, never found any such point, and a considerable proportion of prostitutes, as we see them, never do. On the other hand, it is unquestionably true that not a few of the best and most hopeful among unfortunate women are driven by this injustice to suicide or some other form of recklessness which might be called that.

The remedy? Prostitutes should be treated just like other people! They are in fact just like other people. Not at all like each other; but individually not distinguishable from other women. They have nothing in common to distinguish them but a trade, which is, indeed, a bad one; but which I needs must say they share with "the respectable married prostitute." The error in all methods of dealing with them, including the Christian ides of "reform," is to judge them, not as individuals, but members of a class. Anarchism should easily learn this lesson of social science, that classes are factitious, and individuals alone distinguishable by nature. C. L. JAMES.

"The Woman Who Did," Again.

"The Woman Who Did"—did nothing." Voltairine de Cleyre once sententiously observed. But Herminia aroused thought, and that, it seems to me, was a useful work. Lydia R. Todd (p. 197) has only words of condemnation for her. To me, also, it appears that Herminia made a mistake when she failed to explain her views to her child; but she should have left Dolores as free to condemn and discard her views as she herself had been to discard her father's orthodox teachings. I believe she could have retained the daughter's love and respect, if she had always frankly explained everything to her, during childhood, instead of leaving the knowledge to come as a shock, on attaining young womanhood. But then the story would have lacked a dramatic climax, would, perhaps, have seemed flat and dull, and would not have attracted the attention and aroused the thought it has done. Fortunately such dramatic climaxes are not essential in real life.

Many women feel, as did Herminia, that it is difficult to tell the simple truth to children. They put off the evil day, hoping the task will grow easier as the little ones grow older. They find, when too late, that the children have grown away from them, that the sympathy and confidence, so easy to secure in childhood no longer exists: "There never seem to be any openings!" said one woman in my hearing. "There are ever so many every day," said another. Such is the difference in the point of view!

As an illustration, I will give one experience of a mother as told to me. Her little daughter, like most other children, is passionately fond of all so called dumb animals. Early one morning the "dog-catchers" came to the street in which she lived and caught a poor little unlicensed dog. Freda threw herself on the bed crying bitterly. Her mother said all she could to comfort her. With sob-broken voice, Freda said, "If I only had five dollars, I'd go and get poor doggie out of the Pound!" The mother explained that this was only one of hundreds and thousands of similar cases. "Well, when I grow up, I'll earn enough money to get all the dogs out and stop their suffering!"

This set the child to thinking, and a few days later she said, "The next thing they do, they'll be licensing children, too!"

"They practically do that now," the mother replied.

"Why, what do you mean? How do they license children?"

"There is a law which requires people, before they can have children, to take out a license to marry, and that is the same as licensing children."

Freda was puzzled, and after a pause—"But Grace and Arthur didn't get a license, and get married, and they have Harry!"

"Yes; it is possible to refuse to obey the law, and as they did not think it necessary to take out a license they refused to do it."

"Did Helen and Jack get a license for Teddy?"

"Yes, and they were married by a preacher. It often makes a great deal of talk and trouble when people refuse to take a license, so even some people who do not think they need the license go through the form because they think it is easier."

"Well—and did you get a license for me?"

"No, we did not think it necessary."

"I'm glad that I'm not licensed!" exclaimed Freda, as she jumped in glee. L. H.

"It is so foolish to speak of falling in love," said the romantic girl. "To fall implies a drop, a going down, while love is something high and exalted."

"Perhaps you are right," answered the prosaic man. "Possibly it would be better to say that we fall into wedlock."—Chicago Post.

Lucifer, the Lightbearer

M. HARMAN, EDITOR AND PUBLISHER.

PUBLISHED EVERY WEEK AT 500 FULTON STREET, CHICAGO, ILL.

Terms: One year, $1; six months, 50 cents; three months, 25 cents.

Entered at the Chicago Postoffice as Second-Class Mail Matter.

Eastern Representative, E. C. Walker, 244 W. 143d street, New York.

Lucifer—Its Meaning and Purpose.

LUCIFER—The planet Venus; so called from its brightness.—Webster's Dictionary.

LUCIFEROUS—Giving Light; affording light or the means of discovery.—Same.

LUCIFIC—Producing Light.—Same.

LUCIFORM—Having the form of Light.—Same.

The name Lucifer means Light-Bringing or Light-Bearing, and the paper that has adopted this name stands for Light against Darkness—for Reason against Superstition—for Science against Tradition—for Investigation and Enlightenment against Credulity and Ignorance—for Liberty against Slavery—for Justice against Privilege.

The Woman Who Dares.*

Murva Kroom's was a motherless, cheerless, childhood. Her father was cold, harsh, unloving and unloveable. Her stepmother was coarse, ignorant, unsympathetic. The father ruled his little household with the proverbial "rod of iron." Murva grew to womanhood silent, repressed, and with an intense longing for liberty. At twenty-one she left her father's house, nominally to spend a few weeks with her only friend, Kate Melton, who was soon to marry Dr. Donald Crawford. Her real intention, however, was to never return to what she felt was her prison, not her home. Harold Deering, a college friend of Dr. Crawford, visits at the home of Mrs. Melton, and he and Murva become deeply interested in each other. Murva is obliged to temporarily forego her resolution to remain away from home by a message that her father is ill and needs her, so she returns to him and Deering returns to New York.

Deering is a good-hearted "man of the world," apparently generous, but really a spoiled child of fortune. His views on woman and marriage, as given in conversation with Dr. Crawford, are those held by the majority of men today. For example:

"Is a woman wronged when her husband gives her all he is capable of giving and it does not come up to her expectations?" returned Harold Deering. "The whole question resolves itself into understanding the nature of a man. Women cannot have this understanding till they have had experience; and experience upsets their preconceived views and dispels their fond illusions. Then they cry out because they are hurt and, feeling hurt, deem themselves wronged when the man has only been consistent with himself: has been acting according to his nature, which marriage cannot change. Therefore I say that the rational view of love and marriage must supersede the idealistic one; and that the marriage entered upon with this view will give promise of more satisfaction than one based upon the other. Yet I know that at present it is the man, the husband, who must hold it and who must act according to it, guiding the wife, who is the weaker of the two; for woman is emphatically the weaker vessel, and much depends upon the strength and firmness of the husband."

After a few months Murva and Deering meet again. They love each other, and to Murva this wonderful new love which glorifies her life seems the gateway to the freedom for which she has always longed. Her father raves when he is informed of her intention to marry and leave him. He considers her undutiful, ungrateful. She says:

"Where is my gratitude for what you have done for me?" she repeated, as she looked him steadily in the face. "I have none! Does a prisoner feel gratitude for the jailor who locks him in the cell and leaves him to wear his heart out in tears and solitude? Does the dumb animal feel gratitude for the hand that feeds him only that it may derive the more benefit from his labor? Does the convict condemned to the mines feel gratitude to the powers that spare his life but shut out from him all that can make life desirable, even to the free air and sunshine? I look back over my life, father, and I can remember nothing to be especially grateful to you for. You have fed and clothed me, I have had a seat at your table and a bed under your roof; but I have had no home. From my earliest recollection I have never even been able to know what a home is. I have grown up, I do not know how, existing from day to day, but never living; never experiencing that sense of living which belonged to my years. I have felt as if I were half a corpse, dragging around with me a dead semblance of myself. Every natural impulse in me has been frozen into silence, and I have been starved, yes, starved for that which is life itself to every human soul, till the cur fondness of the very dogs in the street has been grateful to me. You have never shown me one spark of love since I can remember. You have always treated me as your goods and chattel, to go here and go there, to fetch and carry according to your humor. Never in my whole life have you treated me as an individual, responsible, human being. And you expect me to be grateful for this? Why should you not rather expect that my heart would be as hard as the nether-millstone? Is that the way to develop gratitude?"

Murva had risen to her feet as she spoke, and now stood before him, towering above him like an avenging angel, her face pale and set, her eyes dark with excited feeling.

"Twenty-one years I have lived this life," she went on, "and at last the day of my deliverance has come. And shall I not welcome it as the prisoner welcomes the time when his prison door is opened and he is set free? Is not that a time for rejoicing rather than for lamentation? Why do I accept Mr. Deering? Because he loves me, and because I love him. Because I have known in the few weeks that I have known him, more joy and comfort than all my twenty-one years outside of them contains. Because, stranger as he is, I can put my hand in his and go forth to meet the unknown future fearlessly, feeling that there can be no misery worse than my past, no home more insufficient than mine has always been, no life harder to bear than a loveless one. And after my twenty-one years of bondage I stand today a free woman, because I claim my freedom, and will no longer submit to your tyranny."

For several years Murva is happy. She has not found the freedom she hoped for, but she is enveloped in an atmosphere of love and luxury. All that she wants is hers—except the condition for which, all her life, she has longed. She does not own herself. Deering loves her body, it is his property, he likes to see it well cared for and beautiful—but the desire to own herself grows upon her until she can no longer keep silent. Gently and lovingly she tries to explain her feelings to her husband. He is surprised, shocked. Has not he been the best of husbands, treated her with all kindness and love, provided for her every want? Yes, but she feels she needs more than that in order to attain the highest development possible to her as a woman.

"It is not right or just or true," she went on, "that a woman must be absorbed in a man because he is her husband and she is his wife. She has her own individuality, which cannot be extinguished, and marriage must afford her room for its exercise. This idea of proprietorship, together with the belief that woman's only office is to minister to man, prepares the way for that bondage which can belong only to the wife because she is a woman: a bondage which rests upon her so-called duty of ministration, which must include all she is, leaving nothing of herself for herself. Not even her body is her own, but all is his because his necessities demand this all, and the wife must give it. What freedom is there in this position? I cannot remain in it, Harold, I cannot rest content in this bondage,—for it is one, say what you will, where there is no consideration for my own necessities or even recognition of them. It is not I you object to, it is the position. You are but the means which bring what it holds home to me. It is not because I am your wife that I rebel. It is because I am a wife under these conditions which demand of me, through you, what I cannot and must not longer grant. I do not blame you, I blame it; but my resistance will naturally act as resistance to you."

By Ursula N. Gestefeld. 358 pages. Price $1.25. For sale at this office.

Deering cannot comprehend her. He considers himself outraged, insulted, by her unwomanly declaration of independence. He demands that she resume her wifely submission, and at once, or leave his house. She chooses the latter alternative, and returns, temporarily, to the friends of her childhood—Kate, the doctor, and the Meltons. They welcome her with open arms, as a sister and daughter. While there she meets, while taking a walk one day, Haddie Wilson, a school acquaintance of her girlhood. Through poverty, Haddie, a pretty girl, had been forced to leave school and go to work in the mills to support herself and invalid grandfather. The pressure was too great and like many another, Haddie ran away to seek her fortune in a great city. There she took what seemed at the time the easiest course and when Murva met her had sunk very low. She could scarcely believe Murva's protestations of friendship, and it was not until Murva revealed herself to her as a fellow-sufferer who also needed sympathy and help, that Haddie would listen to her. Murva asked her to abandon the life she was leading, and offered to help her find employment. But Murva had much to learn from Haddie:

"You see yourself that it's no use, don't you?" continued Haddie. "What if I wanted to give up this life and try for another? Even though you would do what you could to help me, it would be a struggle for nothing, for the way isn't open. Even those good Christian women who are so anxious to reclaim the fallen would not let me forget, for one moment, what I was. They will pay their money to maintain what they call a home for such, and then publish it far and wide, if they do not put a sign on the house to tell everybody what it is. No! the woman who is once in that position is always in it, no matter what she does, for those who will not forget the 'has been'; and it is the women who have the best memory for this. I tell you"—and she struck her clenched hand violently on the tree-trunk—"it's women themselves who make it impossible for us to be other than we are; who stand solidly in our way, with their hands against us if we show any disposition to step in among them! And what are they themselves, many of them?" she went on with her old defiance of manner. "They are married, and we are not. They are earning their living, and so are we. They live with men for the sake of a home, for fine clothes and a position, and often with men they hate. They exchange what they are for what they want. What more do we? But their way is the respectable one, and ours is not, though I can't see any difference myself. And these women who sell their bodies just as I do mine call me a 'fallen woman.' Ha! ha! ha!"

Her scornful laugh chilled Murva's very soul, while the sting of truth in what she said kept her silent.

"Then there are other women," Haddie went on, "who are worse off than I am, except that they do not bear the brand I do. They are bound hand and foot to the men they live with, perfect slaves to their every desire, without the right of refusal of the least of these, and because they are married to them. I am myself and can say, No, when I please. I do not have to submit to anyone unless it suits me. I've got freedom and they've got respectability. I wouldn't change with them to stand what they have to."

Haddie feels that it is too late for her to change, but tells Murva that there are countless numbers of other young girls in the position in which she found herself when she left home. If Murva will help these girls to find employment and be to them a helpful, sympathetic friend, she says, many of them could be saved from despair and degradation. Murva eagerly accepts the suggestion, and establishes a home of her own to which Haddie brings girls in need of her helping hand. The story of the work done by these two women, and the experience of Harold after he drives Murva away, is interesting. The story of the lives of Kate and Donald, too, and other characters of the story are really as important as that of the heroine. But it is impossible to give more than a bare outline of the trend of the work.

The treatment, while not orthodox or conventional, is religious, and the author clings to many of the old ideas, including the duty of children to obey and love their parents, regardless of the unworthiness of those parents. But for all that I consider it a great and most useful work in its inculcation of the idea of self-ownership of woman in marriage. For the woman in marriage is just as much in need of such education as is her sister without its pale. L. H.

By the Way.

It is announced that Mrs. Astor has engaged Louise Michel to deliver a lecture in her parlors. Three hundred dollars is the sum said to be paid for the lecture. It is to be hoped the report is well-founded.

A dinner to Ida C. Craddock, on her release from prison, was given by the Free Speech League at the Clarendon Hotel, New York, on Friday evening, June 20. We have received a report of it which will appear in our next issue.

To be "spoiling for a fight" seems a characteristic of most small boys. Let a new boy come to a school or a neighborhood, and he must fight for his place. And as men are simply big boys, they, also, seem to feel that by fighting they must win whatever they desire. Of course "the other fellow" always "begins" it,—no one is himself to blame. But one can always end it. The big boys who write for Lucifer are fairly good as a rule, but the signs of a "squabble" among a few of them are becoming pronounced and it is necessary to gently remind them that Lucifer's space is too small to devote any part of it to a boxing arena. If they feel that remarks concerning each other's personal characteristics are really necessary I will cheerfully forward personal letters, if addressed in care of this office, and they can "have it out" at any length they desire—limited only by the time, labor, and postage they can afford for that purpose. As Mr. C. F. Hunt feels himself aggrieved by Mr. James' reference to him, I give space to the following note, hoping that we will soon have an end of such controversy:

"C. L. James chooses to use valuable space for slurring personalities, a certain indication of lack of material for fair debate. For the satisfaction of attempting to irritate me, he says I am about the only reader of Lucifer who cannot see that my reply to him contradicts itself. He dare not try to demonstrate this. Will some other of our wise readers please do so? Why leave a mortal in darkness?

"Mr. James, and other writers beyond the scope of ordinary mortals, should furnish a diagram with every sentence. Illustrated editions of James and Browning might then be utilized in kindergartens. Those who 'suppose bacteriology and antitoxin to be anachronisms—instead of the very latest wrinkle,' will suffer some, unless the feeblest of their partners in misery be fortunate in suggesting that 'obsolete' was intended instead of 'anachronisms.' The unlearned cannot grasp the subtle force of a comparison between a science or a medicine, and an error in chronology."

One great trouble with many writers is that they want "the last word." They seem to feel that a failure to "talk back" is a confession of defeat. Thus a discussion degenerates into mere reiteration. No individual is the sole custodian of the truth. And it is not really of vital importance that all the contributors to Lucifer should hammer away at each other until they are able to agree. Let us each express our opinions and trust to the intelligence of the readers to judge for themselves.

L. H.

Forty copies of Lucifer, no two alike, of 1900 or 1901 will be sent to any address for 15 cents. Nine bundles for $1. We are anxious to place these papers where they will do good. Please let us have your orders soon. State which year you want.

VARIOUS VOICES.

W. W. Martin, Mableton, Ga.:—I like Kate Austin's short article on "Fallen Women." Kate stands on the high plane of the Brotherhood of Man. There are none so good but they have some bad in them, and none so bad but they have some good in them; and the good is capable of development and growth by a true education and wise treatment.

J. E. Collins, New Glarus, Wis.:—I want "Whitman's Ideal Democracy," mentioned in Lucifer, and enclose $1 for it. I am sending you a copy of my book, "The Truth About Socialism." You may not have time just now to read the whole of it, but I would like you to read chapters 18 and 21—one treating of "Socialism Real and False," the other "The Charge that Socialism is a Menace to Liberty," and please make such mention in Lucifer as you think the work deserves.

Mrs. D., Kansas City, Mo.:—Some time ago I wrote you for a sample copy of Lucifer, and am much interested in same and enclose 25 cents for thirteen weeks' subscription. I agree with many of your statements, but living as I do in an atmosphere of bitter opposition to most of your teachings I have but little chance for advancement and broader views on the subjects. But God speed you and let the good work go on. If I can further it by word or deed, will do so and try to prove myself an ardent co-worker.

Lydia R. Todd, 1213 Powell St., San Francisco, California:—"The Woman Who Did" dared defy church and state, ignored the institution of marriage, but did not dare defy Mrs. Grundy; did not dare teach her daughter her own beautiful ideals of love and freedom, but let her find out the conditions under which she was born the best way she could; let outsiders fill her mind with the shallow sophisms of the ignorant mob then killed herself because the girl turned out an ungrateful, shallow-minded upstart, just what she had taught her to be by the cowardice of her own life. Bah! Such books do more harm than good to the cause of freedom. If we are too cowardly to live our lives though the whole world blame, we might as well go on in the old rut and not pretend to be free.

James B. Elliott, 3515 Wallace St., Phila., Pa.:—I have just received word from Belle Chaapel, that her father, Jay Chaapel, a disciple and subscriber of Lucifer passed away on May 29 at Palmetto, Fla. Comrade Chaapel was a staunch defender of Thomas Paine and a member of the Paine Association, and at the time of his demise was preparing an article on the portrait of Thomas Paine that was painted by Mrs. Addie Ballou of San Francisco which has a remarkable history. It was painted for a Fourth of July celebration and the Liberal Club was denied permission to have it displayed in front of their hall.

Mr. Lick hearing of the refusal sent for the Committee and gave them permission to hang it on Main street in front of the building owned by him. He gave the money for the observatory that now bears his name.

Laura J. Langston, Colo.:—Your "Institutional Marriage" received and read and re-read. How I wish every woman in this so-called land of Liberty could read it also. If they could only ignore custom and prejudice long enough to read it through I really believe that custom and prejudice would never receive further attention from them. Woman has not only consented to her bondage but helps draw the chains still tighter by her approval of slavish principles. But a change is coming. In many small things I see the way the wind is blowing and never fail to plant a seed, when the soil is ready. One woman—an ardent devotee of the Methodist church—in speaking of a woman who left her husband because he demanded more than right (for her) in the sexual relation, said she would overlook such things, for man's nature was so different from woman's. Before she went home she had another view of the subject and said she had never thought of that before. That's the trouble—they will not think, and when they try to their thought proves abortive because they are overwhelmingly influenced by tradition.

I enclose 25 cents for "Woman, in the Past, Present and Future." Think I may open up the way for more books of yours. Lucifer is one of the periodicals that are now indispensible to me.

May Huntley, Colorado:—"What would I do if my lover loved another?" Break my heart very likely if I really loved my lover, and as nine out of ten loving women would. I would not scold or cry out or annoy them—if I could help it—it would do no good. I would mourn for my lost love as though he were dead and as hopelessly. For, say what you will, there is no happiness in loving without mutuality, reciprocity. If I had had all this, and had known the deep happiness of a responsive love, and should then lose it—I should then suffer keenly, and then if I could not die would become seared and tough and hard and unamiable, as so many women grow. Love is as necessary to the lovable growth of a woman as light and warmth are to flowers. If they never have it they wither away, if deprived of it after having it and they live—they are simply poorly-healed scars—mere ugly blots on the face of creation. It will not answer her to say, "let her love some one else," or "she need not necessarily lose her lover's love if he loves another;" the true woman does not love easily. It is no light matter for her to learn a man, to love, trust and sympathise with him in every fiber of her being, to be under-tood, trusted and loved in return—when this has once happened, you tear one's very being up by the roots to destroy that love. And no man's love is good for anything to any other woman but the one he is most interested in at the time.

J. G., Mont.:—I have neglected until now to renew my subscription. Am home on furlough—no more dressmaking till September, when I go to town to put my sixteen-years-old girl in school again. I have been very much interested in the question raised in No. 917, and while I do not believe people can tell what they would do, it is interesting to read their thoughts on that subject as it gives a pretty good mental photograph of each individual on the all-important subject of liberty.

"Who most has loved—he most can love again." A nature that has never loved but one is a small, dwarfed one, and knows little of the pleasure, comfort, and grandeur of loving. I hope I shall never be too old to "fall in love." I will be dead indeed if that time ever comes. Now what I think I should do would be to love the other woman if she were congenial, and I have always thought I should love the babies if there were any. My ex-husband is married to a young woman whom I have never met, but would like to, and I feel that I could adopt the whole family if they were in need or trouble and show them what a true sister could be; and I would so like to get hold of the baby if one ever comes—it seems it would be part mine as I have a six years old boy (the only one) by this man, and the fact that I once loved the father dearly will make him always hold a warm corner in my heart.

When I read "What One Woman Did" I wanted to take that woman in my arms—bless her dear, kind, loving heart! My daughter and I want her address.

Defense Fund.

For Lois Waisbrooker and Mattie D. Penhallow, Home, Wash. Amount previously reported, $147.03; R. P., Texas, $5; J. W. A., Wash., $5; Mrs. P. E. D., Ohio $5; A. J., Mich., $1.50; O. N. B., Fla., $1; J. H., Calif., $1; S. D., Wash., 50 cents, A. H., Calif., 25 cents, Mrs. M. P., N. J., 10 cents. Total to date, $166.38.

OLIVER A. VERITY, Treas., Home, Washington.

TOLSTOI'S NEW WORK.

The Slavery of Our Times.

With Portrait of the Gifted Author, and Introduction by the Translator, Aylmer Maude.

CHAPTER TITLES,

I., Goods Porters Who Work Thirty-Seven Hours; II., Society's Indifference While Men Perish; III., Justification of the Existing Position of Sciences; IV., The Assertion of Economic Science that Rural Laborers Must Enter the Factory System; V., Why Learned Economists Assert what is False; VI., Bankruptcy of the Socialist Ideal; VII., Culture or Freedom? VIII., Slavery Exists Among Us; IX., What is Slavery? X., Laws Concerning Taxes, Land and Property; XI., Laws the Cause of Slavery; XII., The Essence of Legislation Is Organized Violence; XIII., What Are Governments? Is it Possible to Exist Without Governments? XIV., How Can Governments Be Abolished? XV., What Should Each Man Do? An Afterword.

Well printed on heavy paper. Substantially bound. 186 pages. Price, $1.50.

Address M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

CAPTAIN JINKS, HERO

BY ERNEST CROSBY.

It is a merciless satire on war and militarism in which the parallel between savagery and soldiery is unerringly drawn. It is a biting burlesque on the various forms of cheap hero-worship. It holds up to withering scorn every important feature of militarism.

Among the accompaniments and results of war exploited and satirized, are hazing at "West Point," the war whoops of the yellow journals, the savagery of war, the Schley-Sampson controversy, civilizing the heathen savage, looting in China, pension abuses, the capture of Aguinaldo, the Peace-Conference, army mismanagement, oculatory attacks by goosey girls, etc.

With 25 Irresistible Drawings by Dan Beard. 12mo, Cloth, Handsome Covers, 100 pages. Price $1.50

Address M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

VICE: ITS FRIENDS AND ITS FOES

BY EDWIN C. WALKER.

CONTENTS:—Brotherhood of Man; The Recognition of Facts; Folly of "For Men Only," Definition of Vice; Horrors of Prostitution; Abnormal Sexuality; Errors of Fathers, Mothers and Teachers; Persecution Does Not Reform; Prostitution and the Crusaders; The "Spoiling of the Heathen;" What are the Effects of Raids and Crusades? The Economic Side of the Problem, Party Politics in Vice Crusading; In What Does Prostitution Consist? Some Causes of Prostitution; Two Kinds of Prostitution Compared; The Opponents of Divorce; "Purifying" the Tenements; Action for Advanced Women.

WITH APPENDIX:—The Wanderings of a Spirit; Our Fair Civilization. The Folly and Cruelty of It All. Price 15c.

Address M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

VACCINATION A CRIME.

With Comments on Other Sanitary Superstitions.

BY FELIX L. OSWALD, M. D.

"Vaccination spreads diseases; vaccination impairs the organic functions; vaccination encourages reliance on worthless remedies; vaccination spreads small-pox; compulsory vaccination furnishes dangerous legal precedents."

With illustrations of diseases frequently resulting from vaccination. 196 pages. Price 10 cents. For sale by M. Harman, 500 Fulton St. Chicago.

DO YOU EVER THINK

Of the fate of the Prodigal Daughter? The Prodigal Son is forgiven and received with rejoicing—why should different treatment be accorded to his sister? For a vivid, true picture of the conditions in homes and factories which produce thousands of so-called fallen women every year, read "The Prodigal Daughter; or, The Price of Virtue," by Rachel Campbell.

SPECIAL OFFER.

This valuable work sent free on receipt of twenty-five cents for a thirteen week's trial subscription to Lucifer the Light Bearer. M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton Street, Chicago, Ill.

Notice! I would be glad to hear from Liberals who would like to correspond with other Liberals. Address (with stamp.)
Snowville, Va. ELMINA DRAKE SLENKER.

924.

If these figures correspond with the number printed on the wrapper of your Lucifer, your subscription expires with this number.

If a copy of Lucifer fails to reach you, please order by number or date.

Lucifer will not be sent "by return mail" unless stamps for postage are enclosed with order.

To NEW SUBSCRIBERS: Your subscription is paid to No. If you have not ordered Lucifer, a friend has subscribed for you. If you do not wish to receive it, please notify us by card or through your postmaster. If you wish to become a regular subscriber you will confer a favor by renewing before the expiration of your trial subscription.

LOVE'S COMING OF AGE.

BY EDWARD CARPENTER.

This is a book with which few will wholly agree, but which nearly every one can read with profit and enjoyment. The subject is the relation of the sexes in the past, present and future, and it is treated with absolute frankness and fearlessness by a writer who unites a broad outlook, a strong grasp of his subject and a charming literary style. The following table of contents will indicate the line of thought followed by the author.

The Sex Passion.
Man, the Ungoverned.
Woman, the Serf.
Woman in Freedom
Marriage: a Retrospect.
Marriage: a Forecast.
The Free Society.
Some remarks on the early star and sex worships.
Notes—On the Primitive Group Marriage; Jealousy; The Family; Preventive Checks to Population.

The book is printed on extra book paper and handsomely bound in cloth. Price, $1.

Address M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

WHITMAN'S IDEAL DEMOCRACY, AND OTHER WRITINGS.

BY HELENA BORN.

Comprising besides the title essay, Thoreau's Joy in Nature; Poets of Revolt; Shelley, Whitman, Carpenter; Whitman's Altruism; Individualism versus Organization; Ingenuities of Economic Argument; The Last Stand Against Democracy in Sex; Inequality in Divorce; Marriage Safeguards. With portrait of author and biographical introduction by Helen Tufts. 125 pages. Edition limited to 500 copies; each copy numbered. Fine paper, uncut pages, bound in boards, paper label. Price $1.

THE AMERICAN INSTITUTE OF PHRENOLOGY, Incorporated 1866, opens its next session, September 3rd, 1902. For particulars apply to the Secretary, M. H. Piercy, care of Fowler & Wells Co., 24 East 22nd St., New York.

JOHN M. CLARKE'S New Method Language Lessons. They include (if desired) Practical Mathematics and Elementary Natural Science. This method is a radical departure from usual routine. Personal interview desirable for any one interested. Lessons at 717 Walnut St., Chicago.

RADICAL LITERATURE.

For Sale by M. Harman, 500 Fulton St., Chicago.

A CHAMBERMAID'S DIARY. By Octave Mirbeau. Translated from the French by Benj. R. Tucker. 466 pages. Handsomely bound in cloth. $1.50.

ADVANCEMENT OF SCIENCE. Prof. John Tyndall's famous Inaugural Address before the British Association for the Advancement of Science, with the articles on Prayer which so stirred the religious world. Cloth, 50c; paper, 25c.

AGE OF REASON. Thomas Paine. Cloth, with steel plate portrait, 90c; paper 15c.

ANARCHISM: Its Philosophy and Ideal. Peter Kropotkin. 5c.

A PHYSICIAN IN THE HOUSE. A New Family Medical Work, by Dr. J. H. Greer. This book is up-to-date in every particular. It will save you hundreds of dollars in doctors' bills. It tells you how to cure yourself by simple and harmless home remedies. It recommends no poisonous or dangerous drugs. It teaches how to save health and life by safe methods. It teaches prevention—that it is better to know how to live and avoid disease than to take any medicine as a cure. It is not an advertisement and has no medicine to sell. It has hundreds of excellent recipes for the cure of the various diseases. It has 16 colored plates showing different parts of the human body. The chapter on Painless Midwifery is worth its weight in gold to women. The "Care of Children" is something every mother ought to read. It teaches the value of Air, Sunshine, and Water as medicines. It contains valuable information for the married. This book cannot fail to please you. If you are looking for health by the safest and easiest means, do not delay getting it. It has eight hundred pages, is neatly bound in cloth, with gold letters, and will be sent by mail or express, prepaid to any address, for $2.75.

A FLEA FOR THE NEW WOMAN. May L. Collins. With large new half-tone portrait. 10c.

A TALE OF THE STRASSBURG GEESE. R. B. Kerr. Together with The Strike of the Strassburg Geese (C. W. Coolridge), A Traveler's Tale (R. B. Kerr), The Cat's Story (Emile Zola) 5c.

AUTONOMY, SELF-LAW. A fragmentary dissertation on the right to non-invasive self-hood. 5c.

BALZAC'S SERAPHITA: The Mystery of Sex. Mary Hanford Ford. Cloth, $1.

BIBLE TEMPERANCE. E. C. Walker. Proving that Liquor Drinking is Commanded, Defended and Enjoined by the Bible, and giving close reference to the chapters and verses. 10c.

BORNING BETTER BABIES—Through regulating reproduction by controlling conception. E. B. Foote, Jr., M. D. 25c.

CAUSES OF HARD TIMES, and the Money Question. Albert Chavannes. 5c.

CHICAGO CONFERENCE OF TRUSTS. Speeches, debates, etc.; 81 portraits of delegates, including Benj. R. Tucker, Laurence Gronlund, William Jennings Bryan, Samuel Gompers, Louis F. Post, and George Schilling. 626 pages, 50c.

CHILDREN OF THE ITALIAN POOR. Paola Lombroso. 5c.

DARWIN'S, THE. (A novel.) Elmina D. Slenker. 25c.

DAWN OF CIVILIZATION, The; or, England in the Nineteenth Century. J. C. Spence. 176 pages. 25c.

DAWN-THOUGHT ON THE RECONCILIATION. By J. Wm. Lloyd. An inspired treatise that, with insight and solution, touches all the questions of life, love, soul and society. A prose-poem, simple enough for a child to enjoy, deep enough to make a philosopher think. The largest creed, the most generous theory, the gladdest gospel. A book of life. A religion of growth and the overlook—freedom and optimism. Read it. Printed in old style antique type, rubricated with portrait of the author. In three editions, de luxe, plain and paper bound. Prices, $1.25, $1.00 and 50c.

DIGGING FOR RED-ROCK. Camp-meeting talks and sketches by Moses Harman. 5c.

DR. FOOTE'S SOCIAL SCIENCE SERIES OF DIME PAMPHLETS—Wedlock; Scientific Marriage; Heredity; A B C of Temperaments; Powell and his Critics; Physiological Marriage; Physical Improvement of Humanity; Causes of Disease, Insanity, and Premature Death; A Step Backward. Any of the above books sent by mail on receipt of price.

DYNAMIC THEORY OF LIFE AND MIND. An attempt to show that all organic beings are both constructed and operated by the dynamic agencies of their respective environments. By James H. Alexander. Over 600 illustrations, 57 chapters, 1,067 pages and a 2-column index of 11 pages. Cloth, $2.75.

EAST TENNESSEE SKETCHES. A and Cecile Chavannes. 25c.

ECONOMICS OF ANARCHY. A Study of the Industrial Type. Dyer D. Lum. 10c.

EIGHT-HOUR MOVEMENT. John P. Altgeld, ex-Governor of Illinois. 5c.

EVOLUTION AND REVOLUTION. Elisee Reclus. 5c.

FALSE CLAIMS OF THE CHURCH. John E. Remsburg. Analyzing and confuting the claims made by churchmen that the Christian religion has promoted morality, learning, temperance, science, freedom, and showing how she has opposed progress. Paper, 10c.

FIELDS, FACTORIES, AND WORKSHOPS; or, Industry Combined with Agriculture and Brain Work with Manual Work. Peter Kropotkin. 260 pages. 40c. Postage, 5c.

FREE PRESS. Arguments in support of demurrer to the indictment of M. Harman, E. C. Walker and Geo. Harman, under the Comstock law. G. C. Clemens and David Overmyer. 25c.

GIORDANO BRUNO. His Life, Teachings, and Martyrdom. Burned for heresy in Rome, Feb. 17, 1600. 5c.

GOD AND THE STATE. Bakounine. 25c.

GOVERNMENT ANALYZED. A remarkable work by a remarkable man, Col. John R. Kelso, the history of whose life reads more like romance than reality. This book is the last of a series—Deity Analyzed, Bible Analyzed, Universe Analyzed. By the author's death this work was left unfinished, but was completed by his wife, Etta Dunbar Kelso. 519 pages; cloth. Price reduced from $1.50 to $1.

HILDA'S HOME. Rose Grand. "An o'er true tale" of woman's wrongs and of one woman's struggles and final triumphs in her attempt to secure justice for herself and for her sisters. 426 pages. Cloth, $1; paper, 50c.

HUMAN RIGHTS. J. Madison Hook. 5c.

IMPORTANCE OF HONEST MONEY. A simple, scientific, invariable standard of price. James Adleman. 128 pages. Paper, 50c.

IN BRIGHTER CLIMES; or, Life in Scotsland. Albert Chavannes. 25c.

INFIDEL DEATH-BEDS. "Idle Tales of Dying Horrors." G. W. Foote. Brief biographical sketches of 37 Freethinkers, including Bruno, Buckle, Byron, Comte, Darwin, George Eliot, Gibbon, Goethe, Hugo, Harriet Martineau, Mill, Paine, Madame Roland, George Sand, Shelley, Volney, and Voltaire. 25c.

IN HELL AND THE WAY OUT. A plan of Social Democracy outlined. Henry E. Allen. 20c.

INSTITUTIONAL MARRIAGE. From the viewpoint of an exiled Ma-sian. M. Harman. 5c.

JOHN'S WAY. A domestic radical story. Elmina D. Slenker. 25c.

KAREZZA. Ethics of Marriage. A bold, brave book, teaching ideal marriage, rights of the unborn child, a designed and controlled maternity. Sample pages free. $1.

KORADINE. A story for young and old. Extra levant cloth. $1.

LIBERTY IN LITERATURE. Testimonial to Walt Whitman. "Let us put wreaths on the brows of the living." An address delivered in Philadelphia, Oct. 31, 1890, with portrait of Whitman. Containing also Col. Ingersoll's address at the funeral of Walt Whitman, Mar. 30, 1892. Cloth, 50c; paper, 25c.

LIBERTY. Political, Religious, Social, and Moral. A. F. Tindall. 5c.

LITTLE LESSONS FOR LITTLE FOLKS. Elmina D. Slenker. Boards, 25c.

LIZZIE MELTON. A story of a self-reliant girl. By Albert Chavannes. With portrait of author. 25c.

LUCIFER. Third Series, Vol. III. (1899). Cloth, $1.25. Postage, 25c.

MAGNETATION, and Its Relation to Health and Character. Albert Chavannes. 25c.

MARRIAGE. An address by Dr. Juliet H. Severance. 5c.

MARRIAGE IN FREE SOCIETY. Edward Carpenter. A dainty little gift book. 25c.

MEN, WOMEN AND CHANCE. William Platt. Containing two tales: The Ascent to the Heights, and Blind Men and Seeing. Well printed on heavy paper and artistically bound in cloth. Gilt top, rough edges. 75c.

MEN, WOMEN, AND GODS. Helen H. Gardener. With preface by Col. R. G. Ingersoll. Contents: Introduction by Col. Ingersoll. Men, Women, and Gods. Vicarious Atonement. Historical Facts and Theological Fictions. Appendix. Address to the Clergy and Others. Letter to Cleveland Congress of Freethinkers. The only authorized and correct edition. Large 12mo, heavy-toned paper. Portrait. This volume is by far the best writing this famous author ever did. It is very fine. Cloth, $1; paper, 50c.

MISSING LINK IN MODERN SPIRITUALISM, THE. A. Leah (Fox) Underhill. With portraits of the Fox Sisters and others. 472 pages. Cloth. Reduced to $1.

MORIBUND SOCIETY AND ANARCHY. Jean Grave. Cloth, 60c; paper, 25c.

MOTHERHOOD IN FREEDOM. M. Harman. 5c.

MUTUAL BANKING. A simple plan to abolish interest on money. William B. Greene. 10c.

NORA, A DOLL'S HOUSE, and GHOSTS. Ibsen. Cloth. 75c.

OUR WORSHIP OF PRIMITIVE SOCIAL GUESSES. E. C. Walker. Contents: Love and Law; The Moloch of the Monogamic Ideal; The Continuity of Race-Life, and Tyranny; Food and Sex Fallacies, a Criticism; When Men and Women Are and When They Are Not Varietists; The New Woman: What is she? What will she be? The State Hiding Behind Its Own Mistakes; Bishop Potter's Opinion of Divorce; Love: Its Attraction and Repression; Is She an Honest Girl? Lloyd, Platt, and the Pitiful Facts; Social Radicals and Parentage; Anthropology and Monogamy; Love and Trust Versus Fear; Reflections upon Reading William Platt's "Women, Love, and Life." 15c.

PERSONAL EXPERIENCES of Two American Anti-Vivisectionists in Various Countries. Philip G. Peabody. With an Appendix by Col. R. G. Ingersoll. Reduced from 25c to 15c.

PERSONAL RIGHTS AND SEXUAL WRONGS. Oswald Dawson. 25c.

PRIESTLY CELIBACY. Prof. A. L. Rawson. Together with The Incoherence of Tradition (E. C. Walker), Motherhood in Freedom (Moses Harman), The Greatest Sin (an allegory, R. B. Kerr), and Jealousy, the Foe of Freedom (Oscar Rotter). 25c.

RELIGION AND RATIONALISM. The relation of each to human liberty. The religionist, fancying that he has the whole truth, is logically opposed to investigation, and he appeals to physical force to arrest the discovery of new truths. What Rationalism is, and how many believe themselves Freethinkers who are only unbelieving or disarmed religionists. The necessity for separate organizations and a division of labor among reformers. The Secular Union. Important facts and arguments in a compact form. E. C. Walker. 5c.

RIGHTS OF MAN. Thomas Paine. Answer to Burke's attack upon the French revolution. A political treatise of great general value, as advocating liberty and democracy. Contains the fundamental principles of true republicanism. Cloth, 50c, paper, 25c.

RUBAIYAT (Quatrains) OF OMAR KHAYYAM. Edward FitzGerald's interpretation; with original introduction; special cover; latest version. Paper, 10c.

RULED BY THE TOMB. A discussion of free thought and free love. Orford Northcote. 10c.

SCIENCE IN STORY; or, Sammy Tubbs, the Boy Doctor, and Spunk, the Troublesome Monkey. For young folks. Dr. E. B. Foote. Five volumes in "red line," presentation edition. $5. Five volumes, gilt top, binding, $7.50; all in one volume, $3.

SEXUAL PHYSIOLOGY FOR THE YOUNG. Being the fifth volume of "Science in Story." 350 pages; cloth bound; illustrated. 50c.

SONGS OF THE UNBLIND CUPID. J. Wm. Lloyd. Edition de luxe. Verses printed from Kelmscott type upon deckle edged hand made paper of cerulean tint. Initial letters, ornaments and borders are in red; initial letter and sketch upon the opening page are hand painted in water colors. Covers brown, with choice of silver or gold lettering. Very handsome gift book. 50c.

STUDIES IN SOCIOLOGY. In four parts: I., The Law of Happiness; II., The Law of Individual Control; III., The Law of Exchange; IV., The Law of Environment. Albert Chavannes. 25c.

TALKS ON NATURE. Important information for both sexes. Dr. J. H. Greer. 192 pages. Reduced from 50 to 25c.

THE ABOLITION OF MARRIAGE. John Beverly Robinson. Together with Isabel's Intention (Mariette), Reminiscences of Berlin Heights (A. Warren), and The Sexes and Love in Freedom (Oscar Rotter). 25c.

THE BAR SINISTER AND LICIT LOVE, including the first biennial proceedings of the Legitimation League, and a full account of the Lanchester case, with full-page half-tone pictures of Edith Lanchester, and Lillian Harman. Handsomely bound in green and gold covers. 207 pages. 25c.

THE BLUE LAWS OF CONNECTICUT. Taken from the Code of 1650 and the public records of the Colony of Connecticut previous to 1665. With an account of the persecution of Witches and Quakers in New England, and some extracts from the Blue Laws of Virginia. Copiously illustrated. 25c.

THE BRITISH BARBARIANS. Grant Allen, the greatest of the Hill-Top pioneers. Dedicated "To all who have heart enough, brain enough, and soul enough to understand it." Handsomely bound in cloth. 282 pages. 75.

THE WOMAN WHO DID. Grant Allen. A powerful story of a refined, educated and high-spirited woman who dared to defy the tyranny of church and state and ignore the institution of marriage. Handsomely bound in cloth. $1.

THE NEW HEDONISM. Grant Allen. The opening paragraph says: "The old asceticism said: 'Be virtuous and you will be happy.' The new hedonism says: 'Be happy and you will be virtuous.'" In another place the writer says: "In proportion as men have freed themselves from mediæval superstitions have they begun to perceive that the unclean and impure things are celibacy and asceticism; that the pure and beautiful and smoothing thing is the fit and worthy exercise of the reproductive function." Paper covers; 32 large pages; twelve copies, 50c. Single copy, 5c.

THE CHICAGO MARTYRS. The famous speeches of the eight condemned anarchists in Judge Gary's Court, and Altgeld's reasons for pardoning Fielden, Neebe and Schwab. 25c.

THE COMING WOMAN. Lillie D. White. 5c.

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM. Principles and platform of organized Freethought. 10c.

THE EVOLUTION OF MODESTY. Jonathan Mayo Crane. A consideration of the origin of clothes and the reasons why people wear clothing. Here are a few questions it answers: What is modesty? What is the cause of it? What is the use of it? What is the cause of the feeling of shame? Is nudity immodest? What is the cause of the notion that it is shameful to expose some parts of the body? Why do not all peoples agree as to what parts of the body should be concealed? 25c.

THE FOUNTAIN OF LIFE; or, The Threefold Power of Sex. Lois Waisbrooker. 25c.

THE FUTURE OF SECULARISM. When will the Cause of Justice triumph? 5c.

THE PRODIGAL DAUGHTER; or, The Price of Virtue. Rachel Campbell. Together with Legal Wifehood (Lucinda B. Chandler), Life's Gifts (Olive Schreiner), and Marriage—What It Was and Is; Will the Coming Woman Marry? 25c.

THE REVIVAL OF PURITANISM. E. C. Walker. 10c.

THE RIGHTS OF CHILDREN. R. B. Kerr. Together with What Are Women Here For? (E. B. Foote, Jr., M. D.), The New Martyrdom (Lillian Harman), and The Will, from the French of Guy de Maupassant. 25c.

THE SANCTITY OF MARRIAGE. As viewed from a moral and sanitary standpoint. A solemn protest against the present demoralizing management of that institution. Its effects upon offspring and its influence upon education. By Dr. Robert A. Greer. A valuable "opening wedge" in missionary work. Price reduced from 25c to 10c.

THE SECRET INSTRUCTIONS OF THE JESUITS. A reprint from an edition published in 1723, quoted by the highest authorities as authentic. The work is redolent of Jesuit craft and is a plain index to the underhand working of that order against the welfare of individuals and society. 25c.

THE STATE: ITS HISTORIC ROLE. Prince Peter Kropotkin. 10c.

THE UNWOMANLY WOMAN. Lizzie M. Holmes. Together with That Great Fraud, Ycleept Society (Moses Hull), Virgin Soil (Georgs Egerton), and Normal Sexual Action (Hermann White). 25c.

THE WORM TURNS. Revolutionary Poems. Voltairine de Cleyre. 15c.

THOMAS JEFFERSON. His Political, Social and Religious Philosophy. Gen. M. M. Trumbull. 5c.

TOKOLOGY. A book for every woman. By Alice B. Stockham, M. D. Illustrated. Tokology teaches possible painless pregnancy and parturition, given full, plain directions for the care of a woman before and after confinement. The ailments of pregnancy can be prevented as well as the pains and dangers of childbirth avoided and women need not go down to death giving birth to children. English, German or Swedish. $2.25.

TRAVELS IN FAITH. By Capt. Robert C. Adams. His mental experience from superstition to rationalism. Cloth, 75c; paper, 25c.

VACCINATION A GIGANTIC CRIME. Samuel Darling. 15c.

VINDICATION OF THOMAS PAINE. Col. R. G. Ingersoll. Dealing with all the slanders brought against the name and fame of Paine. A little pamphlet which every admirer of Thomas Paine should have by him for reference.

VITAL FORCE. Magnetic Exchange and Magnetation. Albert Chavannes. 25c.

WHAT THE YOUNG NEED TO KNOW: a Primer of Sexual Rationalism. Edwin C. Walker. "What we cease to be ashamed of what makes us men, of circling arms of babes." Paper covers; 42 large pages. 10c.

WHAT IS RELIGION? Ingersoll's last public address, delivered at the meeting of the Free Religious Association in Boston on June 3, 1899. To which is appended the poem, "Declaration of the Free," the last verse written by the great Freethinker. 5c.

WHEN LOVE IS LIBERTY AND NATURE LAW. John Badcock, Jr. 10c.

WHY THE UNDERTONE? An open letter to Judge Gary. Sarah E. Amos. 10c.

WOMAN, CHURCH, AND STATE. Matilda Joslyn Gage. "This is Mrs. Gage's best and crowning work. Every woman ought to read it. Every liberal woman and man will want it. A burning protest against the tremendous wrong done woman by the church, which controlled the state. It ought to be widely read for the good it will do. Cloth, $1.50; paper, 75c.

WOMAN IN THE PAST, PRESENT AND FUTURE. Woman was the first human being that tasted bondage. Woman was a slave before the slave existed. The basis of all oppression is economic dependence on the oppressor. The basis of the slave. This work is August Bebel's masterpiece. 8vo, 378 pages. 25c.

Address M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

Price 2 Cents.

LUCIFER.

THE LIGHT-BEARER.

THIRD SERIES, VOL. VI., No. 26. CHICAGO, ILLINOIS, JULY 10, E. M. 302. [C. E. 1902.] WHOLE No. 925

LOVE.

I locked the bars around him;
I cried, "Ah! no! Ah! no!"
Love would be free—alas, for me—
I could not have it so.

I bound his wings and builded
A prison of my heart;
The prison broke, for freedom spoke—
I felt my love depart.

Oh! weary was the morning
And heavy was the night.
Black was the sky—I could not die,
Though dead was all delight.

At last to love I whispered,
"Go, darling, you are free!"
He shook his wings, freest of things,
Then flew straight home to me.

—M. H., in "Truth Seeker."

The Wells of the Amazons.

Tradition tells us that long ago there lived in Asia Minor a race of warrior women called Amazons. They were so valiant in war that none of the neighboring tribes of men could resist them. Unfortunately, however, they were absurdly superstitious and credulous, so that their enemies were often able to injure them by playing upon these weaknesses.

It happened once that a great plague broke out among the Amazons, and they were dreadfully afraid that they had committed some mortal sin. Some of their neighbors, hearing of this, sent a false prophetess to them, who appeared in the market-place and held forth as follows:

"Tremble, ye Amazons, ye one-breasted women, for ye have made the gods angry with your wickedness. Ye have committed the deadly sin of drinking water promiscuously, drawing it from one another's wells, and even going down to the brook and taking it like horses and cows. Have ye forgotten that it is the will of the gods that no woman should drink water except out of the well on her own ground, and that every woman should drink all the water which comes into her own well?"

The Amazons at once remembered the behest of the gods, although in fact they had not heard of it before. Without delay they passed a law forbidding any woman to drink water except out of the well on her own ground, and compelling every woman to drink up all the water which could be got out of her own well. This was at once followed by the disappearance of the plague, for indeed the last patient was almost convalescent when the prophetess appeared.

It needed all the superstition and fanaticism of the Amazons to enable them to live up to the new law, for owing to the lie of the land the wells differed very much in their water supply. Some wells were dry half the year, and had not water enough even in the other half; so that their unhappy owners were constantly tormented with thirst. Other wells more favorably situated had far more water than their owners needed. As it was a fairly dry country, there were few wells which it was absolutely impossible for the owners to drink up, although some Amazons actually died of over-drinking. But in many cases the immense quantity of water to be consumed became an intolerable burden, and women not only had to work when awake, but had to wake up several times every night, to drink water which they did not want.

The worst of it was that the capacity of the owners bore no relation to the capacity of the wells. Often a thin, delicate, little woman had a well which kept her drinking like a German student; while a big, fat woman, sweating at every pore, had one which would give no water at all. There was no way of avoiding such misfits, for a woman buying a piece of land was on no account permitted to examine the well. In fact she was not allowed even to mention the well, although she might say all she pleased about the view and the soil. Occasionally it turned out that no well at all could be found on the premises, or else that the spring had run dry. Such disappointments had to be borne with a good grace, though in many cases the sole object of the purchase was to acquire a well.

The law was not always strictly observed, for women were often so tormented with thirst that they had to steal water in the dark from the better supplied wells. But strange to say the owners did not encourage them in this, for it had become a point of honor for each woman to permit no other to have water from her well. Even the most delicate and afflicted martyr to too much water would rather lose her life in overdrinking what she did not want than allow a thirsty neighbor to have a drop.

As a result of all this an intensely bitter feeling about water became general among the Amazons. They ceased to look on it as a harmless and delicious beverage, and came to regard it as a necessary but hateful evil, and the source of all human misery. Many a woman cursed her well.

This went on for generations, but in course of time the Amazons became less superstitious, and even the water question began to be secretly talked about. At first every suggestion that there was anything wrong with the water law was considered rank blasphemy, but the matter was so serious that discussion could not be checked. One evening at twilight, when the Amazons were all gathered in the market-place, a member of the tribe broke the silence and spoke as follows:

"My friends, our tribe is famous everywhere for its valor, but I fear it will never be known for its wisdom. Nearly all of us are miserable, and why? Because half of us are dying of too much water, while the rest are dying for want of that very water. There is just about enough water for everybody, if it were rightfully divided; but our idiotic rule of 'one woman, one well,' has created a social problem where there is none in nature. Let those who have too much share with those who have too little; then we shall all be happy."

The speaker expected nothing else than to be immediately stoned to death. But it was not so. Suffering had at last triumphed even over superstition. The few who had exactly the amount of water they wanted said that this was the best of all possible worlds, and needed no change; some who had too little water spoke in an ascetic tone; but those who had more water than they could endure said the time had really gone past for talking cant and humbug. The subject was discussed and discussed; then action followed. Soon nobody had either too much or too little water, and all agreed that water, when rightly used, was the most innocent and delightful thing in the world.

R. B. KERR.

The Craddock Dinner.

On Friday evening, June 20, the Free Speech League gave a dinner in honor of the latest victim of Comstockism, Ida C. Craddock, upon the occasion of her release from prison. There were nearly one hundred people present, and the meeting was an enthusiastic and harmonious one. When the feast of the body came to an end, Mr. Edwin C. Walker, provisional president of the Free Speech League, called the audience to order (this, by the way, was a mere formality, as the diners were more orderly than people generally are at a prayer meeting) and welcomed it in the name of the Free Speech League. All those whose hearts beat with the spirit of liberty, he said, not only welcome Mrs. Craddock, but protest against the laws that led to her conviction. Some say that her utterances are spiritualistic and unscientific. This may be true; but she is being prosecuted not on that account, but because she expressed her views on a tabooed subject. Her opinions do not concern us; we simply stand for liberty. Whatever views we may hold, at bottom there is only one issue—the right to express our thoughts.

Mr. Walker then introduced the chairman of the meeting, Moses Oppenheimer, as the fittest man for the occasion. Mr. Oppenheimer explained that he himself had the honor of being an ex-convict, and was therefore the right man in the right place. Every advance from the old to the new, he said, has to be made against the protest of the old. The sage of Athens and the carpenter of Jerusalem were killed because they held views not acceptable by the respectable rabble of their times. There should be no limit to opinion, for who is to judge as to what is right? Supposing that the whole world, minus one person, is of one opinion, have we the right to suppress the one person who disagrees with everybody? May it not be that in the end his opinion will conquer and become the dominant idea? In all ages the minority of men were killed and muzzled by the majority, and yet they were the pioneers of progress. The struggle will go on until the absolute right of every individual to express his thoughts is recognized by all; and until this is accomplished, the Free Speech League will fight for freedom.

Dr. E. B. Foote, Jr., followed the chairman, and stated that the members of the Free Speech League honored Mrs. Craddock, not because of her personality or of her views, but because they believed that she had a perfect right to express her views. Mrs. Craddock has been irrepressible; and, while some of her friends thought that for her own good it would be better for her to subside, the future may, after all, decide that she is doing good work.

Mrs. Amy Heuple took the ground that minorities were not necessarily always right, but that, whether right or wrong, they were entitled to freedom of expression.

Mr. A. L. Vogl was unconditionally opposed to the Comstock law. The fact that some persons violate it proves that it does not represent the will of the people. Under the Comstock law men are being punished, not because they have injured any one, but because they may injure. If children are harmed by the circulation of so-called obscene literature, this is an indictment against parents. Let them give their children the proper kind of education, and there will be no fear of having their morals corrupted. Comstockism takes advantage of the tricks of law, and inflicts punishment for no crime whatever. To deposit an addressed envelope in a mail box cannot in itself be a crime. If we deny to people the right to express their views on all subjects, we shall develop a nation of hypocrites and pretenders.

Mrs. Pearl Falkenstein testified that she was personaly benefitted by some of Mrs. Craddock's teachings.

Mr. John Spargo, editor of the "Comrade," condemned not only the tyranny of the law, but also that of public opinion. Those who want liberty for themselves should fight for the liberty of others. We differ from other people, and in order to settle our differences we must have the right of free speech and free press.

Mr. Chamberlain confessed that if he had been arrested for every offense of sending through the mails "objectionable" matter, he would undoubtedly have been condemned at least two thousand years in the penitentiary. It is a good thing to violate a bad law. The judges who sentenced Mrs. Craddock were themselves violators of their obligations—they violated the Constitution, which guarantees free speech.

Mrs. Anna Stirling told of how she became acquainted with Mrs. Craddock. She did not agree with her views; but she would not suppress any one, not even Comstock.

Dr. Montague R. Leverson advised the auditors to write to Attorney-General Knox, asking him to dismiss the second charge against Mrs. Craddock—the offense of sending her books through the mails, for which she is to be tried in October. He called upon the young men to renew the fight for liberty.

Mr. George L. Rusby said that self-interest, if no other reason, should compel us to defend Mrs. Craddock. So long as a single slave remains, all of us may become slaves. Mrs. Craddock has undoubtedly found freedom in her sincerity, and the prison walls had no terrors for her.

Miss Christine Ross was in favor of upholding the hands of all who wanted to expel ignorance.

Henry (Janus) Nichols said that Liberals must expect to be martyrs. The fight for free discussion is simply the desire to preserve in its integrity the Constitution of the United States. As to morals, if we cannot preserve them without the aid of blackmailers, they are not worth preserving.

Mr. James R. Brown congratulated Mrs. Craddock as coming out of great tribulations, and said that any opinion given in sincerity was not indecent.

Mrs. Elizabeth Burns Ferm, despite her early Catholic training, regarded Mrs. Craddock's books as pure.

Dr. W. J. Robinson had no use for Comstock, but thought that some of the "miserable stuff" sent through the mails could not be defended.

Mr. Alexis C. Ferm favored the knowledge of every phase of life. There is no use living in darkness. Let us live to express ourselves. Everything that hinders self expression is bad.

Mrs. Craddock was greatly touched by the reception given her. She hoped to be vindicated in her next trial; she had confidence in the success of Liberalism and Freethought, and promised to join the Free Speech League in the struggle for freedom.

A number of letters were read. Some of them were long, and I can only give extracts from them.

Henry George regretted that he could not attend the dinner and wrote: "Free speech is the breath of liberty. Without liberty civilization is impossible."

Mathilde Coffin Ford, vice-president of the Manhattan Liberal Club: "Personally, I should especially like to meet Mrs. Craddock, as my sympathies are with her."

Bolton Hall: "I have read most of her [Mrs. Craddock's] books, and was impressed with the noble purpose of them. Stupid as it is to condemn any one, stupidity has certainly its climax in condemning her for indecency. I do not believe that anything is gained on the whole for the cause of morality through what are known as the Comstock laws."

George B. Macdonald: "It is not for us to withhold our assent to the dissemination of any writing until we have assured ourselves of its nature and value; let the author and reader attend to that. We are not called upon to approve nor to fully comprehend Mrs. Craddock's co-educational system; the sum of our duty consists in guarding her liberty to expound it. We know something of that we have gained from the press so far as it has been unfettered; it is beyond our imagination to conceive what we have lost by reason of its censorship by idiots."

Henry Frank: "I hope you will all make some ringing sounds that will break out upon the air and stir the sultry atmosphere of ancient and contemptible hypocrisy in a way that will cause temples to crumble and prison cells to crack and fall. Success to your League."

Henry Bool: "Mrs. Craddock, by her untiring efforts at disseminating the facts where they may be the most effective, is worthy of all praise, the hypocritical prudes of the bench to the contrary notwithstanding."

J. William Lloyd: "I stand absolutely for the right of free speech between those who wish to utter and those who wish to hear, without any ifs or buts whatever. So long as undesired utterance is not forced upon the attention of those unwilling to listen, it cannot be invasive, no matter what its message. Even if you hold a man responsible for what he said, still give him perfect freedom to say it. Even if the speech be libelous, or a temptation to crime, it is a thousand times better uttered openly than secretly, for truth is then free to refute the slander. . . . . Sexology is a science of paramount interest and importance to human health and morals, and every candid utterance of theory or data on the subject ought to be published far and wide to the eager ears of the world, no matter what its bearing."

Dr. W. R. Schuffeldt contrasted some of the features of Mrs. Craddock's mock trial with the general conduct of a trial during the days of the Inquisition.

Among those present were David Rousseau, Mrs. Leander Brown, Mrs. Laura Cone, W. J. Terwilliger, F. H. Mackintosh, George Freeman, Charlotte Winterburn, Dr. W. Stevens, William P. Slensby, Gertrude Revero, J. W. Beckwith, Dr. Charles L. Andrews, C. R. Welker, David Hoyle, Irene Ewbanks, Charles Spofford, W. F. Doll, Mabel Graswinkel, Miss L. E. Buckingham, Agnes Cameron Watson, Miss E. A. Knapp, Mrs. M. E. Hibbard, Miss Linnett, Mrs. Andrews, and others.

New York, CYRUS W. COOLRIDGE.

An Old Controversy.

How absurd and meaningless is the expression "Fallen Women"! It is incomprehensible that sensible women like Voltairine de Cleyre and Kate Austin should use it at all. The latter, however, used it, I think, only as a quotation from some one else. Unfortunately, I cannot find the number of Lucifer that contains her article on this subject; but I remember it as a particularly just protest against the common feeling and speaking about women whose sex relations have not had social sanction.

As for what Miss de Cleyre says in answer to Mrs. Austin, it is at least unnecessary—at most, no answer. Nobody has ever denied that prostitutes have certain class traits. What class has not? We have all of us met some of that set of wiseacres who go about declaiming on the subject of the iniquities of musicians and other artists.

And, quite naturally, the traits of the lowest class in the economic scale will not be altogether esthetical. It has always been said of prostitutes by their friends (by the way, have they any friends?) as a half justification, that without heavy drinking they could not pursue their profession. And now comes Miss de Cleyre, and says that prostitutes are drunkards!

No serious observer, so far as I have heard, has ever given much time to schemes for reforming the confirmed prostitute. As well try to force the tailor to become a cobbler, or the printer a stonemason. Every thoughtful person realizes that the prostitute is at a trade; and, what is more, a trade with the sacred mark on it: a trade which renders those who practise it taboo. Once having embraced this profession, no other is open to them.

Therefore, such tongue-lashing as Miss de Cleyre administers to the class seems to me not only useless, but heartless too. Does Miss de Cleyre include in her denunciation all women whose sexual lives violate the social laws? For the writer whom Mrs. Austin replied to did, undoubtedly, so include them; and Society, in condemning the professional prostitute to the outer darkness of pariah-dom, condemns equally all women who, from whatever motive, have illicit relations with men. More even: Society condemns just as strongly as Miss de Cleyre could, the mere appearance of sexual non-conformity. Society concerns itself little with degrees of depravity, or with motives and causes. Will Miss de Cleyre class herself with Society?

I am sometimes amused at the self-complacency of the woman who thinks she is "free." The "free" woman seems not to see that equally with her prostitute sister, she sentences herself to a child-less, family-less life. Is this freedom?

There are, unquestionably, some women, for whom freedom means throwing off the restraints of children and family; but just as surely there are others, having freedom equally at heart, for whom these things would be pleasures—not restraints.

In the matter of positive freedom I see little to choose in the three careers at present open to women: wife, paramour, and prostitute. Economically, of course, the position of the prostitute is the very worst: and on account of her better economic position the woman who lives in a "free union" is saved from the habits of degradation of the lower caste. But her logical position is not with the philistine slinger of stones; rather is it by the side of her companion in captivity and opprobrium. Together they may largely help to save the world from the smug hypocrisy of legitimacy: separated, they divide the forces that make for honesty and plain-dealing.

LAURA H. EARLE.

The Philosophy of Love and Hate.

Life is a search for our own—for those whose hearts beat in unison with ours—who respond to the same vibrations. Men are tuned to a certain key. Those tuned to F do not respond when you strike D. Our own are those who are in our key. And when this is struck we answer back out of the silence. . .

But if I have friends, I too have enemies: yet there is this difference, the friendships, for the most part, are real, substantial and lasting. They are built on positive qualities, while the enmities are a vapor that only awaits the sunshine, when it will be dissipated into nothingness.

The friendships are on an understanding, while the enmities are simply a lack of understanding. . . . .

When you find an individual who indulges hate, feeds upon it, and hugs it to his heart, he is one for whom Bloomingdale yawns. Hate is a toxin: it poisons the well-springs of the soul: its end is madness and the grave. Hate hurts most the one who hates. To be hated may be annoying, but to hate is a calamity. And if hate is a ptomaine, good-will is a panacea.

There is nothing so hygienic as friendship—to love and be loved means an even pulse, clear eyes, good digestion, sound sleep—success. Strike the key, and at once the vibrations start. All who are on your wire get the benefit; and this wire is a wireless wire that circles the globe like a Marconi cable. The way to strike the key is this: when you find a person who loves the things that you love, who is trying to be honest and simple and genuine; who is willing to say I do not know, and who is not so very good and knows it (so does not blame other folks), but likes to mind his own business, thus giving other folks an opportunity to mind theirs,—stand by this man. Help him wherever you can, encourage him and give him good cheer. Use your friends by being of use to them. A thousand little things will suggest themselves where you can be of service—push the good things along.

Get in line with the vibrations, and when you feel them coming, pass them on—it is the only way to keep them.

These friends of yours are everywhere, but you will never know it unless you sound your A.—The Philistine.

Forty copies of Lucifer, no two alike, of 1900 or 1901 will be sent to any address for 15 cents. Nine bundles for $1. We are anxious to place these papers where they will do good. Please let us have your orders soon. State which year you want.

Lucifer, the Lightbearer

M. HARMAN, EDITOR AND PUBLISHER.

PUBLISHED EVERY WEEK AT 500 FULTON STREET, CHICAGO, ILL.

Terms: One year, $1; six months, 50 cents; three months, 25 cents.

Entered at the Chicago Postoffice as Second-Class Mail Matter.

Eastern Representative, E. C. Walker, 344 W. 143d street, New York.

Lucifer—Its Meaning and Purpose.

LUCIFER—The planet Venus; so called from its brightness.—Webster's Dictionary.

LUCIFEROUS—Giving Light; affording light or the means of discovery.—Same.

LUCIFIC—Producing Light.—Same.

LUCIFORM—Having the form of Light.—Same.

The name Lucifer means Light-Bringing or Light-Bearing, and the paper that has adopted this name stands for Light against Darkness—for Reason against Superstition—for Science against Tradition—for Investigation and Enlightenment against Credulity and Ignorance—for Liberty against Slavery—for Justice against Privilege.

Personal—to Our Correspondents.

A number of our correspondents have doubtless felt their patience sadly tried, during the last two weeks, by my failure to promptly reply to their communications, and to them an explanation is due. I have been suffering with a severe cold which affected my head principally, making my eyes so painful that I have, whenever possible, avoided using them. I was not seriously ill, and would not have allowed the cold to interfere with my work had it not been for its effect on my eyes. L. H.

In the Michigan Fruit Belt.

Who has not heard of the peach orchards of Southern Michigan? Its vineyards and its berry fields? Its apples, cherries and pears? Its melons, cantaloupes and everything delicious to the palate, that grows in the north temperate zone?

For some weeks past I have been rusticating, recuperating and luxuriating in this famous rural paradise—except when rain interfered with outdoor exercise and with fruit-gathering, and so gratifying has been the gain in health and strength in these few weeks that I have concluded to spend the rest of the summer months, and perhaps part of the autumn, in this fruit paradise aforesaid.

I have leased a partly furnished house with small orchard of apple, pear and quince trees attached, situated about four miles south-east from Benton Harbor, a thriving little city of ten thousand inhabitants, located one mile inland from the older and better known city of St. Joe, on the east shore of Lake Michigan.

All this region, for many miles up and down the lake, has of late years become quite famous, not only for its fruit but also as a place of summer resort for the people of Chicago, from which city Benton Harbor is distant sixty-one miles, several boat lines making daily trips during summer, fare each way fifty cents.

The house I have leased is in fairly good condition and large enough to accommodate a dozen or more summer boarders. It is located on high ground with fine evergreens and hard maple trees in front. It is well arranged inside—two parlors of good size; large kitchen and dining-room, two bed-rooms below and three above stairs, besides a large well lighted and ventilated upper room, twenty by thirty feet in size that could easily be turned into five or six sleeping apartments by the use of canvas divisions. A large dry cellar, good well of soft water, a large cistern filled with rain water, a wood shed, kitchen range, two or three heating stoves, closets, two large bureaus, a half-dozen bedsteads with modern spring mattresses, some cheap chairs and one kitchen table and some old carpets, complete the outfit as it now stands.

On taking this house and orchard for the summer, my plan was, and is, to invite a few friends from Chicago and elsewhere to share the premises and divide the cost with me, believing that many families would be glad to get away from the dust, the noise and weariness of the crowded city, and get into closer relation with Mother Nature for a few weeks, provided the cost of doing so were not prohibitory. I do not propose to furnish the house, more than it is now, nor to board our visitors, but rather to offer facilities, at small cost, for light house-keeping, somewhat after the plan adopted by certain campmeeting managers, as at Lake Helen, Florida, and elsewhere.

An important feature is the abundance, the cheapness and freshness of fruits and vegetables, as compared to prices of same, and staleness of same, in the large cities. Another feature well worth consideration to those not overburdened with spending money, is the fact that the fruit gathering season lasts till November, and the old fruit growers tell me there is always demand for help in this work at fair wages.

Another item not to be despised, is the fact that the soil of this part of Michigan is so sandy that there is very little mud, at any time, not even in the rainest season.

And still another item worth mentioning is that Henry B. Allen, our old-time friend and helper, with whom I have been stopping for some time past, offers to meet Chicago co-operators at the boat-landing and convey them to the rural home of Lucifer's editor, at a merely nominal cost.

For further information in regard to the Michigan Fruit Belt, and the plans for summer outing at the home herein described, all who fell interested are hereby invited to address M. Harman, care H. B. Allen, Benton Harbor, Mich. M. H.

Free Women, Men, and Children.

Laura H. Earle's contribution to "An Old Controversy" is full of food for thought. I am tempted to comment on several points, but will try to confine myself to one or two. It is probable that Voltairine de Cleyre will have something interesting to say on the subject.

Does Miss Earle mean that the really free woman does not exist, I wonder, or does she mean that only the woman who lives apart from her lover, earning by her own labor the living of herself and her children, is free? It seems to me the definition of "free" is sadly strained. Of course we may admit that no woman—and no man—is absolutely free, but I had supposed the free woman to be one who does not sell the use of her person either in marriage or out. Whether she has a lover, a husband, or children, whether she lives alone or with a man, men, or other women, has seemed to me mere matters of personal choice. The fact that that she is free to choose is one of the attributes of her freedom.

The fact—if it is a fact—that the free woman "sentences herself to a childless, familyless life" is news to me. I know a number of proud mothers who are in no sense dependent on their sex natures for subsistence, and why should the fact that they have children prove them un-"free"?

Possibly Miss Earle agrees with those who assert that a woman cannot be free if she accepts anything for the support of her child from its father. If a man and a woman do not want children they should avoid relations which may bring children into existence. But if they desire children it seems to me natural that the man should not only be willing to bear his share but that he would wish to do so. The prospective child, as well as the man and woman, must be considered. To some men parenthood is a most desirable state. Why should they be deprived of its pleasures and responsibilities if they can find women willing to share them? Real love wishes to share the cares and pains, as well as the joys of the loved one. And all these can be—and are—shared by loving men and women without the shadow of sex-ownership. Therefore free men and free women can be fathers and mothers, and need not, in order to enjoy freedom, condemn themselves to "childless, familyless lives." L. H.

Is your subscription paid to No. 925? If not, please renew.

Ruminations.

After some delay, the necessary blanks having been sent from Washington, our petition for a new postoffice has been transmitted to the Postal Department. There will doubtless be considerable red tape to be unrolled, before the result is known. The renewed publication of "Discontent" is delayed until we have either a postoffice or the practical assurance that we are not to have one in the near future. There never was the faintest excuse for taking our office away; and the act will remain one of the most abominable examples of petty persecution for opinion's sake.

* * *

The date of the Waisbrooker and Penhallow trials has been fixed for July 8. The trial will be held in Tacoma. Murphy and Swett, of Portland, Oregon, who rendered such excellent service in the former trial, will have charge of the defence. We fully expect an acquittal in both cases; but the subtlety and unscrupulousness of the Comstock crew always leave some room for doubt. In any case, I am safe in saying that if the enemies of freedom secure another of their shameful triumphs, it will not be due to negligence or avoidable blunders on the part of the defence. We have acted on the theory that it is better to do too much than too little. Every Comstock case should be vigorously fought, until the long enduring public is finally roused to a realization of the infamous character of the law which was devised to favor blackmail, and to stifle honest expression.

* * *

We are told that the St. Louis Fair can obtain its grant from the government, only on condition that it consents to yield to the demand of bigotry that its gates be closed on Sunday. This is the way in which our national legislators carry out the constitutional guarantee of the separation of church and state. These "statesmen" vainly try to secure respect for law from Anarchists, when they themselves take every occasion to spit on the fundamental law of the nation. The constitution of the United States has faults enough; but it at least declares in favor of free speech and religious liberty, and against nearly everything which the imperialist faction is doing, both at home and abroad. Its other provisions are adhered to strictly enough; but its pledges in favor of the rights of the people are treated as so much waste paper, and held in as extreme contempt as the Declaration of Independence, which is branded in the Philippine Islands as an incendiary document.

* * *

The most needed organization in the United States today is the Free Speech League. It makes a consistent appeal to Anti-Imperialists, Socialists, Anarchists, Freethinkers, sex reformers and all others who believe in intellectual honesty. Even the rankest conservative stamps himself as a fool or a knave, the moment he gives consent to stifling an opinion opposed to his own. Free Speech ought to be classed as an elementary principle, accepted by all sides alike. Since, however, the unholy trinity of Comstockism, Imperialism and Ecclesiasticism boldly declares its own wickedness, by avowing a desire to annihilate every vestige of free speech, it is time for all honest men and women to take a firm stand. We must reach the great body of the people of this land, and learn if corruption has spread so far that the unmasked villainy of the three giant conspirators will meet with general endorsement. The Free Speech League is the means by which the work is to be done, and has a right to the earnest and undivided support of all who are not content to wear their shackles forever. JAMES P. MORTON, JR.

Lucifer is a strong exponent of the sexual emancipation of woman. Its editor, Moses Harman, has borne imprisonment and persecution in standing for his right for freedom of speech for the woman oppressed in the marriage relation. While we do not endorse all that is taught in this magazine, we do advocate a free and bold discussion of the sexual question, and Lucifer is a strong element in helping to work out these problems.—"The Journal of Hygeio-Therapy." Kokomo, Ind.

The True Story of Montreal Assdom.

In a recent Lucifer Mr. James avers that he knows something of Modern History, i. e. the Montreal smallpox epidemic of 1884 5 and uses this circumstance to ride his favorite hobby as an apologist for vaccination and other medical fetishes. As I lived in Montreal and followed the course of the epidemic very closely as well as the means taken to combat it and having had access to inside information from an Hospital official I am in a position to give Mr. James' conclusions an emphatic denial.

It is true 3,000 odd persons died during the epidemic but it is not very clear to an impartial and critical observer—conversant with all the producing causes—what this fact has got to do with the matter of vaccination as Mr. James infers it has, because the vaccinated and unvaccinated alike were all caught by the scourge, many of the former having three good marks, and moreover the experience of the doctors in this connection at the two hospitals was so disappointing that they had to enlist the aid of a certain influential newspaper man to help them keep the truth from the public. I know this to be a fact. Afterwards the returns from the hospitals were deliberately falsified in the interest of vaccination and its official beneficiaries and I am in a position to prove it. I made this charge in the public press a few weeks ago and no one has yet seen fit to contradict it or to challenge my statement.

Of course the doctors claimed that vaccination stayed the progress of the disease (they always do that) but everybody here knows full well that there was absolutely no diminution of the epidemic until all the cases were systematically isolated and that was many moons after the wholesale vaccination began—this had no more effect as a preventive than would have the incantations of an African witch doctor.

It is also true that "a reasoner of the Ironicus type" in the person of a well known doctor (a little more honest than most of his confreres) publicly warned the Board of Health that an epidemic would soon sweep the city if they did not better carry out their duties, chief of which was the abolition of 6,000 privy pits polluting the atmosphere of the poor and congested districts. Did they heed the warning and fulfill their proper functions as a Board of Health as Mr. James seems to infer? Not much! they saw visions of a rich harvest ahead in vaccination fees and through the many disorders always induced by vaccination and I know one doctor who told me every scare the doctors could manage to work up was a godsend to them and that some averaged $40 a day at such times. No wonder the doctors believe in vaccination.

It should also be noted that the plague swept through the districts indicated like a tornado and if sanitation &c., is of no account as Mr. James implies, why did it not take in the whole city instead of only the unhealthy parts and the most ignorant and unhygienic portion of the citizens? As to the claim that "it is no longer a sanitary habit to talk 'anti-vaccination' in Montreal" it does not look much that way, when the people's representatives, by a two-thirds majority, recently killed a scheme of the Medicos to enact compulsory vaccination, and the fact of their recent activity having been answered by the formation of a strong anti-vaccination society. Moreover there have been several deaths very recently caused directly by vaccination and the facts are gradually becoming public despite the efforts of Doctordom to suppress them. One of the poor victims was carted around between various hospitals and doctors for over a year and when he died the doctor in charge demanded $2 of the poverty-stricken widow for a lying death certificate, although he knew there was not a cent in the house and no means (save charity) of burying the corpse—a fair sample this of our boasted twentieth century civilisation or rather assdom.

Yes, Mr. James, official statistics of vaccination are notoriously unreliable and for very evident reasons, your assumptions and the Encyclopedia Brittanica to the contrary notwithstanding. This fact is being demonstrated every day but "there are none so blind as those who will not see."

Montreal, Canada. M. B. CLARKSON.

VARIOUS VOICES.

Mattie C., Denver, Colorado:—I know I am awfully in arrears, but have been unable to do better. Enclose 50 cents, which please apply on subscription. In answer to the question, "What Would You Do?" I will tell you that I did precisely as "L. C., N. Y.," says she did—I took them in as sisters and loved them, too. But when a new love came into my life my husband suddenly found out "it was all wrong, all a mistake," and I had to either give up my home or my lover and go back to slavery. As I was a firm believer in the principles I professed, I gave up my home and am now "a wanderer on the face of the earth."

M. M., N. Mexico:—The censorship of press and mails is the great question of the hour, I think; but with Moncure D. Conway I wonder how a remedy can be found. It seems to me we are going backwards morally. I can cite you to a degenerate class of cowboys right around me here. My experiences for the past eighteen years have been proof to me. Yet I am no student of living human nature—I love rather books on history. But I must change. The cowboys are criminal in tendency from environment, also from the business system of our day. I enclose $5 for books. This fall I'll buy much I see in Radical Literature list. Many names are new to me.

Laura J. Langston, Paonia, Colo.:—I read Kate Austin's letter regarding Dr. Clymer's plea for fallen women and do not think she accorded him due justice. He must refer to these women as fallen or else not be understood, for does not his tract say plainly, None will stop and think that it was through pure, honest love that she fell, and therefore pure, through that love, as pure as any woman that ever walked the earth. Surely those words explain that he is forced to use the term "fallen," he certainly does not consider her fallen else he would not place her on equal footing with other women. We all know that so-called fallen women are truer to nature's perfect laws than they are to man's erroneous laws, and none understand this better than Dr. Clymer, and every woman in this land should endorse his noble undertaking.

Lena S., Wash.:—Our trial subscription expired with No. 922. So I enclose $1 for we want Lucifer to keep us from growing narrow-minded. If Lucifer could be read in every home, I think there would not be so many people living together in silent discontent, or open warfare, bringing undesired offspring into loveless, joyless homes. Old ideas have a strong hold here, but Socialist sentiment is spreading fast, and we hope for better things in the future, although sorry to report the loss of two of our most earnest workers, Comrades Albert and Mrs. Strout who recently moved to Spokane where Mr. Strout goes to accept the position of business manager for a new Socialist paper, "The New Time." I would like to tell you I agree with James Morton, on the question, "What would you do?" We cannot expect to be perfect as long as women are sexual slaves, and I could not think less of my husband, should he love another for any attraction which I do not possess.

Mrs. E. A. Magoon, Worcester, Mass.:—According to my tag on Lucifer I see my subscription has nearly expired, so send a dollar as no doubt you need it owing to your dear father's inability to help you. In connection I wish to express my ideas in regard to the special line of Lucifer's efforts. While in sympathy with it, I feel that there must first be individual reformation before man can become unselfish enough to recognize the right that woman should exercise in her behalf, and before there can be any true and lasting unions and well-born children. The theory of true unions in mutual loving regard for each other with no other binding tie, is a beautiful one, where familiarity does not breed contempt: but where are the parties to be found to make the idea practical to any extent? A majority of the male population appears to be already in love with, or wedded to the filthy weed in some form, that they prize beyond any human companionship, to say nothing of the use of liquors of some kind. Self-indulgence, self-gratification appear to be the more common idea of the true enjoyment of life, instead of the denial of every indulgence that is not essentially necessary to our bodily health, physically, mentally, and spiritually. No heart need to long hunger for love, and the joy it brings, although denied human sympathy The law so wisely manifested in the construction and adaptibility of every part of our physical organization, is no less wise in its provision for our mental and spiritual needs for an enjoyable, useful existence through the proper exercise of our aspirations and inspirations. We are thereby superior to, or masters of our environment.

What They Are Saying.

Freedom's abuses are tyrant's excuses.—Texas Farmer.

What the movement for a common sense observance of Independence day needs is a leader who dares to stand alone.—Chicago "Inter-Ocean."

On account of the disorder in Paterson, Editor MacQueen of "Liberty," who made a speech there, has been arrested by the New York police. Hitherto the police have been accustomed to run Herr Most in whenever anything happened, but as Mr. Most is now doing time on account of Czolgosz, MacQueen goes on as his understudy.—N. Y. Truth Seeker.

To promote marriages in Servia all young persons having at least 2,000 dinars in the government savings bank received a handsome premium from the bank on their wedding day. The consequence was that young folks rushed into matrimony to repent at leisure, and often, as soon as the money was spent, they sued for divorce. As the plan did not seem likely to bring an increase of population, the generous premium has been withdrawn.—Chicago "News."

"Whatever gods there be" were supplicated by their worshipers sojourning in London on Thursday of last week for the restoration of the king's health. Among the praying persons were Mohammedans, Brahmans, fetishists, sun worshipers, and all sorts of heathen from China, Borneo, Fiji, Africa, and Hindustan. It is presumed that King Lewanike of Barotseland, the African monarch to whom London has taken so kindly, went to the Zoological Gardens and prayed to an alligator, after the manner of his people.—Truth Seeker.

Defense Fund.

For Lois Waisbrooker and Mattie D. Penhallow, Home, Wash. Amount previously reported, $166.38. A subscription from comrades in New York sent by F. Piccinelli through La Protesta Umana, $7; S. F. B., Mass., $5; B. G., Colo., $1; W. S., England, $1; Mrs. E. K., Wash., $1. Total to June 23. $181.38. Oliver A. Verity, Treas., Home, Washington.

COLLEGE OF MEDICINE AND SURGERY,
CHICAGO, ILL.
Session begins September 25 and continues eight months. Four Years' Graded Course. Practical work required in Chemistry Physiology, Bacteriology and Microscopy. Co-Educational. Standard Requirement. For catalogue, address Secretary, 245 Ashland Boulevard, Chicago.

Our Home Rights, A monthly magazine, $1 per year. Immanuel Pfeiffer, M. D., Editor. Published at No. 5 Oliver St., Boston, Mass., is now on its second year. It is known far and near as the people's own magazine. It goes into forty-seven states and territories, besides England, Denmark, Germany, Brazil, South Africa, Australia, and India. It discusses all reform movements from an independent and progressive standpoint. Here are some of the subjects discussed every month: Socialism, Vegetarianism, Anti-War, Pure Foods, Women's Dept., Theosophy, Suggestion, Single Tax, Medical Freedom, Spiritualism, Capital and Labor, Women's Rights, Anti-Vaccination, and many other live and interesting matters. Send ten cents for a sample copy. Our Home Rights should be in every Household.

Lessons, In Language, Business, Arithmetic, Literature and Command and meaning of words, their arrangements in sentences, correct use of hyphens and capitals, punctuation, conversational power, elocution, extempore, and studies of such works in ancient and modern literature as may be selected. Methods new, unique, attractive. Arithmetic, only as used in business. Terms: one pupil, fifty cents per lesson. Discounts to classes of more than one. Inquiry solicited. J. M. Clarke 177 Walnut St., Chicago, Ill.

TOLSTOI'S NEW WORK.

The Slavery of Our Times.

With Portrait of the Gifted Author, and Introduction by the Translator, Aylmer Maude.

CHAPTER TITLES,

I., Goods Porters Who Work Thirty-Seven Hours; II., Society's Indifference While Men Perish; III., Justification of the Existing Position of Sciences; IV., The Assertion of Economic Science that Rural Laborers Must Enter the Factory System; V, Why Learned Economists Assert what is False; VI., Bankruptcy of the Socialist Ideal; VII., Culture or Freedom? VIII., Slavery Exists Among Us: IX., What is Slavery? X., Laws Concerning Taxes, Land and Property; XI., Laws the Cause of Slavery; XII., The Essence of Legislation Is Organized Violence; XIII., What Are Governments? Is It Possible to Exist Without Governments? XIV., How Can Governments Be Abolished? XV., What Should Each Man Do? An Afterword.

Well printed on heavy paper. Substantially bound. 188 pages. Price, $1.50.

Address M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

CAPTAIN JINKS, HERO

BY ERNEST CROSBY.

It is a merciless satire on war and militarism in which the parallel between savagery and soldiery is unerringly drawn. It is a biting burlesque on the various forms of cheap hero-worship. It holds up to withering scorn every important feature of militarism.

Among the accompaniments and results of war exploited and satirized, are hazing at "East Point," the war whoops of the yellow journals, the savagery of war, the Schley-Sampson controversy, civilizing the heathen savage, looting in China, pension abuses, the capture of Aguinaldo, the Peace-Conference, army mismanagement, oculatory attacks by gooney girls, etc.

With 25 Irresistible Drawings by Dan Beard. 12mo, Cloth. Handsome Covers, 100 pages. Price $1.10

Address M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

VICE: ITS FRIENDS AND ITS FOES

BY EDWIN C. WALKER.

CONTENTS—Brotherhood of Man; The Recognition of Facts; Folly of "For Men Only." Definition of Vice; Horrors of Prostitution; Abnormal Sexuality; Errors of Fathers, Mothers and Teachers; Persecution Does Not Reform; Prostitution and the Crusaders; The "Spoiling of the Heathen;" What are the Effects of Raids and Crusades? The Economic Side of the Problem. Party Politics in Vice Crusading; In What Does Prostitution Consist? Some Causes of Prostitution; Two Kinds of Prostitution Compared; The Opponents of Divorce; "Purifying" the Tenements; Action for Advanced Women.

WITH APPENDIX:—The Wanderings of a Spirit; Our Fair Civilization. The Folly and Cruelty of It All. Price 15c.

Address M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

VACCINATION A CRIME.

With Comments on Other Sanitary Superstitions.

BY FELIX L. OSWALD, M. D.

"Vaccination spreads diseases; vaccination impairs the organic functions; vaccination encourages reliance on worthless remedies; vaccination spreads small-pox; compulsory vaccination furnishes dangerous legal precedents."

With illustrations of diseases frequently resulting from vaccination. 195 pages. Price 10 cents. For sale by M. Harman, 500 Fulton St. Chicago.

DO YOU EVER THINK

Of the fate of the Prodigal Daughter? The Prodigal Son is forgiven and received with rejoicing—why should different treatment be accorded to his sister? For a vivid, true picture of the conditions in homes and factories which produce thousands of so-called fallen women every year, read "The Prodigal Daughter; or, The Price of Virtue," by Rachel Campbell.

SPECIAL OFFER.

This valuable work sent free on receipt of twenty-five cents for a thirteen week's trial subscription to Lucifer the Light Bearer. M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton Street, Chicago, Ill.

Notice! I would be glad to hear from Liberals who would like to correspond with other Liberals. Address (with stamp) Elmina Drake Slenker. Snowville, Va.

925.

If these figures correspond with the number printed on the wrapper of your Lucifer, your subscription expires with this number.

If a copy of Lucifer fails to reach you, please order by number or date.

Lucifer will not be sent "by return mail" unless stamps for postage are enclosed with order.

To New Subscribers: Your subscription is paid to No. If you have not ordered Lucifer, a friend has subscribed for you. If you do not wish to receive it, please notify us by card or through your postmaster. If you wish to become a regular subscriber you will confer a favor by renewing before the expiration of your trial subscription.

LOVE'S COMING OF AGE.

BY EDWARD CARPENTER.

This is a book with which few will wholly agree, but which nearly every one can read with profit and enjoyment. The subject is the relation of the sexes in the past, present and future, and it is treated with absolute frankness and fearlessness by a writer who unites a broad outlook, a strong grasp of his subject and a charming literary style. The following table of contents will indicate the line of thought followed by the author.

The Sex Passion.
Man, the Ungrown.
Woman, the Serf.
Woman in Freedom
Marriage: a Retrospect.
Marriage: a Forecast.
The Free Society.
Some remarks on the early star and sex worships.
Notes—On the Primitive Group Marriage; Jealousy; The Family; Preventive Checks to Population.

The book is printed on extra book paper and handsomely bound in cloth. Price, $1.

Address M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

WHITMAN'S IDEAL DEMOCRACY. AND OTHER WRITINGS.

BY HELENA BORN.

Comprising besides the title essay, Thoreau's Joy in Nature; Poets of Revolt; Shelley, Whitman, Carpenter; Whitman's Altruism; Individualism versus Organization: Inequalities of Economic Argument; The Last Stand Against Democracy in Sex; Inequality in Divorce; Marriage Safeguards. With portrait of author and biographical introduction by Helen Tufts. 125 pages. Edition limited to 500 copies; each copy numbered. Fine paper, uncut pages, bound in boards, paper label. Price $1.

Personal: A liberal man, living in Southeast Ohio, would like to become acquainted with ladies of congenial ideas in that section. Further information given to those interested on receipt of letter. Address W., 500 Fulton St. Chicago.

"Pages of Socialist History," By W. Tcherkesoff This book is recommended to Socialists of all schools, as it deals with the history of the "International" and the attitude of Marx and Engels towards Bakounin. Will be ready soon. Paper 50 cts, 75 cents. By mail 30 cents. Send in advance orders

Address M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

RADICAL LITERATURE.

For Sale by M. Harman, 500 Fulton St., Chicago.

A CHAMBERMAID'S DIARY. By Octave Mirbeau. Translated from the French by Benj. R. Tucker. 400 pages. Handsomely bound in cloth. $1.50.

ADVANCEMENT OF SCIENCE. Prof. John Tyndall's famous Inaugural Address before the British Association for the Advancement of Science, with the articles on Prayer which so stirred the religious world. Cloth, 50c; paper, 25c.

AGE OF REASON. Thomas Paine. Cloth, with steel plate portrait, 50c; paper 15c.

ANARCHISM: Its Philosophy and Ideal. Peter Kropotkin. 5c.

A PHYSICIAN IN THE HOUSE. A New Family Medical Work, by Dr. J. H. Greer. This book is up-to-date in every particular. It will save you hundreds of dollars in doctors' bills. It tells you how to cure yourself by simple and harmless home remedies. It recommends no poisonous or dangerous drugs. It teaches how to save health and life by safe methods. It teaches prevention—that it is better to know how to live and avoid disease than to cure it. It is not an advertisement and has no medicine to sell. It has hundreds of excellent recipes for the cure of the various diseases. It has 16 colored plates showing different parts of the human body. The chapter on Painless Midwifery is worth its weight in gold to women. The "Care of Children" is something every mother ought to read. It teaches the value of Air, Sunshine, and Water as medicines. It contains valuable information for the married. This book cannot fail to please you. If you are looking for health by the safest and easiest means, do not delay getting it. It has eight hundred pages, is neatly bound in cloth, with gold portrait. 75c. By mail or express, prepaid to any address, for $1.75. letters, and will be sent by mail or express, prepaid to any address, for $1.75.

A PLEA FOR THE NEW WOMAN. May L. Collins. With large new half-tone portrait. 25c.

A TALE OF THE STRASBURG GEESE. R. B. Kerr. Together with The Strike of the Strasburg Geese (C. W. Coolridge), A Traveler's Tale (R. B. Kerr), The Cat's Story (Emile Zola) 5c.

AUTONOMY, SELF-LAW. A fragmentary dissertation on the right to noninvasive self-hood. 5c.

BALZAC'S SERAPHITA: The Mystery of Sex. Mary Hanford Ford. Cloth. $1.

BIBLE TEMPERANCE. E. C. Walker. Proving that Liquor Drinking is Commended, Defended and Enjoined by the Bible, and giving close reference to the chapters and verses. 10c.

BORNING BETTER BABIES—Through regulating reproduction by controlling conception. R. B. Foote, Jr., M. D. 25c.

CAUSES OF HARD TIMES, and the Money Question. Albert Chavannes. 5c.

CHICAGO CONFERENCE OF TRUSTS. Speeches, debates, etc.; 81 portraits of delegates, including Benj. R. Tucker, Lawrence Gronlund, William Jennings Bryan, Samuel Gompers, Louis F. Post, and George Schilling. 628 pages, 50c.

CHILDREN OF THE ITALIAN POOR. Paola Lombroso. 5c.

DARWIN, THE. (A novel.) Elmina D. Slenker. 50c.

DAWN OF CIVILIZATION, The; or, England in the Nineteenth Century. J. C. Spence. 176 pages. 25c.

DAWN-THOUGHT ON THE RECONCILIATION. By J. Wm. Lloyd. An inspired treatise that, with insight and solution, touches all the questions of life, love, soul and society. A prose-poem, simple enough for a child to enjoy, deep enough to make a philosopher think. The largest creed, the most generous theory, the grandest gospel. A book of life. A religion of growth and the overlook—freedom and optimism. Read it. Printed in old style antique type, rubricated with portrait of the author. In three editions, de luxe, plain and paper bound. Prices, $1.25, $1.00 and 50c.

DIGGING FOR BED-ROCK. Camp-meeting talks and sketches by Moses Harman. 5c.

DR. FOOTE'S SOCIAL SCIENCE SERIES OF DIME PAMPHLETS—Wedlock; Scientific Marriage; Heredity; A B C of Temperaments; Powell and his Critics; Physiological Marriage; Physical Improvement of Humanity; Causes of Disease, Insanity, and Premature Death; A Step Backward. Any of the above books sent by mail on receipt of price.

DYNAMIC THEORY OF LIFE AND MIND. An attempt to show that all organic beings are both constructed and operated by the dynamic agencies of their respective environments. By James B. Alexander. Over 400 Illustrations, 87 chapters, 1,087 pages and a 2-column index of 11 pages. Cloth, $3.75.

EAST TENNESSEE SKETCHES. A and Cecile Chavannes. 25c.

ECONOMICS OF ANARCHY. A Study of the Industrial Type. Dyer D. Lum 10c.

EIGHT-HOUR MOVEMENT. John P. Altgeld, ex-Governor of Illinois. 5c.

EVOLUTION AND REVOLUTION. Elisee Reclus. 5c.

FALSE CLAIMS OF THE CHURCH. John E. Remsburg. Analyzing and confuting the claims made by churchmen that the Christian religion has promoted morality, learning, temperance, science, freedom, and showing how she has opposed progress. Paper, 10c.

FIELDS, FACTORIES, AND WORKSHOPS; or, Industry Combined with Agriculture and Brain Work with Manual Work. Peter Kropotkin. 360 pages. 40c. Postage, 5c.

FREE PRESS. Arguments in support of demurrer to the indictment of M. Harman, E. C. Walker and Geo. Harman, under the Comstock law. G. C. Semens and David Overmyer. 20c.

GIORDANO BRUNO. His Life, Teachings, and Martyrdom. Burned for heresy in Rome, Feb. 17, 1600. 5c.

GOD AND THE STATE. Bakounine. 25c.

GOVERNMENT ANALYZED. A remarkable work by a remarkable man, Col. John R. Kelso, the history of whose life reads more like romance than reality. This book is the last of a series—Deity Analyzed, Bible Analyzed, Universe Analyzed. By the author's death this work was left unfinished, but was completed by his wife, Etta Dunbar Kelso. 419 pages; cloth. Price reduced from $1.50 to $1.

HILDA'S HOME. Rose Graul. "An o'er true tale" of woman's wrongs and of one woman's struggles and final triumphs in her attempt to secure justice for herself and for her sisters. 428 pages. Cloth, $1; paper, 50c.

HUMAN RIGHTS. J. Madison Hook. 5c.

IMPORTANCE OF HONEST MONEY. A simple, scientific, invariable standard of price. James Adleman. 320 pages. Paper, 50c.

IN BRIGHTER CLIMES; or, Life in Scotland. Albert Chavannes. 25c.

INFIDEL DEATH-BEDS. "Idle Tales of Dying Horrors." G. W. Foote. Brief biographical sketches of 37 Freethinkers, including Bruno, Buckle, Byron, Comte, Darwin, George Eliot, Gibbon, Goethe, Hugo, Harriet Martineau, Mill, Paine, Madame Roland, George Sand, Shelley, Voltney, and Voltaire. 25c.

IN HELL AND THE WAY OUT. A plan of Social Democracy outlined. Henry E. Allen. 10c.

INSTITUTIONAL MARRIAGE. From the viewpoint of an exiled Mormon. M. Harman. 5c.

JOHN'S WAY. A domestic radical story. Elmina D. Slenker. 25c.

KAREEZA. Ethics of Marriage. A bold, brave book, teaching ideal marriage, rights of the unborn child, a designed and controlled maternity. Sample pages free. $1.

KORADINE. A story for young and old. Extra levant cloth. $1.

LIBERTY IN LITERATURE. Testimonial to Walt Whitman. "Let us put wreaths on the brows of the living." An address delivered in Philadelphia, Oct. 31, 1892, with portrait of Whitman. Containing also Col. Ingersoll's address at the funeral of Walt Whitman, Mar. 30, 1892. Cloth, 50c; paper, 25c.

LIBERTY. Political, Religious, Social, and Moral. A. F. Tindall. 5c.

LITTLE LESSONS FOR LITTLE FOLKS. Elmina D. Slenker. Boards, 40c.

LIZZIE MELTON. A story of a self-reliant girl. By Albert Chavannes. With portrait of author. 25c.

LUCIFER. Third Series, Vol. III. (1899). Cloth, $1.25. Postage, 25c.

MAGNETATION, and Its Relation to Health and Character. Albert Chavannes. 25c.

MARRIAGE. An address by Dr. Juliet H. Severance. 5c.

MARRIAGE IN FREE SOCIETY. Edward Carpenter. A dainty little gift book. 25c.

MEN, WOMEN AND CHANCE. William Platt. Containing two tales: The Ascent to the Heights, and Blind Men and Seeing. Well printed on heavy paper and artistically bound in cloth. Gilt top, rough edges. 75c.

MEN, WOMEN, AND GODS. Helen H. Gardener. With preface by Col. R. G. Ingersoll. Contents: Introduction by Col. Ingersoll. Men, Women, and Gods. Vicarious Atonement. Historical Facts and Theological Fictions. Appendix. Address to the Clergy and Others. Letter to Cleveland Congress of Freethinkers. The only authorized and correct edition. Large 12mo, heavy-toned paper. Portrait. This volume is by far the best writing this famous author ever did. It is very fine. Cloth, $1; paper, 50c.

MISSING LINK IN MODERN SPIRITUALISM, THE. A. Leah (Fox) Underhill. With portraits of the Fox Sisters and others. 428 pages. Cloth. Reduced to $1.

MORIBUND SOCIETY AND ANARCHY. Jean Grave. Cloth, 60c; paper, 25c.

MOTHERHOOD IN FREEDOM. M. Harman. 5c.

MUTUAL BANKING. A simple plan to abolish interest on money. William B. Greene. 10c.

NORA, A DOLL'S HOUSE, and GHOSTS. Ibsen. Cloth. 75c.

OUR WORSHIP OF PRIMITIVE SOCIAL GUESSES. E. C. Walker. Contents: Love and Law; The Moloch of the Monogamic Ideal; The Continuity of Race-Life, and Tyranny; Food and Sex Fallacies, a Criticism; When Men of Race-Life, and Tyranny; Food and Sex Fallacies, a Criticism; When Men and Women Are and When They Are Not Varieties; The New Woman; What is she? What will she be? The State Hiding Behind Its Own Mistakes; Bishop Potter's Opinion of Divorce; Love; Its Attraction and Expression; Is She an Honest Girl? Lloyd, Platt, and the Pitiful Facts; Social Radicals and Parentage; Anthropology and Monogamy; Love and Trust Versus Fear; Reflections upon Reading William Platt's "Women, Love, and Life." 15c.

PERSONAL EXPERIENCES of Two American Anti-Vivisectionists in Various Countries. Philip G. Peabody. With an Appendix by Col. R. G. Ingersoll. Reduced from 25c to 10c.

PERSONAL RIGHTS AND SEXUAL WRONGS. Oswald Dawson. 25c.

PRIESTLY CELIBACY. Prof. A. L. Rawson. Together with The Incoherence of Transition (E. C. Walker), Motherhood in Freedom (Moses Harman), The Greatest Sin (an allegory, H. B. Kerr), and Jealousy, the Foe of Freedom (Oscar Hotter). 25c.

RELIGION AND RATIONALISM. The relation of each to human liberty. The religionist, fancying that he has the whole truth, is logically opposed to investigation, and he appeals to physical force to arrest the discovery of new truths. What Rationalism is, and how many believe themselves Freethinkers who are only unbelieving or disgruntled religionists. The necessity for separate organizations and a division of labor among reformers. The Secular Union. Important facts and arguments in a compact form. E. C. Walker. 5c.

RIGHTS OF MAN. Thomas Paine. Answer to Burke's attack upon the French revolution. A political treatise of great general value, as advocating liberty and democracy. Contains the fundamental principles of true republicanism. Cloth, 50c; paper, 25c.

RUBAIYAT (Quatrains) OF OMAR KHAYYAM. Edward FitzGerald's interpretation; with original introduction; special cover; latest version. Paper, 25c.

RULED BY THE TOMB. A discussion of free thought and free love. Orford Northcote. 25c.

SCIENCE IN STORY; or, Sammy Tubbs, the Boy Doctor, and Spoonie, the Troublesome Monkey. For young folks. Dr. E. B. Foote. Five volumes in "red line," presentation edition. $5. Five volumes, plainer binding, $3.50; all in one volume, $3.

SEXUAL PHYSIOLOGY FOR THE YOUNG. Being the fifth volume of "Science in Story." 250 pages; cloth bound; illustrated. 50c.

SONGS OF THE UNBLIND CUPID. J. Wm. Lloyd. Edition de luxe. Verses printed from Kelmscott type upon deckle-edged hand made paper of cerulean tint. Initial letters, ornaments and borders are in red; initial letter and sketch upon the opening page are hand painted in water colors. Covers brown, with choice of silver or gold lettering. Very handsome gift book. $1c.

STUDIES IN SOCIOLOGY. In four parts: I., The Law of Happiness; II., The Law of Individual Control; III., The Law of Exchange; IV., The Law of Environment. Albert Chavannes. 25c.

TALKS ON NATURE. Important information for both sexes. Dr. J. H. Greer. 192 pages. Reduced from 50 to 25c.

THE ABOLITION OF MARRIAGE. John Beverly Robinson. Together with Isabel's Intention (Marlette), Reminiscences of Berlin Heights (A. Warren), and The Sexes and Love in Freedom (Oscar Hotter). 25c.

THE BAR SINISTER AND LICIT LOVE, including the first biennial proceedings of the Legitimation League, and a full account of the Lanchester case, with full-page half-tone pictures of Edith Lanchester, and Lillian Harman. Handsomely bound in green and gold covers. 207 pages. 25c.

THE BLUE LAWS OF CONNECTICUT. Taken from the Code of 1650 and the public records of the Colony of Connecticut previous to 1665. With an account of the persecution of Witches and Quakers in New England, and some extracts from the Blue Laws of Virginia. Copiously illustrated. 25c.

THE BRITISH BARBARIANS. Grant Allen, the greatest of the Hill-Top pioneers. Dedicated "to all who have heart enough, brain enough, and soul enough to understand it." Handsomely bound in cloth. 291 pages. $1.

THE WOMAN WHO DID. Grant Allen. A powerful story of a refined, educated and high-spirited woman who dared to defy the tyranny of church and state and ignore the institution of marriage. Handsomely bound in cloth. $1.

THE NEW HEDONISM. Grant Allen. The opening paragraph says: "The old asceticism said: 'Be virtuous and you will be happy.' The new hedonism says: 'Be happy and you will be virtuous.'" In another place the writer says: "In certain directions we seem to have freshened from mediæval superstitions have they begun to perceive that the unclean and impure things are celibacy and asceticism; that the pure and beautiful and ennobling thing is the fit and worthy exercise of the reproductive function." Paper covers; 91 large pages; twelve copies, 50c. Single copy, 5c.

THE CHICAGO MARTYRS. The famous speeches of the eight condemned anarchists in Judge Gary's Court, and Altgeld's reasons for pardoning Fielden, Neebe and Schwab. 25c.

THE COMING WOMAN. Lillie D. White. 5c.

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM. Principles and platform of organized Freethought. 10c.

THE EVOLUTION OF MODESTY. Jonathan Mayo Crane. A consideration of the origin of clothes and the reasons why people wear clothing. Here are a few questions it answers: What is modesty? What is the cause of it? What is the use of it? What is the cause of the feeling of shame? Is nudity immodest? What is the cause of the notion that it is shameful to expose some parts of the body? Why do not all peoples agree as to what parts of the body should be concealed? 5c.

THE FOUNTAIN OF LIFE; or, The Threefold Power of Sex. Lois Waisbrooker. 50c.

THE FUTURE OF SECULARISM. When will the Cause of Justice triumph? 5c.

THE PRODIGAL DAUGHTER; or, The Price of Virtue. Rachel Campbell. Together with Legal Witchcraft (Lucinda B. Chandler), Life's Gifts (Olive Schreiner), and Marriage—What It Was and Is; Will the Coming Woman Marry? 25c.

THE REVIVAL OF PURITANISM. E. C. Walker. 10c.

THE RIGHTS OF CHILDREN. H. B. Kerr. Together with What Are Women Here For? (H. B. Foote, Jr., M. D.), The New Martyrdom (Lillian Harman), and The Will, from the French of Guy de Maupassant. 25c.

THE SANCTITY OF MARRIAGE. As viewed from a moral and sanitary standpoint. A solemn protest against the present demoralizing management of that institution, its effects upon offspring and its influence upon education. By Dr. Robert A. Grerey. A valuable "opening wedge" in missionary work. Price reduced from 25c to 10c.

THE SECRET INSTRUCTIONS OF THE JESUITS. A reprint from an edition published in 1723, quoted by the highest authorities as authentic. The work is redolent of Jesuit craft and is a plain index to the underhand working of that order against the welfare of individuals and society. 15c.

THE STATE: ITS HISTORIC ROLE. Prince Peter Kropotkin. 10c.

THE UNWOMANLY WOMAN. Lizzie M. Holmes. Together with That Great Fraud, Telept Society (Moses Hull), Virgin Soil (George Egerton), and Nervous and Sexual Action (Ernest Winne). 25c.

THE WORM TURNS. Revolutionary Poems. Voltairine de Cleyre. 10c.

THOMAS JEFFERSON. His Political, Social and Religious Philosophy. Gen. M. M. Trumbull. 5c.

TOKOLOGY. A book for every woman. By Alice B. Stockham, M. D. Illustrated. Tokology teaches possible painless pregnancy and parturition, prevent. The ailments of pregnancy can be prevented as well as the pains and dangers of childbirth avoided and women need not go down to death giving birth to children. English, German or Swedish. $2.25.

TRAVELS IN FAITH. By Capt. Robert C. Adams. His mental experience from superstition to rationalism. Cloth, 75c; paper, 25c.

VACCINATION A GIGANTIC CRIME. Samuel Durling. 15c.

VINDICATION OF THOMAS PAINE. Col. R. G. Ingersoll. Dealing with all the slanders brought against the name and fame of Paine. A little pamphlet of power by admirer of Thomas Paine should have by him for reference.

VITAL FORCE. Magnetic Exchange and Magnetation. Albert Chavannes. 25c.

WHAT THE YOUNG NEED TO KNOW: a Primer of Sexual Rationalism. Edwin C. Walker. "Let us cease to be ashamed of what makes us men, of what makes us women, of what gives us the kisses of lovers and the embracing arms of babes." Paper covers; 42 large pages. 10c.

WHAT IS RELIGION? Ingersoll's last public address, delivered at the meeting of the Free Religious Association in Boston on June 2, 1898. To which is appended the poem, "Declaration of the Free," the last verse written by the great Freethinker. 5c.

WHEN LOVE IS LIBERTY AND NATURE LAW. John Badcock, Jr. 10c.

WHY THE UNDERTONE? An open letter to Judge Gary. Sarah E. Ames. 10c.

WOMAN, CHURCH, AND STATE. Matilda Joslyn Gage. This is Mrs. Gage's last and crowning work. Every woman ought to read it. Every liberal woman and man will want it. A burning protest against the tremendous wrong done woman by the church, which controlled the state. It ought to be widely read for the good it will do. Cloth, $1.50; paper, 75c.

WOMAN IN THE PAST, PRESENT AND FUTURE. Woman was the first human being that tasted bondage. Woman was a slave before the slave. This has been the condition of women in the past and is so still. She is now a slave of the slave. This work is August Bebel's masterpiece. 8vo, 372 pages. 25c.

Address M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

Price 2 Cents.

LUCIFER.

THE LIGHT-BEARER.

THIRD SERIES, VOL. VI., No. 27. CHICAGO, ILLINOIS, JULY 17, E. M. 302, [C. E. 1902.] WHOLE No. 926

FROM A MOTHER'S HEART.

"Daughter, daughter, marry no man,
Though a king's son come to woo,
If he be not more than blessing or ban
To the secret soul of you."

"'Tis the King's son, indeed, I ween,
And he left me even but now,
And he shall make me a dazzling queen,
With a gold crown on my brow."

"And are you one that a golden crown,
Or the lust of a name can lure?
You had better wed with a country clown,
And keep your young heart pure."

"Mother, the king has sworn, and said
That his son shall wed but me;
And I must gang to the prince's bed,
Or a traitor I shall be."

"Oh, what care you for an old man's wrath?
Or what care you for the king?
I had rather you fled on an outlaw's path,
A rebel, a hunted thing."

"Mother, it is my father's will,
For the king has promised him fair
A goodly earldom of hollow and hill,
And a coronet to wear."

"Then woe is worth a father's name,
For it names your dourest foe!
I had rather you came the child of shame
Than to have you fathered so."

"Mother, I shall have gold enow,
Though love be never mine,
To buy all else that the world can show
Of good and fair and fine."

"Oh, what care you for a prince's gold,
Or the key of a kingdom's till?
I had rather see you a harlot bold
That sins of her own free will.

"For I have been a wife for the stomach's sake,
And I know whereof I say;
A harlot is sold for a passing slake,
But a wife is sold for aye.

"Body and soul for a lifetime sell,
And the price of the sale shall be
That you shall be harlot and slave as well
Until Death set you free."

—Richard Hovey, in "Songs from Vagabondia."

Some Nihilists I Have Met. I.

In looking over some old papers, recently, I found some pages from an old magazine containing a sketch by a well-know radical writer, under the above heading, and written about ten years ago. I sent it to the author, asking her to revise it if she would like to have any changes made. She said her only request was that her name be with held—that patching up old things was an occupation devoid of charm to her. I think it well worth a place in Lucifer. Part II. will appear next week.

L. H.

The word nihilist is so generally associated with darkness, secrecy, dynamite, assassination and blood, that had some one whispered five minutes before the encounter, "You are about to meet a genuine Russian nihilist," I should, no doubt, have hastily retreated to the shelter of law-abiding domiciles, far from the dirty, tortuous, downtown quarter, where, amidst a labyrinth of alleys and deceitful little streets that mockingly led against walls, and then turned back into one another, I found myself one snowy afternoon, picking my way somewhat disgustedly with no very clear idea concerning my exact whereabouts.

One thing, however, was sure, I had been appointed on a committee to secure musical talent for a concert shortly to be given by a certain society, the proceeds of which were to be used for the purchase of turkeys for people who otherwise could not properly celebrate the Christmas feast. Having learned through devious channels of a new violin-wonder whose services were to be had for a reasonable consideration, I had at length obtained his address and gone in pursuit of him. It was indeed a pursuit. For half an hour I had chased skulking lamp-posts, that on being captured mockingly stood forth without the shadow of a letter on them; signs that had grown so old in wind and weather as to be illegible; a few new brick corners that seemed to say, "Here we are, and we don't need a name to tell you—we're plain enough without it," as indeed they were among such heaps of dirt and ruin; and finally, people who smiled vaguely, and answered me in a foreign language. At length I stopped perfectly still, leaned against a wall and said aloud, "What next?"

My mouth and ears seemed to be two personalities, the latter very much surprised to hear the English language in this town of "ski's" and "ovitsches," and the former very defiant and determined. It said slowly, "I shan't give up now; I surely will find Mr. W——y." I lifted my eyes with a sigh and lo! strange mockery of this cynical quarter, there, precisely opposite, on a black sign with staring gilt letters was the very name which had so persistently and so successfully eluded me: "H. W——y, violinist, concerts, lessons."

I went up the two white steps, the sepulchral steps which can never be omitted from the meanest tenement of old Philadelphia, and rapped loudly and long. A woman with bright red cheeks and a mass of curly auburn hair bushing astonishingly about her head, admitted me.

"Mr. W——y was in. Walk up." Bless him for being "in," I thought, as I climbed the steep dark stairs; "my luck must have turned at last." The woman had left me to guide myself, only directing me to the first door on the left. As I stepped into the upper hall I heard a low cry, something neither human nor unhuman, that made me catch my breath. There were two or three wails, and then a sob that was broken short; then the cries began in a lower key. I felt as if a cold wind had suddenly blown over me and frozen me to the floor. This, then, was the wonderful violin, this thing which cried and moaned just inside the room. I must have stood ten minutes listening when I felt some one behind me, and turned to hear the woman say, "Just rap, he's only playing by himself."

"Does he often do it—play like that?" I whispered under my breath.

She smiled: "All the time. The worst is, he gets up in the night. You'd think dead folks were crying in the room. Some people believe dead folks do play music, but I don't," she added, knocking on the door.

The wailing ceased as if the thing which cried had been startled and fled. Directly the door opened and I was invited to enter. The room was neither small nor large, but oh! so bare! There was only a bed without pillows, a chair, a trunk, a table contrived of a dry-goods box, a stand piled high with books—over which lay the violin—and a music rack, back of which, on the floor, lay a mass of music. No heat, and the temperature dangerously near the freezing point. What wonder the violin wailed!

I see the whole picture now as it was photographed upon my memory by the cloudy, snow-luminous light that came through the curtainless windows, striking the staring walls and dark wood floor, and the tall figure in the center holding the the magical bow. Certainly it was a homely face, one of the homeliest I have ever seen, in spite of the fine, Beethoven-like forehead that relieved it from any charge of stupidity.

Yet this very ugliness was curiously attractive. The square, prominent jaw with the wide, thin-lipped mouth was a character study; those small, light intent eyes fascinated; and the Tartar nose, utterly ugly, somehow impressed one as having an individuality of its own that might, on occasion, express itself.

"I interrupted you," said I, by way of beginning—"it is too bad. I had been luxuriating in the misery of those notes for nearly a quarter of an hour in the hall."

He flushed slightly: "You should have knocked; I was merely passing time."

"Was it an improvisation?" I inquired, curious to know what human heart had first cried so brokenly.

"Oh, no," he answered; "it is a Russian composition, the plea of a nihilist, a Siberian exile, to his jailor. There are words."

"Ah," I said, with interest, "do such compositions circulate generally, then?"

A real laugh went over the ugly mouth, and yet a laugh with more of sarcasm than of pleasure in it.

"Certainly not. It is a prison offense to sing them. All the same there are means."

"But," I suggested, "are they not dangerous? Were you not afraid to—to become implicated with the nihilists?"

He drew himself up proudly. "I myself was one."

"What," I exclaimed, "you a man with a soul for such music, can you believe in killing people? Do you think the czar ought to be assassinated?"

The same sarcastic smile cossed his mouth. "Why should he not be killed? Thousands of people die every year merely for his pleasure. Is he any better than other murderers?"

"What do you mean by saying that thousands die for his pleasure? He does not kill anybody."

"I mean that the poor are taxed so high to pay for his palaces, that they die in their huts. Yes, I would be very glad to hear that the czar was killed, but not because I think it would help anyone living."

"Why then?" I queried, interested in the play of the ugly features.

"Why? Because it would be a crash that would make the people think. They do not think, they are asleep. Their bodies work, but their brains have never yet awakened. Another czar would come, and he too, would have to be killed, until the people learn that it is not to trade masters, but to have no masters they must work."

"But," I protested, "why not in some other way? Why kill to teach them that?" He sighed and a sad light came into his eyes.

"You have no idea," he said; "there is tyranny enough in America, but it is nothing to Russia. The nihilists are not people who love fighting and killing; but it is the only thing left them. We are not allowed to read, or write, or print, or agitate. We must keep our ideas until we choke with them, even if we wade in misery to the eyes. For trying to help, the noblest and best have been sent to Siberia. We must kill."

"How trying to help?" I said; "surely not for relieving distress with——"

"Charity?" he broke in bitterly. "No, not that. But for trying to show that it is the injustice of the government which puts them so they need charity. For trying to tell them that if they straighten up, the czar can no more put his yoke on their necks. For that, not for charity." He picked up the violin, struck a few notes with his fingers, and added, "The Americans do not understand us."

"Excuse me," I said humbly, "I presume that is true. I never met a nihilist before."

"No?" This time the smile was full of amusement. "I must have frightened you, then."

"Oh, no," I said, lying with much courtesy, "I have been very much interested, so much that I have neglected my errand," and I proceeded to engage his services, which was soon done, though I inwardly reflected that for a man in such quarters his price was rather high.

It was darkening, but the snow still gave a luminous whiteness to the dusk as he accompanied me to the door, saying: "Well, I hope you are not afraid of me. You would like us better if you knew us better. You ought to read Bakounine—do you read Shelley? He is the greatest English poet, but almost no one understands him. He lived five hundred years too soon. Will you shake hands? I never killed anyone. Thank you. I shall be exactly in time at the concert."

And he was. The virtues of the Russian character, like its vices, are mathematically calculable; every act answers the question why. Hence punctuality is assured.

Replies to Critics.

In No. 922 C. L. James says: "If Mr. Kerr will ask himself how Senator Clark comes to own all that copper in the earth, he may begin to see that when no man is enabled by government to hold land out of use, all the evils of natural monopoly will cure themselves."

Whether or not Senator Clark is shipping his ore as fast as possible, I cannot say. The extraction of ore is a slow affair, even after it has been blocked out and measured off. The outside of a cube must be taken before the inside, and timbers must be put in the place of the ore extracted, to avoid a cave-in. But in any case Mr. James evades the main point. Does he deny that ores differ much in richness, or does he assert that the very richest ores are plentiful enough to supply the world's demand? If not, then it is clear that there must be a large unearned increment on the richer ores, which unless absorbed by the community, will make fortunes for individuals.

Lillian Harman says there are different kinds of Socialism, because Socialists differ about liberty. Why did she not add that there are different kinds of Vegetarianism, because Vegetarians differ about liberty? Liberty is not part of the subject matter of either movement; the one deals only with economics, the other with diet. In their economic aims Socialists differ very little; although in America, where the movement is new, they differ about the best way of realizing their aims.

The editor refers to my "dozen or more years acquaintance with Lucifer and its work." I am sorry to say it is less than seven years since I first heard of Lucifer.

The editor thinks that if "we can only hand on what we have ourselves inherited", the improvement of the race is impossible. Not necessarily. For instance, the son of a family of poets might marry the daughter of a family of musicians, and produce a son who could compose both the music and the words of a grand opera, although no one of his ancestors could have done so. This young man might marry the daughter of a family of painters, and their son might be able to paint the scenes, besides composing both music and words. Yet nobody would have handed on more than he or she inherited. But I admit that my expression was unfortunate, for it obscured the great fact of spontaneous variation. Sometimes a person happens to be born with six fingers on each hand, although none of his ancestors had more than five. If such people only married other six-fingered people, a six-fingered race might be perpetuated. Now Darwin holds that slight spontaneous variations occur in vast numbers in each generation, and that the preservation of these variations by natural selection is the foundation of evolution. But spontaneous variation is an entirely different thing from the inheritance of acquired qualities, a doctrine still adhered to by Herbert Spencer, Lombroso, and a few old men, but not regarded with much favor by the younger generation.

When I put Moses Harman after Tolstoi and Ibsen, it was because he was the youngest, not because he was least important. In fact, he is much more important than either. Tolstoi and Ibsen surpass him as artists, but even as artists Tolstoi and Ibsen will never be classics. As prophets they cannot be compared with Moses Harman. Tolstoi is a pessimist who thinks the best thing to do is to let the human race die out. Ibsen has no constructive imagination, though Bernard Shaw has used him as a kind of Christmas tree on which to hang fruits and blossoms which could never have grown there. These men are not of the number > "Who, rowing hard against the stream,

> Saw distant gates of Eden gleam,
> And did not dream it was a dream;
> But heard, by secret transport led,
> Ev'n in the charnels of the dead,
> The murmur of the fountain-head."

The true inspirers of progress are men like Shelley, Walt Whitman, and Moses Harman, who preach a gospel of hope, and not a gospel of despair. The morbid sex philosophy of the "Kreutzer Sonata" chills and sickens us, but it is pleasant to read a poet who expounds his aims and then tells us that

> "This truth is that deep well, whence sages draw
> The unenvied light of hope; the eternal law
> By which those live, to whom this world of life
> Is as a garden ravaged, and whose strife
> Tills for the promise of a later birth
> The wilderness of this Elysian earth."

R. B. Kerr.

The Blackmailing of Mrs. Craddock.

So much has been said about the persecution of Mrs. Craddock, and the peculiarly abominable outrages to which she has been subjected have excited so much sympathy that I think Lucifer's readers will be interested to see copies of some very brave and generous letters which were addressed to her during her imprisonment by Mr. William T. Stead editor of the "English Reviews of Reviews" from London. I take credit to myself for rescuing these letters from the forgetfulness of the bundle in which Mrs. Craddock had tied them up to pack them away as precious souvenirs of her persecution. The approval of such a man as Mr. Stead more than offsets the rancor of the foul-minded judges whose lewdness blinded them to the purity of Mrs. Craddock's work and to the nobility of her purpose. Here are Mr. Stead's letters, omitting reference to personal matters. The first is dated London 28 March 1902 and is as follows:

"I do not know whether the prison regulations will allow you to receive this letter, and in any case I am aware that it will not be handed to you until it has been perused by those in authority. Mr. Chamberlain sent me a newspaper cutting reporting the result of your hearing and containing, among other things, copy of the letter which I wrote to you, and which now stands on record both in the annals of the Court and in the newspaper press. As you know, I would have preferred for private and business reasons not to have been mixed up in the case, but now that I see the way in which you have been assailed in Court, I feel honored to be allowed to stand by your side in the pillory of the world, knowing as I do that, however much I may have differed from you as to the publication of the passages complained of, no difference of opinion upon that question could blind me to the fact that I know you to be incapable of ever having penned a lie, much less published a pamphlet with any but the highest aims and the desire to raise the standard of conventional morality.

"I am sure that you will not be cast down behind your prison bars, remembering that you are suffering the fate that in every age has befallen those whose struggle towards the higher ideal has been confounded by the multitude with treason to the lower ideal which they leave behind. So it was with Socrates, so it was with Jesus Christ, and so it ever will be with all those who endeavor to incite their fellows to attain to a purer and nobler life.

"I am writing a series of articles upon 'prison as a road to success.' I sincerely hope that you will find that your imprisonment, although not for the moment pleasant, but grievous, may in the end achieve for the cause which you have at heart much greater victories than would otherwise have been possible. I rejoice to know that in the solitude of your cell, you will be sustained by consolations to which your enemies are strangers."

The second of these letters written 10 May contains this beautiful tribute:

"I was extremely glad to get your pencil written letter. . . . . I have written to your mother, a long letter telling her how much we think of you and how abominable we consider your present persecution to be. I also told her that she had no reason whatever to feel distressed about you, but rather to be extremely proud that she might be so highly favored among women as to bring to birth a spirit so intrepid and heroic as yourself. I confess when I contrast your courage and enthusiasm with those of others, sometimes I feel as if I were not worthy to loose the latchet of your shoes."

The third letter was received shortly before Mrs. Craddock was restored to liberty and is pregnant with suggestion of how a great good might be brought out of the evil of her incarceration. It is dated 17 May.

"The time of your deliverance is drawing near, and I write to congratulate you upon having been thought worthy to suffer tribulation and persecution and all manner of evil for the sake of the cause to which you have dedicated your life. I am not without hope that out of this misery and discomfort good will come to you in some way that you know not of. It is a comforting belief of mine that a time will come when we shall see, looking back over our life, that nothing has happened to us excepting what we should have chosen as the very best that could have come to us; that all the misery and pain and disappointment at which we are fretted so much were the very irreducible minima of suffering necessary to achieve a good that otherwise would have been lost.

"I hope that your experience in prison will lead to improvements being made in the condition of prisoners. It is only by going among the people and sharing their life that we ever acquire power to understand and strength to remedy abuses which otherwise might have gone on undetected and unimproved for ever. It is the lesson of the incarnation repeated over again in your experience. . . . . ."

The letters are certainly worth preserving to take their place at some future day in the history of the struggle for freedom of thought and expression. E. W. Chamberlain.

> "Art thou the tree that props the plant
> Or the climbing plant that seeks the tree
> Canst thou help us, must we help thee?"—Sel.

Lucifer, the Lightbearer

M. HARMAN, EDITOR AND PUBLISHER.

PUBLISHED EVERY WEEK AT 500 FULTON STREET, CHICAGO, ILL.

Terms: One year, $1; six months, 50 cents; three months, 25 cents.

Entered at the Chicago Postoffice as Second-Class Mail Matter.

Eastern Representative, E. C. Walker, 244 W. 143d street, New York.

Lucifer—Its Meaning and Purpose.

LUCIFER—The planet Venus; so called from its brightness.—Webster's Dictionary.

LUCIFEROUS—Giving Light; affording light or the means of discovery.—Same.

LUCIFIC—Producing Light.—Same.

LUCIFORM—Having the form of Light.—Same.

The name Lucifer means Light-Bringing or Light-Bearing, and the paper that has adopted this name stands for Light against Darkness—for Reason against Superstition—for Science against Tradition—for Investigation and Enlightenment against Credulity and Ignorance—for Liberty against Slavery—for Justice against Privilege.

By the Way.

Another good man gone. Werner Boecklin died on June 1, and his body was cremated at Fresh Pond, L. I., June 3. We have just learned these facts, and deeply regret his departure, for he was one of Lucifer's earliest and best friends, as well as a logical, earnest writer and generous-hearted man. He did not have a great deal to say, but his actions spoke clearly when action was needed. We hope soon to give an account of his life and work, from the pen of a personal friend.

—

Mr. Kerr's estimate of our editor reminds me of a similar comparison made by H W. Boland, of Philadelphia, and sent to me in December, '99. The lines were not published, but I have preserved them, and as they constitute a noteworthy coincidence, I give them place here—as the editor is absent!

"Lo, I will show you a greater than all the rest,
It shall be he who sees with unflinching eye, as the eagle;
It shall be he who has delved to the bedrock b ttom,
It shall be a Tolstoi devoid of the puerility of Tolstoi;
It shall be an Ibsen minus Ibsen's morbidity;
It shall be a Whitman more direct than Whitman;
It shall be Moses Harman."

—

If Vegetarians should propose to take to themselves the management of all the means of subsistence as do the Socialists, the question of how much individual liberty would be allowed under their regime would, it seems to me, be pertinent. Vegetarianism is as practicable by isolated individuals as by groups or nations. Socialists maintain on the contrary that Socialism is impracticable unless Socialists are numerous enough to control an entire country at least—if not all civilized countries. As absolute unanimity of opinion is impossible, it is time that the question of individual liberty should be made a part of the subject matter of Socialist discussion. You take a man's life when you take "that by which he lives."

—

When I commented on one point raised by A. Freeland, a few weeks ago, I had no intention of replying fully to his letter nor to that of Dr. Barnes. Lucifer's space is too limited to enter on a thorough discussion of the Single Tax. I am aware of the fact that Single Taxers do not propose to tax anything that labor produces, but only the natural advantages of the land. But how discriminate between the two? Dr. Barnes says that if A is obliged to take an inferior piece of land and by his superior forethought and business ability (as essential in farming as in any other business) produces more value than his neighbors, he should be exempt from taxation and they pay all the taxes. But I think Dr. Barnes would find it difficult to make these neighbors agree that the land is really inferior for all purposes. They would perhaps say that while it might be inferior to theirs for wheat production it was superior for the purposes for which A used it. For it is an undeniable fact that different seeds require different soils and locations. And why should the man who chooses to grow watermelons be taxed because his soil is richer than that of his neighbor who wishes to grow grapes?

L. H.

Book Notes.

"The Dream of the Anarchist," John Graham Brooks, of Cambridge, says Anarchy is popularly misconceived. This is a leaflet reproduction of the New York "Mail and Express'" report of a lecture by Mr. Graham. Excellent for distribution. Send 5 cents to this office for twelve copies.

—

"Smaller Profits, Reduced Salaries, and Lower Wages. The Condition, the Cause, and the Cure" by "A Business Man" is a "vest-pocket booklet" published by Frank Vierth, Cedar Rapids, Iowa. It is simply and clearly written, interesting, thought-provoking. Five cents a copy; a cent and a half each, when ordered in quantities for distribution.

—

"Fragments of Song," by Laura Verner Reed is a dainty little booklet well-printed and prettily bound. A specimen verse gives the author's ideal of heaven:

"No heaven for me in some far city strange,
Strong jasper-walled, with many a golden street,
Where white-robed throngs with never choice nor change,
Harp praises round a kingly ruler's feet.
But heaven for me a land of lakes and rills,
Fields summer-sweet and forests old and dim,
Mountains with cloudy caps and purple hills
And oceans surging forth a ceaseless hymn."

The booklet is for sale by the author, Harveysburg, Ohio, and the price is 25 cents.

—

Of interpretations of Bible stories there is no end and if those who add to or take from the Bible are doomed to destruction—as the writer of "Revelations" assures us—there is no hope for a multitude of Bible tinkerers. L. Emerick of Jacksonville, Ill., has recently written and published "The Interpretation of the Noahian Flood Allegory." Of his work the author says:

"I not only preach of a flood of wickedness that is now drowning millions of earth's people; but I preach of a flood of righteousness that saves people from the effects of wickedness; also, I give a rational interpretation of the flood allegory found in the Bible, in the fact that wickedness carries its own penalties of death to body, mind, heart and soul, without the unreasonable teaching that God destroys wickedness by water floods."

The price of the work is not given, but it is probably 25 cents, and is for sale by the author.

L. H.

Career.

The army today offers a career.—Boston Transcript.

Standing on the brink of world politics, we were like the naked boy at the river's edge in summer. We shivered in anticipation of the plunge. But having plunged, oh! how delicious.

As is usual with very great peoples, we include numbers of young men who are too noble to work. Hitherto the rest of us have selfishly left these to get along as best they might, to marry money, to dine out every day, or to starve, as they chose, while we went about our business. This has been a national reproach, and it has been felt as such by the more right-thinking.

'Tis pleasant, then, to reflect that henceforth there lies before the ambitious, yet fastidious youth a wider choice; that the listless in his pocket, he may now imbrue in the blood of his country's foes.

The thought that our statesmanship will not be always equal to providing foes is unworthy of us.—"Life."

Society's Indifference.

To oblige men to work for thirty-seven hours continuously without sleep, besides being cruel is also uneconomical. And yet such uneconomical expenditure of human lives continually goes on around us.

Opposite the house in which I live is a factory of silk goods, built with the latest technical improvements. About three thousand women and seven hundred men work and live there. As I sit in my room now I hear the unceasing din of the machinery, and know—for I have been there—what that din means. Three thousand women stand, for twelve hours a day, at the looms amid a deafening roar; winding, unwinding, arranging the silk threads to make silk stuffs. All the women (except those who have just come from the villages) have an unhealthy appearance. Most of them lead a most intemperate and immoral life. Almost all, whether married or unmarried, as soon as a child is born to them send it off either to the village or to the Foundlings' Hospital, where eighty per cent. of these children perish. For fear of losing their places the mothers resume work the next day, or on the third day after their confinement.

So that during twenty years, to my knowledge, tens of thousands of young, healthy women—mothers—have ruined and are now ruining their lives and the lives of their children in order to produce velvets and silk stuffs.

I met a beggar yesterday, a young man on crutches, sturdily built, but crippled. He used to work as a navvy, with a wheelbarrow, but slipped and injured himself internally. He spent all he had on peasant-women healers and on doctors, and has now for eight years been homeless, begging his bread, and complaining that God does not send him death.

How many such sacrifices of life there are that we either know nothing of, or know of, but hardly notice, considering them inevitable!

I know men working at the blast-furnaces of the Tula Iron Foundry who, to have one Sunday free each fortnight, will work for twenty-four hours—that is, after working all day they will go on working all night. I have seen these men. They all drink vodka to keep up their energy, and obviously, like those goods-porters on the railway, they quickly expend not only the interest, but the capital of their lives.

And what of the waste of lives among those who are employed on admittedly harmful work—in looking-glass, cartridge, match, sugar, tobacco, and glass factories; in mines or as gilders.

There are English statistics showing that the average length of life among people of the upper classes is fifty-five years, and the average of life among working people in unhealthy occupations is twenty-nine years.

Knowing this (and we cannot help knowing it), we who take advantage of labor that costs human lives should, one would think (unless we are beasts), not be able to enjoy a moment's peace. But the fact is that we well-to-do people, liberals and humanitarians, very sensitive to the sufferings not of people only, but also of animals, unceasingly make use of such labor, and try to become more and more rich—that is, to take more and more advantage of such work. And we remain perfectly tranquil.

For instance, having learned of the thirty-seven hour labor of the goods-porters, and of their bad room, we at once send there an inspector, who receives a good salary, and we forbid people to work more than twelve hours, leaving the workmen (who are thus deprived of one-third of their earnings) to feed themselves as best they can; and we compel the railway company to erect a large and convenient room for the workmen. Then with perfectly quiet consciences we continue to receive and dispatch goods by that railway, and we ourselves continue to receive salaries, dividends, rents from houses or from land, etc. Having learned that the women and girls at the silk factory, living far from their families, ruin their own lives and those of their children, and that a large half of the washerwomen who iron our starched shirts, and of the typesetters who print the books and papers that while away our time, get consumption, we only shrug our shoulders and say that we are very sorry things should be so, but that we can do nothing to alter it, and we continue with tranquil consciences to buy silk stuffs, to wear starched shirts and to read our morning paper. We are much concerned about the hours of the shop assistants, and still more about the long hours of our own children at school; we strictly forbid carters to make their horses drag heavy loads, and we even organize the killing of cattle in slaughter-houses, so that the animals may feel it as little as possible. But how wonderfully blind we become as soon as the question concerns those millions of workers who perish slowly, and often painfully, all around us, at labors the fruits of which we use for our convenience and pleasure!—From Tolstoi's "Slavery of Our Times."

Substantial Sympathy for the Striking Coal Miners.

Mrs. Montgomery Stone, widow of the late iron king, Sebastian L. Stone, has contributed $10,000 towards helping the anthracite miners win their strike. Mrs. Stone says:

"The miners ought to win their strike. Their work is dangerous in the extreme and it should be well paid for. I have investigated the matter, and am convinced that they have right with them. I might send them a message to the effect that I sympathized with them and hoped they would win, but this would put no bread in the mouths of their starving wives and children. I might send them flowers, but they could not appreciate their innocent beauty when their stomachs were empty. Therefore I have decided to send them a check for $10,000, and when they have spent a portion of it in replenishing their larders they will feel more in the humor for listening to messages of sympathy."

Strange to say, this gracious lady is one of the most beautiful women in the west, and of considerable literary ability. She has recently completed a novel entitled "In the Field of Labor." The book deals with the lives of the working men and women. Here is indeed a woman whose beauty of physique is multiplied many fold by an unselfish heart and intellectual mind, and who is brave enough to do things out of the ordinary because it is right.—Portland "Labor Press."

Defense Fund.

For Lois Waisbrooker and Mattie D. Penhallow, Home, Wash. Amount previously reported, $181.38. Dr. E. B. F., N. Y., $10; W. S., N. Y., $1; B. H., N. Y., $1; L. E. R., Wash., $1; Wm. H., N. Y., 50 cents. Total to July 1, $194.88.

OLIVER A. VERITY, Treas., Home, Washington.

Matrimony or Purgatory.

Archbishop Ryan recently visited a small parish in the mining district of Schuylkill county for the purpose of administering the sacrament of confirmation. In examining a class he asked one poor, nervous, frightened little girl what matrimony was and she answered that it was "a state of terrible torment, which those who enter it are compelled to undergo for a time to prepare them for a brighter and better world."

"No, no," remonstrated the pastor; "that isn't matrimony That's the definition for purgatory."

"Leave her alone," said the archbishop, with a twinkle in his eye; "maybe she's right. What do you or I know about it?"—Philadelphia Times.

Mabel—In old-fashioned novels, the hero and heroine married in the last chapter and lived happily ever afterward.

Marion.—They write more naturally nowadays. The hero and heroine marry in the first chapter and live unhappily afterward.—Town Topics.

Forty copies of Lucifer, no two alike, of 1900 or 1901 will be sent to any address for 15 cents. Nine bundles for $1. We are anxious to place these papers where they will do good. Please let us have your orders soon. State which year you want.

The Blind Beggar.

He stands, a patient figure, where the crowd
  Heaves to and fro beside him. In his ears
  All day the Fair goes thundering, and he hears
In darkness, as a dead man in his shroud.
Patient he stands, with age and sorrow bowed,
  And holds a piteous hat of ancient years;
  And in his face and gesture there appears
The desperate humbleness of poor men proud.

What thoughts are his, as, with the inward sight,
  He sees those mirthful faces pass him by?
Is the long darkness darker for that light
  The misery deeper when that joy is nigh?
Patient, alone, he stands from morn to night,
  Pleading in his respectful misery.

—Arthur Symons, in "Silhouettes."

VARIOUS VOICES.

J. H., Abilene, Texas:—Enclosed find 50 cents, for which please send "A New Catechism," editorial mention of which was made in Lucifer No. 922. The "Home Cyclopedia" which I ordered recently was received O. K., and I am much pleased with it. It lies on my table in easy reach of the children, along with Bibles, Sunday school literature, our local county papers, copies of Lucifer, the "Crime of Credulity," "Travels in Faith," Paine's "Rights of Man," etc. There is no urging, no forbidding. I have simply resolved that my children shall have opportunity to read both sides of questions, as far as I may be able to give them such opportunity.

Lydia R. Todd, 1213 Powell St., San Francisco, Cal.:—There are lots of good people who are not Anarchists; but an Anarchist lawyer is an impossibility. My saying I do not believe in law, or contributing to the defense fund is not saying others shall not. I do not believe in marriage, therefore I do not marry; but if I do marry I am not free. I do not care if others marry, who do not want to be free. You do not care if you are called an Anarchist or not, but others may care. Giving my opinion on the inconsistency of lawyer-hiring Anarchists, is not dictating to any one. There are a great many people calling themselves Anarchists who are not; among them are the king and president slayers and lawyer-hiring, law-catering Anarchists.

Sara C. Campbell, Roodhouse, Ills.:—Years ago the "Iron-Clad Age" published something similar to Ironicus' "Religion" in Lucifer 918. I have not the paper but this is the substance, "Ages ago the wise men conferred together as to ways and means whereby the common people could be kept in subjection to rulers. One more wise than the rest said, Let us create a god and set him up as ruler and by keeping the people in ignorance we can rule them and make them believe they are ruled by God, and the rest agreed to the arrangement." I would like to know how "Iron-Clad Age" came into possession of these facts if facts they are. Ironicus calls his "Religion" a fable. If any Lucifer reader knows of any published facts stating how the god idea did originate will she or he be good enough to let me know where I can get them? It seems reasonable to me that it did start in the way and for the purpose named in "Iron-Clad Age," for I often hear preachers say things that I cannot believe they know anything about. It is my belief that men and women must give up their belief in God before they will begin to think for themselves. It is only a belief; not many will say they know there is a God such as the Bible tells about.

Myra Peffer:—Thinking of the recent efforts of Comstock to suppress certain kinds of reading in order to enhance the morals of the masses one cannot help wondering why some other things have been overlooked. We would respectfully call the attention of Mr. Comstock to the fact that since the days of Sampson long hair has been supposed to indicate sex vigor—therefore he should see to it that women as well as men have the hair cut short. Music is well known to gratify the sex instincts. Suppress it; have all passionate music forbidden and destroyed. Meats, spices, wines, even eggs and oysters, stimulate the animal desires, so I advise that the bill of fare be made a subject of statute law, and thus endeavor to repress all unholy emotions without having to resort to drastic measures.

James F. Morton, Jr., in last Lucifer expressed the only rational view of the question—"What would you do if your sweetheart loved another?" Can any one tell why he or she would want to hold a lover who had ceased to love? And not having ceased to love how could one object to others sharing the affections? Once eradicate the ownership idea and lovers instead of seeking one whom they can have and hold for their very own, will take pride in winning the affections of those who are loved by many.

I. C. Barnes, Hindsboro, Ills.:—I am surprised at your comments on Friend Freeland's Single Tax argument. I hope you will reread his and my short articles carefully, and you will see we do not favor taxing anything that labor produces, but tax natural advantages of location of land upon the principle that all people have an equal right to any land. But he who occupies the most favorable site of land, whether naturally so or made so by the presence of population, he should pay for the privilege and security in the possession of it. If A is forced to take an inferior piece of land and C and D get more valuable land and A by fertilizing his farm causes it to yield more than C or D he should not be fined for his industry by taxation. The improvements he puts on the land are his—not the public's. The natural advantages and the value given it by the people, should belong to the people.

Gold, copper, coal or other valuable deposits belong to all the people alike. But if the possessor of it pays into a public fund the excess of value every year, over what the same expenditure of labor on the poorest or least desirable land would produce, then all people would share equally in natural opportunities in this life. It would abolish involuntary poverty. It would abolish strikes—especially in mines—for the large monopolizers of valuable mineral or coal mines would abandon all land they did not use, which would make it free to miners to work for themselves by paying the economic rent or annual value to the public, which would be paying it partly to themselves. Whether the fund collected as a tax for rent is needed for roads, bridges or other public utilities or not, it ought to be collected and distributed to all the people for reasons above given.

Love is fed not by what it takes, but by what it gives; and the love of man and wife, too, must be fed by the love they give to others. If they cannot come out of their secluded haven to reach a hand to others, or even to give some boon of affection to those who need it more than themselves, or if they mistrust each other in doing so, then assuredly they are not very well fitted to live together.—From "Love's Coming of Age."

COLLEGE OF MEDICINE AND SURGERY,
CHICAGO, ILL.
Session begins September 28 and continues eight months. Four Years' Graded Course. Practical work required in Chemistry Physiology, Pathology and Microscopy. Co-Educational. Standard Requirement. For catalogue, address Secretary, 241 Ashland Boulevard, Chicago.

Our Home Rights, A monthly magazine, $1 per year. Immanuel Pfeiffer, M. D., Editor. Published at No. 5 Olive St., Boston, Mass., is now on its second year. It is known far and near as the people's own magazine. It goes into forty-seven states and territories, besides England, Denmark, Germany, Brazil, South Africa, Australia, and India. It discusses all reform movements from an independent and progressive standpoint. Here are some of the subjects discussed every month: Suggestion, Single Tax, Medical Freedom, Spiritualism, Capital and Labor, Socialism, Vegetarianism Anti-War, Pure Foods, Women's Dept., Therapeusis, Women's Rights, Anti-Vaccination, and many other live and interesting matters. Send ten cents for a sample copy. Our Home Rights should be in every Household.

Lessons, In Language, Business, Arithmetic, Literature and Command and meaning of words, their arrangements in sentences, correct use of hyphens and capitals, punctuation, conversational power, elocution, extempore, and studies of such works in ancient and modern literature as may be selected. Methods new, unique, attractive. Arithmetic, only as used in business. Terms: one pupil, fifty cents per lesson. Discount to classes of more than one. Inquiry solicited. J. M. Clarke 775 Walnut St., Chicago, Ill.

For Rent: Large, light, furnished room. Inquire of Lillian Harman 500 Fulton, St. Chicago.

TOLSTOI'S NEW WORK.

The Slavery of Our Times.

With Portrait of the Gifted Author, and Introduction by the Translator, Aylmer Maude.

CHAPTER TITLES,

I., Goods Porters Who Work Thirty-Seven Hours; II., Society's Indifference While Men Perish; III., Justification of the Existing Position of Sciences; IV., The Assertion of Economic Science that Rural Laborers Must Enter the Factory System; V. Why Learned Economists Assert what is False; VI., Bankruptcy of th Socialist Ideal; VII., Culture or Freedom? VIII., Slavery Exists Among Us; IX., What is Slavery? X., Laws Concerning Taxes, Land and Property; XI., Laws the Cause of Slavery; XII., The Essence of Legislation Is Organized Violence; XIII., What Are Governments? Is It Possible to Exist Without Governments? XIV., How Can Governments Be Imbibed? XV., What Should Each Man Do? An Afterword.

Well printed on heavy paper. Substantially bound. 186 pages. Price, $1.00.

Address M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

CAPTAIN JINKS, HERO

BY ERNEST CROSBY.

It is a merciless satire on war and militarism in which the parallel between savagery and soldiery is unerringly drawn. It is a biting burlesque on the various forms of cheap hero-worship. It holds up to withering scorn every important feature of militarism.

Among the accompaniments and results of war exploited and satirized, are hazing at "West Point," the war whoops of the yellow journals, the savagery of war, the Schley-Sampson controversy, civilizing the heathen savage, looting in China, pension abuses, the capture of Aguinaldo, the Peace Conference, army mismanagement, osculatory attacks by goosey girls, etc.

With 25 Irresistible Drawings by Dan Beard. 12mo, Cloth, Handsome Covers, 400 pages. Price $1.00

Address M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

VICE: ITS FRIENDS AND ITS FOES

BY EDWIN C. WALKER.

CONTENTS:—Brotherhood of Man; The Recognition of Facts; Folly of "For Men Only;" Definition of Vice; Horrors of Prostitution; Abnormal Sexuality; Errors of Fathers, Mothers and Teachers; Persecution Does Not Reform; Prostitution and the Crusaders; The "Spoiling of the Heathen;" What are the Effects of Raids and Crusades? The Economic Side of the Problem. Party Politics in Vice Crusading; In What Does Prostitution Consist? Some Causes of Prostitution; Two Kinds of Prostitution Compared; The Opponents of Divorce; "Purifying" the Tenements; Action for Advanced Women.

WITH APPENDIX:—The Wanderings of a Spirit; Our Fair Civilization. The Folly and Cruelty of It All. Price 10c.

Address M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

VACCINATION A CRIME.

With Comments on Other Sanitary Superstitions.

BY FELIX L. OSWALD, M. D.

"Vaccination spreads diseases; vaccination impairs the organic functions; vaccination encourages reliance on worthless remedies; vaccination spreads small-pox; compulsory vaccination furnishes dangerous legal precedents."

With illustrations of diseases frequently resulting from vaccination. 199 pages. Price 10 cents. For sale by M. Harman, 500 Fulton St. Chicago.

DO YOU EVER THINK

Of the fate of the Prodigal Daughter? The Prodigal Son is forgiven and received with rejoicing—why should different treatment be accorded to his sister? For a vivid, true picture of the conditions in homes and factories which produce thousands of so-called fallen women every year, read "The Prodigal Daughter; or, The Price of Virtue," by Rachel Campbell.

SPECIAL OFFER.

This valuable work sent free on receipt of twenty-five cents for a thirteen week's trial subscription to Lucifer the Light Bearer. M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton Street, Chicago, Ill.

Notice! I would be glad to hear from Liberals who would like to correspond with other Liberals. Address (with stamp.)
Snowville, Va. ELMINA DRAKE SLENKER.

926.

If these figures correspond with the number printed on the wrapper of your Lucifer, your subscription expires with this number.

If a copy of Lucifer fails to reach you, please order by number or date.

Lucifer will not be sent "by return mail" unless stamps for postage are enclosed with order.

To New Subscribers: Your subscription is paid to No. If you have not ordered Lucifer, a friend has subscribed for you. If you do not wish to receive it, please notify us by card or through your postmaster. If you wish to become a regular subscriber you will confer a favor by renewing before the expiration of your trial subscription.

LOVE'S COMING OF AGE.

BY EDWARD CARPENTER.

This is a book with which few will wholly agree, but which nearly every one can read with profit and enjoyment. The subject is the relation of the sexes in the past, present and future, and it is treated with absolute frankness and fearlessness by a writer who unites a broad outlook, a strong grasp of his subject and a charming literary style. The following table of contents will indicate the line of thought followed by the author.

The Sex Passion.
Man, the Ungrown.
Woman, the Serf.
Woman in Freedom
Marriage: a Retrospect.
Marriage: a Forecast.
The Free Society.
Some remarks on the early star and sex worships.
Notes—On the Primitive Group Marriage; Jealousy; The Family; Preventive Checks to Population.

The book is printed on extra book paper and handsomely bound in cloth. Price, $1.

Address M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

WHITMAN'S IDEAL DEMOCRACY, AND OTHER WRITINGS.

BY HELENA BORN.

Comprising besides the title essay, Thoreau's Joy in Nature; Poets of Revolt; Shelley, Whitman, Carpenter; Whitman's Altruism; Individualism versus Organization; Impossibles of Economic Argument; The Last Stand Against Democracy in Sex; Inequality in Divorce; Marriage Safeguards. With portrait of author and biographical introduction by Helen Tufts. 135 pages. Edition limited to 500 copies; each copy numbered. Fine paper, uncut pages, bound in boards, paper label. Price $1.

Personal: A liberal man, living in Southeast Ohio, would like to become acquainted with ladies of congenial ideas in that section. Further information given to those interested on receipt of letter. Address W., 660 Fulton St. Chicago.

"Pages of Socialist History." By W. Tcherkesoff. This book is recommended to Socialists of all schools, as it deals with the history of the "International" and the attitude of Marx and Engels towards Bakounin. Will be ready soon. Paper 60 cts., in cloth, $1. By mail 10 cents. Send in advance orders.

Address M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

RADICAL LITERATURE.

For Sale by M. Harman, 500 Fulton St., Chicago.

A CHAMBERMAID'S DIARY. By Octave Mirbeau. Translated from the French by Benj. R. Tucker. 460 pages. Handsomely bound in cloth. $1.25.

ADVANCEMENT OF SCIENCE. Prof. John Tyndall's famous Inaugural Address before the British Association for the Advancement of Science, with the articles on Prayer which so stirred the religious world. Cloth, 50c; paper, 25c.

AGE OF REASON. Thomas Paine. Cloth, with steel plate portrait, 50c; paper 15c.

ANARCHISM: Its Philosophy and Ideal. Peter Kropotkin. 5c.

A PHYSICIAN IN THE HOUSE. A New Family Medical Work, by Dr. J. H. Greer. This book is up-to-date in every particular. It will save you hundreds of dollars in doctors' bills. It tells you how to cure yourself by simple and harmless home remedies. It recommends no poisonous or dangerous drugs. It teaches how to save health and life by safe methods. It teaches prevention—that it is better to know how to live and avoid disease than to take any medicine as a cure. It is not an advertisement and has no medicine to sell. It has hundreds of excellent recipes for the cure of the various diseases. It has 16 colored plates showing different parts of the human body. The chapter on Painless Midwifery is worth its weight in gold to women. The "Care of Children" is something every mother ought to read. It teaches the value of Air, Sunshine, and Water as medicines. It contains valuable information for the married. This book cannot fail to please you. If you are looking for health by the safest and easiest means, do not delay getting it. It has eight hundred pages, is neatly bound in cloth, with gold letters, and will be sent by mail or express, prepaid to any address, for $2.75.

A PLEA FOR THE NEW WOMAN. May L. Collins. With large new half-tone portrait. 10c.

A TALE OF THE STRASSBURG GEESE. B. B. Kerr. Together with The Strike of the Strassburg Geese (C. W. Coolridge), A Traveler's Tale (B. B. Kerr), The Cat's Story (Emile Zola) 5c.

AUTONOMY, SELF-LAW. A fragmentary dissertation on the right to non-invasive self-hood. 5c.

BALZAC'S SERAPHITA: The Mystery of Sex. Mary Hanford Ford. Cloth, $1.

BIBLE TEMPERANCE. E. C. Walker. Proving that Liquor Drinking is Commended, Defended and Enjoined by the Bible, and giving close reference to the chapters and verses. 10c.

BORNING BETTER BABIES.—Through regulating reproduction by controlling conception. E. B. Foote, Jr., M. D. 25c.

CAUSES OF HARD TIMES, and the Money Question. Albert Chavannes. 5c.

CHICAGO CONFERENCE OF TRUSTS. Speeches, debates, etc.; 31 portraits of delegates, including Benj. R. Tucker, Laurence Gronlund, William Jennings Bryan, Samuel Gompers, Louis F. Post, and George Schilling. 624 pages. 50c.

CHILDREN OF THE ITALIAN POOR. Paola Lombroso. 5c.

DARWINS, THE. (A novel.) Elmina D. Slenker. 50c.

DAWN OF CIVILIZATION, The; or, England in the Nineteenth Century. J. C. Spence. 178 pages. 50c.

DAWN-THOUGHT ON THE RECONCILIATION. By J. Wm. Lloyd. An inspired treatise that, with insight and solution, touches all the questions of life, love, soul and society. A prose-poem, simple enough for a child to enjoy, deep enough to make a philosopher think. The largest creed, the most generous theory, the gladdest gospel. A book of life. A religion of growth and the overlook—freedom and optimism. Read it. Printed in old style antique type, rubricated with portrait of the author. In three editions, de luxe, plain and paper bound. Prices, $1.25, $1.00 and 50c.

DIGGING FOR BED-ROCK. Camp-meeting talks and sketches by Moses Harman. 5c.

DR. FOOTE'S SOCIAL SCIENCE SERIES OF DIME PAMPHLETS—Wedlock; Scientific Marriage; Heredity; A B C of Temperaments; Fowell and his Critics; Physiological Marriage; Physical Improvement of Humanity; Causes of Disease, Insanity, and Premature Death; A Step Backward. Any of the above books sent by mail on receipt of price.

DYNAMIC THEORY OF LIFE AND MIND. An attempt to show that all organic beings are both constructed and operated by the dynamic agencies of their respective environments. By James B. Alexander. Over 400 illustrations, 37 chapters, 1,067 pages and a 3-column index of 11 pages. Cloth, $3.75.

EAST TENNESSEE SKETCHES. A and Cecile Chavannes. 10c.

ECONOMICS OF ANARCHY. A Study of the Industrial Type. Dyer D. Lum. 10c.

EIGHT-HOUR MOVEMENT. John P. Altgeld, ex-Governor of Illinois. 5c.

EVOLUTION AND REVOLUTION. Elisee Reclus. 5c.

FALSE CLAIMS OF THE CHURCH. John E. Remsburg. Analyzing and confuting the claims made by churchmen that the Christian religion has promoted morality, learning, temperance, science, freedom, and showing how she has opposed progress. Paper, 10c.

FIELDS, FACTORIES, AND WORKSHOPS; or, Industry Combined with Agriculture and Brain Work with Manual Work. Peter Kropotkin. 360 pages. 50c. Postage, 5c.

FREE PRESS. Arguments in support of demurrer to the indictment of M. Harman, E. C. Walker and Geo. Harman, under the Comstock law. G. C. Siemens and David Overmyer. 10c.

GIORDANO BRUNO. His Life, Teachings, and Martyrdom. Burned for heresy in Rome, Feb. 17, 1600. 5c.

GOD AND THE STATE. Bakounine. 25c.

GOVERNMENT ANALYZED. A remarkable work by a remarkable man, Col. John H. Kelso, the history of whose life reads more like romance than reality. This book is the last of a series—Deity Analyzed, Bible Analyzed, Universe Analyzed. By the author's death this work was left unfinished, but was completed by his wife, Etta Dunbar Kelso. 119 pages; cloth. Price reduced from $1.50 to $1.

HILDA'S HOME. Rose Graul. "An o'er true tale" of woman's wrongs and of one woman's struggles and final triumphs in her attempt to secure justice for herself and for her sisters. 426 pages. Cloth, $1; paper, 50c.

HUMAN RIGHTS. J. Madison Hook. 5c.

IMPORTANCE OF HONEST MONEY. A simple, scientific, invariable standard of price. James Adleman. 120 pages. Paper, 50c.

IN BRIGHTER CLIMES; or, Life in Scotland. Albert Chavannes. 5c.

INFIDEL DEATH-BEDS. "Also Tales of Dying Horrors." G. W. Foote. Brief biographical sketches of 97 Freethinkers, including Bruno, Buckle, Byron, Comte, Darwin, George Eliot, Gibbon, Goethe, Hugo, Harriet Martineau, Mill, Paine, Madame Roland, George Sand, Shelley, Voltey, and Voltaire. 10c.

IN HELL AND THE WAY OUT. A plan of Social Democracy outlined. Henry E. Allen. 10c.

INSTITUTIONAL MARRIAGE. From the viewpoint of an exiled Mormon. M. Harman. 5c.

JOHN'S WAY. A domestic radical story. Elmina D. Slenker. 25c.

KARREZZA. Ethics of Marriage. A bold, brave book, teaching ideal marriage, rights of the unborn child, a designed and controlled maternity. Sample pages free. $1.

KORADINE. A story for young and old. Extra levant cloth. $1.

LIBERTY IN LITERATURE. Testimonial to Walt Whitman. "Let us put wreaths on the brows of the living." An address delivered in Philadelphia, Oct. 31, 1886, with portrait of Whitman. Containing also Col. Ingersoll's address at the funeral of Walt Whitman, Mar. 30, 1892. Cloth, 50c; paper, 25c.

LIBERTY. Political, Religious, Social, and Moral. A. F. Tindall. 5c.

LITTLE LESSONS FOR LITTLE FOLKS. Elmina D. Slenker. Boards, 40c.

LIZZIE MELTON. A story of a self-reliant girl. By Albert Chavannes. With portrait of author. 25c.

LUCIFER. Third Series, Vol. III. (1899). Cloth, $1.25. Postage, 25c.

MAGNETATION, and Its Relation to Health and Character. Albert Chavannes. 25c.

MARRIAGE. An address by Dr. Juliet H. Severance. 5c.

MARRIAGE IN FREE SOCIETY. Edward Carpenter. A dainty little gift book. 25c.

MEN, WOMEN AND CHANCE. William Platt. Containing two tales: The Ascent to the Heights, and Blind Men and Seeing. Well printed on heavy paper and artistically bound in cloth. Gilt top, rough edges. 75c.

MEN, WOMEN, AND GODS. Helen H. Gardener. With preface by Col. R. G. Ingersoll. Contents: Introduction by Col. Ingersoll. Men, Women, and Gods. Vicarious Atonement. Historical Facts and Theological Fictions. Appendix. Address to the Clergy and Others. Letter to Cleveland Congress etc. Postage, 5c.

MISSING LINK IN MODERN SPIRITUALISM, THE. A. Leah (Fox) Underhill. With portraits of the Fox Sisters and others. 478 pages. Cloth. Reduced to $1.

MORIBUND SOCIETY AND ANARCHY. Jean Grave. Cloth, 50c; paper, 25c.

MOTHERHOOD IN FREEDOM. M. Harman. 5c.

MUTUAL BANKING. A simple plan to abolish interest on money. William B. Greene. 10c.

NORA, A DOLL'S HOUSE, and GHOSTS. Ibsen. Cloth. 75c.

OUR WORSHIP OF PRIMITIVE SOCIAL QUERIES. E. C. Walker. Contents: Love and Law; The Moloch of the Monogamic Ideal; The Continuity of Race-Life, and Tyranny; Food and Sex Fallacies, a Criticism; What Men and Women Are and When They Are Not Varieties; The New Woman: What is she? What will she be? The State Hiding Behind Its Own Mistakes; Bishop Potter's Opinions of Divorce; Love: Its Attraction and Expression; Is He an Honest Girl? Lloyd, Platt, and the Pitiful Facts; Social Radicals and Parentage; Anthropology and Monogamy; Love and Trust Versus Fear; Reflections upon Reading William Platt's "Women, Love, and Life." 15c.

PERSONAL EXPERIENCES of Two American Anti-Vivisectionists in Various Countries. Philip G. Peabody. With an Appendix by Col. R. G. Ingersoll. Reduced from 25c to 15c.

PERSONAL RIGHTS AND SEXUAL WRONGS. Oswald Dawson. 5c.

PRIESTLY CELIBACY. Prof. A. L. Rawson. Together with The Incoherence of Transition (E. C. Walker), Motherhood in Freedom (Moses Harman), The Greatest Sin (an allegory, R. B. Kerr, and Jealousy, the Fox of Freedom (Oscar Rotter). 25c.

RELIGION AND RATIONALISM. The relation of each to human liberty. The religionist, fancying that he has the whole truth, is logically opposed to investigation, and he appeals to physical force to arrest the discovery of new truths. What Rationalism is, and how many believe themselves Freethinkers who are only unbelieving or disgruntled religionists. The necessity for separate organizations and a division of labor among reformers. The Secular Union. Important facts and arguments in a compact form. E. C. Walker. 5c.

RIGHTS OF MAN. Thomas Paine. Answer to Burke's attack upon the French revolution. A political treatise of great general value, as advocating liberty and democracy. Contains the fundamental principles of true republicanism. Cloth, 50c; paper, 25c.

RUBAIYAT (Quatrains) OF OMAR KHAYYAM. Edward FitzGerald's interpretation; with original introduction; special cover; latest version. Paper, 10c.

RULED BY THE TOMB. A discussion of free thought and free love. Orford Northcote. 10c.

SCIENCE IN STORY; or, Sammy Tubbs, the Boy Doctor, and Sponsie, the Troublesome Monkey. For young folks. Dr. E. B. Foote. Five volumes in "red line," presentation edition. $5. Five volumes, plainer binding, $3.50; all in one volume, $2.

SEXUAL PHYSIOLOGY FOR THE YOUNG. Being the fifth volume of "Science in Story." 250 pages; cloth bound; illustrated. 50c.

SONGS OF THE UNBLIND CUPID. J. Wm. Lloyd. Edition de luxe. Verses printed from Kelmscott type upon deckle edged hand made paper of cerulean tint. Initial letters, ornaments and borders are in red; initial letter and tint. Initial letters, ornaments and borders are in red; initial letter and tint. Initial letters, ornaments and borders are hand painted in water colors. Covers sketch upon the opening page are hand painted in water colors. Covers brown, with choice of silver or gold lettering. Very handsome gift book. 25c.

STUDIES IN SOCIOLOGY. In four parts: I., The Law of Happiness; II., The Law of Individual Control; III., The Law of Exchange; IV., The Law of Environment. Albert Chavannes. 25c.

TALKS ON NATURE. Important information for both sexes. Dr. J. H. Greer. 128 pages. Reduced from 50 to 25c.

THE ABOLITION OF MARRIAGE. John Beverly Robinson. Together with Isabel's Intention (Martetie), Reminiscences of Berlin Heights (A. Warren), and The Sexes and Love in Freedom (Oscar Rotter). 25c.

THE BAR SINISTER AND LICIT LOVE, including the first biennial proceedings of the Legitimation League, and a full account of the Lanchester case, with full-page half-tone pictures of Edith Lanchester, and Lillian Harman. Handsomely bound in green and gold covers. 307 pages. 25c.

THE BLUE LAWS OF CONNECTICUT. Taken from the Code of 1650 and the public records of the Colony of Connecticut previous to 1665. With an account of the persecution of Witches and Quakers in New England, and some extracts from the Blue Laws of Virginia. Copiously illustrated. 25c.

THE BRITISH BARBARIANS. Grant Allen, the greatest of the Hill-Top pioneers. Dedicated "to all who have heart enough, brain enough, and soul enough to understand it." Handsomely bound in cloth. 301 pages. $1.

THE WOMAN WHO DID. Grant Allen. A powerful story of a refined, educated and high-spirited woman who dared to defy the tyranny of church and state and ignore the institution of marriage. Handsomely bound in cloth. $1.

THE NEW HEDONISM. Grant Allen. The opening paragraph says: "The old ascetism said: 'Be virtuous and you will be happy.' The new hedonism says: 'Be happy and you will be virtuous.'" In another place the writer says: "In proportion as men have freed themselves from mediæval superstitions have they begun to perceive that the unclean and impure things are celibacy and sexlessness; that the pure and beautiful and ennobling thing is the fit and worthy exercise of the reproductive function." Paper covers; 32 large pages; twelve copies, 25c. Single copy, 5c.

THE CHICAGO MARTYRS. The famous speeches of the eight condemned anarchists in Judge Gary's Court, and Altgeld's reasons for pardoning Fielden, Neebe and Schwab. 25c.

THE COMING WOMAN. Lillie D. White. 5c.

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM. Principles and platform of organized Freethought. 10c.

THE EVOLUTION OF MODESTY. Jonathan Mayo Crane. A consideration of the origin of clothes and the reasons why people wear clothing. Here are a few questions it answers: What is modesty? What is the cause of it? What is the use of it? What is the cause of the feeling of shame? Is nudity immodest? What is the cause of the notion that it is shameful to expose some parts of the body? Why do not all peoples agree as to what parts of the body should be concealed? 5c.

THE FOUNTAIN OF LIFE; or, The Threefold Power of Sex. Lois Waisbrooker. 25c.

THE FUTURE OF SECULARISM. When will the Cause of Justice triumph? 5c.

THE PRODIGAL DAUGHTER; or, The Price of Virtue. Rachel Campbell. Together with Legal Wifehood (Lucinda B. Chandler), Life's Gifts (Olive Schreiner), and Marriage—What It Was and Is; Will the Coming Woman Marry? 25c.

THE REVIVAL OF PURITANISM. E. C. Walker. 10c.

THE RIGHTS OF CHILDREN. R. B. Kerr. Together with What Are Women Here For? (E. B. Foote, Jr., M. D.). The New Martyrdom (Lillian Harman), and The Will, from the French of Guy de Maupassant. 25c.

THE SANCTITY OF MARRIAGE. As viewed from a moral and sanitary standpoint. A solemn protest against the present demoralizing management of that institution, its effects upon offspring and its influence upon education. By Dr. Robert A. Greer. A valuable "opening wedge" in missionary work. Price reduced from 25c to 10c.

THE SECRET INSTRUCTIONS OF THE JESUITS. A reprint from an edition published in 1723, quoted by the highest authorities as authentic. The work is redolent of Jesuit craft and is a plain index to the underhand working of that order against the welfare of individuals and society. 25c.

THE STATE: ITS HISTORIC ROLE. Prince Peter Kropotkin. 10c.

THE UNWOMANLY WOMAN. Lizzie M. Holmes. Together with That Great Fraud, Toilet Society (Moses Hull), Virgin Soil (George Egerton), and Normal Sexual Action (Ernest Wilson). 25c.

THE WORM TURNS. Revolutionary Poems. Voltairine de Cleyre. 10c.

THOMAS JEFFERSON. His Political, Social and Religious Philosophy. Gen. M. M. Trumbull. 5c.

TOKOLOGY. A book for every woman. By Alice B. Stockham, M. D. Illustrated. Tokology teaches possible painless pregnancy and parturition, giving full, plain directions for the care of a woman before and after confinement. The ailments of pregnancy can be prevented as well as the pains and dangers of childbirth avoided and women need not go down to death giving birth to children. English, German or Swedish. $2.25.

TRAVELS IN FAITH. By Capt. Robert C. Adams. His mental experience from superstition to rationalism. Cloth, 75c; paper, 25c.

VACCINATION A GIGANTIC CRIME. Samuel Dasting. 15c.

VINDICATION OF THOMAS PAINE. Col. R. G. Ingersoll. Dealing with all the slanders brought against the name and fame of Paine. A little pamphlet which every admirer of Thomas Paine should have by him for reference. Paper, 10c.

VITAL FORCE. Magnetic Exchange and Magnetation. Albert Chavannes. 25c.

WHAT THE YOUNG NEED TO KNOW: a Primer of Sexual Rationalism. Edwin C. Walker. "Let us cease to be ashamed of what makes us men, of what makes us women, of what gives us the kisses of lovers and the encircling arms of babes." Paper covers; 41 large pages. 10c.

WHAT IS RELIGION? Ingersoll's last public address, delivered at the meeting of the Free Religious Association in Boston on June 1, 1899. To which is appended the Poem, "Declaration of the Free," the last verse written by the great Freethinker. 5c.

WHEN LOVE IS LIBERTY AND NATURE LAW. John Badcock, Jr. 10c.

WHY THE UNDERTONE? An open letter to Judge Gary. Sarah E. Ames. 10c.

WOMAN, CHURCH, AND STATE. Matilda Joslyn Gage. "This is Mrs. Gage's last and crowning work. Every woman ought to read it. Every liberal woman and man will want it. A burning protest against the tremendous wrong done woman by the church, which controlled the state. It ought to be widely read for the good it will do. Cloth, $1.50; paper, 75c.

WOMAN IN THE PAST, PRESENT AND FUTURE. Woman was the first human being that tasted bondage. Woman was a slave before the slave existed. The basis of all oppression is economic dependence on the oppressor. This has been the condition of woman in the past and is so still. She is now a slave of the slave. This work is August Bebel's masterpiece. 8vo., 378 pages. 50c.

Address M. HARMAN, 800 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

Price 2 Cents.

LUCIFER.

THE LIGHT-BEARER.

THIRD SERIES, VOL. VI., No. 28. CHICAGO, ILLINOIS, JULY 24, E. M. 302. [C. E. 1902.] WHOLE No. 29

927

THE OLD LABORER.

His four-score years have bent a back of oak,
His earth-brown cheeks are full of hollow pits;
His gnarled hands wander idly as he sits
Bending above the hearthstone's feeble smoke.
Three-score and ten slow years he tilled the land;
He wrung his bread from out the stubborn soil;
He saw his masters flourish through his toil;
He held their substance in his horny hand.

Now he is old—he asks for daily bread:
He who has sowed the bread he may not taste
Begs for the crumbs—he would do no man wrong.
The Parish Guardians, when his case is read,
Will grant him (yet with no unseemly haste)
Just seventeen pence to starve on, seven days long.
—Arthur Symons, in "Silhouettes."

Some Nihilists I Have Met. II.

This happened several years ago; since then I have met so many nihilists whom the persecution of the Jews has driven out of Russia within the last ten years, and found them all so much like other people that the word has lost its terrors. Just now there comes before my eyes the quiet face of the little woman with large blue eyes, who sat in my study one morning, and in the most placid voice related how, as a child, she has carried messages across the city from one of the dreaded terrorists to another, without molestation, because, as she said in her queer English, "the police would not expect a child"; and again, when the officers had searched the house, she had lain with the prohibited books under her pillow, "because, even they are polite, more or less, and will not come into a girl's room if she is in bed, unless they expect her very much."

This she had done because of a much-loved brother, an ardent nihilist, and quite without the knowledge of her father, himself a public official.

Not long ago she returned to Russia, and I sometimes wonder if, escaping the famine and plague, she may yet travel the long way to the Siberian prisons.

Of these so much has lately been written, of their loneliness, their deprivations, their inaccessibility, that one would say the word despair must finally be written on the heart of him who enters there.

Yet I have met one who made his escape even from there; one who had scaled the fearful walls of the Russian prison, crossed the lonely deserts of snow, through the passes of the Altai mountain, and finally reached Japan from whence he sailed to America. One would naturally expect something bold, daring, shrewd, or strongly self-assertive in the person of the man who has accomplished such miracles. But none of these are evident in this short, stoutish, sandy-complexioned, curly-haired fellow, with the prominent nose and jaw of the slavic races. Very quiet, very much averse to talking even with his friends, but absolutely impenetrable to strangers, and much given to pessimistic contemplation. I should not be surprised some day to learn that he had committed suicide, for he is wofully disappointed in America, being wholly unfit for its sharp commercial push and scramble.

Not so with my young friend, the medical student, a person of surprisingly quick intellect and disputatious inclinations. After delivering her letter of introduction to me one sunny summer afternoon, she commenced an attack on an inoffensive Y. M. C. A. member who chanced to be present, and speedily drove him into a corner concerning the existence of a God. She next disposed of the marriage problem, Henry George's land-tax scheme, the advisability of eating meat, of women wearing short hair and a pantaloonish substitute for skirts, each in "one round." The expression is apropos; mentally speaking, she has on boxing gloves all the time, and is ready to spar on any known subject with the greatest mental athlete. She has a romantic history. The child of orthodox Jewish parents who forbade her all education, she naturally rebelled, and, to escape them, married at the age of eighteen a young nihilist, passionately devoted to her, but whose affection she but faintly reciprocated.

The marriage, however, was a compromise with authority to make her way to America, a female minor being subject to her father, if unmarried, and to her husband, if married.

Neither her husband nor herself believe in the binding efficacy of any ceremony, however; and after two years of wedlock she concluded to take up life alone. She had been swept into the storm of struggle between living with a husband she did not love, for his sake, or obeying her desire to live alone and be free.

I fancy it was a little hard for M. to give up the woman he so dearly loved, though he did believe in perfect liberty.

However, he did it with tolerable grace, and they greet one another as mere comrades now. He still retains his nihilistic enthusiasm, ingrained in all his life; but she has left it behind as a cast-off shell; indeed, she has a faculty of casting her coat of ideas quite regularly, withal remaining a very attractive and interesting person, in spite of inconstancy.

One thing, however, is very shocking to American feelings among all these people—an utter absence of filial affection. And yet, it is mathematically calculable; given the facts of utter rigidity, conservatism, and intolerance on the part of the parents, a tendency to curb every aspiration towards change, a resolution to put the garb of the seventeenth century on the back of the nineteenth, and, as a result, "it is impossible that we should love our parents," they say. At first they regard as hypocrisy all evidences of attachment between American parents and children. After a time, however, larger influences of a freer life unconsciously mould them over, and now among all those who have come into the circle of my acquaintance I remember very few who, from ardent state-haters, furious reformers ready to compel the world into a social paradise laid out on paper, even at the point of a bayonet, have not now become ambitious, make-the-most-of-it people, arrived at the conclusion that if the world is bound to perdition it will go in spite of them, and, if salvation is in store, it will save itself according to some gigantic evolution, whose form is yet but dimly seen by the human mites whose lives are weaving into it.

At present, I remember one face only, a wild, burning face, utterly unsubduable, which stands out in never-surrender prominence.

I saw it in an artist's gallery in the west, where this strange personage was posing as a study of a bandit.

Imagine a small, lithe figure, sinuous as a serpent, a pointed face lighted with tremendous lights of fire, and sunset, and running water gleams, in the depths of eyes now sombre, now glowing under heavy brows; long, loosely-curling hair falling to the shoulders, a picturesque dress of white embroidered blouse, dark pantaloons and silken sash, and a voice quick and vibrant as the motion of a cobra's tongue.

We entered into a conversation concerning a total vegetarian diet; and, to my astonishment, this singular being declared that for eight years he had eaten nothing but raw food, vegetables, and fruit, and for the last two years fruit alone.

He had been living near to Nature indeed; in the summer he slept upon the ground, in the winter, in a blanket on the floor; had done so for seventeen years. On questioning what had led him to so strange a life, he answered: "Because I wished to be free. I saw that men were the slaves of their own artificial needs, out of which have grown so many oppressive laws, systems of production, and so forth. I did not wish to work for any one else, nor to slave nine or ten hours a day to gratify a need which is only imaginary. The chief causes of this foolish industry are the need of food and clothing. Civilization, so called, seems to have a rage for every possible compound, healthy or unhealthy, beautiful or ugly, so that these increase the necessity for toil. I said to myself, I will learn to live on little, to overcome the need for so many changes of clothing, and I shall be free. I have done so. I can live very comfortably on eight cents a day, and I do not starve on five. Then you see I love what is beautiful. A fruit dinner is beautiful to look at. Mr. C. (the artist) would even like to paint it. But suppose he paints a carnivorous dinner, is there anything about it? No woman need slave over the stove to prepare my meal, and there are no dishes to to wash afterward. Oh, one escapes a great deal of slavery. One's blood is never overheated, nor subject to internal changes; winter and summer I dress the same and am never too hot or too cold. I have my time to see, and study, and think. When I do work it is because I wish."

"But suppose every one should do so," I said at last, "what would life amount to? What would be accomplished?"

He laughed musically, and stepping to the window, pointed to the street below, where the workmen were going home, swinging their empty dinner pails.

"There they are," he said, "look at them. What are they living for? To build a city. Look at it, look at those bricks those cobble-stones, those wagons, and the dirt everywhere. Down there it is dark already. Do you see anything beautiful anywhere? What is the use to build such a thing? Better put a bomb under it all and blow it up."

"Look at them," he continued rapidly, "all running, running, here and there, and swallowing mouthfuls of filthy air at every breath. That is what they call business—having an aim in life! The animals are wiser."

"Why do you stay in the city?" I inquired.

"I intended to leave within two weeks," he answered. "I wish to dispose of my library first. Another of the evils of civilization—books. It is a good chance, though, for any one who wants them."

Having something of a relish for book sales, and being, moreover, curious to see what manner of place my new speci. men inhabited, I took the opportunity to say I would examine the books.

A short walk, which took away my breath, since I was obliged to trot half the time in order to keep up with the swift glide of my companion, brought us up next door to a police station.

We entered a small, dark room lined with glass jars filled with various liquids arranged on shelves, and, near the floor, little closets with mysterious locks. "My laboratory," he said, with a wave of the hand—"bargained for. The books are upstairs."

He ushered me into one of the fairest rooms, draped in white; paintings and sculpture adorned the walls and niches; there were a few pieces of elegant furniture, and on one side, some five hundred books in a neat case.

The whole was pervaded with a scent of roses. "How beautiful!" I exclaimed involuntarily.

"Not at all," he answered. "Only a makeshift. When I get my home in the woods it will be beautiful, but art is not possible in a city."

"But what good will it do for you to go off alone?" I said; "you certainly have beautiful ideals, but if you isolate yourself, how will it help humanity?" He snapped his fingers. "Always that," he answered; "I reform myself; that is the beginning of reform, self. When I have accomplished it perhaps I shall return and teach others." He glided round the room and added, "Yes, anyway I shall come back some day. The Americans are a lot of cowards, but some day they will talk justice, too. When it begins—perhaps here, in New York in Chicago, or Philadelphia—no matter where, there will be work to do and I shall be there!"

His fine white teeth jutted savagely over the lower lip.

"Well, do you wish any of my books?" I had chosen a few, and, finding no further excuse for remaining, reluctantly turned to go. As we were passing through the "laboratory" my strange acquaintance asked, "Do you want to see water burn?" and taking some metallic-looking substance from a jar he threw it into a small dish of water. A brilliant blaze shot up and burned for several minutes. In its glare the wizard face laughed silently; "See," he said, "How I could burn the Pacific Ocean."

"Wouldn't that be a big contract?" I returned.

He shrugged his shoulders. "There are other things I prefer to burn. Well, good by. We shall not meet again."

And we did not.

Mr. C. afterward told me he had left San Francisco, to go no one knew where. He had, however, a different theory to explain his bandit's misanthropy.

He was in love once, C. explained, and wanted the girl to go and live with him on uncooked food. She declined, and he has forsworn civilization ever since.

"Ah, the usual woman in the case." And I went away musing on the freaks of passion, my thoughts returning often to the wizard face with its prophetic, silent laugh lit by the burning water.

An Old Man's Movement.

In No. 923 Benjamin R. Tucker, replying to my assertion that sectarian Anarchism was an old man's movement, says: "Of course it is useless to attempt to convince, by mere reasoning, a man who estimates opinions by the age of those who advance them." To those who read "not to contradict and confute, ... but to weigh and consider," I need not say that I do not estimate opinions of the age of those who advance them; but the fact that Mr. Tucker attaches no significance to the circumstance of a certain class of opinions being characteristic of a certain generation is so striking an example of his type of thought that it deserves some attention. Mr. Tucker is a brilliant survival of the Rationalism of the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries. His views of social progress, like those of all other pre-evolutionary writers, are admirably summed up by Frederick Engels as follows:

"If pure reason and justice have not, hitherto, ruled the world, this has been the case only because men have not rightly understood them. What was wanted was the individual man of genius, who has now arisen and who understands the truth. That he has now arisen, that the truth has now been clearly understood, is not an inevitable event, following of necessity in the chain of historical development, but a mere happy accident.

He might just as well have been born 500 years earlier, and might then have spared humanity 500 years of error, strife, and suffering."

That a thinker of this kind should look upon the historical order of movements as a thing of no account is very natural. But most great thinkers are now evolutionists, who believe that there is an inevitable succession both in the order of social changes, and in the order in which these changes are conceived by reformers. The first great social evolutionist was Hegel, who saw the fact of evolution, but did not see the main cause of it. Like the Rationalists he imagined that progress was the result of thought, and that the successive changes in society corresponded simply to the logical development of an intellectual idea. It was left to Karl Marx to refute this doctrine, and to establish the economic, or what the Germans call the materialist, theory of history. This theory, which has been slightly modified but not seriously shaken by criticism, is expressed as follows by Frederick Engels in "Socialism, Utopian and Scientific:"

"The materialist conception of history starts from the proposition that the production of the means to support human life and, next to production, the exchange of things produced, is the basis of all social structure; that in every society that has appeared in history, the manner in which wealth is distributed and society divided into classes or orders, is dependent upon what is produced, how it is produced, and how the products are exchanged. From this point of view the final causes of all social changes and political evolutions are to be sought, not in men's brains, not in man's better insight into eternal truth and justice, but in changes in the modes of production and exchange. They are to be sought, not in the philosophy, but in the economics of each particular epoch. The growing perception that existing social institutions are unreasonable and unjust, that reason has become unreason, and right wrong, is only proof that in the modes of production and exchange changes have silently taken place, with which the social order, adapted to earlier economic conditions, is no longer in keeping. From this it also follows that the means of getting rid of the incongruities that have been brought to light, must also be present, in a more or less developed condition, within the changed modes of production themselves. These means are not to be invented by deduction from fundamental principles, but are to be discovered in the stubborn facts of the existing system of production."

Now what are the stubborn facts of the existing system of production? In the first place it is clear that there has been an industrial revolution which has divorced the worker from his tools. A hundred and fifty years ago nearly everything was done by hand with simple tools, like the spinning-wheel, the hand-loom, the blacksmith's hammer, the shoemaker's awl. Such tools could be owned, and were owned, by the individual. Today the tools are factories, smelters, rolling mills, enormously expensive things which hundreds or thousands of men use in co-operation. But freedom and independence depend on two things, on ownership of oneself, and on free access to the means of life. "If I own your tools, I own you", as I heard E. V. Debs say the other day. Yet it is clear that modern tools cannot be owned individually by the workers, so there is nothing left but to own them collectively.

Proudhon, Bakounin, and Marx all came together to this point. Here Proudhon stopped. To him it was enough that the farmer should have his land rent free, that the miners should have possession of the mine, the smeltermen of the smelter, and so on. Proudhon and the early co-operators saw only this, and nothing more.

But the great industry not only brought with it large tools; it also brought division of labor. In the olden days the farmer tilled the land, made and mended tools, made shoes for the family, and so on; while the women of the house span the wool, manufactured the cloth, and made the clothes. Now each person only does one thing. Thus all men have become economically dependent on one another, and the whole industrial system is now one complex tool. Where I live the copper mines are shut down because of a coal miners' strike three hundred miles away, which has cut short the supply of coke for smelting. Mere possession of the copper mines is useless to the copper miner, unless he also has some control over the coal mines. It is therefore essential that men should not only own the tools which they happen to work with themselves, but that they should collectively own the whole industrial system.

To this point Bakounin and Marx came together, but here Bakounin fell by the way-side. The Russian Mir made him a Communist, but he never could see beyond the boundaries of the Mir. He thought the world could be cut up into little communes, each constituting an economic whole. He did not see that the railway was annihilating space, and that industries a thousand miles apart might be as mutually dependent as those on adjoining pieces of ground. Therefore he got no further on than Fourier with his phalansteries, or the other Utopian Communists.

Marx alone reached the highest synthesis. He saw that if the worker was to own his tools, then trade limits and space limits must alike be ignored. All industry is one tool, and that tool must be owned by all the people. The whole nation must own the whole industry of the nation, and perhaps the nation may some day be co-extensive with the world.

I have now made it clear what I mean by "an old man's movement." I mean a movement which has been superseded by economic evolution, and by the resulting intellectual evolution, although it may have been up to date when our old men were young. The economics of Tolstoi, Ibsen, and Moses Harman may have been very applicable to the conditions of Russia, Norway and the United States in 1850, but they will not do for 1902.

The careful observer will see at once that the economic differences between Anarchism and Scientific Socialism have no connection whatever with any theory of liberty. Most believers in either of the above theories are sanguine that human nature will be perfect under their systems, and that no coercion will be needed. As Proudhon and Bakounin did not require any national organization for economic purposes, and did not think that any more coercion would be necessary, they could see no further need for any national organization at all. With Marx it was different, because his economic system evidently needed a national industrial organization, even if this organization had no other function to reform. Most Social-Democrats, however, would agree with Frederick Engels in the following view of this national organization:

"As soon as there is no longer any social class to be held in subjection; as soon as class rule, and the individual struggle for existence based upon our present anarchy in production, with the collisions and excesses arising from these, are removed, nothing more remains to be repressed, and a special repressive force, a State, is no longer necessary. The first act by virtue of which the State really constitutes itself the representative of the whole of society—the taking possession of the means of production in the name of society—this is, at the same time, its last independent act as a State. State interference in social relations becomes, in one domain after another, superfluous, and then dies out of itself; the government of persons is replaced by the administration of things, and by the conduct of processes of production. The State is not 'abolished'. It dies out."

Engels overlooks one thing. The struggle between capital and the proletariat is not the only class struggle still left. There is also the sex struggle, which is partly economic, but largely founded on jealousy. Woman is the slave of a slave, and, although Marx and Engels were quite sound on the woman question, they were too optimistic in assuming that freedom for the worker must necessarily mean freedom for his slave. It is possible to imagine Socialism without even economic freedom for women. If the income were paid to the father as head of the family, women would still be economic slaves. But Bellamy and all great Socialists propose to pay her share of the national income to each woman direct, without taking cognizance of her relations to any man or men, and with such economic freedom women would soon free themselves from the evils of jealousy. On this point, however, much education is needed among the masses of ill-informed people who are rushing daily into the ranks of Socialism. If Lillian Harman, Voltairine de Cleyre, Kate Austin, and the other magnificent women who are wasting their sweetness on the desert air of Anarchy, would get in touch with the economic movement of the age, they could exercise a decisive influence in favor of the rights of women.

R. B. Kerr.

Lucifer, the Lightbearer

M. HARMAN, EDITOR AND PUBLISHER.

PUBLISHED EVERY WEEK AT 800 FULTON STREET, CHICAGO, ILL.

Terms: One year, $1; six months, 50 cents; three months, 25 cents.

Entered at the Chicago Postoffice as Second-Class Mail Matter.

Eastern Representative, E. C. Walker, 344 W. 143d street, New York.

Lucifer—Its Meaning and Purpose.

LUCIFER—The planet Venus; so called from its brightness.—Webster's Dictionary.

LUCIFEROUS—Giving Light; affording light or the means of discovery.—Same.

LUCIFIC—Producing Light.—Same.

LUCIFORM—Having the form of Light.—Same.

The name Lucifer means Light-Bringing or Light-Bearing, and the paper that has adopted this name stands for Light against Darkness—for Reason against Superstition—for Science against Tradition—for Investigation and Enlightenment against Credulity and Ignorance—for Liberty against Slavery—for Justice against Privilege.

Answers to Questions.

In response to my offer, two weeks ago, to answer inquiries relating to the Michigan Fruit Belt, and in regard to the proposition to share my present rural retreat with friends living in Chicago and elsewhere, I have received several letters, from which I make extracts as follows:

"Holland, Mich., July 11. Your invitation to friends to join you in the country, and have good living and companionship at moderate cost, appeals to me. I have been a reader of Lucifer for many years and would enjoy meeting its editor and his friends. I need the vacation and the opportunity to earn money during vacation. Please advise me what I can earn and how. Also advise me what my living expenses may be. I enclose one dollar on subscription, not knowing how my account stands. E. W. L."

"Plymouth, Mass., July 11. Just received Lucifer with your letter about the 'Fruit Belt of Michigan.' I want to come out and spend the summer with you and get better acquainted. I will have to earn money enough to live on, while I stay there, so let me know if I can get any work. I am one of the striking weavers, against the American Woolen Co. Am considered one of the 'leaders'—so I guess my name is 'mud,' and I must 'go west.' I am one of the despised social radicals, also a 'food crank.' How are the roads in Southern Michigan for bicycling? T. F. B."

"Dryden, Mich., I rejoice to know that you are to stay longer at Benton Harbor, and that you are feeling much better. And now to know that you invite us—and that we can have a 'Lucifer re-union,' as in Kansas! Why, if others feel as I do they will be as happy as a little child at the prospect of being there. I've been trying to find some Liberal meetings in Michigan, but there are none—nothing to feed myself with but husks—aside from reading and correspondence."

"Chicago, Ills., July 14. I see by Lucifer (now don't think I am swearing, when I say 'by Lucifer') that you are 'way out on the farm.' Some of our household think your bachelor quarters might be just the place to spend a week away from the noise and worry of city life. Think I understand the lay of the land, from your pen picture. It will be necessary to bring sheets, blankets, pillows and hammocks. Anything else, please advise us. Have you any straw out there? A. can take two empty ticks, so that she and Mrs. S. can have separate bunks. If you have mattresses it won't hurt to have extra beds, as you may have several parties there before long. Dr. R. and I will go out for a few days before the ladies return. They expect to make the preparation of food the most simple. They will take tea and coffee with them, and if you lack cooking utensils, just mention what they should bring. I wish you had our portable bath-tub. You could let the sun do the water-heating. J. R P."

"Cottage Grove Ave. Chicago, July 9. When Lucifer came today I sat down to look it over, and of course read your letter. Mr. T. said for me to write and ask you about how much the expense would be for me to stay there awhile. I want to bring two of my children with me. Are strawberries all gone yet? What do potatoes and peaches sell for? What would my share of the rent be, per week? I enclose stamp for reply. M. P. T."

REPLY.

To save trouble and expense of writing many letters I will now try, briefly as possible, to answer the more important of the foregoing questions.

First, The cost of living at this rural and temporary home, will depend much upon the dietary habits of those who may favor us with their company. Most of the letters indicate that their writers eat but little meat. Everything else is as cheap here as in the city, and many things much cheaper. Speaking for myself alone, will say that fruit, raw or cooked, with bread, "flakes," and shredded wheat biscuit, constitute my principal diet. Strawberries are gone and raspberries soon will be, while blackberries, peaches and apples are just coming in. This letter is written Thursday July 17; will try to give prices, before Lucifer goes to press, but, as a general statement, fruit is worth here what it is worth in Chicago, less the cost of picking, transportation, crates or baskets, and charges of commission house. Sometimes there is a glut in the market, then the price here drops to almost nothing at all. Just now a neighbor of mine has many bushels of very fine red currants going to waste because the cost of gathering, crates and transportation exceeds the price offered in Chicago.

Second, "Opportunity to earn wages:" Since writing my first letter from this place I have made additional inquiries in regard to the fruit-gathering business, and one fruit grower thinks there is danger of disappointment on the part of those who come here expecting to earn good wages at berry-picking, etc. He says the berry season is now nearly over; that the peach crop is nearly a failure in this part of Michigan, though an average yield farther north. Also that farmers generally are able to take care of their melon crop, their tomato, grape, apple and other later crops, without much help from transient laborers.

Looking at the matter from every point of view I am inclined to the belief that while there is much danger of over-estimate of what can be earned by amateur workers in the orchard, the berry field, and on the "truck" farms, there is always a steady demand, at living wages with board thrown in, for all who are able to stand hard work and long hours—during the summer and fall months in this part of Michigan. And while I think it probable that a few of our visitors may get occasional jobs of fruit gathering in this neighborhood, it is best not to depend much upon this source of income.

The better way, as I now see the matter, is not to expect to earn money enough to defray all expenses while here, but to come with the expectation, rather, of getting an outing and a rest at much less expense than would have to be paid at the ordinary boarding house or hotel. Then if the opportunity of earning wages and gaining health and strength at the same time, should offer, so much the better. If our friends could have been here a month or six weeks earlier there would have been no difficulty in finding employment at berry picking.

Third, "Share of rent"—that each co-operator or visitor, will be expected to pay, will depend largely on the number of those who may come, and the number of rooms occupied. As indicated in my first letter I do not purpose to make money for myself or for Lucifer, by keeping boarders, or by renting rooms, but rather aim to give an opprtunity for "light housekeeping" in a partly furnished house, to such of Lucifer's friends and helpers as might wish, at small cost, to spend a few weeks or months in a beautiful and healthful country. I hoped, and still hope, in this way to reduce the expenses of my own outing to a minimum. The price of rooms will be given on inquiry. The regular price of board and lodging for summer visitors in this neighborhood costs from six to eight dollars per week, or twenty-five to thirty dollars per month.

Fourth. "What to bring." As already indicated, our friends should bring sheets, blankets, empty bed-ticks and pillows—except those who may come on bicycles, as our Massachusetts correspondent proposes to do. Some arrangement can probably be made by which long-distance travelers on bicycles can be lodged without the usual requirements of blankets, etc.

Fifth. "Cooking utensils." The kitchen range, of which I spoke in first letter is not in working order, and is reported by its owner as an expensive arrangement to keep in fuel. For three weeks I have cooked—by steaming mainly—on a "Round Oak" heating stove, which answers my purpose reasonably well, (as I write these lines my dinner is steaming, without care or watching on my part,) but if we should have a family large enough to warrant the outlay we can easily get a small cook-stove, for wood or coal, or a gasoline cooker. There is now a fair supply of cooking utensils of most kinds in the house, but not enough dishes, knives, forks, spoons, cups, glasses, pitchers and procelain lined kettles for cooking fruit. Hence those who bring trunks would better put in a few of these articles.

Sixth. "Bicycling." Michigan roads are considered good for bicycling. As said before these roads are sandy, but yet well packed and firm on the bicycle track. I meet people traveling in this way wherever I go.

And now, not to make my letter too long for this week, I close by saying that I am patiently, yet somewhat anxiously, awaiting the arrival of the advance-guard of the "phalanstery,"—if I may so designate the group of Co-operative Individualists, "Voluntary Socialists," "Social Radicals," "Philosophic Anarchists," or by whatsoever name our friends may choose to call themselves. But while a man of "Great Expectations" I do not allow myself to forget the wise old saw which says, "Blessed are they who expect nothing, for they shall not be disappointed."

For directions as how to reach us, write to me at No. 6 Dewey Ave. Benton Harbor, Mich., Rural Delivery, or to H. E. Allen, Pearl Road, same P. O., or if at Benton Harbor inquire at the Phenix Hotel, near Benton Harbor landing of the Graham & Morton line of Chicago boats. M. HARMAN.

ADDENDUM: Since the foregoing was written and sent to the printer I have been reliably informed that berry pickers are now in great demand—also help in the hay-fields. Women and boys have been making from one dollar to two dollars per day, picking raspberries and blackberries, and that these figures are by no means uncommon—some pickers earn considerably more. Owing to the lateness of the season blackberry picking—in the opinion of several persons who ought to know—will probably last till the middle and perhaps the last of August.

Peaches, as already said are a light crop in this neighborhood, and yet some orchards are fairly well loaded with fruit. The Morrill orchard, two miles from here, is expected to yield about five thousand bushels of peaches. M. H.

THE ARENA for July contains, among other readable and thought-provoking articles, "Why I am Opposed to Imperialism"—A Symposium by President Geo. McA. Miller and Prof. Thomas E. Will, both of Ruskin College, Trenton, Mo., also by Bolton Hall and Ernest Crosby of New York; "The Political Outlook for 1904," by Ellweed Pomeroy; "The Word that Came to Me by the Sea," by Geo. D. Herron; "Topics of the Times (editorial)—The Report of the Steel Trust, as an Object Lesson to American Voters," etc., etc. Address the Arena Pub. Co., N. Y. City.

From "The Free Socialist Union," Austin, Ills., we have received an important contribution to the already enormous accumulation of excellent literature on Economic and Industrial questions. It is entitled "Pure Economy—The Rich, How? The Poor, Why?—Productive Labor; Unproductive Labor." By J. Herbert Rowell. The author treats, in conversational style, of "The Trader; The Landlord; The Banker; The Church; The Official Class; The Military and Transportation." From a hasty examination I can recommend this fifty-page pamphlet to the consideration of the Independent Thinkers of this the dawning era of what will doubtless soon prove to be the greatest of all Industrial Revolutions known to human history. Those especially who have read the author's previously published pamphlets, "The Poor Man's Opportunity," etc., should send for and read, "Pure Economy." M. H.

Ruminations.

Some of our friends have expressed regret at missing the weekly notes of the happenings at Home, which formed one of the features of "Discontent." Our local happenings, trivial as the record of them may seem, are the expression of our community life, and mark the steady advance of our little colony. The pioneer life of our first settlers is greatly modified, even for the poorest newcomers; and modern improvements are beginning to creep into the houses. Our settlement, while still somewhat in the rough, is gradually taking on a more finished appearance.

—

We are having delightfully cool weather, for this season of the year. It has been an excellent year for all our products. Strawberries have been very plentiful, and now raspberries are acundant, as well as all kinds of vegetables. This is an especially good year for fruit; and we shall have a bountiful supply, a little later in the season.

—

S. Danielewicz, W. P. Austin, and the Mastick family, all well known to the liberal public, have come to make their homes with us; and several others are planning to do so at an early date. Our growth is steady, though not of a mushroom nature. An unusual amount of clearing is going on this summer.

—

A ridiculous dispatch was recently sent out from Tacoma, detailing the imaginary experiences of a woman who worked the public charities of Tacoma for all they were worth, by a cock-and-bull story of "escape" from Home, after being kept a prisoner for several months. The poor creature, who seems to be mentally irresponsible, if not a victim of the morphine habit, perhaps deserves more pity than blame for the falsehood she has set abroad. A little flurry was created by the absurd yarn, of which the Tacoma papers made a great deal; but its silliness was so palpable that it could do little real harm.

—

The outrageous interferences with free speech and free assemblage in Paterson, N. J., and in the region of the coal strike, ought to wake everybody up to a realization of the fact that freedom of expression is the most vital question of the hour. Swell the membership of the Free Speech League, and let us form a movement powerful enough to contend with the organized forces of reaction. The one hope for our liberties lies here.

JAMES F. MORTON, JR.

A Good Word on Comstockism.

I clip the following from the "Baltimore American" of July 14.

"A man of sense who is worth anything to the world knows the difference between a decent mother suckling her babe and a bawd buttoned up to the chin leering lewdly from her window at the passerby. Thomas Carlyle in his contempt for gross prurient prudery, once said that he hoped the popular expurgation would spare the Bible; that an expurgated edition of the Bible would not be thought necessary by those religious reformers whose theory of making people good was to furnish them with an expurgated literature from Homer down to Robert Burns. The virtue that has to be coddled by reading expurgated classics, expurgated Shakespeare; that can be undermined and overthrown by such knowledge, is not worth saving. It is but a fair weather garment at best, for virtue and morality do not turn on reading this or reading that.

"The healthy mind does not need an expurgated literature to keep it clean. A healthy man fit to be of service to the world doesn't need the world expurgated of temptation before he can hope to behave himself. This philosophy of the world's education that would expurgate the world's literature is identical with the attempt to make men virtuous, not by teaching them the free choice between good and evil, between wisdom and folly, but by hermetically bottling up the possible sinner and keeping him in ignorance of evil, instead of warning him of the consequences of sin. Balzac is the French Shakespeare: his defense as an artist rests on his method and his intent, not on his verbal propriety."—Portland Oregonian.

Thus we see Comstockism rebuked from the Pacific to the Atlantic. The point now is for Press-Writers to follow up all these openings. The "Oregonian" should be congratulated and told of the dinner given by one hundred leading New Yorkers at The Clarendon in honor of a victim of Comstockism—Mrs. Craddock, and it should also have brought to its attention the several arrests at Home, Washington.

The judges and all concerned in the above arrests should also have copies of the "Oregonian's" article sent them. One article of this kind from an outside source has greater weight with justices, judges and jurors than many coming from reformers themselves.

Spend your stamps and a few minutes of time, brothers, and work for the demolition of Comstockism. The gentleman himself has not been near as active in his travels of late as formerly, and, as public contempt increases, he will more and more confine himself to local and office work. FRANCIS B. LIVESEY.

Sykesville, Md.

"Let Us Have Peace!"

I will not gratify C. F. Hunt's desire for a fight by correcting him another thousand times on the same point. If he is sincere in saying he cannot see how his reply to me about Malthus contradicts itself, I am confident he is the only reader of Lucifer obtuse enough not to see, after perusing it a second time; so, unless he can find another, he will have to burst in ignorance. Neither do I believe there is another reader of Lucifer who needs to be told that calling the latest wrinkles "obsolete" is just as absurd as calling them 'anachronisms."

Ironicus ought to know the difference between a warning and a threat. I did not propose the lamp-post as a remedy for quackery; but, on the contrary, mentioned its use as a method of asses—particularly French ones, who, according to Mr. Sam Weller, are hardly the regular kind—though, if Ironicus likes, I will say that I scarcely know who should deserve it any better than the Herod of Montreal. What I did say was that, on account of French asses' well-known peachant for this instrument, talking anti-vaccination had not been a 'sanitary habit" in Montreal, since it killed two thousand children there.

If "these vaccination statistics" are notoriously unreliable, it is strange the anti-vaccinators should make use of them whenever they can and often when they have no right. Let me remind Ironicus "who began" statistics in this matter. It was a precious specimen of the Equus Asinus, whose name I have blissfully forgotten, but who asserted in Lucifer that "statistics, the world over, show more deaths from vaccination than where there is none." About the same time Bernard Shaw, in an article republished by Lucifer, satirically said it was too bad the Registrar General should go on giving weekly bulletins of deaths from diseases which recent methods were supposed to cure or prevent. Now, if the Registrar General's reports show anything, they show an enormous decrease in the fatality from these very diseases, far exceeding what is shown for others, and keeping very even pace with adoption of the recent methods. Evidently the emphatic word in that sentence about "these vaccination statistics" is the word "these." The official returns for a kingdom like England or Prussia, during thirty years, are "notoriously unreliable," because they always have the unlucky effect of showing that experiment leads to increase of knowledge; which naturally does not suit the Movement in Favor of Ignorance. What does suit it are such "statistics" as those above cited; irresponsible, vague, unauthenticated statements, by the antis of one town, like Leicester or Cleveland; Blue's monthly roll of deaths attributed to vaccination (and, of course, not compared with those caused during the same period by hot bread or cold tea); brazen impudent appeals to the Registrar General's reports, proceeding on the assumption that those addressed do not read the reports. Such statistics as these suit anti-vaccinators, because anything can be made out of them you like. It is indeed evident that "an ass is not highly gifted mentally." C. L. JAMES.

VARIOUS VOICES.

Celia T., Pomeroy, Ohio:—I enjoy your little paper very much, and admire and respect the liberal courageous spirit of its publishers. Enclosed find $1 on subscription.

Mrs. G. L., Canton, Ohio:—Enclosed find $2 for which please send me "Captain Jinks, Hero" and "Hilda's Home" in paper binding. I received the other books you sent me and liked them very much. Am more than ever interested in Socialism. Would not do without Lucifer.

J. H., Macon, Ga.:—Permit me to condole with you on your weak eyes, and to compliment you on the excellence of the paper. Please send a copy of "Evolution of Modesty," by Crane. And send two copies of the last week's paper. Hope your father is improving.

[I fear I gave some of our friends an erroneous impression, as evidenced by a number of letters similar to the foregoing. My eyes are strong, as a rule, but a "cold in the head" always affects them, and when they are painful I avoid using them whenever I can. They are now well. I thank our friends for their kindly interest. L. H.]

J. L. H., Abilene, Tex.:—The clipping hereto attached so aroused my sympathies that I want you to read it also. I read it to a very "orthodox" lady, and the only thing wrong about it, that she could discover, was that the girl did not dress as a girl ought to dress.

"SHE DRESSED LIKE A MAN.

"Waco, Tex., July 9.—A young woman, between a brunette and a blond, much sunburned, arrayed in masculine attire, was arrested here today. She hails from Hill County, says she is an orphan and has been chopping cotton. The higher wages paid men induced her to disguise herself as described. Her hands show that she has been working hard.

"Chief of Police Dollins provided her with suitable clothing and gave her a ticket to Burnet, where she hopes to find relatives."

F. L., Rock Island, Illinois:—Enclosed find $10 for which renew my subscription and send us books herein enumerated and the rest goes to "the cause." We have most of the books advertised in Lucifer. We take out parties for pay in our launch, and oftener friends for fun. Wish some of the radicals in Chicago were here to ride with us. Most people we take out we can't talk to—all kinds of prejudice to run up against. The "sports" are worse yet. You would "spoil their trade." Voltairine de Cleyre's description fits those I know of pretty well. If anybody treats them "white" they take him for a fool and "do" him if they can, but if some brute beats them they seem to like him even if they don't like the licking. They are just like a Rocky Mountain burro—if you feed him well he will kick your head off, but give him an awful beating and he will faithfully follow you anywhere; you couldn't chase him away.

Whoever was begotten of pure love
And came desired and welcomed into life
Is of immaculate conception. He
Whose heart is full of tenderness and truth,
Who loves Mankind more than he loves himself,
And cannot find room in his heart for hate,
May be another Christ. We all may be
The saviors of the world if we believe
In the divinity which dwells in us
And worship it, and nail our grosser selves,
Our tempers, greeds and our unworthy aims,
Upon the cross. Who giveth love to all,
Pays kindness for unkindness, smiles for frowns,
And lends new courage to each fainting heart
And strengthens hope and scatters joys abroad,
He, too, is a redeemer, son of God.
—Ella Wheeler Wilcox.

"Did the mass of men know the actual selfishness and injustice of their rulers, not a government would stand a year; the world would ferment with Revolution."—Theodore Parker.

TOLSTOI'S NEW WORK.

The Slavery of Our Times.

With Portrait of the Gifted Author, and Introduction by the Translator, Aylmer Maude.

CHAPTER TITLES,

I., Goods Porters Who Work Thirty-seven Hours; II., Society's Indifference While Men Perish; III., Justification of the Existing Position of Sciences; IV., The Assertion of Economic Science that Rural Laborers Must Enter the Factory System; V, Why Learned Economists Assert what is False; VI., Bankruptcy of the Socialist Ideal; VII., Culture or Freedom? VIII., Slavery Exists Among Us; IX., What is Slavery? X., Laws Concerning Taxes, Land and Property; XI., Laws the Cause of Slavery; XII., The Essence of Legislation Is Organized Violence; XIII., What Are Governments? Is It Possible to Exist Without Governments? XIV., How Can Governments Be Abolished? XV., What Should Each Man Do? An Afterword.

Well printed on heavy paper. Substantially bound. 186 pages. Price, $1.50.

Address M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

CAPTAIN JINKS, HERO

BY ERNEST CROSBY.

It is a merciless satire on war and militarism in which the parallel between savagery and soldiery is unerringly drawn. It is a biting burlesque on the various forms of cheap hero-worship. It holds up to withering scorn every important feature of militarism.

Among the accompaniments and results of war exploited and satirized, are hazing at "East Point," the war whoops of the yellow journals, the savagery of war, the Schley-Sampson controversy, civilizing the heathen savage, looting in China, pension abuses, the capture of Agoncillo, the Peace Conference, army mismanagement, osculatory attacks by gooney girls, etc.

With 25 Irresistible Drawings by Dan Beard. 12mo. Cloth. Handsome Covers. 400 pages. Price $1.10

Address M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

VICE: ITS FRIENDS AND ITS FOES

BY EDWIN C. WALKER.

CONTENTS:—Brotherhood of Man; The Recognition of Facts; Folly of "For Men Only." Definition of Vice; Horrors of Prostitution; Abnormal Sexuality; Errors of Fathers, Mothers and Teachers; Persecution Does Not Reform; Prostitution and the Crusaders; The "Spotting of the Heathen;" What are the Effects of Raids and Crusades? The Economic Side of the Problem. Party Politics in Vice Crusading; In What Does Prostitution Consist? Some Causes of Prostitution; Two Kinds of Prostitution Compared; The Opponents of Divorce; "Purifying" the Tenements; Action for Advanced Women.

WITH APPENDIX:—The Wanderings of a Spirit; Our Fair Civilization. The Folly and Cruelty of it All. Price 10c.

Address M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

VACCINATION A CRIME.

With Comments on Other Sanitary Superstitions.

BY FELIX L. OSWALD, M. D.

"Vaccination spreads diseases; vaccination impairs the organic functions; vaccination encourages reliance on worthless remedies; vaccination spreads small-pox; compulsory vaccination furnishes dangerous legal precedents."

With illustrations of diseases frequently resulting from vaccination. 195 pages. Price 10 cents. For sale by M. Harman, 500 Fulton St. Chicago.

DO YOU EVER THINK

Of the fate of the Prodigal Daughter? The Prodigal Son is forgiven and received with rejoicing—why should different treatment be accorded to his sister? For a vivid, true picture of the conditions in homes and factories which produce thousands of so-called fallen women every year, read "The Prodigal Daughter; or, The Price of Virtue," by Rachel Campbell.

SPECIAL OFFER.

This valuable work sent free on receipt of twenty-five cents for a thirteen week's trial subscription to Lucifer the Light Bearer. M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton Street, Chicago, Ill.

Notice! I would be glad to hear from Liberals who would like to correspond with other Liberals. Address (with stamp) Snowville, Va. ELMINA DRAKE SLENKER.

927.

If these figures correspond with the number printed on the wrapper of your Lucifer, your subscription expires with this number.

If a copy of Lucifer fails to reach you, please order by number or date.

Lucifer will not be sent "by return mail" unless stamps for postage are enclosed with order.

To NEW SUBSCRIBERS: Your subscription is paid to No. If you have not ordered Lucifer, a friend has subscribed for you. If you do not wish to receive it, please notify us by card or through your postmaster. If you wish to become a regular subscriber you will confer a favor by renewing before the expiration of your trial subscription.

LOVE'S COMING OF AGE.

BY EDWARD CARPENTER.

This is a book with which few will wholly agree, but which nearly every one can read with profit and enjoyment. The subject is the relation of the sexes in the past, present and future, and it is treated with absolute frankness and fearlessness by a writer who unites a broad outlook, a strong grasp of his subject and a charming literary style. The following table of contents will indicate the line of thought followed by the author.

The Sex Passion.
Man, the Ungrown.
Woman, the Serf.
Woman in Freedom.
Marriage: a Retrospect.
Marriage: a Forecast.
The Free Society.
Some remarks on the early star and sex worships.
Notes—On the Primitive Group Marriage; Jealousy; The Family; Preventive Checks to Population.

The book is printed on extra book paper and handsomely bound in cloth. Price, $1.

Address M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

WHITMAN'S IDEAL DEMOCRACY, AND OTHER WRITINGS.

BY HELENA BORN.

Comprising besides the title essay, "Borean's Joy in Nature; Poets of Revolt; Shelley, Whitman, Carpenter; Whitman's Altruism; Individualism versus Organization; Essentials of Economic Argument; The Last Stand Against Democracy in Sex; Inequality in Divorce; Marriage Safeguards. With portrait of author and biographical introduction by Helen Tufts. 125 pages. Edition limited to 500 copies; each copy numbered. Fine paper, uncut pages, bound in boards, paper label. Price $1.

Personal: A liberal man, living in New Boston, Ohio, would like to become acquainted with ladies of congenial ideas in that section. Further information given to those interested on receipt of letter. Address W., 160 Fulton St., Chicago.

"Pages of Socialist History." By W. Tcherkesoff. This book is recommended to Socialists of all schools, as it deals with the history of the "Internationa!" and the attitude of Marx and Engels towards Bakounine. Will be ready soon. Paper cover, 25 cents. By mail 30 cents. Send in advance orders.

Address M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

RADICAL LITERATURE.

For Sale by M. Harman, 500 Fulton St., Chicago.

A CHAMBERMAID'S DIARY. By Octave Mirbeau. Translated from the French by Benj. R. Tucker. 400 pages. Handsomely bound in cloth. $1.50.

ADVANCEMENT OF SCIENCE. Prof. John Tyndall's famous Inaugural Address before the British Association for the Advancement of Science, with the articles on Prayer which so stirred the religious world. Cloth, 50c; paper, 25c.

AGE OF REASON. Thomas Paine. Cloth, with steel plate portrait, 75c; paper 15c.

ANARCHISM: Its Philosophy and Ideal. Peter Kropotkin. 5c.

A PHYSICIAN IN THE HOUSE. A New Family Medical Work, by Dr. J. H. Greer. This book is up-to-date in every particular. It will save you hundreds of dollars in doctors' bills. It tells you how to cure yourself by simple and harmless home remedies. It recommends no poisonous or dangerous drugs. It teaches how to save health and life by safe methods. It teaches prevention—that it is better to know how to live and avoid disease than to take any medicine as a cure. It is not an advertisement and has no medicine to sell. It has hundreds of excellent recipes for the cure of the various diseases. It has 18 colored plates showing different parts of the human body. The chapter on Painless Midwifery is worth its weight in gold to women. The "Care of Children" is something every mother ought to read. It teaches the value of Air, Sunshine, and Water as medicines. It contains valuable information for the married. This book cannot fail to please you. If you are looking for health by the safest and readiest means, do not delay getting it. It has eight hundred pages, is neatly bound in cloth, with gold letters, and will be sent by mail or express prepaid to any address, for $1.75.

A PLEA FOR THE NEW WOMAN. May L. Collins. With large new half-tone portrait. 10c.

A TALE OF THE STRASSBURG GEESE. R. B. Kerr. Together with The Strike of the Strasburg Geese (C. W. Coolridge). A Traveler's Tale (R. B. Kerr). The Cat's Story (Emile Zola). 5c.

AUTONOMY, SELF-LAW. A fragmentary dissertation on the right to non-invasive self-hood. 5c.

BALZAC'S SERAPHITA: The Mystery of Sex. Mary Hanford Ford. Cloth, $1.

BIBLE TEMPERANCE. E. C. Walker. Proving that Liquor Drinking is Commended, Deferred and Enjoined by the Bible, and giving close reference to the chapters and verses. 10c.

BORNING BETTER BABIES—Through regulating reproduction by controlling conception. E. B. Foote, Jr., M. D. 25c.

CAUSES OF HARD TIMES, and the Money Question. Albert Chavannes. 5c.

CHICAGO CONFERENCE OF TRUSTS. Speeches, debates, etc.; 31 portraits of delegates, including Benj. R. Tucker, Laurence Gronlund, William Jennings Bryan, Samuel Gompers, Louis F. Post, and George Schilling. 628 pages. 50c.

CHILDREN OF THE ITALIAN POOR. Paola Lombroso. 5c.

DARWIN'S, THE. (A novel.) Elmina D. Slenker. 50c.

DAWN OF CIVILIZATION, The; or, England in the Nineteenth Century. J. G. Spence. 178 pages. 50c.

DAWN-THOUGHT ON THE RECONCILIATION. By J. Wm. Lloyd. An inspired treatise that, with insight and wisdom, touches all the questions of life, love, soul and society. A prose-poem, simple enough for a child to enjoy, deep enough to make a philosopher think. The largest creed, the most generous theory, the gladdest gospel. A book of life. A religion of growth and the overlook—freedom and optimism. Read it. Printed in old style antique type, illuminated with portrait of the author. In three editions, de luxe cloth and paper bound. Prices, $1.25, $1.00 and 50c.

DIGGING FOR BED-ROCK. Camp-meeting talks and sketches by Moses Harman. 5c.

DR. FOOTE'S SOCIAL SCIENCE SERIES OF DIME PAMPHLETS—Wedlock; Scientific Marriage; Heredity; A B C of Temperaments; Powell and his Critics; Physiological Marriage; Physical Improvement of Humanity; Cause of Disease, Insanity, and Premature Death; A Step Backward. Any of the above books sent by mail on receipt of price.

DYNAMIC THEORY OF LIFE AND MIND. An attempt to show that all organic beings are both constructed and operated by the dynamic agencies of their respective environments. By James H. Alexander. Over 400 illustrations, 47 chapters, 1,067 pages and a 9-column index of 11 pages. Cloth, $3.75.

EAST TENNESSEE SKETCHES. A and Cecile Chavannes. 25c.

ECONOMICS OF ANARCHY. A Study of the Industrial Type. Over D. Lum. 10c

RIGHT-HOUR MOVEMENT. John P. Altgeld, ex-Governor of Illinois. 5c.

EVOLUTION AND REVOLUTION. Elisee Reclus. 5c.

FALSE CLAIMS OF THE CHURCH. John E. Remsburg. Analyzing and confuting the claims made by churchmen that the Christian religion has promoted morality, learning, temperance, science, freedom, and showing how she has opposed progress. Paper, 10c.

FIELDS, FACTORIES, AND WORKSHOPS; or, Industry Combined with Agriculture and Brain Work with Manual Work. Peter Kropotkin. 360 pages, etc. Postage, 5c.

FREE PRESS. Arguments in support of demurrer to the Indictment of M. Harman, E. C. Walker and Geo. Harman, under the Comstock law, G. C. Semens and David Overmyer. 25c.

GIORDANO BRUNO. His Life, Teachings, and Martyrdom. Burned for heresy in Rome, Feb. 17, 1600. 5c.

GOD AND THE STATE. Bakounine. 25c.

GOVERNMENT ANALYZED. A remarkable work by a remarkable man, Col. John R. Keller, the history of whose life reads more like romance than reality. This book is the last of a series—Deity Analyzed, Bible Analyzed, Universe Analyzed. By the author's death this work was left unfinished, but was completed by his wife, Etta Dunbar Keller. 119 pages; cloth. Price reduced from $1.50 to $1.

HILDA'S HOME. Ross Grant. "An o'er true tale" of woman's wrongs and of one woman's struggles and final triumphs in her attempt to secure justice for herself and for her sisters. 458 pages. Cloth, $1; paper, 50c.

HUMAN RIGHTS. J. Madison Hook. 5c.

IMPORTANCE OF HONEST MONEY. A simple, scientific, invariable standard of price. James Adleman. 320 pages. Paper, 50c.

IN BRIGHTER CLIMES; or, Life in Scotland. Albert Chavannes. 5c.

INFIDEL DEATH-BEDS. "Idle Tales of Dying Horrors." G. W. Foote. Brief biographical sketches of 37 Freethinkers, including Bruno, Burkle, Byron, Comte, Darwin, George Eliot, Gibbon, Goethe, Hugo, Harriet Martineau, Mill, Paine, Madame Roland, George Sand, Shelley, Volney, and Voltaire. 25c.

IN HELL AND THE WAY OUT. A plan of Social Democracy outlined. Henry E. Allen. 10c.

INSTITUTIONAL MARRIAGE. From the viewpoint of an exiled Mormon. M. Harman. 5c.

JOHN'S WAY. A domestic radical story. Elmina D. Slenker. 25c.

KAREZZA. Ethics of Marriage. A bold, brave book, teaching ideal marriage, rights of the unborn child, a designed and controlled maternity. Sample pages free. $1.

KORADINE. A story for young and old. Extra levant cloth. $1.

LIBERTY IN LITERATURE. Testimonial to Walt Whitman. "Let us put wreaths on the brows of the living." An address delivered in Philadelphia, Oct. 31, 1895, with portrait of Whitman. Containing also Col. Ingersoll's address at the funeral of Walt Whitman, Mar. 30, 1892. Cloth, 50c; paper, 25c.

LIBERTY. Political, Religious, Social, and Moral. A. F. Tindall. 5c.

LITTLE LESSONS FOR LITTLE FOLKS. Emma D. Slenker. Boards, 60c.

LIZZIE MELTON. A story of a self-reliant girl. By Albert Chavannes. With portrait of author. 25c.

LUCIFER. Third Series, Vol. III (1899). Cloth, $1.25. Postage, 25c.

MAGNETATION, and Its Relation to Health and Character. Albert Chavannes. 25c.

MARRIAGE. An address by Dr. Juliet H. Severance. 5c.

MARRIAGE IN FREE SOCIETY. Edward Carpenter. A dainty little gift book. 25c.

MEN, WOMEN AND CHANCE. William Platt. Containing two tales: The Ascent to the Heights, and Blind Men and Seeing. Well printed on heavy paper and artistically bound in cloth. Gilt top, rough edges. 75c.

MEN, WOMEN, AND GODS. Helen H. Gardener. With preface by Col. R. G. Ingersoll. Contents: Introduction by Col. Ingersoll. Men, Women, and Gods. Vicarious Atonement. Historical Facts and Theological Fictions. Appendix. Address to the Clergy and Others. Letter to Cleveland Congress of Freethinkers. The only authorized and correct edition. Large 12mo, heavy-toned paper. Portrait. This volume is by far the best writing this famous author ever did. It is very fine. Cloth, $1; paper, 50c.

MISSING LINK IN MODERN SPIRITUALISM, THE. A. Leah (Fox) Underhill. With portraits of the Fox Sisters and others. 478 pages. Cloth. Reduced to $1.

MORIBUND SOCIETY AND ANARCHY. Jean Grave. Cloth, 60c; paper, 25c.

MOTHERHOOD IN FREEDOM. M. Harman. 5c.

MUTUAL BANKING. A simple plan to abolish interest on money. William B. Greene. 10c.

NORA, A DOLL'S HOUSE, and GHOSTS. Ibsen. Cloth. 75c.

OUR WORSHIP OF PRIMITIVE SOCIAL GUESSES. E. C. Walker. Contents: Love and Law; The Moloch of the Monogamic Ideal; The Continuity of Race-Life, and Tyranny; Food and Sex Fallacies, a Criticism; When Men and Women Are and When They Are Not Varieties; The New Woman: What is she? What will she be? The State Hiding Behind Its Own Mistakes; Bishop Potter's Opinion of Divorce; Love: Its Attraction and Expression; Is She an Honest Girl? Lloyd, Platt, and the Public Purse; Social Radicals and Parentage; Anthropology and Monogamy; Love and Trust Versus Fear; Reflections upon Reading William Platt's "Women, Love, and Life." 10c.

PERSONAL EXPERIENCES of Two American Anti-Vivisectionists in Various Countries. Philip G. Peabody. With an Appendix by Col. R. G. Ingersoll. Reduced from 25c to 10c.

PERSONAL RIGHTS AND SEXUAL WRONGS. Oswald Dawson. 25c.

PRIESTLY CELIBACY. Prof. A. L. Rawson. Together with The Incoherence of Tradition (E. C. Walker). Motherhood in Freedom (Moses Harman). The Greatest Sin (an allegory, R. B. Kerr), and Jealousy, the Foe of Freedom (Oscar Rotter). 25c.

RELIGION AND RATIONALISM. The relation of each to human liberty. The religionist, fancying that he has the whole truth, is logically opposed to investigation, and he appeals to physical force to arrest the discovery of new truths. What Rationalism is, and how many believe themselves Freethinkers who are only unbelieving or disgruntled religionists. The necessity for scientific organizations and a division of labor among reformers. The Secular Union. Important facts and arguments in a compact form. E. C. Walker. 5c.

RIGHTS OF MAN. Thomas Paine. Answer to Burke's attack upon the French revolution. A political treatise of great general value, as advocating liberty and democracy. Contains the fundamental principles of true republicanism. Cloth, 8vo, paper. 25c.

RUBAIYAT (Quatrains) OF OMAR KHAYYAM. Edward Fitzgerald's interpretation, with original introduction, special cover, latest version. Paper, 10c.

RULED BY THE TOMB. A discussion of free thought and free love. Ortmeyer Northcote. 10c.

SCIENCE IN STORY; or, Bamsey Tubbs, the Boy Doctor, and Spondo, the Troublesome Monkey. For young folks. Dr. E. B. Foote. Five volumes in "red line," presentation edition. $1. Five volumes, plainer binding, $2.50; all in one volume, $2.

SEXUAL PHYSIOLOGY FOR THE YOUNG. Being the fifth volume of "Science in Story." 128 pages; cloth bound; illustrated. 50c.

SONGS OF THE UNBLIND CUPID. J. Wm. Lloyd. Edition de luxe. Verses printed from Kelmscott type upon deckle edged hand made paper of cerulean tint. Initial letters, ornaments and borders are in red; initial letter and sketch upon the opening page are hand painted in water colors. Covers brown, with choice of silver or gold lettering. Very handsome gift book. 50c.

STUDIES IN SOCIOLOGY. In four parts: I., The Law of Happiness; II., The Law of Individual Control; III., The Law of Exchange; IV., The Law of Environment. Albert Chavannes. 25c.

TALKS ON NATURE. Important information for both sexes. Dr. J. H. Greer. 192 pages. Reduced from 50 to 25c.

THE ABOLITION OF MARRIAGE. John Beverly Robinson. Together with Isabel's Intention (Mariette), Reminiscences of Berlin Heights (A. Warren), and The Sexes and Love in Freedom (Oscar Rotter). 25c.

THE BAR SINISTER AND LICIT LOVE, including the first biennial proceedings of the Legitimation League, and a full account of the Lanchester case, with full-page half-tone pictures of Edith Lanchester, and Lillian Harman. Handsomely bound in green and gold covers. 207 pages. 25c.

THE BLUE LAWS OF CONNECTICUT. Taken from the Code of 1650 and the public records of the Colony of Connecticut previous to 1665. With an account of the persecution of Witches and Quakers in New England, and some extracts from the Blue Laws of Virginia. Copiously illustrated. 25c.

THE BRITISH BARBARIANS. Grant Allen, the greatest of the Hill-Top pioneers. Dedicated "to all who have heart enough, brain enough, and soul enough to understand it." Handsomely bound in cloth. 261 pages. $1.

THE WOMAN WHO DID. Grant Allen. A powerful story of a refined, educated and high-spirited woman who dared to defy the tyranny of church and state and ignore the institution of marriage. Handsomely bound in cloth. $1.

THE NEW HEDONISM. Grant Allen. The opening paragraph says: "The old assertion said: 'Be virtuous and you will be happy.' The new hedonism says: 'Be happy and you will be virtuous.'" In another place the writer says: "In proportion as men have freed themselves from mediaeval superstitions have they begun to perceive that the unclean and impure things are celibacy and sexual starvation; that the pure and beautiful and ennobling thing is the fit and worthy exercise of the reproductive function." Paper covers; 32 large pages; twelve copies, 50c. Single copy, 5c.

THE CHICAGO MARTYRS. The famous speeches of the eight condemned anarchists in Judge Gary's Court, and Altgeld's reasons for pardoning Fielden, Neebe and Schwab. 25c.

THE COMING WOMAN. Lillie D. White. 5c.

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM. Principles and platform of organized Freethought. 10c.

THE EVOLUTION OF MODESTY. Jonathan Mayo Crane. A consideration of the origin of clothes and the reasons why people wear clothing. Here are a few questions it answers: What is modesty? What is the cause of it? What is the use of it? What is the cause of the feeling of shame? Is nudity immodest? What is the cause of the notion that it is shameful to expose some parts of the body? Why do not all peoples agree as to what parts of the body should be concealed? 5c.

THE FOUNTAIN OF LIFE; or, The Threefold Power of Sex. Lois Waisbrooker. 50c.

THE FUTURE OF SECULARISM. When will the Cause of Justice triumph? 5c.

THE PRODIGAL DAUGHTER; or, The Price of Virtue. Rachel Campbell. Together with Legal Wifehood (Lucinda B. Chandler), Life's Gifts (Olive Schreiner), and Marriage—What It Was and Is; Will the Coming Woman Marry? 25c.

THE REVIVAL OF PURITANISM. E. C. Walker. 10c.

THE RIGHTS OF CHILDREN. R. B. Kerr. Together with What Are Women Here For? (E. B. Foote, Jr., M. D.), The New Martyrdom (Lillian Harman), and The Will, from the French of Guy de Maupassant. 25c.

THE SANCTITY OF MARRIAGE. As viewed from a moral and sanitary standpoint. A solemn protest against the present demoralizing management of that institution, its effects upon offspring and its influence upon education. By Dr. Robert A. Greer. A valuable "opening wedge" in missionary work. Price reduced from 25c to 10c.

THE SECRET INSTRUCTIONS OF THE JESUITS. A reprint from an edition published in 1761, quoted by the highest authorities as authentic. The work is redolent of Jesuit craft and is a plain index to the underhand working of that order against the welfare of individuals and society. 25c.

THE STATE: ITS HISTORIC ROLE. Prince Peter Kropotkin. 10c.

THE UNWOMANLY WOMAN. Lizzie M. Holmes. Together with That Great Fraud, Vulgar Society (Moses Hull), Virgin Soil (George Egerton), and Normal Sexual Action (Ernest Wiese). 25c.

THE WORM TURNS. Revolutionary Poems. Voltairine de Cleyre. 10c.

THOMAS JEFFERSON. His Political, Social and Religious Philosophy. Gen. M. M. Trumbull. 5c.

TOKOLOGY. A book for every woman. By Alice B. Stockham, M. D. Illustrated. Tokology teaches possible painless pregnancy and parturition, gives full, plain directions for the care of a woman before and after confinement. The ailments of pregnancy can be prevented as well as the pains and perils to children. English, German or Swedish. $1.25.

TRAVELS IN FAITH. By Capt. Robert C. Adams. His mental experience from superstition to rationalism. Cloth, 75c; paper, 25c.

VACCINATION A GIGANTIC CRIME. Samuel Darling. 10c.

VINDICATION OF THOMAS PAINE. Col. R. G. Ingersoll. Dealing with all the slanders brought against the name and fame of Paine. A little pamphlet which every admirer of Thomas Paine should have by him for reference. Paper, 10c.

VITAL FORCE. Magnetic Exchange and Magnetation. Albert Chavannes. 25c.

WHAT THE YOUNG NEED TO KNOW: A Primer of Sexual Rationalism. Edwin C. Walker. "Let us cease to be ashamed of what makes us men, of erecting arms of babes." Paper covers; 42 large pages. 25c.

WHAT IS RELIGION? Ingersoll's last public address, delivered at the meeting of the Free Religious Association in Boston on June 2, 1896. To which is appended the poem, "Declaration of the Free," the last verse written by the great Freethinker. 5c.

WHEN LOVE IS LIBERTY AND NATURE LAW. John Badcock, Jr. 10c.

WHY THE UNDERTONE? An open letter to Judge Gary. Sarah E. Ames. 10c.

WOMAN, CHURCH, AND STATE. Matilda Joslyn Gage. This is Mrs. Gage's crowning work. Every woman ought to read it. Every liberal woman and man will want it. A burning protest against the tremendous wrong done women by the church, which controlled the state. It ought to be widely read for the good it will do. Cloth, $1.50; paper, 75c.

WOMAN IN THE PAST, PRESENT AND FUTURE. Woman was the first human being that tasted bondage. Woman was a slave before the slave existed. The basis of all oppression is economic dependence on the oppressor: a slave of the slave. This work is August Bebel's masterpiece. 8vo. 378 pages. 25c.

Address M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

Price 2 Cents.

LUCIFER.

THE LIGHT-BEARER.

THIRD SERIES, VOL. VI., No. 29. CHICAGO, ILLINOIS, JULY 31, E. M. 302. [C. E. 1902.] WHOLE No. 928

VERSE OF TAJ MAHOMED.

When first I loved, I gave my very soul
Utterly unreserved to Love's control,
But Love deceived me, wrenched my youth away
And made the gold of life for ever grey.
Long I lived lonely, yet I tried in vain
With any other joy to stifle pain;
There is no other joy, I learned to know,
And so returned to Love, as long ago.
Yet I, this little while ere I go hence,
Love very lightly now, in self-defense.
—Laurence Hope, in "India's Love Lyrics."

Rational Teaching Regarding Sex.

Any one who has once realized how glorious a thing Love is in its essence, and how indestructible, will hardly need to call anything that leads to it a sacrifice; and he is indeed a master of life who, accepting the grosser desires as they come to his body, and not refusing them, knows how to transform them at will into the most rare and fragrant flowers of human emotion.

Until these subjects are openly put before children and young people with some degree of intelligent and sympathetic handling, it can scarcely be expected that anything but the utmost confusion, in mind and in morals, should reign in matters of Sex. That we should leave our children to pick up their information about the most sacred, the most profound and vital, of all human functions, from the mere gutter, and learn to know it first from the lips of ignorance and vice, seems almost incredible, and certainly indicates the deeply-rooted unbelief and uncleanness of our own thoughts. Yet a child at the age of puberty, with the unfolding of its far-down emotional and sexual nature, is eminently capable of the most sensitive, affectional, and serene appreciation of what Sex means (generally more so, as things are today, than its worldling parent or guardian); and can absorb the teaching, if sympathetically given, without any shock or disturbance to its sense of shame—that sense which is so natural and valuable a safeguard of early youth. To teach the child first, quite openly, its physical relation to its own mother, its long indwelling in her body, and the deep and sacred bond of tenderness between mother and child in consequence; then, after a time, to explain the relation of fatherhood, and how the love of the parents for each other was the cause of its own (the child's) existence; these things are easy and natural—at least they are so to the young mind—and excite in it no surprise, or sense of unfitness, but only gratitude and a kind of tender wonderment. Then, later on, as the special sexual needs and desires develop, to instruct the girl or boy in the further details of the matter, and the care and right conduct of her or his own sexual nature; on the meaning and the dangers of solitary indulgence—if this habit has been contracted; on the need of self-control and the presence of affection in all relations with others, and (without undue asceticism) on the possibility of deflecting physical desire to some degree into affectional and emotional channels, and the great gain so resulting; all these are things which an ordinary youth of either sex will easily understand and appreciate, and which may be of priceless value, saving such an one from years of struggle in foul morasses, and waste of precious life-strength. Finally, with the maturity of the moral nature, the supremacy of the pure human relation should be taught—not the extinguishment of desire, but the attainment of the real kernel of its dedication to the well-being of another—the evolution of the human element in love, balancing the natural—till at last the snatching of an unglad pleasure, regardless of the other from whom it is snatched, or the surrender of one's body to another for any reason except that of love, become things impossible.

Between lovers then a kind of hardy temperance is much to be recommended—for all reasons, but especially because it lifts their satisfaction and delight in each other out of the region of ephemeralities (which too soon turn to dull indifference and satiety) into the region of more lasting things—one step nearer at any rate to the Eternal Kingdom. How intoxicating indeed, how penetrating—like a most precious wine—is that love which is the sexual transformed by the magic of the will into the emotional and spiritual! And what a loss on the merest grounds of prudence and the economy of pleasure is its unbridled waste along physical channels! So nothing is so much dreaded between lovers as just this—the vulgarization of love—and this is the rock upon which marriage so often splits.

There is a kind of illusion about physical desire similar to that which a child suffers from when, seeing a beautiful flower, it instantly snatches the same, and destroys in a few moments the form and fragrance which attracted it. He only gets the full glory who holds himself back a little, and truly possesses who is willing if need be not to possess.—From "Love's Coming of Age," by Edward Carpenter.

Are They Fallen?

I am not sure that the wisest policy for me, having said my say on the subject of fallen women, would not be to display a "masterly inactivity." I have little taste for controversy, and generally feel that when one has made a strong statement of a case (at least as strong as the writer's ability permits) the best thing to do is to let others do the arguing. However, as I feel that the point that I am urging in this discussion is, through the curious bias which the continuously negating attitude gives to the human mind, entirely missed by L. H. Earle, and not altogether dealt fairly with by C. L. James, I shall try once more to make myself clear.

Kate Austin in the article which Miss Earle approves without having any very distinct notion of, had said that the only way to treat fallen women was to refuse to recognize that they were fallen. Now this is to me the ne plus ultra of folly; it is the same as saying, Refuse to acknowledge that a lunatic is insane, refuse to acknowledge that a small-pox patient is ill, refuse to acknowledge that—that C. L. James is a sage, a master of the pen, or that Laura Earle is equally masterful in evoking the power of a concert piano! It is the same as saying, Refuse to acknowledge a fact. I wrote what I did simply to protest against the topsy-turvying of facts by those who, having gotten a protest in their heads proceed to cry "no" in advance to every conservative proposition concerning social uses.

A question had been raised by Dr. Clymer as to a practical means of ameliorating the lives of fallen women. Kate Austin objected to the word and the treatment, as I have said. Now I believe, if a sick person is to be treated at all, the first thing is to recognize that he is sick. I am aware that there is a class of metaphysicians, including some very good, clever and interesting persons, who hold that Kate Austin's method is the correct one; they would say, "The patient is not ill; it is merely an erroneous condition of mind; illness has no real existence; let us declare health instead of recognizing illness." But I am positive that C. L. James would resent being put in their company, and a little more than inclined to believe that Kate Austin and Laura Earle would do the same. When it is once admitted that the patient is sick, the special symptoms and the causes must be sought, if the case is to be treated. That is another matter, and one with which it was not, and is not, my purpose to deal otherwise than by the slight allusion at the close. I mentioned the causes of prostitution in my article as evil material conditions and bad heredity, and I blame the double victim no more than I blame the sneak-thief or the rapist, who is, nevertheless, a very unwholesome and revolting character. I maintain that it is not necessary to confuse all distinctions between clean and unclean conduct in order to preserve one's character as a radical, nor to confound the recognition of such distinctions with the idea of blame.

But blame is not now the point. The point is, are women who drown themselves in the slime of every species of bestiality fallen or not? Let us see how my opponents deal with it. It is with a shade of regret that I, a woman writing in the journal which has ever put forth the highest claims for the equality of feminine powers, observe that the criticism of the woman, Laura Earle, is scarcely equal either in matter or in temper to that of the man, C. L. James; there is that in it which gives me the uneasy sensation I used to feel when our lamented friend Susan Patton arose "to speak in meeting,"—a something which the orthodox used to attribute to the woman suffragists as "shrieking," but which is probably better qualified by Shakespeare as "over earnestness."

Miss Earle's reply to the question "Are they fallen?" is, "Prostitution is a trade." Sequential! "Is this water in the glass bad?"—"The furnishing of this water is a trade!"

"Will Miss de Cleyre class herself with society in—" certain condemnations? Well to paraphrase a witty saying of Frank Stephens, I go with society just as far as society goes with me; and if it shall happen that society condemns anything which my conscience doesn't approve, I shall not be scared from my position by being told that society is not on my side. However, in the particular condemnation in question,—that of "all women who from whatever motive have illicit relations with men" well—it depends on the motive. If the motive is money, then I do; if the motive is mere lechery, then I do. The ideal of independent, clean, strong, womanhood is too dear to me to enjoy having it mixed up with money-getting or bestiality. Though mark, I believe every woman should have the freedom to be as mean and low as she likes; only I'm not going to be forced into commending or condoning her for it. (Please keep separate the idea of disapprobation of the action or the character, and blame of the individual for doing what he does or being what he is.)

But as to other motives—love, sympathy, fellowship, normal sex-life, without the unclean lips or hands of Church and State being called into witness—I have stood for these things too many years to think it necessary for me to answer the question. Miss Earle knows it.

And at this point I perceive that the criticisms of Earle and James overlap each other, so to speak. I have said that C. L. James is a sage; and no doubt all our readers have observed that he is likewise a modest man. It gives me pleasure to say it, for I have owed Comrade James a compliment these several years and shall be glad to be out of debt. He will recall that some time since he congratulated me in Lucifer on having become less dogmatic than formerly. I would have wished to say as much of him, but dared not; though I would not say "dogmatic" either, but rather "strong," as one of his learning and literary ability has a right to be without losing his claim to genuine modesty. Yet (if he will pardon me) it may be that there are times when it is as well to forego the unlimited exercise of our rights.

Nevertheless, modest as he is, he is a man; and being a man, he could not forbear that confession which few men of proper parts could ever yet forbear to make,—modestly but with due realization—that he has a very wide acquaintance with "women of this kind." I have often wondered at this singular manifestation of masculine pride which makes the most unassuming of gentlemen apparently wish to present himself in this particular matter as "a bold, bad man." For we are precluded from supposing, as we might have done, that Comrade James cultivated this extensive acquaintance as a severe study in degeneracy, etc., by the suggestive clause "if such knowledge is rarely acquired without some experiences which may excite regret, the remedy is to make a good use of it at last." We, at least, have no cause to complain, who without moral contamination to ourselves get the purified results of Comrade James' regrettable experiences; and I think he should consider himself absolved.

The conclusion from the observations made during these considerable excursions into the realms of the demi-monde is, that the majority of prostitutes belong to the "Born Criminals" or to the "Criminaloids;" from which I infer that they are not fallen because they were never anywhere to fall from. This is emphasizing the case of "bad heredity." Comrade James is of the opinion that some of them may be raised, provided the moral derrick is perpetually in action! Well, there may be some persons in the world (and for all I know Dr. Clymer may be one), who find their true sphere of activity in furnishing such continuous leverage to those who, left to themselves, naturally gravitate toward the bottom. It may be a very useful service; but so far as my observation of strong people furnishing moral force to weak ones goes, it is generally a miserable failure. The strong one wastes his life in a futile attempt to impart character to those who would feel a great deal more comfortable if left to their own flattering devices. The "dwarfish moral 'organs,'" upheld by the external force, maintain a hesitant and halting struggle against "the enormous sensual and emotional" ones, and in the secrets of the little fluctuating brain there is dislike ripening into rankling hatred of that strong soul which plays the moral Czar over it. History records that the Empress Theodora, who had been a prostitute but who was nothing if not strong, built a home for her old companions and thither transported five hundred prostitutes. They were fed, housed, dressed, and attended, but no men were permitted in the place. The result was that the majority committed suicide, and the rest soon moped to death. No doubt these women hated Theodora well for her service.

And now Comrade James, apparently to establish that not all prostitutes are necessarily degraded, works one of his controversial miracles. I have often admired the way in which he, in dealing with any flightily inclined or ill-informed opponent, seizes him by the feet and nails him down with thousand pound facts, which stand there stiff and rigid and immovable as—well as "good facts should." But when these facts are to be used to assist Mr. James' side of the argument, lo! they become as agile as fairy-tales, as nimble as quicksilver, and they leap about and about, here, there, everywhere, to prove what a wizard can do with them. For instance, Mr. James has a theory that illegitimate children are more brilliant than those born in wedlock; and I remember catching my breath in reading an article of his on the subject some time back, in which Moses, Jesus, and Shelley, were lumped in together with a number of other notable and real characters who would likely have been shocked to read such information in print, as specimens of proof.

Moses, of whom the very sympathetic historian Renan writes: "What are we to think of the man who has come to stand out as a colossus among the great mythical figures of humanity? . . . Moses is completely buried by the legends which have grown up over him, and though he very probably existed, it is impossible to speak of him as we do of other deified or transformed men." (Italics mine). Yet Comrade James, when it suits his purpose, uses this mythical personage and one of the most widely diffused birth legends which has attached itself to his name in common with so many others, as if he and it were indisputable facts.

And Jesus!

And now, mixed up with Aspasia, Agnes Sorel, et al., Magdalene! Around whom floats the legendary light reflected from 2000 years of Christian myth-making!

Even Fantine, one of the most unreal of all the unreal creations of the sublime romanticist, becomes a controversial weapon, pointed with a sarcasm which is assumed to fit! I am supposed to be very sympathetic with "Boriboola Gha—because it costs nothing," and very flint-hearted towards the broken reeds of Philadelphia. It must be that the disposition which led Comrade James to dignify Luccheni as the reincarnation of the Monster Slayer while Czolgosz was labeled "a crank," creates this distance theory of sympathy of his, which he, feeling, naturally attributes to others. Fantine is an idealism, an exaggeration, like all Hugo's characters; she is good medicine for those who need to learn that prostitution has other causes than innate total depravity; she has a softening influence on the "unco guid" who have to be overdosed in order to feel at all; but she is a poor reply to a fact.

As to the really historic figures catalogued together with Magdalene, Aspasia, Phryne, Agnes Sorel, Lady Hamilton, and the multiple spelled "Afra, Aphra, Aphara, Ayfara" Behn,—does Comrade James, in company with Miss Earle, really insist on savoring the prostitute class by flinging them in too? Dr. Sanger says that Agnes Sorel lived with Charles VII. eighteen years, that she was a kind, good woman, and otherwise of irreproachable character. It is a little difficult to imagine a good woman in love with a king, still it is not altogether impossible; and eighteen years is, from the king's side, pretty good evidence that there was a higher feeling than kings usually experience towards their mistresses. I think it was a case of honest, unbought affection.

Lady Hamilton and Lord Nelson loved each other; the fact that they were lord and lady is, of course, somewhat against them; still lords and ladies do, occasionally, have some overwhelming attachments which make them cast conventions aside; the woman did not sell, the man did not buy; as far as I can learn it was a case of remarkably pure and beautiful love.

As to the sprightly "Afra," she appears to have been one of those singular border-line characters who was somewhat of a prostitute some of the time, but who was most of the time a piece of strong independent womanhood, varietist by inclination, but not selling herself.

For Aspasia and Phryne, they belong to an organization o society so different from our own as to require judging by a different standard, a society in which the respectable woman was so hedged about restrictions that it was precisely women with acute intellects and strong characters who became hetairae;—these were by no means prostitutes in the ordinary sense; rather were they the free women of Athens—at least the nearest approach to the type of free womanhood which the race had attained in that age.

And now, let us once for all "put things in the proper boxes." Let us recognize that there is a difference between those who disregard law, convention, and religion, because they understand them, and live above them, and those who, while recognizing their authority weakly live below them. Let us distinguish too between those who, even while recognizing the law as in general justified, yet for peculiar reasons which overweigh the balance, choose to set them aside in a particular instance, and those who habitually lapse from their own standards of right. Else we shall soon be shaking up the names of Heloise and George Eliot together with those of Mr. James' considerable acquaintances. Had I been for using his argument I think that genuine prostitute, Lily Langtry, would have served my purpose better. But who wants her mixed with the gracious Heloise?

A little parallelism. Says Comrade James: "Miss de Cleyre's idea that there is a point at which prostitution becomes incorrigible . . . . is a mistake just like the temperance lecturer's dogma that a drunkard is merely a moderate drinker come to maturity."

"Degeneracy, measured by its physical stigmata, does not keep pace with the assumed heinousness of the crime but with its inveteracy. It is more pronounced among pilferers, tramps, prostitutes, ... than among murderers." . . . It appears to me this latter paragraph is an admission that inveteracy has just the effect I claimed it had, namely to degenerate the victim below the possibility of moral reform, and that, notwithstanding an occasional John B. Gough, the temperance lecturer is right.

While Miss Earle and Mr. James are at one in the matter of confusing real prostitutes with convention-breakers, they are quite opposed in their method of considering them after all. Miss Earle recognizes the class and the "sacred taboo;" Mr. James will none of the class, he will have the individual only.

Without adopting the suggestion that I enlarge my acquaintance with prostitutes, I think I may, upon the strength of present observations, "venture to predict" that on any occasion those who refuse to recognize the fallenness of the prostitute may have to put their theories in practise, they will find there is another person who has something to say, and she may say it in a way to necessitate a revision of their previous intentions. She has a very direct idea of the adaptation of means to ends herself, and makes all who come in contact with her feel its force. Treat them as other people? Certainly: as other people with whom you have no wish to pursue an acquaintance—unless you desire to have, like Comrade James, a number o regrettable experiences to acknowledge.

VOLTAIRINE DE CLEYRE.

Defense Fund.

For Lois Waisbrooker and Mattie D. Penhallow, Home, Wash. Amount previously reported, $194.88. E. B. F., New York City, N. Y., $10; D. L., Conn., $5; E. M. R., Kans., $1; J. C., Conn., 50 cents; F. F., Minn., $1. Total to July 15 $212.38.

EXPENDITURES.

Attorney fees, $191.75; paper for circulars, $4.05; stationery, postage, etc., $8.25; expense of indicted comrades at trial $8. Total $212 05. Balance on hand 33 cents.

The trial resulted in the acquittal of Mattie Penhallow on grounds of not knowing the contents of paper at time of mailing. Lois Waisbrooker was found guilty as charged. On motion of Attorney Murphy to set aside the verdict, the judge ruled that the question of whether the article was obscene was a question of fact for the jury to determine. That he, however felt free to say that the article was not obscene, and on that account would give the lightest sentence possible for him to do under the law which would be $100 fine. No costs or imprisonment to attach. The fine was paid by the comrades borrowing the money and all returned to Home.

OLIVER A. VERITY, Treas., Home, Washington.

THE MISSISSIPPI VALLEY SPIRITUALISTS' ASSOCIATION holds its twentieth annual annual campmeeting at Mount Pleasant Park, Clinton, Iowa, from July 27 to August 24, 1902. Prof. W. P. Peck is President of the Association, and Mrs. Stella A. Fisk, Secretary. An attractive list of speakers and mediums is announced for the current year. For catalogues, etc., address the Secretary at Mt. Pleasant Park, Clinton, Iowa.

Lucifer readers are invited to attend a basket picnic in Humboldt Park Sunday Aug. 3. Meet near corner of North and California Aves., about 1 o'clock for lunch.

Lucifer, the Lightbearer

M. HARMAN, EDITOR AND PUBLISHER.

PUBLISHED EVERY WEEK AT 500 FULTON STREET, CHICAGO, ILL.

Terms: One year, $1; six months, 50 cents; three months, 25 cents.

Entered at the Chicago Postoffice as Second-Class Mail Matter.

Eastern Representative, E. C. Walker, 344 W. 143d street, New York.

Lucifer—Its Meaning and Purpose.

LUCIFER—The planet Venus; so called from its brightness.—Webster's Dictionary.

LUCIFEROUS—Giving Light; affording light or the means of discovery.—Same.

LUCIFIC—Producing Light.—Same.

LUCIFORM—Having the form of Light.—Same.

The name Lucifer means Light-Bringing or Light-Bearing, and the paper that has adopted this name stands for Light against Darkness—for Reason against Superstition—for Science against Tradition—for Investigation and Enlightenment against Credulity and Ignorance—for Liberty against Slavery—for Justice against Privilege.

Notes from the "Wolverine" State.

"IN THE SWEAT OF THY FACE."

For more than a month last past I have been trying, much of the time at least, to earn my daily bread—with butter and other dietary accompaniments, by taking part in the business of picking berries for the Chicago market. I have also picked and sent home to Lillian quite a number of crates—sixteen quarts each—of currants, raspberries and blackberries.

The weather has been rainy and cool most of these weeks, making out-door work uncomfortable and even hazardous to those who, like myself, have little vitality to withstand atmospheric changes, excessive moisture, etc., and yet, while I have earned but little money I have steadily gained in flesh and strength, and am therefore well pleased with the result, so far, of the experiment, the experience rather, of getting "back to the farm," to the soil of Mother Earth, and of trying to draw therefrom, without the intervention of middlemen, the nourishment necessary to the prolongation of mortal life.

During these weeks I have been all alone in the large house previously described, except two weeks' companionship of Granddaughter Virna, and a short call of two days from Daughter Lillian, also a very brief visit from our old, yet ever young, friend W. W. Miller of New Haven, Conn., who, on his return trip from California, stopped off a day and crossed Lake Michigan from Chicago, on purpose to spend one night with Lucifer's old editor in his rural retreat.

Yesterday—July 23—the monotony was broken by the arrival of Mrs. Fannie M. Taylor, of Chicago, with her two children, who expect to remain at least two weeks, picking berries and putting them into cans for home consumption.

The weather today is simply delicious, sunny and yet not too warm, after a wet spell unprecedented almost, in Michigan history, consequently our friends are enjoying the change—only a few hours transference—from the cramped and artificial life of the great city to the freedom and naturalness of the country, with a relish that does one good to witness. Next Monday we are promised at least two more lady friends from Chicago, with a number of the masculine persuasion to follow a few days later, also two or three from other points of the compass, so that from this time onward we have reason to expect lively times in the phalansterie at No. 6 Dewey Ave. which Dr. James Russell Price of Chicago has christened "Harmony Home"!

AWAY FROM THE FARM.

While working along-side the berry-pickers I have often had the question brought home to me,

"Why or wherefore the almost universal drift of the human tide away from the farm?—away from the sweet, pure, wholesome air; the health giving sunshine; the comparative freedom and equality between employer and employed, observable in country life—as compared to the close rooms, the stifling air, the lack of sunshine and especially the lack of equality of position between employer and employed, between master and man, mistress and maid, and inseparable from life in the great city?"

Looking for causes I see a multitude, a vast combination, of causes which, altogether, make it impossible that things should be different from what we now find them, impossible that people in the country should be satisfied with what they now have.

Among the more remote but not the less potent, less efficient, or less compelling of these causes is the inherited superstition that the soil itself is cursed—that direct contact with the "ground" is degrading, more so than are other kinds of productive labor, such as the various trades or handicrafts, live-stock raising, also commercial pursuits, and especially such parasitic employments as "law," "divinity," the healing art, teaching, banking and governing, i. e., POLITICS!

"Cursed be the ground for thy sake; thorns and thistles shall it bring forth. In the sweat of thy face [no other employment is supposed to bring sweat to the face except working in the soil] shalt thou eat bread all the days of thy life until thou returnest to the dust [soil] from which thou wast created." I quote from memory. Here we have, undoubtedly, a sufficient cause, a compelling cause of much of the inherited disgrace, odium, contempt, that now attach to the cultivator of the soil, as compared to him who gets his living and his social position from one or more of the occupations just named.

Polite society, cultured society, combine to perpetuate and intensify this hereditary superstition. Even so good a man as Dr. O. W. Holmes has done his share, as when he says, "We cannot expect real gentility short of three removes from the soil, from which, of course, all our best blood comes." Again I quote from memory—having but few books with me. Holmes may have said "refinement," "grace," "culture," or "elegance," instead of gentility. I remember that on one occasion he said, "One dislikes to say genteel!"

But whatever the word used the idea is the same, namely, that one whose daily life brings him in close contact with the soil is necessarily coarse, unrefined, ungraceful, uncouth, crude and uncultured, and therefore not fit to associate on equal terms with the more esthetic, more highly civilized specimens of the human genus, whose occupations remove them from all danger of getting soil on their hands and clothes, or the sweat of agricultural toil on their faces.

* * *

In conversation with the berry pickers, and with workers on the farm in general, I find the above named superstition everywhere prevalent. The hope of most farmers, farmers' wives, and especially of farmers' daughters and sons, is to make money enough on the farm to enable them to "move to town," in order to enjoy its supposed greater social and educational advantages, but very largely, also, in order that the daughters may have a chance to marry something better than a "clod-hopper," and that the sons may not be obliged to follow the humdrum occupation, the toilful life, of a farmer, and that they may have opportunities that their parents never enjoyed, to "live without work," or at least without work that brings them into daily contact with Mother Earth.

* * *

EVERY MAN TO HIS SPECIALTY.

I have often heard men express themselves in words very much like these:

"Of course there must be farmers as well as artizans and professional men. Let every man follow the occupation to which he is best adapted. If he has a liking for the farm, and can make a success of farming, let him farm; if his talents and inclination are towards the law, let him be a lawyer; if he can be a good preacher, let him preach; if a good physician, let him follow that calling; if a good banker, let him bank; if a good propagator of his race, let him propagate!" Herein I have quoted very nearly the exact words of a wealthy banker and noted politician of Kansas, the chief difference between his words and mine is that instead of "propagate" he used the plain vernacular, a term the use of which in his paper, "The Word," sent Ezra H. Heywood to the penitentiary for two years.

This banker had but one son—an only child I think, who besides a partnership in his father's bank had opened a law office in the same building. At that time he and his father were paying readers of Lucifer, then the "Kansas Liberal." Calling upon our subscribers in his town I had a long conversation with this "rising young lawyer," in the course of which conversation he related an incident that he said had lately occurred. On lifting his breakfast plate he found a check, a birthday present from father to son, worth one thousand dollars.

"Father," exclaimed this only son, on seeing the check, "you have done well by us, very well indeed, and deserve our everlasting gratitude"—meaning by "us" his mother and himself. This exclamation, by the way, accorded perfectly with what the elder banker had told me, not long before, that he was no propagandist, no philanthropist; that he was ambitious to do the very best possible for his own family, and that he had no other motive in accumulating money. In theology this man was a Freethinker, a Rationalist, of the Huxley and Spencer school, but his words and acts showed that his rationalism was no broader, no more altruistic, than was that of the churchman who prayed, "God bless me and my wife, my son John and his wife, us four and no more, Amen!"

Very similar to this incident is one that I encountered at Lake Helen (Florida) a few years ago. Among the more aristocratic of the guests at the leading hotel was a Rev. Morrison of Ithaca, New York, if I rightly remember. Descanting upon the evils of the tobacco habit this man related that he had promised his son one thousand dollars if he would "quit smoking," and that quite recently the boy had found a check for that amount under his breakfast plate—"and," added the father, "I would just as freely have made it five thousand if I had thought nothing less would induce my son to abandon the vile habit."

These men, the Kansas banker and the New York plutocratic moralist, are, or were, doubtless looked upon by young and old alike, as model citizens, worthy of imitation and emulation by all. It is safe to say that neither of these models were enabled to make such presents to their sons because of their own personal contact with the soil of Mother Earth, and yet it requires no argument to show that some one—many people in fact, had been compelled to toil early and late, and to deprive themselves of luxuries, of means of culture, as well as of common necessaries of life, in order that these model citizens could be so generous, so lavishly generous, in showing their paternal affection.

* * *

What then is the natural, the inevitable effect upon the young and old alike, of examples such as these? Will not the young, especially young men ambitious of a career, an honorable career in life, say to themselves, "What chance is there of winning wealth and honors on the farm? Where did these men get the money to make such presents? Certainly not on the farm. Banking [interest based on monopoly of the issue of money]; rent [monopoly of land]; law and politics [chances to get big fees through 'influence' and for little work]; speculative profits [monopoly in business, or combinations of business interests,—commercial, mining, manufacturing, patents, etc., privileges that only a few can enjoy] these," the ambitious young man says to himself, "these and NOT farming are the royal roads to wealth and honor, and therefore I'll give the farm a wide berth, and hie me to the city, where chances of fortune and fame are waiting to reward him who has sense enough to see and make use of them."

* * *

This subject—the almost universal tendency to leave the farm and flock to the city, is too large for exhaustive treatment in one article. If possible it will receive further attention in these columns later on. For the present I close by saying that having been born and bred on the farm, also my ancestors for many generations before me, it seems part of my inheritance to love farm life, quite as naturally as to love to live at all, and my love of life for life's sake is one of my most pronounced characteristics. If I can do anything to help to turn the tide of humanity away from the cities and "back to the land," I shall deem myself well rewarded for my effort I may make in that direction.

6 Dewey Ave, R. F. D., Benton Harbor, Mich. M. H.

Parry and Thrust.

Hope; but work.

Blind men trust their leaders.

Reason never renounces her rights.

The mind may be led; but it is never driven.

A little presumption covers a multitude of ignoramuses.

At last the Filipinos are pacified. Dead men cannot longer rebel.

The self-conscious ego is the essential basis of social regeneration.

The proprieties have no rights which love is bound to respect.

When Greek meets Greek, then quite often valuable time is wasted.

Politics is the science of systematically depriving the people of their rights.

It is not necessary to prove every one else a fool in showing that you are right.

Whatever they do for the price of commodities, the trusts certainly lower the price of men.

Free speech is the safeguard of all other freedom. A gagged man may be coerced at leisure.

Rent, interest, and profit are species of blackmail levied by that thief and conspirator, capitalism.

He who minds his own business will never find time to mind the businesses which others should be minding.

A state socialist is one who believes in thoroughly enslaving the people in order the more surely to make them free.

Philosophy is science becoming too attenuated in the search for causes, and finally losing itself, past finding, in words.

Land monopoly is monopoly of life; as without land life cannot exist. Who has the right to hold my life in his hand?

Prayer appears to have cured some people of disease; others it seems to have cured of the wish to be cured. They have died.

The landlord, the lendlord, and the tax lord make up the trinity of usury; at once the strongest and the most evil power alive.

To many, bacteriology is the science of hiding ignorance as to true cause of disease under sounding words and a show of profundity.

To James P. Morton: Greeting! When I said, "there is no place like Home, Wash., for tyranny;" 'twas the tyranny of the State that filled my eye.

Existing economics take man at his best and make it profitable for him to do his worst; Libertarian economics take man at his worst and make it profitable for him to do his best.

British doctors to the number of five thousand met in St. Paul's Cathedral and prayed for the recovery of the King. What, then: was there doubt in their minds as to the efficacy of "science?".

The Emperor William's understudy at Washington is still leading the strenuous life of an archeologist for Philippine atrocities who must also swear by the Declaration of Independence. He should beware of over exertion.

To my wondering critic, C. P. H.: Yes, state socialism, which justifies authority in conducting some of the affairs of a people, logically justifies authority in conducting all the affairs of a people. Then where would liberty be?

To Single Taxers: If the presence of population is that which gives value to land, you deceive yourselves when you think that the population has a right to tax that value. The population did not work to give the land that value; and where no work has been done no remuneration should be forthcoming.

All taxes are just robbery. If a man possesses what is rightfully his, and the conditions of possession are fair, (which the existing ones are not) who then may play the miserable trick of blackmail? Change the conditions of possession, and have done with the vile expedient of hocus pocus.

Vaccination as a means of rendering one proof against small pox, may justly be compared to the placing of a little open sewer at one's door in order to make one's health proof against a larger open sewer which flows along fifty rods away. How about having no open sewers; would that be an effective preventative of untoward results? IRONICUS.

Werner Boecklin.

DEAR LILLIAN: Was glad you put a notice of Werner Boecklin's death in Lucifer of July 17, as there are a few of Lucifer readers who knew of his existence. Articles from Werner Boecklin's pen seldom appeared in any of the radical papers, although he was a constant reader of them for many years. For over twenty years he did as members of the Press-Writers Association are doing today, he wrote radical articles for daily papers, labor papers. The articles he has written during the past thirty years would fill a good sized volume. Werner Boecklin was born in Basle, Switzerland. He was an Anarchist as I understand the meaning of the word. He was an Anarchist in his own home. I was intimately acquainted with him for over forty-seven years and I never knew him to tyrannize over any body in any way, shape or form.

He was very fond of his home, and very fond of children. To my thinking he did his part toward bettering conditions for the human family on this our mother earth. With loving thoughts to his memory. CORNELIA BOECKLIN.

"The Honor of the Army."

At last the public is informed of the result of the court-martial proceedings against Gen. Smith—Gen. Jacob H. Smith, who was accused of ordering his subordinates in Samar to devastate the island with fire and to kill every person over ten years of age. He was found guilty of the charge. Mind that! By a court of his own comrades he was convicted of giving to his subordinates—we quote from the secretary of war's summary of the court-martial proceedings—"the following oral instructions":

"I want no prisoners. I wish you to kill and burn; the more you kill and burn the better you will please me," and, further, that he wanted all persons killed who were capable of bearing arms and in actual hostilities against the United States; and did, in reply to a question by Maj. Waller asking for an age limit, designate the age limit as ten years of age.

So it is established that an American general did give the most brutal order of which there is any record in civilized warfare. He did give an order which amply confirms the substance of the charges of American atrocities in the Philippines. But what does that court-martial do with him—that court-martial in which was reposed for the time the safekeeping of "the honor of the army"? How has it vindicated "the honor of the army," which by its own verdict appears to have been grossly outraged? It condemns the murderous culprit to be admonished! And what does President Roosevelt do, into whose keeping "the honor of the army" next comes in connection with this case? How does he vindicate that honor which Gen. Smith has outraged? He gravely "admonishes" the convicted defendant and retires him from the army. But not as a criminal does he retire Gen. Smith. Not as a criminal, but as an officer who has served beyond the limit of his age—retires him as he is waiting impatiently to retire Gen. Miles!

Think of it, you worshipers of shoulder straps who would condone all the infamy of American military exploits in the Philippines, in the name of "the honor of the army." Think of it, if you dare think. Here is a high military officer caught red-handed. He is convicted of one of the infamous crimes with which the army in the Philippines stands charged. A plain case is made out, so plain that his own sympathetic comrades cannot deny the facts. Not only that, but his criminal order was obeyed by Maj. Waller and Lieut. Day to the extent of the murder of eleven men, at least eight of whom were absolutely innocent, says Gen. Chaffee in his endorsement of the Waller and Day verdicts, even of a suspicion of even a military offense, and "continued to the last to carry the arms and ammunition of the men after they were no longer able to bear them, and to render in their impassive way such services as deepens the conviction that, without their assistance, many of the marines who now survive would also have perished." This general officer, so guilty and so convicted, is "admonished," "reprimanded," and honorably "retired." If, after this, "the honor of the army" does not become a by-word, it will be because the American people have lost their sense of humor and not yet gained a sense of justice.

The President and Mr. Root have felt it necessary to explain the leniency in Gen. Smith's case. They say that nobody but Waller and Day obeyed the order, and only eleven natives were killed pursuant to it. Why didn't they make the irony of the comment complete by assurances that these injured natives have made no complaint? But their unconscious irony aside, how are the American people to know that only eleven were killed? Reports and rumors of atrocities from various sources are abundant, but the secretary of war has assiduously suppressed all official information that did not actually ooze out. The Smith case itself would never have been heard of through the war office had Waller yielded to the suggestions of his superiors and pleaded mental irresponsibility. But he insisted upon defending himself as having acted under Smith's orders, and so this one bloody cat got out of the bag. How many other bloody cats are there in that bag? With this one horrible instance revealed, with the war department suppressing official information about other cases, with the Senate investigating committee refusing to investigate, is it not a reasonable presumption that the numerous reports of American atrocities are in the main true, and that the Smith case is only one of a multitude more or less like it?—The Public, Chicago.

Mother—I am surprised, Ethel, that you should talk so impertinently to papa. I'm sure you never heard me talk that way to him.

Ethel—Well, you choosed him, and I didn't.—Detroit Free Press.

From the "International Defence Committee," Paterson, N. J., we have received subscription blanks in behalf of McQueen, Grossman, and others under arrest for participation in the strike. We will receive subscriptions for this purpose, or will send blanks to any of our friends who may wish to aid in this work.

Forty copies of Lucifer, no two alike, of 1900 or 1901 will be sent to any address for 15 cents. Nine bundles for $1. We are anxious to place these papers where they will do good. Please let us have your orders soon. State which year you want.

COLLEGE OF MEDICINE AND SURGERY,
CHICAGO, ILL.
Session begins September 25 and continues eight months. Four Years' Graded Course. Practical work required in Chemistry Physiology, Bacteriology and Microscopy. Co-Educational, Standard Requirement. For catalogue, address Secretary, 245 Ashland Boulevard, Chicago.

TOLSTOI'S NEW WORK.

The Slavery of Our Times.

With Portrait of the Gifted Author, and Introduction by the Translator, Aylmer Maude.

CHAPTER TITLES,

I., Goods Porters Who Work Thirty-seven Hours; II., Society's Indifference While Men Perish; III., Justification of the Existing Position of Sciences; IV., The Assertion of Economic Science that Rural Laborers Must Enter the Factory System; V., Why Learned Economists Assert what is False; VI., Bankruptcy of th Socialist Ideal; VII., Culture or Freedom? VIII., Slavery Exists Among Us; IX., What is Slavery? X., Laws Concerning Taxes, Land and Property; XI., Laws the Cause of Slavery; XII., The Essence of Legislation Is Organized Violence; XIII., What Are Governments? Is it Possible to Exist Without Governments? XIV., How Can Governments Be Abolished? XV., What Should Each Man Do? An Afterword.

Well printed on heavy paper. Substantially bound. 186 pages Price, $1.50.

Address M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

CAPTAIN JINKS, HERO

BY ERNEST CROSBY.

It is a merciless satire on war and militarism in which the parallel between savagery and soldiery is unerringly drawn. It is a biting burlesque on the various forms of ch ap hero-worship It holds up to withering scorn every important feature of militarism.

Among the accompaniments and results of war exploited and satirized, are hazing at "East Point," the war whoops of the yellow journals, the savagery of war, the Schley-Sampson controversy, civilizing the heathen savage, looting in China, peculation abuses, the capture of Aguinaldo, the Peace Conference, army mismanagement, osculatory attacks by gooney girls, etc.

With 25 Irresistible Drawings by Dan Beard. Illus, Cloth, Handsome Covers, 400 pages. Price $1.50

Address M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

VICE: ITS FRIENDS AND ITS FOES

BY EDWIN C. WALKER.

CONTENTS:—Brotherhood of Man; The Recognition of Facts; Folly of "For Men Only," Definition of Vice; Horrors of Prostitution; Abnormal Sexuality; Errors of Fathers, Mothers and Teachers; Persecution Does Not Reform; Prostitution and the Crusaders; The "Spoiling of the Heathen;" What are the Effects of Raids and Crusades? The Economic Side of the Problem, Party Politics in Vice Crusading; In What Does Prostitution Consist? Some Causes of Prostitution; Two Kinds of Prostitution Compared; The Opponents of Divorce; "Purifying" the Tenements; Action for Advanced Women.

WITH APPENDIX:—The Wanderings of a Spirit; Our Fair Civilization. The Folly and Cruelty of it All. Price 10c.

Address M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

VACCINATION A CRIME.

With Comments on Other Sanitary Superstitions.

BY FELIX L. OSWALD, M. D.

"Vaccination spreads diseases; vaccination impairs the organic functions; vaccination encourages reliance on worthless remedies; vaccination spreads small-pox; compulsory vaccination furnishes dangerous legal precedents."

With illustrations of diseases frequently resulting from vaccination. 198 pages. Price 10 cents For sale by M. Harman, 500 Fulton St. Chicago.

DO YOU EVER THINK

Of the fate of the Prodigal Daughter? The Prodigal Son is forgiven and received with rejoicing—why should different treatment be accorded to his sister? For a vivid, true picture of the conditions in homes and factories which produce thousands of so-called fallen women every year, read "The Prodigal Daughter; or, The Price of Virtue," by Rachel Campbell.

SPECIAL OFFER.

This valuable work sent free on receipt of twenty-five cents for a thirteen week's trial subscription to Lucifer the Light Bearer. M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton Street, Chicago, Ill.

Notice! I would be glad to hear from Liberals who would like to correspond with other Liberals. Address (with stamp)
Snowville, Va. ELMIRA DRAKE SLENKER.

928.

If these figures correspond with the number printed on the wrapper of your Lucifer, your subscription expires with this number.

If a copy of Lucifer fails to reach you, please order by number or date.

Lucifer will not be sent "by return mail" unless stamps for postage are enclosed with order.

TO NEW SUBSCRIBERS: Your subscription is paid to No. If you have not ordered Lucifer, a friend has subscribed for you. If you do not wish to receive it, please notify us by card or through your postmaster. If you wish to become a regular subscriber you will confer a favor by renewing before the expiration of your trial subscription.

LOVE'S COMING OF AGE.

BY EDWARD CARPENTER.

This is a book with which few will wholly agree, but which nearly every one can read with profit and enjoyment. The subject is the relation of the sexes in the past, present and future, and it is treated with absolute frankness and fearlessness by a writer who unites a broad outlook, a strong grasp of his subject and a charming literary style. The following table of contents will indicate the line of thought followed by the author.

The Sex Passion.
Man, the Ungrown.
Woman, the Serf.
Woman in Freedom
Marriage: a Retrospect.
Marriage: a Forecast.
The Free Society.
Some remarks on the early star and sex worships.
Notes—On the Primitive Group Marriage; Jealousy; The Family; Preventive Checks to Population.

The book is printed on extra book paper and handsomely bound in cloth. Price, $1.

Address M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

WHITMAN'S IDEAL DEMOCRACY, AND OTHER WRITINGS.

BY HELENA BORN.

Comprising besides the title essay, Thoreau's Joy in Nature; Poets of Revolt: Shelley, Whitman, Carpenter; Whitman's Attitude; Individualism versus Organization: Inequalities of Economic Argument; The Last Stand Against Democracy in Sex: Inequality in Divorce; Marriage Safeguards. With portrait of author and biographical introduction by Helen Tufts. 125 pages Edition limited to 500 copies; each copy numbered. Fine paper, uncut pages, bound in boards, paper label. Price $1.

Personal: A liberal man, living in Southeast Ohio, would like to become acquainted with ladies of congenial ideas in that section. Further information given to those interested on receipt of letter. Address W., 500 Fulton st., Chicago.

"Pages of Socialist History." By W. Tcherkesoff This book is recommended to Socialists of all schools, as it deals with the history of the "Internationale" and the attitude of Marx and Engels towards Bakounin. Well worth study. Paper covers, 25 cents. By mail 30 cents. Bound in extra cloth. Price $1.

Address M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

RADICAL LITERATURE.

For Sale by M. Harman, 500 Fulton St., Chicago.

A CHAMBERMAID'S DIARY. By Octave Mirbeau. Translated from the French by Benj. R. Tucker. 400 pages. Handsomely bound in cloth. $1.50.

ADVANCEMENT OF SCIENCE. Prof. John Tyndall's famous Inaugural Address before the British Association for the Advancement of Science, with the article on Prayer which so stirred the religious world. Cloth, 50c; paper, 25c.

AGE OF REASON. Thomas Paine. Cloth, with steel plate portrait, 75c; paper 15c.

ANARCHISM: Its Philosophy and Ideal. Peter Kropotkin. 5c.

A PHYSICIAN IN THE HOUSE. A New Family Medical Work, by Dr. J. H. Greer. This book is up-to-date in every particular. It will save you hundreds of dollars in doctors' bills. It tells you how to cure yourself by simple and harmless home remedies. It recommends no poisonous or dangerous drugs. It teaches how to save health and life by safe methods. It teaches prevention—that it is better to know how to live and avoid disease than to take any medicine as a cure. It is not an advertisement and has no medicine to sell. It has hundreds of excellent recipes for the cure of the various diseases. It has 16 colored plates showing different parts of the human body. The chapter on Painless Midwifery is worth its weight in gold to women. The "Care of Children" is something every mother ought to read. It teaches the value of Air, Sunshine, and Water as medicines. It contains valuable information for the married. This book cannot fail to please you. If you are looking for health by the safest and easiest means, do not delay getting it. It has eight hundred pages, is neatly bound in cloth, with gold letters, and will be sent by mail or express, prepaid to any address, for $2.75.

A PLEA FOR THE NEW WOMAN. May L. Collins. With large new half-tone portrait. 10c.

A TALE OF THE STRASSBURG GEESE. B. R. Kerr. Together with The Strike of the Strassburg Geese (C. W. Coolridge), A Traveler's Tale (R. R. Kerr), The Cat's Story (Émile Zola) 5c.

AUTONOMY, SELF-LAW. A fragmentary dissertation on the right to non-invasive self-hood. 5c.

BALZAC'S SERAPHITA: The Mystery of Sex. Mary Hanford Ford. Cloth. $1.

BIBLE TEMPERANCE. E. C. Walker. Proving that Liquor Drinking is Commanded, Defended and Enjoined by the Bible, and giving close reference to the chapters and verses. 10c.

BORNING BETTER BABIES—Through regulating reproduction by controlling conception. E. B. Foote, Jr., M. D. 25c.

CAUSES OF HARD TIMES, and the Money Question. Albert Chavannes. 5c.

CHICAGO CONFERENCE OF TRUSTS. Speeches, debates, etc.; 32 portraits of delegates, including Benj. R. Tucker, Lawrence Gronlund, William Jennings Bryan, Samuel Gompers, Louis F. Post, and George Schilling. 328 pages. 50c.

CHILDREN OF THE ITALIAN POOR. Paola Lombroso. 5c.

DARWIN, THE. (A novel.) Simon D. Slenker. 50c.

DAWN OF CIVILIZATION, The; or, England in the Nineteenth Century. J. C. Spence. 178 pages. 25c.

DAWN-THOUGHT ON THE RECONCILIATION. By J. Wm. Lloyd. An inspired treatise that, with insight and solution, touches all the questions of life, love, soul and society. A prose-poem, simple enough for a child to enjoy, deep enough to make a philosopher think. The largest creed, the most generous theory, the gladdest gospel. A book of life. A religion of growth and the overlook—freedom and optimism. Read it. Printed in old style antique type, rubricated with portrait of the author. In three editions, de luxe, plain and paper bound. Prices, $2.25, $1.00 and 50c.

DIGGING FOR BED-ROCK. Camp-meeting talks and sketches by Moses Harman. 5c.

DR. FOOTE'S SOCIAL SCIENCE SERIES OF DIME PAMPHLETS—Wedlock; Scientific Marriage; Heredity; A B C of Temperaments; Powell and his Critics; Physiological Marriage; Physical Improvement of Humanity; Causes of Disease, Insanity, and Premature Death; A Step Backward. Any of the above books sent by mail on receipt of price.

DYNAMIC THEORY OF LIFE AND MIND. An attempt to show that all organic beings are both constructed and operated by the dynamic agencies of their respective environments. By James B. Alexander. Over 400 illustrations, 37 chapters, 1,067 pages and a 2-column index of 11 pages. Cloth, $2.75.

EAST TENNESSEE SKETCHES. A and Cecile Chavannes. 25c.

ECONOMICS OF ANARCHY. A Study of the Industrial Type. Oyer D. Lum ine

EIGHT-HOUR MOVEMENT. John P. Altgeld, ex-Governor of Illinois. 5c.

EVOLUTION AND REVOLUTION. Elisee Reclus. 5c.

FALSE CLAIMS OF THE CHURCH. John E. Remsburg. Analyzing and confuting the claims made by churchmen that the Christian religion has promoted morality, learning, temperance, science, freedom, and showing how she has opposed progress. Paper, 10c.

FIELDS, FACTORIES, AND WORKSHOPS; or, Industry Combined with Agriculture and Brain Work with Manual Work. Peter Kropotkin. 360 pages. 40c. Postage, 5c.

FREE PRESS. Arguments in support of demurrer to the indictment of M. Harman, E. C. Walker and Geo. Harman, under the Comstock law, G. C. Clemens and David Overmyer. 25c.

GIORDANO BRUNO. His Life, Teachings, and Martyrdom. Burned for heresy in Rome, Feb. 17, 1600. 5c.

GOD AND THE STATE. Bakounine. 25c.

GOVERNMENT ANALYZED. A remarkable work by a remarkable man, Col. John R. Kelso, the history of whose life reads more like romance than reality. This book is the last of a series—Deity Analyzed, Bible Analyzed, Universe Analyzed. By the author's death this work was left unfinished, but was completed by his wife, Etta Dunbar Kelso. 119 pages; cloth. Price reduced from $1.50 to $1.

HILDA'S HOME. Rosa Graul. "An o'er true tale" of woman's wrongs and of one woman's struggles and final triumphs in her attempt to secure justice for herself and for her sisters. 426 pages. Cloth, $1; paper, 50c.

HUMAN RIGHTS. J. Madison Hook. 5c.

IMPORTANCE OF HONEST MONEY. A simple, scientific, invariable standard of price. James Adleman. 320 pages. Paper, 50c.

IN BRIGHTER CLIMES; or, Life in Socialand. Albert Chavannes. 5c.

INFIDEL DEATH-BEDS. "Ills Tales of Dying Horrors." G. W. Foote. Brief biographical sketches of 87 Freethinkers, including Bruno, Buckle, Byron, Comte, Darwin, George Eliot, Gibbon, Goethe, Hugo, Harriet Martineau, Mill, Paine, Madame Roland, George Sand, Shelley, Volney, and Voltaire. 25c.

IN HELL AND THE WAY OUT. A plan of Social Democracy outlined. Henry E. Allen. 10c.

INSTITUTIONAL MARRIAGE. From the viewpoint of an exiled Mormon. M. Harman. 5c.

JOHN'S WAY. A domestic radical story. Elmina D. Slenker. 25c.

KAREEZA. Ethics of Marriage. A bold, brave book, teaching ideal marriage, rights of the unborn child, a designed and controlled maternity. Sample pages free. $1.

KORADINE. A story for young and old. Extra levant cloth. $1.

LIBERTY IN LITERATURE. Testimonial to Walt Whitman. "Let us put wreaths on the brows of the living." An address delivered in Philadelphia, Oct. 31, 1886, with portrait of Whitman. Containing also Col. Ingersoll's address at the funeral of Walt Whitman, Mar. 30, 1892. Cloth, 50c; paper, 25c.

LIBERTY. Political, Religious, Social, and Moral. A. F. Tindall. 5c.

LITTLE LESSONS FOR LITTLE FOLKS. Elmina D. Slenker. Boards, 40c.

LIZZIE MELTON. A story of a self-reliant girl. By Albert Chavannes. With portrait of author. 25c.

LUCIFER. Third Series, Vol. III. (1899). Cloth, $1.25. Postage, 25c.

MAGNETATION, and Its Relation to Health and Character. Albert Chavannes. 25c.

MARRIAGE. An address by Dr. Juliet H. Severance. 5c.

MARRIAGE IN FREE SOCIETY. Edward Carpenter. A dainty little gift book. 25c.

MEN, WOMEN AND CHANCE. William Platt. Containing two tales: The Ascent to the Heights, and Blind Men and Seeing. Well printed on heavy paper and artistically bound in cloth. Gilt top, rough edges. 75c.

MEN, WOMEN, AND GODS. Helen H. Gardener. With preface by Col. R. G. Ingersoll. Contents: Introduction by Col. Ingersoll. Men, Women, and Gods. Vicarious Atonement. Historical Facts and Theological Fictions. Appendix. Address to the Clergy and Others. Letter to Cleveland Congress of Freethinkers. The only authorized and correct edition. Large 12mo, heavy-toned paper. Portrait. This volume is by far the best writing this famous author ever did. It is very fine. Cloth, $1; paper, 50c.

MISSING LINK IN MODERN SPIRITUALISM, THE. A. Leah (Fox) Underhill. With portraits of the Fox Sisters and others. 478 pages. Cloth. Reduced to $1.

MORIBUND SOCIETY AND ANARCHY. Jean Grave. Cloth, 60c; paper, 30c.

MOTHERHOOD IN FREEDOM. M. Harman. 5c.

MUTUAL BANKING. A simple plan to abolish interest on money. William B. Greene. 10c.

NORA, A DOLL'S HOUSE, and GHOSTS. Ibsen. Cloth. 75c.

OUR WORSHIP OF PRIMITIVE SOCIAL GUESSES. E. C. Walker. Contents: Love and Law; The Moloch of the Monogamic Ideal; The Continuity of Race-Life, and Tyrannic Food and Sex Fallacies, a Criticism; When Men and Women Are and When They Are Not Varieties; The New Woman: What is she? What will she be? The State Hiding Behind Its Own Mistakes; Bishop Potter's Opinion of Divorce; Love: Its Attraction and Expression; Is She an Honest Girl? Lloyd Platt, and the Pitiful Facts; Social Radicals and Parentage; Anthropology and Monogamy; Love and Trust Versus Fear; Reflections upon Reading William Platt's "Women, Love, and Life." 15c.

PERSONAL EXPERIENCES of Two American Anti-Vivisectionists in Various Countries. Philip G. Peabody. With an Appendix by Col. R. G. Ingersoll. Reduced from 25c to 15c.

PERSONAL RIGHTS AND SEXUAL WRONGS. Oswald Dawson. 25c.

PRIESTLY CELIBACY. Prof. A. L. Rawson. Together with The Incoherence of Tran.ition (E. C. Walker), A Motherhood in Freedom (Moses Harman), The Greatest Sin (an allegory, H. B. Kerr), and Jealousy, the Foe of Freedom (Oscar Rotter). 25c.

RELIGION AND RATIONALISM. The relation of each to human liberty. The religionist, fancying that he has the whole truth, is logically opposed to investigation, and he appeals to physical force to arrest the discovery of new truths. What Rationalism is, and how many believe themselves Freethinkers who are only unbelieving or disgruntled religionists. The necessity for separate organizations and a division of labor among reformers. The Secular Union. Important facts and arguments in a compact form. E. C. Walker. 5c.

RIGHTS OF MAN. Thomas Paine. Answer to Burke's attack upon the French revolution. A political treatise of great general value, as advocating liberty and democracy. Contains the fundamental principles of true republicanism. Cloth, 50c; paper, 25c.

RUBAIYAT (Quatrains) OF OMAR KHAYYAM. Edward FitzGerald's interpretation; with original introduction; special cover; latest version. Paper, 25c.

RULED BY THE TOMB. A discussion of free thought and free love. Orford Northcote. 10c.

SCIENCE IN STORY; or, Sammy Tubbs, the Boy Doctor, and Spondo, the Troublesome Monkey. For young folks. Dr. E. B. Foote. Five volumes in "red line," presentation edition. $5. Five volumes, plainer binding, $2.50; all in one volume, $1.

SEXUAL PHYSIOLOGY FOR THE YOUNG. Being the fifth volume of "Science in Story." 250 pages; cloth bound; illustrated. 50c.

SONGS OF THE UNBLIND CUPID. J. Wm. Lloyd. Edition de luxe. Verses printed from Kelmscott type upon deckle edged hand made paper of cerulean tint. Initial letters, ornaments and borders are in red; initial letter and sketch upon the opening page are hand painted in water colors. Covers brown, with choice of silver or gold lettering. Very handsome gift book. 50c.

STUDIES IN SOCIOLOGY. In four parts: I., The Law of Happiness; II., The Law of Individual Control; III., The Law of Exchange; IV., The Law of Environment. Albert Chavannes. 25c.

TALKS ON NATURE. Important information for both sexes. Dr. J. H. Greer. 192 pages. Reduced from 50 to 25c.

THE ABOLITION OF MARRIAGE. John Beverly Robinson. Together with Isabel's Intention (Mariette), Reminiscences of Berlin Heights (A. Warren), and The Sense and Love in Freedom (Oscar Rotter). 25c.

THE BAR SINISTER AND LICIT LOVE, including the first biennial proceedings of the Legitimation League, and a full account of the Lanchester case, with full-page half-tone pictures of Edith Lanchester, and Lillian Harman. Handsomely bound in green and gold covers. 207 pages. 25c.

THE BLUE LAWS OF CONNECTICUT. Taken from the Code of 1650 and the public records of the Colony of Connecticut previous to 1665. With an account of the persecution of Witches and Quakers in New England, and some extracts from the Blue Laws of Virginia. Copiously illustrated. 25c.

THE BRITISH BARBARIANS. Grant Allen, the greatest of the Hill-Top pioneers. Dedicated "to all who have heart enough, brain enough, and soul enough to understand it." Handsomely bound in cloth. 261 pages. $1.

THE WOMAN WHO DID. Grant Allen. A powerful story of a refined, educated and high-spirited woman who dared to defy the tyranny of church and state and ignore the institution of marriage. Handsomely bound in cloth. $1.

THE NEW HEDONISM. Grant Allen. The opening paragraph says: "The old asceticism said: 'Be virtuous and you will be happy.' The new hedonism says: 'Be happy and you will be virtuous.'" In another place the writer says: "In proportion as men have freed themselves from mediæval superstitions have they begun to perceive that the unclean and impure things are evilbacy and asceticism; that the pure and beautiful and ennobling thing is the fit and worthy exercise of the reproductive function." Paper covers; 96 large pages; twelve copies, 50c. Single copy, 5c.

THE CHICAGO MARTYRS. The famous speeches of the eight condemned anarchists in Judge Gary's Court, and Altgeld's reasons for pardoning Fielden, Neebe and Schwab. 25c.

THE COMING WOMAN. Lillie D. White. 5c.

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM. Principles and platform of organized Freethought. 15c.

THE EVOLUTION OF MODESTY. Jonathan Mayo Crane. A consideration of the origin of clothes and the reasons why people wear clothing. Here are a few questions it answers: What is modesty? What is the cause of it? What is the use of it? What is the cause of the feeling of shame? Is nudity immodest? What is the cause of the notion that it is shameful to expose some parts of the body? Why do not all peoples agree as to what parts of the body should be concealed? 5c.

THE FOUNTAIN OF LIFE; or, The Threefold Power of Sex. Lois Waisbrooker. 25c.

THE FUTURE OF SECULARISM. When will the Cause of Justice triumph? 5c.

THE PRODIGAL DAUGHTER; or, The Price of Virtue. Rachel Campbell. Together with Legal Wifehood (Lucinda B. Chandler), Life's Gifts (Olive Schreiner), and Marriage—What It Was and Is; Will the Coming Woman Marry? 25c.

THE REVIVAL OF PURITANISM. E. C. Walker. 10c.

THE RIGHTS OF CHILDREN. R. B. Kerr. Together with What Are Women Here For? (E. B. Foote, Jr., M. D.), The New Martyrdom (Lillian Harman), and The Will, from the French of Guy de Maupassant. 25c.

THE SANCTITY OF MARRIAGE. As viewed from a moral and sanitary standpoint. A solemn protest against the present demoralizing management of that institution, its effects upon offspring and its influence upon education. By Dr. Robert A. Greer. A valuable "opening wedge" in missionary work. Price reduced from 25c to 10c.

THE SECRET INSTRUCTIONS OF THE JESUITS. A reprint from an edition published in 1626, quoted by the highest authorities as authentic. The work is redolent of Jesuit craft and is a plain index to the underhand working of that order against the welfare of individuals and society. 15c.

THE STATE: ITS HISTORIC ROLE. Prince Peter Kropotkin. 10c.

THE UNWOMANLY WOMAN. Lizzie M. Holmes. Together with That Great Fraud, Telegt Society (Moses Hull), Virgin Soil (George Egerton), and Normal Sexual Action (Ernest Whitsel). 25c.

THE WORM TURNS. Revolutionary Poems. Voltairine de Cleyre. 10c.

THOMAS JEFFERSON. His Political, Social and Religious Philosophy. Gen. M. M. Trumbull. 5c.

TOKOLOGY. A book for every woman. By Alice B. Stockham, M. D. Illustrated. Tokology teaches possible painless pregnancy and parturition, giving full, plain directions for the care of a woman before and after confinement. The ailments of pregnancy can be prevented as well as the pains and dangers of childbirth avoided and women need not go down to death giving birth to children. English, German or Swedish. $2.25.

TRAVELS IN FAITH. By Capt. Robert C. Adams. His mental experience from superstition to rationalism. Cloth, 75c; paper, 25c.

VACCINATION A GIGANTIC CRIME. Samuel Darling. 15c.

VINDICATION OF THOMAS PAINE. Col. R. G. Ingersoll. Dealing with all the slanders brought against the name and fame of Paine. A little pamphlet which every admirer of Thomas Paine should have by him for reference. Paper, 10c.

VITAL FORCE. Magnetic Exchange and Magnetation. Albert Chavannes. 5c.

WHAT THE YOUNG NEED TO KNOW: a Primer of Sexual Rationalism. Edwin C. Walker. "Let us cease to be ashamed of what makes us man, of what makes us women, of what gives us the blisses of lovers and the solaces of circling arms of babes." Paper covers; 42 large pages. 10c.

WHAT IS RELIGION? Ingersoll's last public address, delivered at the meeting of the Free Religious Association in Boston on June 3, 1899. To which is appended the poem, "Declaration of the Free," the last verse written by the great Freethinker. 5c.

WHEN LOVE IS LIBERTY AND NATURE LAW. John Badcock, Jr. 10c.

WHY THE UNDERTONE? An open letter to Judge Gary. Sarah E. Amos. 10c.

WOMAN, CHURCH, AND STATE. Matilda Joslyn Gage. This is Mrs. Gage's last and crowning work. Every woman ought to read it. Every liberal woman and man will want it. A burning protest against the tremendous wrong done woman by the church, which controlled the state. It ought to be widely read for the good it will do. Cloth, $1.50; paper, 75c.

WOMAN IN THE PAST, PRESENT AND FUTURE. Woman was the first human being that tasted bondage. Woman was a slave before the slave existed. The basis of all oppression is economic dependence on the oppressor. This has been the condition of woman in the past and is so still. She is now a slave of the slave. This work is August Bebel's masterpiece. 8vo, 178 pages. 50c.

Address M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

Price 2 Cents.

LUCIFER.

THE LIGHT-BEARER.

THIRD SERIES, VOL. VI., No. 30. CHICAGO, ILLINOIS, AUG. 7, E. M. 302. [C. E. 1902.] WHOLE No. 929

THE WAY OF LOVE.

Love came seeking for its own,
While duty shouted, shame;
Love came seeking love, alone,
With lawless will to claim.

Love cast a look upon his prize,
While honor cried, not thine;
Love bode his hour, nor dropped his eyes
Nor showed one pitying sign.

Love sought for ways to gain his boon,
While virtue moaned, impure;
Love set his snares neath sun and moon
As a fowler lays his lure.

Love reached the chosen good to clasp,
While prudence called, beware;
Love scorned to doubt. 'Twas in his grasp,
And ah, the prize was fair!

Love held, and bore it where he would,
While every voice grew still.
Love said, I took because I could;
'Tis mine because I will.

WILLIAM FRANCIS BARNARD.

Parry and Thrust.

Never beg for what is your own.

Philanthropy moves slaves to tears.

Wrong laughs even while it trembles.

Is liberty dear because it is expensive?

Justice never pats anyone on the back.

Love conquers all things; yes, even lovers.

Don't wait to fight until you are beaten down.

The whitest of things may cast a shadow of black.

It takes a strong enthusiasm to laugh at experience.

The "full dinner pail" is the basis of hog trough sociology.

The best of reasons can be found for doing the worst of things.

"The way of the world" apparently leads straight on toward hell.

The mistakes of the brave are worth more than the successes of cowards.

A good test of manhood is, at what point will it begin to resist injustice?

A simple sum for the British government: one live Irishman is worth two dead Boers in a fight.

Gold is helping to settle the trouble in the Philippines. Opportunity it is that makes the traitor.

Anarchism does not ignore evolution, but it proves plainly that evolution cannot afford to neglect anarchism.

Aguinaldo is being laughed at, but the blood stains still show on the grand American flag whenever it is unfurled.

The president of the United States Steal Corporation, one Chas. Schwab has been sick; when will his dupes become sick?

The end of the persecutions at Home is equivalent to an acquittal for all the accused. Let us be glad that an occasional judge is false to his trust.

C. L. James calls the report of the head of the Board of Health of Cleveland an "irresponsible, vague, unauthenticated" statement. But then, for compensation he tells us that those who oppose vaccination are "cranks."

Those who think themselves the friends of liberty often prove to be her worst enemies, denying her right to appear in any other garb than the one which they choose for her, and seeking to chain her feet with their pet systems.

Prostitution is the deference which fiery, youthful passion pays to the marriage system. When we take cognizance of the enormous expense of thus keeping sexually "pure" we shall not wonder at the horror of misguided but well-meaning sex reformers.

John Jay Injunction Jackson, Judge, suppressor of free speech and friend of oppression in general, has met the enemy, Mother Jones, and she is not his. He will not allow miners to persuade their fellow workmen to join a union. Cannot his aged ears hear the future laughing at him?

The striking glove makers of Kewanee are finding friends. The young women who are resisting oppression thus will forget their noble rage it is to be feared on the day when they are led to the marriage mart to be sacrificed. But let us be thankful even for little things.

There is cholera in the Philippines, which is bad enough; there is also the army of the United States, which is worse. In one province it is authoritatively stated that out of a population of 300,000 100,000 have given up their lives to the American pest. Shades of the Declaration of Independence!

A recipe for civilizing the heathen, if there are any left: first distribute rum, bibles, and gin in proportions of about two parts of material spirits to one part of spiritual spirits; then wait. After, if the subjects are still ignorant of the value of what they are missing, administer machine guns and gold in proportions of about twenty machine guns to one dollar in gold. A tried recipe.

The United Mine Workers of America are rallying to the support of their brethren in the anthracite regions, who are asking for millions to aid them in their struggle against a wage of $300 a year. If they only knew, these friends, these brethren, that, with monopoly enshrined in the law of the land, all the relief which they can gain or give will last but a few days at most, monopoly would strangle in their giant grasp, but they are not economists.

Free speech has become a habit, almost, and thanks to that fact alone we are not likely ever to see its suppression. What a man or a people has not had or has had but partially, may indeed be openly or surreptitiously taken away, and without any great cost to the daring; but free speech has been a treasure these many, many years, and those who would close our mouths now and teach us acquiescence with power right or wrong, do not know us. Talk we will, wisely or unwisely, even until liberty calls to us near at hand and with joyous voice.

From all accounts there has been in Paterson, New Jersey a new demonstration of the futility of the Constitution, an attack having been made upon the right of public meeting, the strikers being dispersed with violence and several of them arrested and imprisoned. When did the law ever gain in respect through being infracted to suit the malice of those endowed with authority? Verily, those in power, who so ruthlessly break their own laws will learn sooner or later that the men who look on while the deed is done are not all fools. IRONICUS.

Ruminations.

To the eternal disgrace of the jury system of the United States, Lois Waisbrooker, the veteran toiler in behalf of humanity, has been found guilty of crime, for having declared that "there is no sin in a mutual loving sex relation." Twelve "good men and true" have declared by their shameful verdict that legalized prostitution is better than the purest love unsanctioned by the empty conventionalties of church and state; and that the monstrous "double standard," which exonerates man and damns woman for their joint act, is worthy of the highest approval. This Washington jury has placed itself on record as hostile to free speech, and therefore to all human progress. It has pronounced it a criminal offence to criticise the marriage system, as if that institution were so utterly decrepit and worthless that it could reply to its critics only with the vile argument of persecution, the last resort of all dastards who recognize themselves as hopelessly in the wrong. This jury holds that all men are bound to think exactly alike; that the minority has no rights which the majority is bound to respect; that the sex question must not be discussed at all, except from a conservative standpoint; that an honest expression of opinion is criminal; that our granddaddies knew the whole truth, and nothing remains to be learned; that the highest object of life is to walk blindfold in the old ruts of past ages; that evolution is a mistake, and progress the worst of evils; that the Holy Inquisition ought to be revived, and the thought-crushing methods of the Middle Ages put into full operation. No more disgraceful verdict has ever been rendered by any jury. Never were freedom of opinion and freedom of expression more openly and arrogantly assailed. Lois Waisbrooker has been branded for an article for which she deserved to be crowned. The dishonor falls back, not on her, but on the knavish Wayland, the pettifogging Cushman, and the docile and shallow jury.

With Judge De Haven, no possible fault can be found. He presided over the entire trial with exemplary fairness and impartiality, giving both sides their full due in the matter of legal rulings. His instructions were distinctly in favor of the defence, and if properly heeded, would have enforced an acquittal.

The trial began at 10 A. M. of July 15, the morning being devoted to the empanelling of a jury. The Waisbrooker and Penhallow cases were tried together by agreement. In the afternoon, the court room was well filled, quite a number of the Home colonists being present. The opening arguments were made by Mr. Cushman for the prosecution, and Mr. Swett for the defence. The indicted article, "The Awful Fate of Fallen Women," was read, and presented in evidence. No further evidence was offered by either side in the Waisbrooker case, the facts being admitted, and the whole case hinging on the character of the article.

C. S. Wayland, postoffice inspector, was the principal witness against Mrs. Penhallow, whom he hated on account of her refusal to do his dirty work for him. In order to justify his decoy letters to Mrs. Penhallow, he pretended that he had not received the paper sent by Lois Waisbrooker until December 7, although the very indictment drawn from his testimony before the grand jury specified his receipt of it on December 4—prior to the date of the decoy letter to Mrs. Penhallow. Lying comes easy to creatures of this sort. He further declared that Mrs. Penhallow told him that she had read the article in question, before mailing the paper. His stool-pigeon, the Ballard postmaster, testified to having written the decoy letters and received the paper sent by Mrs. Penhallow. When questioned as to the honesty and morality of the nefarious transaction, he replied that he "had to obey his superior"—the old method by which a coward ever seeks to shirk responsibility for a shameful act.

The defence then placed Mrs. Penhallow on the stand. Her quiet, refined, straightforward manner produced a most favorable impression. Wayland tried to preserve his old bull-dozing attitude, but presented the appearance of a whipped cur, as her simple and truthful story exposed his villainy, and carried conviction even to the minds of the most prejudiced members of the jury. She explained how the decoy letters led her to mail the paper, which she had not read at the time. Her testimony was corroborated by Mrs. Waisbrooker and Mr. Penhallow.

The closing arguments by Mr. Murphy and Mr. Swett were forcible and unanswerable. In fact, their entire management of the case left nothing to be desired. They were ready on every point, and never left a single loophole unguarded. Cushman made a very feeble attempt to parry a few of their thrusts, and then abandon himself to a fierce harangue against free love, wandering so far from the point as to incur rebuke from the judge. His whole effort was to pander to the prejudices of the jury, presuming on the ignorance of its members. In pursuit of this end, he did not scruple to stoop to the vilest calumny and the most blackguardly language. Fortunately for him, he had the last word, and thus escaped the exposure which was his due.

The charge of the judge was as favorable to the defence as the Comstock law would well admit. He reminded the jury that the benefit of every doubt must be given to the defendants. The jury, on retiring, immediately voted to acquit Mrs. Penhallow, thereby placing the well deserved stigma of perjury on Wayland. After nearly five hours' deliberation, a verdict was found against Lois Waisbrooker.

On the following morning, the judge overruled a motion for arrest of judgment, on the ground that the question of fact belonged to the jury. He stated, however, that he did not consider the article obscene, and would have preferred a different verdict. Being forced to impose a penalty, he made it the smallest allowed by the law, namely, a fine of a hundred dollars. Fifty dollars of this was paid out of money which Mrs. Waisbrooker had been saving for months for a much needed vacation. The rest was advanced to her on the spot, that the matter might be settled then and there. It remains to be seen whether the Liberals of the country, mindful of the long service of Lois Waisbrooker in the ranks of progress, will suffer this burden to rest on her shoulders. Doubtless very many will be glad to have a hand in relieving her of its weight. What are we, if we do not stand by our own?

Home, Wash. JAMES F. MORTON, JR.

Laws the Cause of Slavery.

The slavery of our times results from three sets of laws—those about land, taxes and property. And, therefore, all the attempts of those who wish to improve the position of the workers are inevitably, though unconsciously, directed against those three legislations.

One set of people repeal taxes weighing on the working classes and transfer them on to the rich; others propose to abolish the right of private property in land, and attempts are being made to put this in practice both in New Zealand and in one of the American States (the limitation of the landlord's rights in Ireland is a move in the same direction); a third set—the Socialists—propose to communalise the means of production, the tax incomes and inheritances, and to limit the rights of capitalist-employers. It would, therefore, seem as though the legislative enactments which cause slavery were being repealed, and that we may, therefore, expect slavery to be abolished in this way. But we need only look more closely at the conditions under which the abolition of those legislative enactments is accomplished or proposed to be convinced that not only the practical, but even the theoretical projects for the improvement of the workers' position are merely the substitution of one legislation producing slavery for another establishing a newer form of slavery. Thus, for instance, those who abolish taxes and duties on the poor, first abolishing direct dues and then transfering the burden of taxation from the poor to the rich, necessarily have to retain, and do retain, the laws making private property of landed property, means of production, and other articles, on to which the whole burden of the taxes is shifted. The retention of the laws concerning land and property keeps the workers in slavery to the landowners and the capitalists, even though the workers are freed from taxes. Those who, like Henry George and his partisans, would abolish the laws making private property of land, propose new laws imposing an obligatory rent on the land. And this obligatory land rent will necessarily create a new form of slavery, because a man compelled to pay rent, or the single tax, may at any failure of the crops or other misfortune have to borrow money from a man who has some to lend, and he will again lapse into slavery. Those who, like the Socialists, in theory, wish to abolish the legislation of property in land and in means of production, retain the legislation of taxes, and must, moreover, inevitably introduce laws of compulsory labor—that is, they must re-establish slavery in its primitive form.

So that, this way or that way, all that practical and theoretical repeals of certain laws maintaining slavery in one form have always and do always replace it by new legislation creating slavery in another and fresh form.

What happens is something like what a jailer might do who shifted a prisoner's chains from the neck to the arms, and from the arms to the legs, or took them off and substituted bolts and bars. All the improvements that have hitherto taken place in the position of the workers have been of this kind.

The laws giving a master the right to compel his slaves to do compulsory work were replaced by laws allowing the masters to own all the land. The laws allowing all the land to become the private property of the masters may be replaced by taxation laws, the control of the taxes being in the hands of the masters. The taxation laws are replaced by others defending the right of private property in articles of use and in the means of production. The laws of right of property in land and in articles of use and means of production it is proposed to replace by the enactment of compulsory labor.

So it is evident that the abolition of one form of legalisation producing the slavery of our time, whether taxes, or landowning, or property in articles of use or in the means of production, will not destroy slavery, but will only repeal one of its forms, which will immediately be replaced by a new one, as was the case with the abolition of chattel slavery of serfdom, and with the repeal of taxes. Even the repeal of all three groups of laws together will not abolish slavery, but evoke a new and as yet unknown form of it, which is now already beginning to show itself and to restrain the freedom of labor by legislation concerning the hours of work, the age and state of health of the workers, as well as by demanding obligatory attendance at schools, deductions for old age insurance or accidents, by all the measures of factory inspection, the restrictions on co-operative societies, etcetera.

All this is nothing but the transference of legalisation—preparing a new and as yet untried form of slavery.

So that it becomes evident that the essence of slavery lies not in those three roots of legislation on which it now rests, and not even in such or such other legislative enactments but in the fact that legislation exists; that there are people who have power to decree laws profitable for themselves, and that as long as people have that power there will be slavery.

Formerly it was profitable for people to have chattel slaves, and they made laws about chattel slavery. Afterwards it became profitable to own land, to take taxes, and to keep things one had acquired, and they made laws correspondingly. Now it is profitable for people to maintain the existing direction and division of labor; and they are devising such laws as will compel people to work under the present apportionment and division of labor. Thus the fundamental cause of slavery is legislation, the fact that there are people who have the power to make laws.

What is legislation? and what gives the people the power to make laws?—"The Slavery of Our Times," by Leo Tolstoy.

Lillian Levison.

Ever since McKinley was shot the Tacoma daily Republican papers have acted toward us as if we were somehow responsible for the deed. Since then, at intervals our little settlement has been a target for such wholesale lying as unprincipled politicians can so readily furnish. Now, after a season of comparative rest, here comes another broadside. The ridiculous story of an insane woman is sent out as truth. The story purports to be that of Lillian Levison who "escaped from the Anarchists at Home."

Had there been one particle of honor in those editors they could easily have ascertained the utter falsity of the story. As it is, we cannot know how much of it is Lillian's and how much of it those Republican editors have added to what she said, but she evidently gave them the framework. Lillian came here the first day of last December with her husband and her son, a boy some ten or twelve years of age—came of her own free will; we never encourage, much less "urge" any one to come. When people write and ask, we give them the facts and then leave them to decide for themselves what to do. Lillian had not been here long before we decided she was either insane or a morphine eater she acted so strangely. Finally she ran away from her husband at which he seemed much distressed, said that she was not wholly in her right mind and was growing worse.

He seemed a quiet, inoffensive man and much attached to her. Her trunk went on the boat from here, but she said she must see a man in Lakebay; one of the colonists, Mr. King, sent his son with her and the boy over there in his row boat. They remained a few days, she having their meals brought to their room, then walked nearly four miles to Longbranch and took the boat from there to Tacoma, instead of being "in an open boat all night to escape the Anarchists."

If editors enjoy publishing the tales of the insane we can stand it. Our stay is the conscious rectitude of our lives. But this woman has method in her madness, and while others call her insane I feel inclined to class her with those in Bible times who were called possessed of an evil spirit, and whom Spiritualists call obsessed. She is a good letter writer, has a wide correspondence among liberal thinkers, and it is for their sakes that I publish this. We know she wrote to one prominent liberal saying that the men here drink and are cruel to their wives. Nothing could be more false. There is no liquor kept here and but few of the men use tobacco.

I am told that the woman has passed through much suffering and I pity her, but feel that justice demands this statement. Indeed, the conditions of society are so unsuited to the finely organized and highly sensitive, it is a wonder that more of us are not insane. LOIS WAISBROOKER.

Home, Washington.

EDITOR LUCIFER: Will you kindly announce in Lucifer that a few of the students and disciples of the great Russian writer, Leo Tolstoy, are anxious to increase their number and meet regularly at some central place for the purpose of reading and discussing the works of the great thinker. Comrades so inclined will please address

R. GOODHEART, 919 N. Talman Ave. Chicago.

Lucifer, the Lightbearer

M. HARMAN, EDITOR AND PUBLISHER.

PUBLISHED EVERY WEEK AT 500 FULTON STREET, CHICAGO, ILL.

Terms: One year, $1; six months, 50 cents; three months, 25 cents.

Entered at the Chicago Postoffice as Second-Class Mail Matter.

Eastern Representative, E. C. Walker, 344 W. 143d street, New York.

Lucifer—Its Meaning and Purpose.

LUCIFER—The planet Venus; so called from its brightness.—Webster's Dictionary.

LUCIFEROUS—Giving Light; affording light or the means of discovery.—Same.

LUCIFIC—Producing Light.—Same.

LUCIFORM—Having the form of Light.—Same.

The name Lucifer means Light-Bringing or Light-Bearing, and the paper that has adopted this name stands for Light against Darkness—for Reason against Superstition—for Science against Tradition—for Investigation and Enlightenment against Credulity and Ignorance—for Liberty against Slavery—for Justice against Privilege.

Notes and Comments.

THE WAISBROOKER AND PENHALLOW CASE.

I have seen the report of Oliver A. Verity concerning the "Receipts and Expenditures" in the case of the postal censors against Lois Waisbrooker and Mattie D. Penhallow, in the Federal Court in Washington—not Washington, D. C., but plain Washington, meaning one of the political divisons called American States, or United States of America. This report includes a statement of the "findings" of the court—the first intimation I had seen that the said cases had been brought to trial. As our readers are supposed to have read the report of Mr. Verity I do not need to repeat it here, but will venture a few observations or reflections in regard thereto.

First and most important is the sentence of the judge—a fine of one hundred dollars, as the punishment of Lois Waisbrooker for the alleged crime of republishing in her paper, "Clothed With the Sun," a small part of a pamphlet written by Annie Besant, the well known English writer and lecturer, now holding the position once held by Madame Blavatsky, as head of the organization, cult, or "science" known in two hemispheres as Theosophy.

This small part of a philosophic and practical treatise on the "population" question was found to be "obscene" by the jury impanelled to try the case and decide on its merits, and obscenity as defined by the United States postal laws is a crime punishable by fine or imprisonment, or both. The judge himself did not believe that the indicted matter came under the inhibition of the law, but ruled that the opinion of the jury and not his own, must determine as to the facts.

Just here it would seem a pertinent inquiry, to ask, what are facts, and what kind of facts are they that can truly be called crimes?

A fact, according to the etymology of the word, is something done—from the Latin facere "to do." A crime, by common consent, is an injury done to one or more persons other than the person who commits the crime—an injury that can be seen and known to be such; an injury done with malice, or with evil intent.

In regard to the fact of publication there was no dispute or disagreement between the prosecution and the defense; the only point then to be proved appears to have been whether by the publication of the indicted article any person or persons had been injured in mind, body or property—that is, in personal belongings.

Having been present in the United States Courts when several similar cases were being tried I know the usual method of procedure, and know that no attempt is made to prove that any person or persons have been injured in mind, body or in personal belongings. Nor is any attempt usually made to prove that the alleged violation of law was committed with malice aforethought, or with the design of injuring any person or persons.

How then can the fact of publication be shown to come under the head of crime?

Simply and solely, as it would seem, by the EFFECT produced upon the minds of the jurymen, or of the judge before whom or by whom the case is to be tried.

If the minds of these men are obscene and vile they will naturally find obscenity or vileness in language that to the pure in mind would be pure and innocent, on the principle that "as a man thinketh so is he," and "to the pure all things are pure."

It is customary now-a days for judges to "instruct" the jury to find the prisoner guilty or innocent according to the impressions made upon the mind of the judge himself. Why then did not Judge Hanford say to the jury,

"There is nothing in this case. If you see obscenity in this publication you simply condemn yourselves as having foul minds. The reading of the indicted article produces no lascivious or impure thoughts in my mind. The aim of the writer is evidently to make mankind better and not worse, therefore I instruct the jury to find for the defendant."

Or, if the judge did not choose to instruct the jury in this manner he could have set aside the verdict as irrational and absurd, since no person but the jury themselves would probably say that their minds were injured or corrupted by the reading of the indicted article.

Again: On the supposition that the judge had believed the publication of the article to have been prompted by evil intent, he could still have said, "Until it is proved to the satisfaction of the jury that the minds of some person has been defiled or corrupted by the reading of this indicted article it will still be their duty to find for the defendant, on the ground that, whatever the intent, no accusation of crime can hold until the fact of injury be shown, or at least until it is shown that the natural and usual effect of such acts is to cause injury to some one."

* * *

LAWYERS' FEES.

Reading again the report of Mr. Verity I note, under the head of Expenditures, "Attorney fees $191.75"; all other items of cash expense, $20 30. That is to say, the expense of hiring lawyers to do a few hours work was nearly ten times as great as the whole amount paid for circulars, stationery, postage, printing and for care fare and board for the accused while attending court. All other persons interested in the case gave their time, their labor and personal expenses without pay, and then had to borrow fifty dollars to pay the fine, so that all could "return home."

To how many of these interested and voluntary workers has the thought occurred that it would have been better to save that $191.75 to pay the fine imposed by the court?

I blame no one! Until taught by my own experience with lawyers I, too, thought it best to accept money from a great many interested helpers to hire attorneys. Now I have deliberately come to the conclusion that money paid to lawyers in cases such as that of Lois Waisbrooker and Mattie Penhallow is money WASTED, and worse than wasted.

What have lawyers ever done to secure the repeal of the postal censorship laws—a very few noble names excepted? Why should they?

Lawyers make the laws, and when once enacted it is the interest of the lawyer class to prevent repeal, not to secure repeal of laws.

What would the lawyer's occupation be worth without laws? And the more intricate, more unreasonable, more invasive and more numerous the laws the better for the lawyers, because giving them larger opportunities to fight over questions of legality and of technicality.

For one I cast my vote, here and now, against paying any more money to lawyers to defend against the censors of press and mails. Instead of feeing lawyers, let a vigorous campaign, a resolute, an uncompromising campaign of education and agitation for freedom of speech and press be henceforth sustained, through such methods and agencies as those of the American Press Writers' Association; if then, after fair trial, results do not show improvement over the old method of subsidizing a class of men whose interests are on the side of the censors, then mark me down as a false prophet.

COURTS-MARTIAL

The report of the findings of the court-martial in the case of Gen. Jacob H. Smith, tried for the murder of innocent persons under his famous order to "kill and burn—the more you kill and burn the better you will please me"—the report of which trial and the subsequent failure of punishment of the accused, is one more only of the multitudinous instances that may be cited to show that law is not intended to enforce even-handed justice but rather to defeat justice by screening the big criminals while making a show of its usefulness and necessity by excessive punishment of small offenders—the rank and file of the army.

For instance, take the so-called crime of "desertion." When an officer gets tired of military service, and decides that civil life with his family suits him better, he simply sends in his resignation, and leaves the army without disgrace or punishment of any kind. But when the poor private—he who takes the place of danger in time of battle, and performs all the hardest tasks of army life, and all for a mere fraction of the pay received by the lordly officer—when the hard-worked and ill-paid private gets tired of the army, gets tired of being a butcher of his fellowmen at the command of others, and decides to go home to his family and friends, his request for discharge before his time of enlistment expires is regarded as a freak of insanity—unless in case of wounds or prolonged illness—and if he goes home without leave granted from his officers he is arrested as a criminal, and tried for desertion, the penalty for which crime is death, or long imprisonment at hard labor.

Such are a few only of the beauties and perfections of law, as made and administered by men who maintain that without government of man-by-man the race would speedily return to savagery.

M. HARMAN.

NOTE: Our friends are requested to address letters to No. 4, Dewey Ave. Benton Harbor, Michigan, instead of No. 6, as previously instructed.

M. H.

Illegitimacy and Child-Murder—Who Is to Blame?

[The following very suggestive paragraphs are taken from a series of articles entitled "Perfect Human-hood," signed Lex et Lux, in "The Century," Adelaide, South Australia, which journal though small in size is one of our most valued exchanges. It is published fortnightly, at the price of three shillings per annum, or about 75 cents of our money. Presumably $1 would be the price, post paid, to foreign subscribers. Readers of Lucifer would find in the "Century" much that is helpful in opening up the way for the practicalization of the newer and better ideals of life upon earth. M. H.]

The full depth and extent of the unappreciated life-current which constantly, through secret channels, augments the numbers of the human race on earth, can never be fully known. The number of illegitimate children registered annually, great though it be, can never be more than an index to the vast submerged mass of misery and crime that seldom rises to the light of day or attracts public attention. Statistics afford us no means of judging of the number of wilful abortions, the still-births, the concealed births, and the successfully-hidden child murders. In the case of children who are put out to nurse, much of the killing is done in the most open and deliberate fashion, under the eyes of neighbors and the public, and even of officials, who are often powerless to interfere. As some one connected with one of our hospitals once observed to me,

"It is piteous to see the poor little emaciated infants that are brought here suffering from diarrhœa and wasting. Their condition arises from sheer and wilful neglect. Their feeding-bottles stink! Their bodies are covered with dirt and evidences of vermin. You point out these things to the women, the old hags who bring them, and you send them away with a little mild corrective medicine for the child. But you know perfectly well, from the look of the people, that nothing you can say or do will be of any use, that the attendance at the hospital is only a blind, and that the death of the wretched infant has been determined on."

Though these things take place in our midst, I feel compelled to add that South Australia has the most efficient laws and regulations, well administered, for the care and protection of those little illegitimates who come under her State control. But the law cannot possibly be omniscient as well as ubiquitous. What we need is a higher public and social sentiment with regard to all infant life. Is there anything so precious as human life?

Is there anything upon which we set so little store? We gaze at Life through the lenses of Property, which is much the same as judging a child by its clothes.

WHAT THE KING OF DENMARK DID.

What a moveable and, if need be, easily lifted superstition attaches itself to the circumstance of a child being born out of wedlock, may be seen from the fact that when special conditions arise to make all infant life prospectively of service to the community, the bar is readily lifted. When Iceland was largely depopulated by an epidemic, in 1707, the King of Denmark, by a very simple device, soon caused the population to assume its normal proportions. He caused a law to be made authorising young unmarried women to have children without loss of reputation. The number for each limited to six. Thus, by the removal of a purely artificial barrier to fecundity, the loss of the Icelanders was in a few years made good.

In Lancashire and other manufacturing districts, where child labor is in request and children are early called upon to help gain the family income, the thrifty operative often prefers to marry a woman who has already a "natural" family; and it is also quite the custom in these parts for a man to delay his marriage with the woman of his choice until the absolute certainty of her motherhood is proved by her bearing him one child at least.

It may be said that this line of argument is altogether too wide. What would these considerations, if indulged in, bring us to? We should be mating with no more forethought than the animals!

To which I reply, it is above all things desirable that we should be healthy animals. The natural man first, then the spiritual. But even the lower animals evince a great deal of forethought and love for their offspring; and man, who is the highest and most developed of all animals, should bring to love and mating the very best of himself, the very cream of all that he has grown up to be. I am only endeavoring to show that man is more than institutions, and that where arbitrary and man-made distinctions operate against natural laws, and to the extreme disadvantage of large numbers of the community, it becomes us to review our position, and see whether or not it be consistent with reason, common-sense, and humanity.

Society gains nothing by making a pariah of the prostitute; and adds, if possible, ten-fold more to its own existing confusion and wrong by attempting to brand as outcasts those children who have not been born under the flag of matrimony.

OBSCENITY OF THE POPULAR STANDARDS OF VIRTUE.

Let me remark, at this point, that the constant tendency of good people to gather themselves together, and to abstain from mingling more than unavoidable with the unregenerate, except with the avowed object of reforming them, is a great mistake. If good people are the "salt" of the earth, what is the use of the salt particles all collecting themselves into self-glorified little heaps, and refusing to qualify and to flavor the rest? If you have any good in you, it is not for yourself alone, it is for every one. Virtue ceases to be virtue if it separates you from your fellow man. There are no "good" or "bad," but there may be those who are further on than others. We are all on an infinite march, and our duty is to help the laggards, and not to push them off the road, to which they have every whit as good a right as have the foremost leaders of the grand procession of Humanity. I confess I cannot understand why certain acts of conduct should have been so especially singled out for condemnation and styled "immoral," when other acts, which often invade people's liberties much more—acts of real cruelty and barbarity, are never called immoral. A man, for instance, may be a church member, and stand high in social position, and yet for long years render the lives of all his household miserable by the unrestrained exhibition of tyranny and temper. Such faults are condoned; but if he (or, far more, his wife or daughter!) step off the line in another direction, society immediately does its utmost to prove that the "sin forgiven by Christ in heaven, by man is cursed alway."

For myself, I think with Whitman that: "Showing the best, and dividing it from the worst, age vexes age. Knowing the perfect fitness and equanimity of things, while they discuss I am silent, and go and admire myself!"

Yes, far better to "admire" ourselves, to have our eyes fixed upon the ever growing grain of the divine in man, to exclaim with wonder at the great, the almost infinite distance we have come, than to be petulantly and constantly complaining that the world has not travelled faster. The main thing is, not to lose sight of each other on the way! Lex et Lux.

A Correction.

DEAR LILLIAN: Lucifer makes me say: "If it shall happen that Society condemns anything which my conscience doesn't approve, I shall not be scared from my position by being told that Society is NOT on my side." It should read "that Society is on my side." Every radical claims to be brave enough to stand against society; what I was claiming was to stand with it when it went my way. Please make correction in Lucifer.

VOLTAIRINE DE CLEYRE.

The Small Boy and Grandmamma.

A neighboring grandmamma came in for comfort. Her early training had made the doctrine of predestination part of the fiber of her nature. Robbie, aged nine, is the only grandchild and frequently drinks root beer, to say nothing of the foamy beverage which his literary uncle keeps in the ice box and shares with Rob in the cool of the evening after supper. Grandmamma has piloted motherless Robbie twice through his Bible and has told him of the awful inheritance bequeathed by disobedient Madam Eve. In spite of it all Rob gets a quantity of fun out of his daily life, though he knows the inquisition awaits him at bedtime when he confesses naughtiness and says his prayers at grandma's knee. He went on a two days' fishing tour with his literary uncle. During his absence grandma resolved that on his return the sips of root beer should be tabooed. Rob and his uncle returned in high spirits and the good lady rejoiced with them. After supper the small boy was put through the usual catechism and then came the shock which shattered the hopes of the poor old lady and sent her to the only woman within reach for comfort. The lad had said his two regular prayers and then, clasping his hands and closing his eyes, he recited reverently:

"Oh, thou, who didst with pitfall and with gin
Beset the road I was to wander in,
Thou wilt not with predestined evil round
Enmesh, and then impute my fall to sin!

"Oh, Thou, who man of baser earth didst make,
And ev'n with Paradise devise the snake:
For all the sin wherewith the face of man
Is blacken'd—Man's forgiveness give—and take!

"Bless grandmamma and Uncle Fred and help them to see the true light within the tavern. Amen."—Chicago Post.

The Mother's Opportunity.

The greatest opportunity to benefit the world and bless humanity lies with the mothers of growing children.

There need be no Florence Burns and Dimple Lawrence tragedies—no young men "toughs" and "rakes" to endanger the peace of our suburban towns and villages—if parents, mothers especially, became the confidantes and instructors of their children upon life's important truths at an early age.

A score of times this subject has been treated in this column, but each new tragedy makes it seem necessary to repeat what has been said before.

With each repetition it is possible that some unthinking mother will begin to think.

A mother said to me recently: "I have talked freely with my girl, but I cannot induce my husband to talk to our son, fourteen years old, of things he ought to know."

"Talk to him yourself," I urged. But the mother hesitated—it hardly seemed "proper," she thought.

Yet it had seemed "proper" for her to become a mother.

I confess I do not understand this phase of "modesty."

The finest youths I ever saw—strong, virile, manly, clear-eyed and clean-minded young fellows—had been taken into their mother's confidence at the age of ten, and talked to earnestly regarding life's great fundamental truths.

Human life was compared to that of the plant, which grows first as a seed, hidden from sight, until Mother Earth gives birth to the tiny shoot which becomes a plant or a tree in good time.

The boys were made to realize how sacred a matter motherhood was and how unmanly and vulgar and low-bred the boy was who ever indulged in any coarse talk or light jests on such a subject.

They were told to avoid all such companions and to come always fearlessly to their mother to ask any question which puzzled their young minds, and assured that as their minds developed she would tell them what was necessary for them to know.

I have never known but two such mothers, and the children of both grew into splendid maturity—ideal sons and daughters.

In a Jersey town several young boys in a public school, children of respectable and prominent people, banded themselves into a "Tough Club." The boys were all under thirteen years of age, and their ideas of manliness were evidently patterned after the Paterson sports who figured in the courts and the press a year or two ago. These lads indulged in vulgar and immoral language and behavior in the presence of the little girls in the school. The girls complained to their parents, and the parents sought out the parents of the offending boys, only to be insulted by them! And the superintendent of the school, who undertook to punish the boys for their conduct, is likely to lose his position through the violent uprising of these stupid and short-sighted fathers and mothers, whose own negligence of a parent's most important duty lies at the root of the evil.

The colossal egotism of parents who imagine their children need no guidance along this dangerous pathway beggars description.

"My children are so innocent—they never think about such things," I have heard blind mothers declare, when I knew the exact opposite regarding their offspring.

The child whose unfolding mind does not reach out and question "why," "whence," "how," is not fully equipped mentally.

See to it that you answer these questions wisely, delicately, kindly, before the little plastic mind is marred and soiled by others less worthy to impart the information.

You have no right to be fathers and mothers unless you are ready and willing to protect your children from the worst evil that can befall them—a sullied mind and low thoughts on the most sacred and holy of subjects.—Ella Wheeler Wilcox, in "Chicago American."

TOLSTOI'S NEW WORK.

The Slavery of Our Times.

With Portrait of the Gifted Author, and Introduction by the Translator, Aylmer Maude.

CHAPTER TITLES.

I., Goods Porters Who Work Thirty-seven Hours; II., Society's Indifference While Men Perish; III., Justification of the Existing Position of Sciences; IV., The Assertion of Economic Science that Rural Laborers Must Enter the Factory System; V., Why Learned Economists Assert what is False; VI., Bankruptcy of th Socialist Ideal; VII., Culture or Freedom? VIII., Slavery Exists Among Us: IX., What is Slavery? X., Laws Concerning Taxes, Land and Property; XI., Laws the Cause of Slavery; XII., The Essence of Legislation Is Organized Violence; XIII., What Are Governments? Is It Possible to Exist Without Governments? XIV., How Can Governments Be Abolished? XV., What Should Each Man Do? An Afterword.

Well printed on heavy paper. Substantially bound. 186 pages. Price, $1.50.

Address M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

CAPTAIN JINKS, HERO

BY ERNEST CROSBY.

It is a merciless satire on war and militarism in which the parallel between savagery and soldiery is unerringly drawn. It is a biting burlesque on the various forms of cheap hero-worship. It holds up to withering scorn every important feature of militarism.

Among the accompaniments and results of war exploited and satirized, are hazing at "West Point," the war whoops of the yellow journals, the savagery of war, the Schley-Sampson controversy, civilizing the heathen savage, looting in China, pension abuses, the capture of Aguinaldo, the Peace Conference, army mismanagement, osculatory attacks by goosey girls, etc.

With 35 Irresistible Drawings by Dan Beard. 12mo, Cloth. Handsome Covers. 400 pages. Price $1.50

Address M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

VICE: ITS FRIENDS AND ITS FOES

BY EDWIN C. WALKER.

CONTENTS:—Brotherhood of Man; The Recognition of Facts; Folly of "For Men Only." Definition of Vice; Horrors of Prostitution; Abnormal Sexuality; Errors of Fathers, Mothers and Teachers; Persecution Does Not Reform; Prostitution and the Crusaders; The "Spoiling of the Heathen;" What are the Effects of Raids and Crusades? The Economic Side of the Problem. Party Politics in Vice Crusading; In What Does Prostitution Consist? Some Causes of Prostitution; Two Kinds of Prostitution Compared; The Opponents of Divorce; "Purifying" the Tenements; Action for Advanced Women.

WITH APPENDIX:—The Wanderings of a Spirit; Our Fair Civilization. The Folly and Cruelty of It All. Price 15c.

Address M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

DO YOU EVER THINK

Of the fate of the Prodigal Daughter? The Prodigal Son is forgiven and received with rejoicing—why should different treatment be accorded to his sister? For a vivid, true picture of the conditions in homes and factories which produce thousands of so-called fallen women every year, read "The Prodigal Daughter; or, The Price of Virtue," by Rachel Campbell.

SPECIAL OFFER.

This valuable work sent free on receipt of twenty-five cents for a thirteen week's trial subscription to Lucifer the Light Bearer. M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton Street, Chicago, Ill.

Notice! I would be glad to hear from Liberals who would like to correspond with other Liberals. Address (with stamp) ELMINA DRAKE SLENKER. Snowville, Va.

Agents Wanted To sell the Toltec Dandruff Cure and the Toltec Hair Dressing (restores natural color). Are clean and perfect. Liberal commission. Write for circulars. Address: The Toltec Remedies Co., Box 1307 Denver Colo.

Personal; A social radical and good business man with property, desires correspondence with radical women 25 to 48 years old. Object marriage with special private stipulation. Address X. ELMINA DRAKE SLENKER, Snowville, Va.

Wanted: Correspondence from Lucifer readers who desire to locate in Iowa or Dakota near other radical families. Also from any who wish to break away from marriage slavery and want a temporary home and help to help themselves. Address K., care of M. Harman's 500 Fulton Street Chicago.

929.

If these figures correspond with the number printed on the wrapper of your Lucifer, your subscription expires with this number.

If a copy of Lucifer fails to reach you, please order by number or date.

Lucifer will not be sent "by return mail" unless stamps for postage are enclosed with order.

TO NEW SUBSCRIBERS: Your subscription is paid to No. If you have not ordered Lucifer, a friend has subscribed for you. If you do not wish to receive it, please notify us by card or through your postmaster. If you wish to become a regular subscriber you will confer a favor by renewing before the expiration of your trial subscription.

LOVE'S COMING OF AGE.

BY EDWARD CARPENTER.

This is a book with which few will wholly agree, but which nearly every one can read with profit and enjoyment. The subject is the relation of the sexes in the past, present and future, and it is treated with absolute frankness and fearlessness by a writer who unites a broad outlook, a strong grasp of his subject and a charming literary style. The following table of contents will indicate the line of thought followed by the author.

The Sex Passion.
Man, the Ungrown.
Woman, the Serf.
Woman in Freedom.
Marriage: a Retrospect.
Marriage: a Forecast.
The Free Society.
Some remarks on the early star and sex worships.
Notes—On the Primitive Group Marriage; Jealousy; The Family; Preventive Checks to Population.

The book is printed on extra book paper and handsomely bound in cloth. Price, $1.

Address M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

WHITMAN'S IDEAL DEMOCRACY, AND OTHER WRITINGS.

BY HELENA BORN.

Comprising besides the title essay, Thoreau's Joy in Nature; Poets of Revolt: Shelley, Whitman, Carpenter; Whitman's Altruism; Individualism versus Organization: Ingenuities of Economic Argument; The Last Stand Against Democracy in Sex; Inequality in Divorce; Marriage Safeguards. With portrait of author and biographical introduction by Helen Tufts. 125 pages. Edition limited to 500 copies; each copy numbered. Fine paper, uncut pages, bound in boards, paper label. Price $1.

Personal: A liberal man, living in Southeast Ohio, would like to become acquainted with ladies of congenial ideas in that section. Further information given to those interested on receipt of letter. Address W., 500 Fulton St., Chicago.

"Pages of Socialist History," By W. Tcherkesoff. This book is recommended to Socialists of all schools, as it deals with the history of the "International" and the attitude of Marx and Engels towards Bakounin. Will be ready soon. Paper covers, 25 cents. By mail, 30 cents. Send in advance orders.

Address M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

RADICAL LITERATURE.

For Sale by M. Harman, 500 Fulton St., Chicago.

A CHAMBERMAID'S DIARY. By Octave Mirbeau. Translated from the French by Benj. R. Tucker. 400 pages. Handsomely bound in cloth. $1.50.

ADVANCEMENT OF SCIENCE. Prof. John Tyndall's famous Inaugural Address before the British Association for the Advancement of Science, with the articles on Prayer which so stirred the religious world. Cloth, 50c; paper, 25c.

AGE OF REASON. Thomas Paine. Cloth, with steel plate portrait, 75c; paper 15c.

ANARCHISM: Its Philosophy and Ideal. Peter Kropotkin. 5c.

A PHYSICIAN IN THE HOUSE. A New Family Medical Work, by Dr. J. H. Greer. This book is up-to-date in every particular. It will save you hundreds of dollars in doctors' bills. It tells you how to cure yourself by simple and harmless home remedies. It recommends no poisonous or dangerous drugs. It teaches how to save health and life by safe methods. It teaches prevention—that it is better to know how to live and avoid disease than to take any medicine as a cure. It is not an advertisement and has no medicine to sell. It has hundreds of excellent recipes for the cure of the various diseases. It has 18 colored plates showing different parts of the human body. The chapter on Painless Midwifery is worth its weight in gold to women. The "Care of Children" is something every mother ought to read. It teaches the value of Air, Sunshine, and Water as medicines. It contains valuable information for the married. This book cannot fail to please you. If you are looking for health by the safest and easiest means, do not delay getting it. It has eight hundred pages, is neatly bound in cloth, with gold letters, and will be sent by mail or express, prepaid to any address, for $1.75.

A FLEA FOR THE NEW WOMAN. May L. Collins. With large new half-tone portrait. 10c.

A TALE OF THE STRASSBURG GEESE. R. H. Kerr. Together with The Strike of the Strassburg Geese (C. W. Coolidge), A Traveler's Tale (R. H. Kerr), The Cat's Story (Emile Zola) 5c.

AUTONOMY, SELF-LAW. A fragmentary dissertation on the right to non-invasive self-hood. 5c.

BALZAC'S SERAPHITA: The Mystery of Sex. Mary Hanford Ford. Cloth. $1.

BIBLE TEMPERANCE. E. C. Walker. Proving that Liquor Drinking is Commended, Defended and Enjoined by the Bible, and giving chapter reference to the chapters and verses. 10c.

BORNING BETTER BABIES—Through regulating reproduction by controlling conception. E. B. Foote, Jr., M. D. 25c.

CAUSES OF HARD TIMES, and the Money Question. Albert Chavannes. 5c.

CHICAGO CONFERENCE OF TRUSTS. Speeches, debates, etc.; 31 portraits of delegates, including Benj. R. Tucker, Laurence Gronlund, William Jennings Bryan, Samuel Gompers, Louis F. Post, and George Schilling. 426 pages, 50c.

CHILDREN OF THE ITALIAN POOR. Paola Lombroso. 5c.

DARWINS, THE. (A novel.) Elmina D. Slenker. 50c.

DAWN OF CIVILIZATION, The; or, England in the Nineteenth Century. J. C. Spence. 178 pages. 25c.

DAWN-THOUGHT ON THE RECONCILIATION. By J. Wm. Lloyd. An inspired treatise that, with insight and acution, touches all the questions of life, love, soul and society. A prose-poem, simple enough for a child to enjoy, deep enough to make a philosopher think. The largest creed, the most generous theory, the gladdest gospel. A book of life. A religion of growth and the overlook—freedom and optimism. Read it. Printed in old style antique type, rubricated with portrait of the author. In three editions, de luxe, plain and paper bound. Prices, $1.25, $1.00 and 50c.

DIGGING FOR RED-ROCK. Camp-meeting talks and sketches by Moses Harman. 5c.

DR. FOOTE'S SOCIAL SCIENCE SERIES OF DIME PAMPHLETS—Wedlock; Scientific Marriage; Heredity; A B C of Temperaments; Powell and his Critics; Physiological Marriage; Physical Improvement of Humanity; Causes of Disease, Insanity, and Premature Death; A Step Backward. Any of the above books sent by mail on receipt of price.

DYNAMIC THEORY OF LIFE AND MIND. An attempt to show that all organic beings are both constructed and operated by the dynamic agencies of their respective environments. By James H. Alexander. Over 400 Illustrations, 47 chapters, 1,067 pages and a 3-column index of 11 pages. Cloth, $2.75.

EAST TENNESSEE SKETCHES. A and Cecile Chavannes. 25c.

ECONOMICS OF ANARCHY. A Study of the Industrial Type. Dyer D. Lum. 5c.

EIGHT-HOUR MOVEMENT. John P. Altgeld, ex-Governor of Illinois. 5c.

EVOLUTION AND REVOLUTION. Elisee Reclus. 5c.

FALSE CLAIMS OF THE CHURCH. John E. Remsburg. Analyzing and confuting the claims made by churchmen that the Christian religion has promoted morality, learning, temperance, science, freedom, and showing how she has opposed progress. Paper, 10c.

FIELDS, FACTORIES, AND WORKSHOPS; or, Industry Combined with Agriculture and Brain Work with Manual Work. Peter Kropotkin. 260 pages. 40c. Postage, 5c.

FREE PRESS. Arguments in support of demurrer to the indictment of M. Harman, E. C. Walker and Geo. Harman, under the Comstock law. G. C. Samsons and David Overmyer. 20c.

GIORDANO BRUNO. His Life, Teachings, and Martyrdom. Burned for heresy in Rome, Feb. 17, 1600. 5c.

GOD AND THE STATE. Bakounine. 25c.

GOVERNMENT ANALYZED. A remarkable work by a remarkable man, Col. John H. Kelso, the history of whose life reads more like romance than reality. This book is the last of a series—Deity Analyzed, Bible Analyzed, Universe Analyzed. By the author's death this work was left unfinished, but was completed by his wife, Etta Dunbar Kelso. 418 pages; cloth. Price reduced from $1.50 to $1.

HILDA'S HOME. Rosa Graul. "An o'er true tale" of woman's wrongs and of one woman's struggles and final triumphs in her attempt to secure justice for herself and for her sisters. 426 pages. Cloth, $1; paper, 50c.

HUMAN RIGHTS. J. Madison Hook. 5c.

IMPORTANCE OF HONEST MONEY. A simple, scientific, invariable standard of price. James Adleman. 136 pages. Paper, 50c.

IN BRIGHTER CLIMES; or, Life in Socialand. Albert Chavannes. 5c.

INFIDEL DEATH-BEDS. "Idle Tales of Dying Horrors." G. W. Foote. Brief biographical sketches of 37 Freethinkers, including Bruno, Shackle, Byron, Comte, Darwin, George Eliot, Gibbon, Goethe, Hugo, Harriet Martineau, Mill, Paine, Madame Roland, George Sand, Shelley, Volney, and Voltaire. 25c.

IN HELL AND THE WAY OUT. A plan of Social Democracy outlined. Henry E. Allen. 10c.

INSTITUTIONAL MARRIAGE. From the viewpoint of an exiled Mar-sian. M. Harman. 5c.

JOHN'S WAY. A domestic radical story. Elmina D. Slenker. 25c.

KAREEZA. Ethics of Marriage. A bold, brave book, teaching ideal marriage, rights of the unborn child, a designed and controlled maternity. Sample pages free. $1.

KORADINE. A story for young and old. Extra levant cloth. $1.

LIBERTY IN LITERATURE. Testimonial to Walt Whitman. "Let us put wreaths on the brows of the living." An address delivered in Philadelphia, Oct. 21, 1890, with portrait of Whitman. Containing also Col. Ingersoll's address at the funeral of Walt Whitman, Mar. 30, 1892. Cloth, 50c; paper, 25c.

LIBERTY. Political, Religious, Social, and Moral. A. F. Tindall. 5c.

LITTLE LESSONS FOR LITTLE FOLKS. Elmina D. Slenker. Boards, 40c.

LIZZIE MELTON. A story of a self-reliant girl. By Albert Chavannes. With portrait of author. 25c.

LUCIFER. Third Series, Vol. III. (1889). Cloth, $1.25. Postage, 15c.

MAGNETATION, and Its Relation to Health and Character. Albert Chavannes. 25c.

MARRIAGE. An address by Dr. Juliet H. Severance. 5c.

MARRIAGE IN FREE SOCIETY. Edward Carpenter. A dainty little gift book. 25c.

MEN, WOMEN AND CHANCE. William Platt. Containing two tales: The Ascent to the Heights, and Blind Men and Sheiks. Well printed on heavy paper and artistically bound in cloth. Gilt top, rough edges. 75c.

MEN, WOMEN, AND GODS. Helen H. Gardener. With preface by Col. R. G. Ingersoll. Contents: Introduction by Col. Ingersoll. Men, Women, and Gods. Vicarious Atonement. Historical Facts and Theological Fictions. Appendix. Address to the Clergy and Others. Letter to Cleveland Congress of Freethinkers. The only authorized and correct edition. Large 12mo, heavy-toned paper. Portrait. This volume is by far the best writing this famous author ever did. It is very fine. Cloth, $1; paper, 50c.

MISSING LINK IN MODERN SPIRITUALISM, THE. A. Leah (Fox) Underhill. With portraits of the Fox Sisters and others. 472 pages. Cloth. Reduced to $1.

MORIBUND SOCIETY AND ANARCHY. Jean Grave. Cloth, 50c; paper, 25c.

MOTHERHOOD IN FREEDOM. M. Harman. 5c.

MUTUAL BANKING. A simple plan to abolish interest on money. William B. Greene. 10c.

NORA, A DOLL'S HOUSE, and GHOSTS. Ibsen. Cloth. 75c.

OUR WORSHIP OF PRIMITIVE SOCIAL GUESSES. E. C. Walker. Contents: Love and Law; The Moloch of the Monogamic Ideal; The Continuity of Race-Life, and Tyranny; Food and Sex Fallacies, a Criticism; When Men and Women Are and When They Are Not Varieties; The New Woman: What is she? What will she be? The State Hiding Behind Its Own Mistakes; Bishop Potter's Opinion on Divorce; Love, Its Attraction and Expression; Is She an Honest Girl? Lloyd, Platt, and the Pitiful Facts; Social Radicals and Parentage; Anthropology and Monogamy; Love and Trust Versus Fear; Reflections upon Reading William Platt's "Women, Love, and Life." 15c.

PERSONAL EXPERIENCES of Two American Anti-Vivisectionists in Various Countries. Philip G. Peabody. With an Appendix by Col. R. G. Ingersoll. Reduced from 25c to 15c.

PERSONAL RIGHTS AND SEXUAL WRONGS. Oswald Dawson. 25c.

PRIESTLY CELIBACY. Prof. A. L. Rawson. Together with The Incoherence of Tradition (E. C. Walker), Motherhood in Freedom (Moses Harman), The Greatest Sin (an allegory, E. B. Kerr), and Jealousy, the Foe of Freedom (Oscar Hotter). 25c.

RELIGION AND RATIONALISM. The relation of each to human liberty. The religionist, fancying that he has the whole truth, is logically opposed to investigation, and he appeals to physical force to arrest the discovery of new truths. What Rationalism is, and how many believe themselves Freethinkers who are only unbelieving or disgruntled religionists. The necessity for separate organizations and a division of labor among reformers. The Secular Union. Important facts and arguments in a compact form. E. C. Walker. 5c.

RIGHTS OF MAN. Thomas Paine. Answer to Burke's attack upon the French revolution. A political treatise of great general value, as advocating liberty and democracy. Contains the fundamental principles of true republicanism. Cloth, 400, paper, 25c.

RUBAIYAT (Quatrains) OF OMAR KHAYYAM. Edward FitzGerald's interpretation; with original introduction, special cover, tablet version. Paper, 10c.

RULED BY THE TOMB. A discussion of free thought and free love. Orford Northcote. 10c.

SCIENCE IN STORY; or, Sammy Tubbs, the Boy Doctor, and Spomata, the Troublesome Monkey. For young folks. Dr. E. B. Foote. Five volumes in "red line," presentation edition. $5. Five volumes, plainer binding, $2.50; all in one volume, $2.

SEXUAL PHYSIOLOGY FOR THE YOUNG. Being the fifth volume of "Science in Story." 250 pages; cloth bound; illustrated. 50c.

SONGS OF THE UNBLIND CUPID. J. Wm. Lloyd. Edition de luxe. Verses printed from Kelmscott type upon deckle edged hand made paper of cerulean tint. Initial letters, ornaments and borders are in red; initial letter and sketch upon the opening page are hand painted in water colors. Covers brown, with choice of silver or gold lettering. Very handsome gift book. 50c.

STUDIES IN SOCIOLOGY. In four parts: I., The Law of Happiness; II., The Law of Individual Control; III., The Law of Exchange; IV., The Law of Environment. Albert Chavannes. 25c.

TALKS ON NATURE. Important information for both sexes. Dr. J. H. Greer. 192 pages. Reduced from 50 to 25c.

THE ABOLITION OF MARRIAGE. John Beverly Robinson. Together with Isabel's Intuition (Marlette), Reminiscences of Berlin Heights (A. Warren), and The Sexes and Love in Freedom (Oscar Hotter). 25c.

THE BAR SINISTER AND LICIT LOVE, including the first biennial proceedings of the Legitimation League, and a full account of the Lanchester case, with full-page half-tone pictures of Edith Lanchester, and Lillian Harman. Handsomely bound in green and gold covers. 307 pages. 25c.

THE BLUE LAWS OF CONNECTICUT. Taken from the Code of 1650 and the public records of the Colony of Connecticut previous to 1665. With an account of the persecution of Witches and Quakers in New England, and some extracts from the Blue Laws of Virginia. Copiously illustrated. 25c.

THE BRITISH BARBARIANS. Grant Allen, the greatest of the Hill-Top pioneers. Dedicated "to all who have heart enough, brain enough, and soul enough to understand it." Handsomely bound in cloth. 321 pages. $1.

THE WOMAN WHO DID. Grant Allen. A powerful story of a refined, educated and high-spirited woman who dared to defy the tyranny of church and state and ignore the institution of marriage. Handsomely bound in cloth. $1.

THE NEW HEDONISM. Grant Allen. The opening paragraph says: "The old asceticism said: 'Be virtuous and you will be happy.' The new hedonism says: 'Be happy and you will be virtuous.'" In another place the writer affirms that they began to perceive that the unclean and impure things are the fit and worthy exercise of the reproductive function." Paper covers; 25c.

THE WORM TURNS. Revolutionary Poems. Voltairine de Cleyre. 10c.

THOMAS JEFFERSON. His Political, Social and Religious Philosophy. Gen. M. M. Trumbull. 5c.

TOKOLOGY. A book for every woman. By Alice B. Stockham, M. D. Illustrated. Tokology teaches possible painless pregnancy and parturition, giving full, plain directions for the care of a woman before and after confinement. The ailments of pregnancy can be prevented as well as the pains and dangers of childbirth avoided and women need not go down to death giving birth to children. English, German or Swedish. $1.25.

TRAVELS IN FAITH. By Capt. Robert C. Adams. His mental experience from superstition to rationalism. Cloth, 75c; paper, 25c.

VACCINATION A GIGANTIC CRIME. Samuel Darling. 10c.

VINDICATION OF THOMAS PAINE. Col. R. G. Ingersoll. Dealing with all the slanders brought against the name and fame of Paine. A little pamphlet which every admirer of Thomas Paine should have by him for reference. Paper, 10c.

VITAL FORCE. Magnetic Exchange and Magnetation. Albert Chavannes. 25c.

WHAT THE YOUNG NEED TO KNOW: a Primer of Sexual Rationalism. Edwin C. Walker. "Let us cease to be ashamed of what makes us men, of what gives us the kisses of lovers and the shouting arms of babes." Paper covers; 42 large pages. 25c.

WHAT IS RELIGION? Ingersoll's last public address, delivered at the meeting of the Free Religious Association in Boston on June 3, 1899. To which is appended the poem, "Declaration of the Free," the last verse written by the great Freethinker. 5c.

WHEN LOVE IS LIBERTY AND NATURE LAW. John Badcock, Jr. 10c.

WHY THE UNDERTONE? An open letter to Judge Gary. Sarah E. Amos. 10c.

WOMAN, CHURCH, AND STATE. Matilda Joslyn Gage. This is Mrs. Gage's last and crowning work. Every woman ought to read it. Every liberal woman and man will want it. A burning protest against the tremendous wrong done women by the church, which controlled the state. It ought to be widely read for the good it will do. Cloth, $1.50; paper, 75c.

WOMAN IN THE PAST, PRESENT AND FUTURE. Woman was the first human being that tasted bondage. Woman was a slave before the slave existed. The basis of all oppression is economic dependence on the oppressor. The basis of the slave. This work is August Bebel's masterpiece. 8vo, 428 pages. 50c.

Address M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

Price 2 Cents.

LUCIFER.

THE LIGHT-BEARER.

THIRD SERIES, VOL. VI., No. 31. CHICAGO, ILLINOIS, AUG. 14, E. M. 302. [C. E. 1902.] WHOLE No. 930

MY LITTLE BIRD.

Oh little bird, why flutter in my hand?
Oh little heart, why quiver at my touch?
My hand's caress would make thee free as air;
My touch must leave thy heart as large as love.

My hand, O sweet, is not a prison wall,
My heart, dear heart, is not a cage for thee,
My hand is but another bird to preen,
My heart is but a hiding-nest and home.

My little bird, press to me heart to heart,
Together with me nestle 'neath the bough,
Wing with me infinite blue worlds afar,
Where all the clouds are free and winds are warm.

O sing with me, dear bird, the songs of heart,
O sing to me, sweet heart, and sing with me
Of all the bright thoughts of the upper air,
And all the love notes 'neath the skies of dawn.

—From "Wind Harp Songs," by J. Wm. Lloyd.

Labadie on the Strike.

Joseph A. Labadie, the well-known Anarchist of this city, has some striking comments to make on the recent decisions of the federal judges in West Virginia in connection with the strike of the coal miners.

Labadie, the "gentle Anarchist," as he is called in Detroit, so far as filling the conception of an Anarchist is just the reverse. Gentle, lovable and kind, Labadie is respected and admired by those who know him best. He insists that he is an Anarchist; others are loath to believe this. But Labadie insists that he is the true Anarchist and of the type that will in the in the future rule the world.

Labadie as he sat in his office at the storage yard of the water board, where he is employed, consented to give today his views on the recent decisions. Following are his comments:

"Of course it is heroic to refuse to obey the injunctions of a court but there come times when to obey is to aid and abet crime. It would be positively criminal for the Mine Workers' union to forsake now those who have struck to aid their fellows win what every right-minded and kindly disposed person cannot admit is anything but a righteous cause.

"Let come what may, I believe every sympathizer with the struggling miners, whose conditions are deplorable indeed, should render whatever assistance is possible to feed the suffering men, women and children. If we must go to prison for doing so, then let us go with smiles on our faces and protests in our mouths.

"Such strikes as these cannot but demonstrate to the people that wrongs exist in the industrial world which are unbearable, and these injunctions show conclusively what Anarchists have tried to make the people realize—that political authority has always been with the privileged classes; that it exists primarily to obtain and retain undue privileges for the few.

"Of course, the great wrong in this whole affair is the making of property subject to unlimited private ownership of land and other things that are not created by human effort.

"The only title that meets the requisites of justice is occupancy and use. Under such a title the mine workers would be entitled to the coal which they dig from the mines, and there would be no necessity for strikes.

"However, the injunction issued by Judge Keller is in harmony with present conditions. If the corporation owns the town, why, it follows necessarily that no one has a right on the property except those permitted there by it. It owns the air and the sunshine and no person has a right to sit in the sun and breathe the air except by sufferance. When one fully realizes all this, the facts become monstrous. The wrong consists in permitting the corporations to own the earth.

"I dare say that the very persons against whom the injunctions are issued believe the property system that gives the few such terrible power over the many is perfectly just and right. They only object to its logical application when it affects them. They will probably appeal to the very powers that maintain the corporations and their privileges.

"Strange how people hug delusions to their hearts like the person who held the fox, although they dig out their very vitals.

"Governments are not now and have never been instruments for the good of the great toiling masses.

"The only persons who see this clearly are those who clearly perceive the aim of the anarchist philosophy.

"But the injunctions against furnishing food to the strikers and their families should not be obeyed for a moment. If there be any hereabouts who would assist in any way in passively resisting such an abominable decree they may communicate with me and we will find some way to help feed the hungry, even though the courts say we shall not. It is glorious to be such lawbreakers."—Detroit Daily.

City and Country.

I can understand why the editor prefers life in the country to life in Chicago, but that justified preference is an insufficient basis for a general indictment of city living as compared with country living. There are many reasons besides the desire to absorb unearned increment which fill the cities at the expense of the country.

The common talk about the greater healthfulness of the country is merely the thoughtless repetition of what might have been true once but is not true now, except in rare instances. The modern city has a better system of drainage, a better water supply, and more wholesome milk than are found in the country. Its streets are immeasurably cleaner than the premises of the average farmhouse, and when mechanical traction shall have driven the horse from the city health conditions will be free from what is now their greatest enemy. Even the poor tenement of the congested district is not a greater menace to health than is the farmhouse over and into which sweep the stenches from styes and cattlepens, in whose rooms the cellar air, often laden with the foul odors of rotting vegetables, and at the best stale and noxious, continually finds its way. The dwellers in the farmhouse drink water taken from wells whose contents are unpurified by sunshine and air, and which often receive directly surface drainings from barnyards, kitchens, and washing troughs, and seepings from cellars and privies.

There are scores of reasons besides that named by the editor why men and women leave the country for the city. Many come to get into the crowd, to escape the isolation of the country, some of these because they are not strong enough to live a quiet reflective life, others because they desire contact with the hurrying pulsing streams of invention, discussion and contest. Others come to attend theaters, operas, and other places of amusement and artistic life. The fact that the labor hours of the city workmen are far fewer than are those of the farmer, that his wife, unlike the wife of the farmer, has some chance for leisure and rest, pours a never-ending flood of humanity into the city. Others leave the country to escape the general unhealthy conditions that prevail in many parts of it, as for instance the "malaria" of the "river-bottom" lands, to get away from the swarms of of irritating insects that pester the country dweller, to escape the inconveniences of bad roads, distant markets, short-term schools, infrequent mails. The one item of paved streets and sidewalks will continue to offset all the moralizing of all the pleaders for country life.

Another cause that enlarges the city at the expense of the country is the greater freedom in the city. In the country Mrs. Grundy sees everybody, knows the comings and goings of every member of the community; the affairs of each person are the gossip of all the others. This is not true to a large extent in the city, in spite of the cursed meddlesomeness of the despicable "red ranter" of journalism and of many sneaking Paul Pry societies for the prevention.

The migration from the country to the city will cease only when the conditions that now make life more desirable in the city than in the country, for those who migrate likewise prevail in the country. Improved sanitation, shorter hours of labor for men and women, greater freedom from espionage and meddling, better mails, better schools, closer touch with the world of thought, amusement, and applied invention, will gradually approximate the country to the city as a desirable place of residence. Then its own especial advantages will turn the scale and the exodus now annoying our editor shall cease to trouble.

R. M. BROWN.

"Fallen Women," Again.

Voltairine de Cleyre is not sure whether a little masterly inactivity would not have been her wisest policy. Neither am I sure it would not.

I should resent being classed with the "scientists" whose method of treating disease is to say the patient is not sick? Yes,—when they advance this as a cure-all. But I agree with the "scientists" that there is a considerable class of patients who need nothing but to learn that fancy is all which ails them. They are the kind whom these "scientists" and other quacks manage to cure after the M. D.'s have given their cases up—for not medical. Somewhat similarly, though I do not claim to have exhaustively analyzed the moral and social disease of "fallen women," I recognize two large classes among them—those who could not "fall" any lower than they were born, and those who have not "fallen" but been pushed down and held down. I hardly think I said the majority belonged to the former division. My extensive, regrettable, &c. experience—which, however extensive and regrettable, is by the bye, only that of one person—inclines me, modestly I hope, and without dogmatism, to think perhaps about half do.

Of course, Miss de Cleyre finds me "inconsistent,"—which according to Emerson (Self Reliance) is a mark of greatness. I confess being able to see that every plank has two sides—also that they can rarely be seen simultaneously. To know much about the plank, you must turn it round sometimes! I am aware, to illustrate, that doubtful facts, such as the existence of Moses, are not the best basis for an induction. If I want to learn the effects of vaccination, I much prefer the Registrar General's reports to——

> "A woman's story at a winter's fire, > Authorized by her grandam."

But we must use such data as we have; and often the best accessible are poor enough. I am glad I mentioned Fantine; for Miss de Cleyre will scarcely suspect me of thinking she really existed. But even avowed fiction (if it is not incredible) will do for an illustration.

When did I say the Monster Slayer was not a crank? He certainly is not the "normal man" of Lombroso's classification. And did I ever say Czolgosz was not a Monster Slayer? If desirable, I can easily tell who did!

The Afra I referred to was not Mrs. Behn, but a celebrated courtesan of Diocletian's period, who became a Christian, suffered martyrdom with some of her girls, who had also been converted, and is now the patron saint of Augsburg.

The love of Lord Nelson and Lady Hamilton was "remarkably pure and beautiful." Then it proves that prostitutes are not necessarily incapable of pure and beautiful love. For Lady Hamilton, long before she knew either Hamilton or Nelson, was just as much a prostitute as Afra or Theodora. Surely Miss de Cleyre cannot have read, believed, and remembered, the life of this celebrated woman, as I wrote it in Lucifer a few years ago.

It is a pity Miss de Cleyre and other women who have never broken the law, or only done so "for peculiar reasons," decline generally to enlarge their acquaintance with prostitutes. Because, you see, they could do it without any regrettable experiences, and so keep some men as "bold and bad" as I out of temptation. I am persuaded I should have had no experiences to regret, if a woman of that kind had been with me during "excursions into the realms of the demi monde," which I should have been entirely willing to undertake in such company, "as a severe study in degeneracy &c." Besides, they would learn that the Christian idea of raising degenerates by constant action of "the moral derrick" is not always a "miserable failure," though that of forcing them into the right path, like Theodora, is, Theodora's own experience should have taught her to avoid that mistake. She was led, not driven to mend her own ways. They would also unlearn the cant about "times" having "changed;" and not suppose Phryne or some other courtesan, at Boriboola Gha, was better than Annie Cook at Memphis (Tenn). They would find their preconceived notions about the merely mercenary character of (all) prostitutes to involve a very serious mistake. They would learn that most prostitutes are kind, and many besides Agnes Sorel irreproachable "otherwise." Above all, they would learn that the temperance lecturer's theory confounds effect with cause—that the inveteracy of vice springs from native degeneracy, not degeneracy from it. This is the most important of all, because it teaches that we must not be satisfied to distinguish "real prostitutes" from "convention-breakers," but need to distinguish individuals, regardless of class labels. I am about cured of regretting my experiences now. I would much rather have them, with all the occasions for regret, than the "flinty-hearted" sort of innocence, which does not, indeed, object to breaking conventions "for peculiar reasons," and has boundless charity for the "pore benighted heathen" at Boriboola Gha, but lumps any large class at Philadelphia under that fatal term, Les Miserables, in which wickedness and misfortune are hopelessly confounded.

C. L. JAMES.

The Slavery of Our Times.

Through a misapprehension we have over-charged for Tolstoy's book of the above title. The publisher's price has been reduced from $1.25 to 65 cents. Those who have ordered the book of us may have their money refunded or applied on subscription or for other books.

What is the number on your wrapper? If it is 929, or less, your subscription is in arrears. And we "need the money."

Ruminations.

The loyal rallying together of true-hearted Liberals all over the country—yes, and even beyond the United States—in behalf of the persecuted women of Home, is an evidence of solidarity never to be forgotten. It is gratifying to know that in following the only rational course for the protection of our liberties, we have had substantially the unanimous support of those to whom freedom means anything. It has not been a pleasure to us to appeal for help, knowing that the money raised must be exhausted in legal expenses; nor would we have adopted such a course, if any other had promised equal results in maintaining our cause before the public. The prosecutions here are at an end. We have won three cases out of four, and gained a tremendous moral victory in the remaining one. Public sentiment in Tacoma and Seattle has turned in our favor to a marked degree. Even the daily papers have changed their tone. The era of local persecution seems to be at an end. The conditions and prospects at Home are immeasurably brighter than ever before. We have fought and won the most important of our fights; and a steady, if not rapid growth seems to be indicated for the future.

Nevertheless, the real contest in America has only begun. Home is simply an incident in the struggle, which will be incessantly directed against less guarded points. The infamous conviction of Mrs. Craddock in the East, at the very moment when we were securing the acquittal of Larkins and Adams in the West, proves the satanic persistence of Comstockism. In spite of all exposures and protests, Maddenism is as rampant as ever, under handedly seeking to check the spread of intelligence among the people. The arrests of McQueen and Mother Jones prove the intent to annihilate the right of public assemblage. The dismissal of Rebecca Taylor from government service, for presuming to exercise the ordinary rights of a citizen in expressing her opinion on public questions, proves that employment in government service is intended to mean a complete slavery of body and soul. The wholesale arrests of Socialists in Porto Rico, under the silly pretext of conspiracy, shows the determination of imperialism to stamp out radical ideas, wherever it dares exercise the power to do so. The national Anti-Anarchist law, and the still more outrageous laws enacted by several states, mark a bitter hatred of free speech on the part of lawmakers.

Who is there so blind as not to see that the issue of free speech is the giant question in this land today? The cases cited above are only samples of what is already taking place, to say nothing of still worse assaults which may be expected in the future. It is the cause of every body who is not a knave or a fool. There is no assured safety for any individual, who is progressive along a single line. And the cure? There is only one; and that is to join hands in a compact movement, in order to carry the warning cry to every home in the land, until a public sentiment shall be aroused before which politicians will be forced to bow as reeds before a storm. This can be done. Free thought, Sex Reform, Single Tax, Socialism, Anarchy, can each reach but a limited audience, and are forced to contend with gigantic prejudices. We must not abandon our convictions along these lines, nor the earnestness of our propaganda, but must accept the fact of slow growth. But it is different with the question of free speech. Here we have to contend with ignorance and apathy, but not with prejudice and hatred. Everybody, except the handful of religious and political schemers, thinks that he believes in free speech. The words have no unpopular signification connected with them. All that is needed is a thorough explanation of their true import, and a vivid portrayal of the evils which follow the suppression of the utterance of honest opinion. This demands great activity on our part, in this most pressing of all phases of progressive effort. The help of every person interested is urgently required.

The Free Speech League exists for just this purpose. Its representatives are eager to work, to rouse the whole country to the needs of the hour. Are the Liberals of America blind or indifferent? Since the Free Speech League alone embodies this most vital of all propaganda, every reader of Lucifer should join it at once, and help push the work. What are you waiting for? Events are moving rapidly, and every day counts. The peril is upon us; and this is no time for fooling or hair-splitting. The League stands for principles dear to every one of us, however we may differ in other matters. It only needs adequate support, in order to do a greater and more needed work than any other organization in the land has ever accomplished. Do not wait another moment. If you value the right of free speech, send at once one dollar for membership, and anything you can spare by way of donation, to E. B. Foote, Jr., M. D., 120 Lexington Ave. New York, N. Y. Hundreds of dollars were generously raised for the defence of the Home cases. Thousands should flow into the treasury of the Free Speech League for the work of starting an irresistible agitation which will destroy the Comstock law and all other encroachments on freedom of expression, and so make all such cases impossible in the future. Money is needed for the publication and dissemination of telling literature, books as well as pamphlets and circulars; for holding meetings everywhere and putting effective speakers on the platform, as well as for working along many other lines. Shame on the professed Liberal who can remain careless and inactive in such a crisis! Give the Free Speech League proper backing; and within an incredibly short time it will become the greatest and grandest movement inaugurated in many years. What will you do?

Home, Wash. JAMES F. MORTON, JR.

The Golden Life Community.

The undersigned and others have united themselves into a community which will be located on 640 acres of timber and meadow land in Wisconsin, about eight hours ride from Chicago. We expect to break ground September 1, for our town, and the necessary buildings, such as a comfortable community home, schoolhouse, lecture room, postoffice, warehouse, and stables for live stock will be put up very quickly. Our first and immediate step after the buildings are up, will be the cutting and marketing of timber, running a chicken ranch of about one thousand birds, a sheep ranch of one hundred head of breeding ewes, cows to supply milk, cream and butter for our table will be kept, also the necessary driving horses, work mules and oxen. By January 1 we expect to manufacture our own shoes and clothing, the spinning and weaving of cloth will be taken up as soon as possible. We now have members who are carpenters, shoemakers, iron workers, and farmers. Other lines of manufacturing will be taken up later. Our aims are to produce all our wants, or nearly so, as possible, buying nothing and selling nothing. This is not a business proposition. We do not want to make profits from each other or the old world. We simply want to make a living with the least effort. This will be accomplished by eliminating the profits of the landlord, the trader, the Church, the banker, the railroads, and the creations of the fashion carpenters of Paris and London. Commodities of all sorts will be put on the free list, as free as air to all of our members. When a Comrade wants anything he goes to our store room and helps himself or herself, as the case may be. This plan will work all right if people will take their table manners along when they go to the store.

We want free comrades to join us at once. Those who do not believe in common property can buy land adjoining ours and practice free Socialism or Individualism, and enjoy all the social and educational advantages which the town affords. We shall locate our community buildings so that the Socialists and Individualists can locate their buildings right across the street from ours and thus form the town. The following named property, viz, a driving mare, two buggies, one work wagon, a set of carpenter tools, a small chicken ranch, household and office furniture, and about $1,000 cash has already been merged into the community. Comrades who are interested may apply to either of the undersigned.

Austin, 54 N. 52d Ave. J. H. ROWELL.
Chicago, 332 S. Morgan St. ROSA SULLIVAN.

Lucifer, the Lightbearer

M. HARMAN, EDITOR AND PUBLISHER.

PUBLISHED EVERY WEEK AT 500 FULTON STREET, CHICAGO, ILL.

Terms: One year, $1; six months, 50 cents; three months, 25 cents.

Entered at the Chicago Postoffice as Second-Class Mail Matter.

Eastern Representative, E. C. Walker, 344 W. 143d street, New York.

Lucifer—Its Meaning and Purpose.

LUCIFER—The planet Venus; so called from its brightness.—Webster's Dictionary.

LUCIFEROUS—Giving Light; affording light or the means of discovery.—Same.

LUCIFIC—Producing Light.—Same.

LUCIFORM—Having the form of Light.—Same.

The name Lucifer means Light-Bringing or Light-Bearing, and the paper that has adopted this name stands for Light against Darkness—for Reason against Superstition—for Science against Tradition—for Investigation and Enlightenment against Credulity and Ignorance—for Liberty against Slavery—for Justice against Privilege.

Mrs. Craddock's Workhouse Experience.

A most interesting page of six columns reading matter—with suitable illustrations by the crayon artist—in the New York "Sunday World," of July 13, is headed "Horrors of the Women's Workhouse on Blackwell's Island." This article with the sensational heading was written by Mrs. Ida C. Craddock, who is personally known to many of our readers; known by them to be a woman of education, culture, refinement; a woman of high order of intelligence and of untiring industry in her efforts to rouse mankind to a more rational sense of the importance of "Right Marital Living." She has written and published several booklets on this subject, and it was because of such publication that she was arrested and imprisoned.

The article in the "World" gives the experience of Mrs. Craddock during her three months detention in the "house of correction," some account of which has been printed in Lucifer. To make sure that her statement of facts had not been exaggerated, the reporters of the "Sunday World" were sent to make an investigation and here is part of their report:

"For an estimated capacity of 600 prisoners there are only 200 cells.

"For an estimated capacity of 600 prisoners there are toilet facilities for 100.

"There are only two places from which running water may be drawn. Water must be carried or piped to the third and fourth tiers.

"From three to six women are crowded into one cell during the winter for warmth.

"The steam-heating facilities are utterly inadequate.

"Blankets are kept on the same cot for different prisoners for months without washing.

"The cells are unclean and infested with all kinds of vermin.

"Women who have been sentenced for the first time for crimes such as drunkenness and vagrancy are made to associate with hardened criminals."

In her statement to the "World" Mrs. Craddock's opening paragraphs read as follows:

"I recognize the right of the community to imprison me if I commit a civil offense, to deprive me of luxuries and privileges and set me at hard work. I do not recognize its right, however, to injure my health in so doing, nor to attempt to blunt my moral sensibilities by thrusting me among women of the worst class and compelling me to listen to their language; nor to half-starve me upon monotonous, insufficient or badly prepared food; nor to jeopardize my safety of life and limb by locking me in with quarrelsome or semi-insane women; nor to risk giving me consumption, small-pox and other diseases; nor to place me in surroundings where, despite the utmost care on my part, my body shall be rendered less clean than formerly.

"All these things have been done to me in the Workhouse on Blackwell's Island, where I have but recently served a term of three months, and for the sake of other women who are still enduring them, I make this protest.

"In justice to myself I deem it but fair to state here that I was committed, not for drunkenness, vagrancy or the other offenses for which women are usually sent to the workhouse, but for endeavoring to instruct people, in a little book, in the laws of marriage along lines approved by reputable physicians. The complainant against me was Anthony Comstock.

"It must therefore be evident to the reader that I approach the subject of prison life from a standpoint which is somewhat different from that of the average inmate of the Workhouse; so that my protest ought to be of more than average value."

The details of Mrs. Craddock's narration must be omitted for lack of space in our columns. Those of our readers who care to do so can send for the "Sunday World" of the date named, and read the entire article for themselves.

Mrs. Craddock tells us that the complainant in her case was Anthony Comstock. But who is Anthony Comstock that he should cause the arrest and imprisonment of one whose work had received very warm commendations from distinguished educators, conservative and radical, also from Christian ministers etc., etc., of New York, Philadelphia, Chicago and elsewhere? No one acquainted with this woman, and knowing her history could for one moment believe that she is influenced by any motives other than the most pure and philanthropic.

But Mrs. Craddock and her work had the misfortune—or the good fortune as it may prove to be later—to fall under the ban of one man's displeasure, that of Anthony Comstock; a man whose official position and whose past record entitled him to the distinction of "Inquisitor General" of the United States of America—a veritable modern Torquemada, so to speak. One of the oft-repeated boasts of this man is that he seldom fails to secure conviction when causing the arrest of man or woman whom he sees fit to prosecute under laws largely framed by himself—as it is currently believed, and whose enactment into Federal Statutes are also believed to have been caused chiefly by the insistent and persistent activity of himself and of the "New York Society for the Prevention of Vice," of which society Anthony Comstock has been from the first the salaried secretary and most influential member.

Pertinent to this boast of always—or nearly always—being able to secure conviction, the question naturally arises as to whether or not there is collusion, or a standing arrangement, by which certain courts are "fixed," so that the inquisitor general runs little if any risk of failure in running down his game—generally if not always his victims are too poor to make a vigorous or prolonged resistance, and often, too, as in the case of Mrs. Craddock, the accused is so far in advance of the masses of people that the average jury-man is totally incompetent to understand how it is possible for an honest or well-meaning person to entertain ideas that to himself are simply insane if not worse, and thus it happens that being unable to grasp the real meaning or object of the indicted propaganda the ignorant and prejudiced jurymen adopt what to them is the safest course, and bring a verdict of guilty to please the prosecutor and the judge who also very evidently thinks safety lies in adhering to "precedent," and to conventional lines of thought and of morals.

THE VACCINATION OUTRAGE.

Perhaps the very worst of all the acts of outrage to which Mrs. Craddock was subjected while an inmate of the Woman's Workhouse, was that of enforced vaccination. Speaking of the unspeakable horrors of the "Black Cells," wherein unruly prisoners are placed, with "no chair, no cot, no blanket"—compelled to stand, sit and lie amid "swarms of cockroaches" and other vermin, with "no window and no ventilation—except a few slender holes over the door and a few slender slits in the wall," Mrs. Craddock says:

"I myself, although recognized as an orderly and law-abiding prisoner, and accorded many privileges because of it, and treated with great kindness by all the matrons, was nevertheless threatened by the House Physician, Dr. Stratford, with the Black Cell because I dared refuse to be vaccinated. I had already been vaccinated by force by the Board of Health physician, and my arm was still sore."

If in carrying out the sentence of the court that did the bidding of Inquisitor General-Comstock Mrs. Craddock had been subjected to such medieval tortures as the "rack," the "thumbscrew," the "cat-o-nine tails," etc., etc., the infliction might have been borne with greater equanimity than to have one's life-blood poisoned by vaccine virus. The victims of this modern house of correction are obliged to sleep between blankets (no sheets being allowed) that are washed only once in six months, no matter how many different prisoners, nor how soaked with venereal and other loathsome diseases the occupants of the same cell may have been, but even this treatment does not equal enforced vaccination in point of criminality on the part of the prison management.

Never having been called upon to submit to such invasion of personal right I cannot say what I should do in a case like this, but if ever resistance—even unto death, the violent death of the physician or his victim, is justifiable, this would seem to be one of the occasions. I should feel much as Mark Hubbell felt, when relating the case of Conductor Sturtevant of the Lehigh Valley R. R., "who caused to be carved upon the marker that designates his child's grave: 'This child died of vaccination in the public schools.'" Commenting on this incident, Mr. Hubbell (see his letter in the Editorial Department of "Physical Culture" for August) says:

"Some wounds don't heal; that of the loss of an only child so sacrificed should call for some exemplary and almost retaliatory penalty. Unhappily the compensation if any by way of damages must be green, and not red; were I in that parent's place I should like mine crimson, warm and fluid." (Italics mine.)

If any of our readers care to know how the vaccine pus is obtained that is forcibly injected into the blood of school children, by order of municipal if not of state law, let them read the article on "The Making of Vaccine," in the same August number of "Physical Culture," New York City. M. H.

Notes From "Harmony Home."

The berry picking season is now about ended. A week or ten days of dry weather has dried up the blackberry crop, until it scarcely pays the labor and time to gather what is left. Altogether, if I am not misinformed, the season has been favorable to the owners of berry fields. Prices have been fairly remunerative to the producer, and many a woman, many a girl and boy, who needed an opportunity to earn a few dollars have found that opportunity in the berry field, and at the same time have become stronger, more vigorous and healthful in mind and body, by the close contact with Mother Nature—by the out-door exercise and exposure to sunshine, wind and rain.

* * *

Just here I want to make a little comparison between the hygienic value of bodily exercise that is taken for health alone and that which is obtained by working at some useful or gainful employment. Each of these has its own peculiar advantages, but, as I now see it, the preponderance of advantages is in favor of the latter, provided that the useful labor is performed in the open air and while exposed to sunshine, and provided also that suitable intervals of rest be allowed to the worker. Such at least is the result of my own experience.

The chief point of superiority of the Physical Culture exercises over those of productive labor is that the former encourage equal or uniform development of all the muscles, and prevent one-sidedness or unequal development. Another advantage is that there is less danger of excess. One can stop when he has had enough, whereas the worker at productive labor often is compelled to continue the exercise far beyond the limit of hygienic prudence.

On the other hand it is next to impossible to get up an interest in the Physical Culture exercises that will call out the greatest possible effort, and therefore the latent energies of the organism are not roused, not stimulated, not called into action, the result being partial rather than the greatest possible benefit to the organism from this kind of daily muscular exercise.

* * *

Since our last report of progress at "Harmony Home" we have had near a dozen visitors from Chicago, most of whom came to remain only a few days intending to come again and make a more prolonged stay later on. Hitherto we have had almost no hot weather in Michigan. When the sky is clear the sun shines warm or even hot, but the breeze is almost invariably cool and refreshing. Absolutely no hot nights as yet in this neighborhood, and as there are very few mosquitoes or other insect tormentors at our place, and no noises of street cars, steam whistles, milk wagons, news boys, etc., etc., as in the great cities, our sleep is undisturbed. Early apples are abundant and cheap—$1 per barrel in the Bentor Harbor market, and we are canning some of the surplus of the orchard adjoining this house, for use in Lucifer's Chicago home. Peaches are going into market and pears will soon be ready to ship. Prospects for grapes and winter apples are unusually good.

M. HARMAN.

Another Victim of the Comstock Statutes.

I have seen no mention in Lucifer of the arrest, trial and imprisonment of our liberal friend George W. McNinch of Holland, Kansas.

He was arrested by order of the Comstock gang, in April, for the alleged crime of sending art pictures through the mails, but he was found guilty and sentenced, for sending them by express. While awaiting trial at Topeka I am informed that his liberal friends were refused permission to visit him. This seems rather inhuman, yet is nothing compared with the fact that a person is classed with the worst criminals merely because he uses the United States mails or sends by a private Express Company the art pictures or studies as they might be termed, to those desiring them. To be deprived of this right is surely an undeniable loss of liberty and a wrong to the whole people. This man did not send these pictures to immature children nor with the motive to corrupt anyone, but to educate older people up to a higher appreciation of the purity and beauty of the "human form divine." And this is greatly needed judging by the vast amount of disease and vileness of the bodies of the "great unwashed."

"Fifteen months at hard labor," is a severe sentence to inflict upon a person who has never injured any one "in life, limb or the pursuit of happiness. Strange to say the "terribly injured" party never, no never, shows up at any of these Comstockian attacks. The why seems past finding out.

Brother McNinch is a young man just starting out in life; has good habits and is a worthy man. A wife and two little ones are turned out upon the cold heartless world to shift for themselves, while his health is being broken down rapidly by outrageous prison "discipline," making it less possible for him to support them when his term is out. He is in no sense a criminal, merely a statute-breaker and about ninety-nine out of every one hundred ought to be broken and totally abolished,—yes, it might be dangerous to leave even one for seed! If any of Lucifer readers will write Mrs. Agnes McNinch, Holland, Kans. I am sure it will be appreciated; forget not to enclose something besides good will if possible. And let us all write to Brother McNinch, Ft. Leavenworth, Kans., care box 7, number 2927. Do not write complaining letters as such will only find the waste basket. Write cheery, helpful concise letters and weave in the philosophy of the Better Way. Creeded opinions are the ban of advancing civilization.

FLORA W. FOX.

Rochester, Minn.

VARIOUS VOICES.

Mrs. R. B., Big Rapids, Mich.:—I was pleased with your notice, in Lucifer, of "The Woman Who Dares." Four years ago I bought three copies and they have been loaned till they are nearly in pieces. A year ago, when we wanted another copy, we learned that the book was out of print, so I wrote Mrs. Gestefeld asking if the book was not worthy of another edition, and I guess I was one among many others. I have asked one of our dealers here to send for a copy for me. I hope Mr. Harman's Benton Harbor cottage colony may be a great success for the few who can be accommodated.

[We shall be pleased to receive orders for "The Woman Who Dares," the price of which is $1.50 a copy. It is an excellent work to set people to thinking, and is especially valuable to place in the hands of those who have never read radical literature. L. H.]

T. Cantwell, 127 Ossulston St., London, N. W.:—I always read Lucifer with interest and wish I could do something for it. I agree with Voltairine de Cleyre that prostitutes often do disagreeable things; but I do not agree that they are hopeless cases. From my experience I should say that they are mostly kind-hearted, and I do not consider any one hopeless who has a kind heart. I knew one, a widow with four children; to my knowledge she followed the profession for four years until two of the children were old enough to earn something and then she went into a factory to work and abandoned prostitution. She had always kept the children neat and her home clean. Of course there are "others;" and I admit that I do not feel at all fitted for any kind of "rescue" work, but I do not regard them as hopeless when they can be offered a better choice than that between degrading prostitution and degrading "honest toil."

Martin Nortvedt, Laurium, Mich.:—For the benefit of Sara C. Campbell I wish to say that I think the reading of "The Creation of God" by Dr. Jacob Hartman, will give her the information she seeks upon that special subject. The book can be ordered of Lucifer. Price cloth $1, paper 50 cents. The objections you, with several other writers in Lucifer, raise against Socialism, that it would be a detriment to individual liberty, I fail to see. By Socialism I understand the National Ownership of all the land, with all the raw materials in and above the earth, also, the national ownership and operation of all the means of production and distribution. In short, simply this, for the nation or all nations, to co-operate, instead of compete, for the necessaries of life. And, as experience is daily teaching us that co-operation is better than competition, and consequently the people as a whole will choose to co-operate instead of compete, but how that is going to deprive us of individual liberty, I cannot for the life of me understand.

Under Socialism, there will be religious liberty, and liberty of press and speech. Also sex liberty, because woman will be independent of man for support of herself or children which she may choose to give birth to. As I understand it, political government as it exists today will not exist under Socialism. Government then, if government it can be called, will be, that the people engaged in the different occupations and branches of industry, will choose, amongst their own number, men of skill and intelligence to manage or direct said branches of industry. Yours for freedom,

Charles H. Kerr, 56 Fifth Ave., Chicago:—I observe that in No. 926 you say editorially that it is time that "the question of individual liberty should be made a part of the subject matter of social discussion." The general tenor of your editorial would seem to indicate that you believe most, if not all, socialists to be in favor of the suppression of individual liberty.

This is certainly a curious misapprehension on your part and leads one to wonder from what source you derived your impressions of the socialist movement. Of course in this country the movement is still in a formative stage and, of course, there is nothing to prevent any one who chooses from assuming the socialist name and talking to any one who will listen.

I think it entirely safe to say, however, that there is no well informed member of the International Socialist party in any civilized country of the world who does not recognize the fact that socialism means a transformation of the existing state so that instead of being an instrument for coercing persons it shall be simply an instrument for administering things.

Any one who doubts that this is the position of the recognized leaders of socialist thought is invited to read "The State and Socialism" by Gabriel De Ville and "Collectivism and Industrial Evolution," by Emile Vandervelde. I mention these two writers not because they are unique in their position, for they are not, but merely because they happen to give prominence to this idea, which is accepted by all members of the socialist party so far as my acquaintance extends.

I have too much respect for your intellectual integrity to believe that you have deliberately been setting up a straw man and directing your shots at it. I believe, however, that you have been seriously misinformed as to what the socialists are really advocating, and I trust you will allow me space to make this correction.

The State under socialist control would be a statistical bureau for assisting intelligent production of the things that people want. There would be no judges and no policemen because there would be no property interests in the means of production for them to take care of.

The real difference between socialists and anarchists, as I understand it, is that socialists propose to transform society through the united, intelligent action of the working class, including workers of hand and brain, while anarchists preach the desirability of transforming society and leave each hearer to guess how the transformation is to be brought about.

ONCE MORE, I wish to say to all who intend to favor me with their company at "Harmony Home" that I do not furnish bedding, except in case of emergency, as when a friend comes a long distance and cannot conveniently bring blankets and sheets. I have a few mattresses, and can supply the wants of an occasional caller who does not expect to remain for more than a day or two—if not over hard to please. I can supply straw or hay for those who bring empty bed-ticks. It seems hard to get our friends to understand the situation in regard to sleeping accommodations. The last couple that came from Chicago had not seen the previous statements in regard thereto, and went away disappointed because I did not have "comfortable" beds for their use. M. H.

How to get here: From Benton Harbor take street car to old car barn on Pipestone St. Thence on Pipestone St. one mile to Sorter Corner—thence take the Pearl Road East one and one-fourth mile to Kelley's corner. There turn South on Dewey Ave. one fourth mile to "Harmony Home."

All power is inherent in the people, and all free governments are founded on their authority and instituted for their peace, safety, and happiness. For the advancement of these ends, they have, at all times, an inalienable and indefeasible right to alter, reform, or abolish their government, in such manner as they may think proper.—Constitution of Pennsylvania, Art. 1, Sec. 2.

Some say that man cannot be trusted with the government of himself. Can he then be trusted with the government of others? Or have we found angels in the persons of kings to govern them? Let history answer this question.—Thomas Jefferson's first inaugural address.

Religion is based upon faith; civilization upon knowledge. Knowledge is the antithesis of faith, and therefore civilization is the antithesis of religion. As well talk of darkness being the cause of light or rain on the grass of promoting prairie fires as that Christianity is the cause of civilization.—J. P. Richardson.

TOLSTOI'S NEW WORK.

The Slavery of Our Times.

With Portrait of the Gifted Author, and Introduction by the Translator, Aylmer Maude.

CHAPTER TITLES.

I., Goods Porters Who Work Thirty-Seven Hours; II., Society's Indifference While Men Perish; III., Justification of the Existing Position of Sciences; IV., The Assertion of Economic Science that Rural Laborers Must Enter the Factory System; V., Why Learned Economists Assert what is False; VI., Bankruptcy of the Socialist Ideal; VII., Culture or Freedom? VIII., Slavery Exists Among Us: IX., What is Slavery? X., Laws Concerning Taxes, Land and Property; XI., Laws the Cause of Slavery; XII., The Essence of Legislation Is Organized Violence; XIII., What Are Governments? Is It Possible to Exist Without Governments? XIV., How Can Governments Be Controlled? XV., What Should Each Man Do? An Afterword.

Well printed on heavy paper. Substantially bound. 186 pages. Price, $1.50.

Address M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

CAPTAIN JINKS, HERO

BY ERNEST CROSBY.

It is a merciless satire on war and militarism in which the parallel between savagery and soldiery is unerringly drawn. It is a biting burlesque on the various forms of cheap hero-worship. It holds up to withering scorn every important feature of militarism.

Among the accompaniments and results of war exploited and satirized, are hazing at "East Point," the war whoops of the yellow journals, the savagery of war, the Schley-Sampson controversy, civilizing the heathen savage, looting in China, pension abuses, the capture of Aguinaldo, the Peace-Conference, army mismanagement, osculatory attacks by goosey girls, etc.

With 25 Irresistible Drawings by Dan Beard. 12mo, Cloth, Handsome Covers, 200 pages. Price $1.00

Address M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

VICE: ITS FRIENDS AND ITS FOES

BY EDWIN C. WALKER.

CONTENTS:—Brotherhood of Man; The Recognition of Facts; Folly of "For Men Only." Definition of Vice; Horrors of Prostitution; Abnormal Sexuality; Errors of Fathers, Mothers and Teachers; Persecution Does Not Reform; Prostitution and the Crusaders; The "Spoiling of the Heathen;" What are the Effects of Raids and Crusades? The Economic Side of the Problem, Party Politics in Vice Crusading; In What Does Prostitution Consist? Some Causes of Prostitution; Two Kinds of Prostitution Compared; The Opponents of Divorce; "Purifying" the Tenements; Action for Advanced Women.

WITH APPENDIX:—The Wanderings of a Spirit; Our Fair Civilization. The Folly and Cruelty of It All. Price 15c.

Address M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

DO YOU EVER THINK

Of the fate of the Prodigal Daughter? The Prodigal Son is forgiven and received with rejoicing—why should different treatment be accorded to his sister? For a vivid, true picture of the conditions in homes and factories which produce thousands of so-called fallen women every year, read "The Prodigal Daughter; or, The Price of Virtue," by Rachel Campbell.

SPECIAL OFFER.

This valuable work sent free on receipt of twenty-five cents for a thirteen week's trial subscription to Lucifer the Light Bearer. M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton Street, Chicago, Ill.

VACCINATION A CRIME.

With Comments on Other Sanitary Superstitions.

BY FELIX L. OSWALD, M. D.

"Vaccination spreads diseases; vaccination impairs the organic functions; vaccination encourages reliance on worthless remedies; vaccination spreads small-pox; compulsory vaccination furnishes dangerous legal precedents."

With illustrations of diseases frequently resulting from vaccination. 198 pages. Price 10 cents. For sale by M. Harman, 500 Fulton St. Chicago.

Wanted: Correspondence from Lucifer readers who desire to locate in Iowa or Dakota near other radical families. Also from any who wish to break away from marriage slavery and want a temporary home and hlep to help themselves. Address K., care of M. Harman 500 Fulton Street Chicago.

930.

If these figures correspond with the number printed on the wrapper of your Lucifer, your subscription expires with this number.

If a copy of Lucifer fails to reach you, please order by number or date.

Lucifer will not be sent "by return mail" unless stamps for postage are enclosed with order.

TO NEW SUBSCRIBERS: Your subscription is paid to No. If you have not ordered Lucifer, a friend has subscribed for you. If you do not wish to receive it, please notify us by card or through your postmaster. If you wish to become a regular subscriber you will confer a favor by renewing before the expiration of your trial subscription.

LOVE'S COMING OF AGE.

BY EDWARD CARPENTER.

This is a book with which few will wholly agree, but which nearly every one can read with profit and enjoyment. The subject is the relation of the sexes in the past, present and future, and it is treated with absolute frankness and fearlessness by a writer who unites a broad outlook, a strong grasp of his subject and a charming literary style. The following table of contents will indicate the line of thought followed by the author.

The Sex Passion.
Man, the Ungrown.
Woman, the Serf.
Woman in Freedom
Marriage: a Retrospect.
Marriage: a Forecast.
The Free Society.
Some remarks on the early star and sex worships.
Notes—On the Primitive Group Marriage; Jealousy; The Family; Preventive Checks to Population.

The book is printed on extra book paper and handsomely bound in cloth. Price, $1.

Address M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

WHITMAN'S IDEAL DEMOCRACY, AND OTHER WRITINGS.

BY HELENA BORN.

Comprising besides the title essay, Thoreau's Joy in Nature; Poets of Revolt; Shelley, Whitman, Carpenter; Whitman's Altruism; Individualism versus Organization; Inequalities of Economic Argument; The Last Stand Against Democracy in Sex; Inequality in Divorce; Marriage Safeguards. With portrait of author and biographical introduction by Helen Tufts. 125 pages. Edition limited to 500 copies; each copy numbered. Fine paper, uncut pages, bound in boards, paper label. Price $1.

Agents Wanted To sell the Toltec Dandruff Cure and the Toltec Hair Dressing (restores natural color). Are clean and perfect. Liberal commission. Write for circulars. Address: The Toltec Remedies Co., Box 1307 Denver Colo.

"Pages of Socialist History." By W. Tcherkesoff. This book of about 300 pages, is recommended to Socialists on both sides of the ocean, as it deals with the history of the "International" and the attitude of Marx and Engels towards Bakounin. Paper covers, 25 cents. By mail, 30c.

Address M. HARMAN, 500 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

RADICAL LITERATURE.

For Sale by M. Harman, 500 Fulton St., Chicago.

A CHAMBERMAID'S DIARY. By Octave Mirbeau. Translated from the French by Benj. R. Tucker. 400 pages. Handsomely bound in cloth. $1.50.

ADVANCEMENT OF SCIENCE. Prof. John Tyndall's famous Inaugural Address before the British Association for the Advancement of Science, with the articles on Prayer which so stirred the religious world. Cloth, 50c; paper, 25c.

AGE OF REASON. Thomas Paine. Cloth, with steel plate portrait, 50c; paper 15c.

ANARCHISM: Its Philosophy and Ideal. Peter Kropotkin. 5c.

A PHYSICIAN IN THE HOUSE. A New Family Medical Work, by Dr. J. H. Greer. This book is up-to-date in every particular. It will save you hundreds of dollars in doctors' bills. It tells you how to cure yourself by simple and harmless home remedies. It recommends no poisonous or dangerous drugs. It teaches how to save health and life by safe methods. It teaches prevention—that it is better to know how to live and avoid disease than to take any medicine as a cure. It is not an advertisement and has no medicine to sell. It has hundreds of excellent recipes for the cure of the various diseases. It has 16 colored plates showing different parts of the human body. The chapter on Painless Midwifery is worth its weight in gold to women. The "Care of Children" is something every mother ought to read. It teaches the value of Air, Sunshine, and Water as medicines. It contains valuable information for the married. This book cannot fail to please you. If you are looking for health by the safest and easiest means, do not delay getting it. It has eight hundred pages, is neatly bound in cloth, with gold letters, and will be sent by mail or express, prepaid to any address, for $2.75.

A PLEA FOR THE NEW WOMAN. May L. Collins. With large new half-tone portrait. 10c.

A TALE OF THE STRASSBURG GEESE. B. B. Kerr. Together with The Strike of the Strassburg Geese (C. W. Coolridge), A Traveler's Tale (B. B. Kerr), The Cat's Story (Emile Zola) 5c.

AUTONOMY, SELF-LAW. A fragmentary dissertation on the right to non-invasive self-hood. 5c.

BALZAC'S SERAPHITA: The Mystery of Sex. Mary Hanford Ford. Cloth. $1.

BIBLE TEMPERANCE. E. C. Walker. Proving that Liquor Drinking is Commended, Defended and Enjoined by the Bible, and giving close reference to the chapters and verses. 10c.

BORNING BETTER BABIES—Through regulating reproduction by controlling conception. E. B. Foote, Jr., M. D. 25c.

CAUSES OF HARD TIMES, and the Money Question. Albert Chavannes. 5c.

CHICAGO CONFERENCE OF TRUSTS. Speeches, debates, etc.; 81 portraits of delegates, including Benj. R. Tucker, Laurence Gronlund, William Jennings Bryan, Samuel Gompers, Louis F. Post, and George Schilling. 428 pages. 50c.

CHILDREN OF THE ITALIAN POOR. Paola Lombroso. 5c.

DARWIN, THE. (A novel.) Elmina D. Slenker. 50c.

DAWN OF CIVILIZATION, The; or, England in the Nineteenth Century. J. C. Spence. 178 pages. 25c.

DAWN-THOUGHT ON THE RECONCILIATION. By J. Wm. Lloyd. An inspired treatise that, with insight and solution, touches all the questions of life, love, soul and society. A prose-poem, simple enough for a child to enjoy, deep enough to make a philosopher think. The largest creed, the most gen-the overlook—freedom and optimism. Read it. Printed in old style antique type, rubricated with portrait of the author. In three editions, de luxe, plain and paper bound. Prices, $1.25, $1.00 and 50c.

DIGGING FOR BED-ROCK. Camp-meeting talks and sketches by Moses Harman. 5c.

DR. FOOTE'S SOCIAL SCIENCE SERIES OF DIME PAMPHLETS—Wedlock; Scientific Marriage; Heredity; A B C of Temperaments; Powell and his Critics; Physiological Marriage; Physical Improvement of Humanity; Causes of Disease, Insanity, and Premature Death; A Step Backward. Any of the above books sent by mail on receipt of price.

DYNAMIC THEORY OF LIFE AND MIND. An attempt to show that all organic beings are both constructed and operated by the dynamic agencies of their respective environments. By James B. Alexander. Over 400 Illustrations, 37 chapters, 1,087 pages and a 3-column index of 11 pages. Cloth, $3.75.

EAST TENNESSEE SKETCHES. A and Cecile Chavannes. 25c.

ECONOMICS OF ANARCHY. A Study of the Industrial Type. Dyer D. Lum. 10c.

EIGHT-HOUR MOVEMENT. John P. Altgeld, ex-Governor of Illinois. 5c.

EVOLUTION AND REVOLUTION. Elisee Reclus. 5c.

FALSE CLAIMS OF THE CHURCH. John E. Remsburg. Analyzing and confuting the claims made by churchmen that the Christian religion has promoted morality, learning, temperance, science, freedom, and showing how she has opposed progress. Paper, 10c.

FIELDS, FACTORIES, AND WORKSHOPS; or, Industry Combined with Agriculture and Brain Work with Manual Work. Peter Kropotkin. 260 pages. 60c. Postage, 5c.

FREE PRESS. Arguments in support of demurrer to the indictment of M. Harman, E. C. Walker and Geo. Harman, under the Comstock law, G. C. Siemens and David Overmyer. 20c.

GIORDANO BRUNO. His Life, Teachings, and Martyrdom. Burned for heresy in Rome, Feb. 17, 1600. 5c.

GOD AND THE STATE. Bakounine. 25c.

GOVERNMENT ANALYZED. A remarkable work by a remarkable man, Col. John R. Kelso, the history of whose life reads more like romance than reality. This book is the last of a series—Deity Analyzed, Bible Analyzed, Universe Analyzed. By the author's death this work was left unfinished, but was completed by his wife, Etta Dunbar Kelso, 319 pages; cloth. Price reduced from $1.50 to $1.

HILDA'S HOME. Rose Graul. "An o'er true tale" of woman's wrongs and of one woman's struggles and final triumphs in her attempt to secure justice for herself and for her sisters. 424 pages. Cloth, $1; paper, 50c.

HUMAN RIGHTS. J. Madison Hook. 5c.

IMPORTANCE OF HONEST MONEY. A simple, scientific, invariable standard of price. James Alleman. 250 pages. Paper, 50c.

IN BRIGHTER CLIMES; or, Life in Scotland. Albert Chavannes. 5c.

INFIDEL DEATH-BEDS. "Idle Tales of Dying Horrors." G. W. Foote. Brief biographical sketches of 97 Freethinkers, including Bruno, Buckle, Byron, Comte, Darwin, George Eliot, Gibbon, Goethe, Hugo, Harriet Martineau, Mill, Paine, Madame Roland, George Sand, Shelley, Volney, and Voltaire. 20c.

IN HELL AND THE WAY OUT. A plan of Social Democracy outlined. Henry E. Allen. 10c.

INSTITUTIONAL MARRIAGE. From the viewpoint of an exiled Mexican. M. Harman. 5c.

JOHN'S WAY. A domestic radical story. Elmina D. Slenker. 25c.

KAREEZA. Ethics of Marriage. A bold, brave book, teaching ideal marriage, rights of the unborn child, a designed and controlled maternity. Sample pages free. $1.

KORADINE. A story for young and old. Extra levant cloth. $1.

LIBERTY IN LITERATURE. Testimonial to Walt Whitman. "Let us put wreaths on the brows of the living." An address delivered in Philadelphia, Oct. 31, 1890, with portrait of Whitman. Containing also Col. Ingersoll's address at the funeral of Walt Whitman, Mar. 30, 1892. Cloth, 50c; paper, 25c.

LIBERTY. Political, Religious, Social, and Moral. A. F. Tindall. 5c.

LITTLE LESSONS FOR LITTLE FOLKS. Elmina D. Slenker. Boards, 40c.

LIZZIE MELTON. A story of a self-reliant girl. By Albert Chavannes. With portrait of author. 25c.

LUCIFER. Third Series, Vol. III. (1899). Cloth, $1.25. Postage, 15c.

MAGNETATION, and Its Relation to Health and Character. Albert Chavannes. 25c.

MARRIAGE. An address by Dr. Juliet H. Severance. 5c.

MARRIAGE IN FREE SOCIETY. Edward Carpenter. A dainty little gift book. 25c.

MEN, WOMEN AND CHANCE. William Platt. Containing two tales: The Ascent to the Heights, and Blind Men and Seeing. Well printed on heavy paper and artistically bound in cloth. Gilt top, rough edges. 75c.

MEN, WOMEN, AND GODS. Helen H. Gardener. With preface by Col. R. G. Ingersoll. Contents: Introduction by Col. Ingersoll. Men, Women, and Gods. Vicarious Atonement. Historical Facts and Theological Fictions. Appendix. Address to the Clergy and Others. Letter to Cleveland Congress of Freethinkers. The only authorized and correct edition. Large 12mo, heavy-toned paper. Portrait. This volume is by far the best writing this famous author ever did. It is very fine. Cloth, $1; paper, 50c.

MISSING LINK IN MODERN SPIRITUALISM, THE. A. Leah (Fox) Underhill. With portraits of the Fox Sisters and others. 478 pages. Cloth. Reduced to $1.

MORIBUND SOCIETY AND ANARCHY. Jean Grave. Cloth, 60c; paper, 30c.

MOTHERHOOD IN FREEDOM. M. Harman. 5c.

MUTUAL BANKING. A simple plan to abolish interest on money. William B. Greene. 10c.

NORA, A DOLL'S HOUSE, and GHOSTS. Ibsen. Cloth. 75c.

OUR WORSHIP OF PRIMITIVE SOCIAL GUESSES. E. C. Walker. Contents: Love and Law; The Moloch of the Monogamic Ideal; The Continuity of Race-Life, and Tyranny; Food and Sex Fallacies, a Criticism; When Men and Women Are and When They Are Not Variettes; The New Woman: What is she? What will she be? The State Hiding Behind Its Own Mistakes; Bishop Potter's Opinion of Divorce; Love: Its Attraction and Expression; Is She an Honest Girl? Lloyd, Platt, and the Pitiful Facts; Social Radicals and Parentage; Authority and Monogamy; Love and Trust Versus Fear; Reflections upon Reading William Platt's "Women, Love, and Life." 15c.

PERSONAL EXPERIENCES of Two American Anti-Vivisectionists in Various Countries. Philip G. Peabody. With an Appendix by Col. R. G. Ingersoll. Reduced from 25c to 15c.

PERSONAL RIGHTS AND SEXUAL WRONGS. Oswald Dawson. 5c.

PRIESTLY CELIBACY. Prof. A. L. Rawson. Together with The Incoherence of Transition (E. C. Walker), Motherhood in Freedom (Moses Harman), The Greatest Sin (an allegory, H. B. Kerr), and Jealousy, the Foe of Freedom (Oscar Rotter). 15c.

RELIGION AND RATIONALISM. The relation of each to human liberty. The religionist, fancying that he has the whole truth, is logically opposed to investigation, and he appeals to physical force to arrest the discovery of new truths. What Rationalism is, and how many believe themselves Freethinkers who are only unbelieving or disgruntled religionists. The necessity for separate organizations and a division of labor among reformers. The Secular Union. Important facts and arguments in a compact form. E. C. Walker. 5c.

RIGHTS OF MAN. Thomas Paine. Answer to Burke's attack upon the French revolution. A political treatise of great general value, as advocating liberty and democracy. Contains the fundamental principles of true republicanism. Cloth, 50c; paper, 25c.

RUBAIYAT (Quatrains) OF OMAR KHAYYAM. Edward FitzGerald's interpretation; with original introduction; special cover; latest version. Paper, 10c.

RULED BY THE TOMB. A discussion of free thought and free love. Orford Northcote. 25c.

SCIENCE IN STORY; or, Sammy Tubbs, the Boy Doctor, and Sponsta, the Troublesome Monkey. For young folks. Dr. E. B. Foote. Five volumes in "red line," presentation edition. $1. Five volumes, plainer binding, $1.50; all in one volume, $2.

SEXUAL PHYSIOLOGY FOR THE YOUNG. Being the fifth volume of "Science in Story." 250 pages; cloth bound; illustrated. 50c.

SONGS OF THE UNBLIND CUPID. J. Wm. Lloyd. Edition de luxe. Verses printed from Kelmscott type upon deckle edged hand made paper of cerulean tint. Initial letters, ornaments and borders are in red; initial letter and sketch upon the opening page are hand painted in water colors. Covers brown, with choice of silver or gold lettering. Very handsome gift book. 50c.

STUDIES IN SOCIOLOGY. In four parts: I., The Law of Happiness; II., The Law of Individual Control; III., The Law of Exchange; IV., The Law of Environment. Albert Chavannes. 25c.

TALKS ON NATURE. Important information for both sexes. Dr. J. H. Greer. 192 pages. Reduced from 50 to 25c.

THE ABOLITION OF MARRIAGE. John Beverly Robinson. Together with Isabel's Intention (Marsette), Reminiscences of Berlin Heights (A. Warren), and The Sexes and Love in Freedom (Oscar Rotter). 25c.

THE BAR SINISTER AND LICIT LOVE, including the first biennial proceedings of the Legitimation League, and a full account of the Lanchester case, with full-page half-tone pictures of Edith Lancheater, and Lillian Harman. Handsomely bound in green and gold covers. 207 pages. 25c.

THE BLUE LAWS OF CONNECTICUT. Taken from the Code of 1650 and the public records of the Colony of Connecticut previous to 1665. With an account of the persecution of Witches and Quakers in New England, and some extracts from the Blue Laws of Virginia. Copiously illustrated. 25c.

THE BRITISH BARBARIANS. Grant Allen, the greatest of the Hill-Top pioneers. Dedicated "To all who have heart enough, brain enough, and soul enough to understand it." Handsomely bound in cloth. 261 pages. $1.

THE WOMAN WHO DID. Grant Allen. A powerful story of a refined, educated and high-spirited woman who dared to defy the tyranny of church and state and ignore the institution of marriage. Handsomely bound in cloth. $1.

THE NEW HEDONISM. Grant Allen. The opening paragraph says: "The old ascetism said: 'Be virtuous and you will be happy.' The new hedonism says: 'Be happy and you will be virtuous.'" In another place the writer says: "In proportion as men have freed themselves from mediæval superstitions have they begun to perceive that the unclean and impure things are the fit and worthy exercise of the reproductive function." Paper covers; 25c.

THE CHICAGO MARTYRS. The famous speeches of the eight condemned anarchists in Judge Gary's Court, and Altgeld's reasons for pardoning Fielden, Neebe and Schwab. 25c.

THE COMING WOMAN. Lillie D. White. 5c.

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM. Principles and platform of organized Freethought. 10c.

THE EVOLUTION OF MODESTY. Jonathan Mayo Crane. A consideration of the origin of clothes and the reasons why people wear clothing. Here are a few questions it answers: What is modesty? What is the cause of it? What is the use of it? What is the cause of the feeling of shame? Is audity immodest? What is the cause of the notion that it is shameful to expose some parts of the body? Why do not all peoples agree as to what parts of the body should be concealed? 5c.

THE FOUNTAIN OF LIFE; or, The Threefold Power of Sex. Lois Waisbrooker. 25c.

THE FUTURE OF SECULARISM. When will the Cause of Justice triumph? 5c.

THE PRODIGAL DAUGHTER; or, The Price of Virtue. Rachel Campbell. Together with Legal Wifehood (Lucinda B. Chandler), Life's Gifts (Olive Schreiner), and Marriage—What It Was and Is; Will the Coming Woman Marry? 25c.

THE REVIVAL OF PURITANISM. E. C. Walker. 25c.

THE RIGHTS OF CHILDHOOD. H. B. Kerr. Together with What Are Women Here For? (E. B. Foote, Jr., M. D.), The New Martyrdom (Lillian Harman), and The Will, from the French of Guy de Maupassant. 25c.

THE SANCTITY OF MARRIAGE. As viewed from a moral and sanitary standpoint. A solemn protest against the present demoralising management of that institution, its effects upon offspring and its influence upon edonswork. Price reduced from 25c to 15c.

THE SECRET INSTRUCTIONS OF THE JESUITS. A reprint from an edition published in 1723, quoted by the highest authorities as authentic. The work is redolent of Jesuit craft and is a plain index to the underhand working of that order against the welfare of individuals and society. 15c.

THE STATE: ITS HISTORIC ROLE. Prince Peter Kropotkin. 10c.

THE UNWOMANLY WOMAN. Lizzie M. Holmes. Together with That Great Fraud, Telegu Society (Moses Hull), Virgin Soil (George Egerton), and Normal Sexual Action (Ernest Winne). 25c.

THE WORM TURNS. Revolutionary Poems. Voltairine de Cleyre. 10c.

THOMAS JEFFERSON. His Political, Social and Religious Philosophy. Gen. M. M. Trumbull. 5c.

TOKOLOGY. A book for every woman. By Alice B. Stockham, M. D. Illustrated. Tokology teaches possible painless pregnancy and parturition, gives full, plain directions for the care of a woman before and after confinement. The ailments of pregnancy can be prevented as well as the pains and dangers of childbirth avoided and women need not go down to death giving birth to children. English, German or Swedish. $1.25.

TRAVELS IN FAITH. By Capt. Robert C. Adams. His mental experience from superstition to rationalism. Cloth, 75c; paper, 25c.

VACCINATION A GIGANTIC CRIME. Samuel Darling. 15c.

VINDICATION OF THOMAS PAINE. Col. R. G. Ingersoll. Dealing with all the slanders brought against the name and fame of Paine. A little pamphlet which every admirer of Thomas Paine should have by him for reference. Paper, 25c.

VITAL FORCE. Magnetic Exchange and Magnetation. Albert Chavannes. 15c.

WHAT IS THE YOUNG NEED TO KNOW: a Primer of Sexual Rationalism. Edwin C. Walker. "Let us cease to be ashamed of what makes us men, of circling arms or babes." Paper covers; 64 large pages. 15c.

WHAT IS RELIGION? Ingersoll's last public address, delivered at the meeting of the Free Religious Association in Boston on June 1, 1899. To which is appended the poem, "Declaration of the Free," the last verse written by the great Freethinker. 5c.

WHEN LOVE IS LIBERTY AND NATURE LAW. John Badcock, Jr. 10c.

WHY THE UNDERTONE? An open letter to Judge Gary. Sarah E. Ames. 25c.

WOMAN, CHURCH, AND STATE. Matilda Joslyn Gage. "This is Mrs. Gage's last and crowning work. Every woman ought to read it. Every liberal woman and man will want it. A burning protest against the tremendous wrong done women by the church, which controlled the state. It ought to be widely read for the good it will do. Cloth, $1.50; paper, 75c.

WOMAN IN THE PAST, PRESENT AND FUTURE. Woman was the first human being that fasted bondage. Woman was a slave before the slave existed. The basis of all oppression is economic dependence on the oppressor. This has been the condition of women in the past and is so still. She is now a slave of the slave. This work is August Bebel's masterpiece. 8vo, 122 pages. 50c.

Address M. HARMAN, 800 Fulton street, Chicago, Ill.

Price 2 Cents.

LUCIFER.

THE LIGHT-BEARER.

THIRD SERIES, VOL. VI., No. 32. CHICAGO, ILLINOIS, AUG. 21, E. M. 302. [C. E. 1902.] WHOLE No. 931

THE MARTYR-BAND.

When, looking through the mist of years, I hear the people's thunder-tones,
And see the glitter of their spears, the blessed glare of burning thrones,
I worship Freedom's martyr-band in every atom of my soul,
Because through them our native land is free of Tyranny's control.

Upon the guillotine they shed their blood our fettered race to free;
They drank the draught of poison red; they died in chains for you and me;
And whether a Corday for France, an Emmet for old Erin's Shore,
They helped Humanity's advance to heights it never scaled before.

Fragrant their memories today and flowering in the heart of man,
And theirs is the supremest sway that hath been since the world began:
The Truth they taught survives and shines in codes that are triumphant now—
Broad codes to which the august lines of autocrats themselves must bow.

And, as the centuries increase, their influence to our star will bring
A time of universal peace that knoweth neither serf nor king,
Nor crime, nor chain, nor gallows tree, nor poverty beneath the sun,
When one shall all the nations be and all flags blended into one!

—Will H. Kernan.

A Lesson From the Prairies.

Out upon the endless prairies of western Nebraska and eastern Colorado there grows a peculiar weed. It is of a bushy character and attains a height of three or four feet.

It is called the tumble-weed.

When it reaches its full maturity it dries to a tinder and a gust of wind snaps it off at the base.

Then it goes rolling and dancing over the prairie for miles and miles and miles; catching for an instant here and there on a bit of sage bush or bunch-grass, thence released again to ride the prairie wind.

It is an innocent weed enough except when there is a prairie fire; then it is a portent and a terror.

When the ranchmen see the smoke of a prairie fire rising up to windward, they hurriedly get out their plows in gangs and plow as broad an open strip as they can across the path of the blazing grass before the fire reaches them. The plowed ground halts the fire. But the ranchmen do not rest after plowing. When they have plowed as wide a path as they have time for, they quickly strip the harness off the horses and with long sticks in their hands spring upon the animals' back.

They are on the alert for the tumble-weed.

The tumble-weed comes bounding along, a globe of blaze, and when it reaches the plowed ground, where it has nothing to impede its progress, it darts across the open space like thistle-down and ignites the prairie on the other side.

There may come a dozen of them across the length of the plowed strip simultaneously. It takes quick action to intercept and beat them down. When the wind is high they will give a good horse as hard a chase as he cares for.

Often, in spite of the vigilance and alertness of the ranchmen, the tumble-weed escapes the blow of the stick and the plowing is futile. The conflagration spreads and spreads.

There are tumble-weeds in human society; disturbers of the established order, whom the plowed ground of civilization cannot rob of their enthusiasms.

To the Conventional Ones who like things as they are, and whose plans of life depend upon the continuance of the status, the revolutionist appears as the tumble-weed appears to the ranchman,—a threatening nuisance, calculated to bring well-laid plans to naught. But they both have their place in nature, as the rounding cycles make clearly apparent.

In 1831 the petty tyrants of divided Italy were patroling the frontiers and the coast towns of that sorely afflicted country against the exile, Joseph Mazzini.

They knew that if his writings got past the plowed ground (the patrol) they would ignite the prairie tinder beyond (the mind of Italy). Mazzini was at Marseilles editing "Young Italy." When an issue would come off the press, he would take a single copy to one of the faithful who worked in a cement yard. The faithful one would secretly sink it into the middle of a barrel of cement and mark the barrel. The barrel would then be innocently shipped to some coast town of Italy with a lot of other barrels of cement. Here another of the faithful would pick out the marked barrel and take out the copy of "Young Italy,—at the risk of his life. In some obscure garret the matter of the publication would be reproduced by means of the clandestine press and the faithful would disseminate it to all parts of the Italian penisula.

One copy of each issue was enough to smuggle; it ignited the Italian imagination which blazed like a prairie fire.

There were no ranchmen in Europe alert enough to intercept this tumble-weed, try as they might, and the fire it ignited scorched out the petty tyrants and unified Italy.

It is sad, sad reading, the lives of the human tumble-weeds of history. Scorned and scourged by their contemporaries as a rank and a hateful growth, the organized ranchmen called Governments have beaten out many a celestial flame, and left the blackened corpse upon the plain.

But here and there, despite the vigilance of tyranny, one has bounded across the intercepting furrows, spreading the purifying fire of noble aspiration and love of liberty to the waiting peoples.

And so it will be to the end of time, for the wisdom of the Plan will not be thwarted by human tyranny; there will always be a tumble-weed to escape on horseback until the dreary prairies of human exploitation blossom as the rose in the cult i vated gardens of the co operative commonwealth, and the tumble-weed vanishes with the conditions of its creation.

—Socialist Spirit.

James on the Social Question and the Single Tax.

